In order to protect a county from the charge of repairing bridges, which in point of utility were not equal to the expense, "And for the more clearly ascertaining the description of bridges hereafter to be erected, which inhabitants of counties shall and may be bound or liable to repair and maintain;" it is enacted by stat. 43 Geo. III. c. 59, s. 5, "that no bridge hereafter to be erected or built in any county by or at the expense of any individual or private person or persons, body politic or corporate, shall be deemed or taken to be a county bridge, or a bridge which the inhabitants of any county shall be compellable or liable to maintain or repair, unless such bridge shall be erected in a substantial and commodious manner, under the direction or to the satisfaction of the county surveyor or person appointed by the justices of the peace at their general quarter sessions assembled, or by the justices of the peace of the county of Lancaster, at their annual general sessions; and which surveyor or person so appointed is hereby required to superintend and inspect the erection of such bridge when thereunto requested by the party or parties desirous of erecting the same; and in case the said party or parties shall be dissatisfied, the matter shall be determined by the said justices respectively at their next general quarter sessions, or at their annual general sessions in the county of Lancaster." (See the other sections of this act post, p. 458.)

2. Who shall Repair at Common Law.

Surveyor, &c. to inspect erection. Sessions to arbitrate in disputes.

Trustees appointed by a local turnpike act are individuals or private persons within the meaning of this statute, and therefore a bridge erected by such trustees, after the passing of that act, but not under the direction or to the satisfaction of the county surveyor, &c., is not a bridge which the inhabitants of the county are liable to repair. (R. v. Derby, 3 B. & Adol. 147.)

The act applies only to bridges newly built, and not to those repaired or widened. (R. v. Lancashire, 2 B. & Adol. 813.) A county bridge having been washed away in 1807, except the buttresses, which remained unmoved, was, after the passing of 43 Geo. III. c. 59, rebuilt wider than before, and without notice to the county surveyor, by the parish, partly with the old materials, and in the same line of passage over the river; it was held that the county was liable to repair, and that this was not a new bridge within the meaning of the act. (R. v. Devonshire, 2 Nev. & M. 212; 5 B. & Adol. 383, S. C.)

Parishes and Townships.]—A portion of a county, as a parish or township, or the like, may by immemorial custom be liable to repair a particular bridge or all bridges within the parish, in the same way as a township or other district in a parish may by custom be liable to repair a highway. And in R. v. Hendon, 4 B. & Adol. 628, it was held, that a parish may be indicted for non-repair of a bridge, without stating any other ground of liability than immemorial usage.

Parishes.

In R. v. Ecclesfield, 1 B. & Ald. 359, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "As the case of parishes, and highways within them, is analogous to that of counties and bridges, the charge of repairing a highway shall fall upon the parish, in default of usage and custom to charge the particular portion of the parish wherein it is situate; and as a hundred, or parish, or other known portion of a county, may by usage and custom be chargeable to the repair of a bridge erected within it, so in like manner a township or other known portion of a parish may by usage and custom be chargeable to the repair of the highways within it. And upon an attentive perusal of the passages of Lord Coke's commentary, we think it plain, that in drawing the distinction between bodies politic and natural persons, the learned writer speaks of individual persons, and not of an aggregate of the inhabitants of parishes or other places."

Townships.

Corporations.]—By reason of prescription, corporate bodies may be liable to repair a public bridge. (2 Inst. 700; R. v. Oswestry, 5 M. & S. 561; Reg. v. Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Company, 2 G. & D. 236.) But herein there is a diversity between bodies politic or corporate, spiritual or temporal, and natural persons, for the bodies politic or corporate, spiritual or temporal, may be bound by usage and prescription only, because they are local and have a succession perpetual; but a natural person cannot be bound by act of his ancestor, without a lien, or binding, and assets. (2 Inst. 700.)

Corporations.

Public Bodies.]—As to the liability of public bodies to repair, see ante, p. 448, 449.

Public bodies.

Individuals.]—Individuals also, by reason of the tenure of their lands or tenements, may be liable to repair a public bridge (2 Inst. 700.) And where any person is liable to repair such a bridge, his tenant for years (being in possession) will be under the same obligation, and liable to an indictment for not repairing it. (R. v. Bucknall, 2 Lord Raym. 804, 856; 1 Salk. 367; 2 Saunders, 158, n. (9). But the onus of the repair, ratione tenuræ, falls ultimately upon the owner, and not upon the occupier. (Baker v. Greenhill, 6 Jur. 710—Q. B.)

On indictment for non-repair of a bridge, charging the defendants as liable, ratione tenuræ, they produced at the trial a record setting forth a presentment in the time of Edw. III. against a bishop of L. (not connected with the present defendants), who was thereby charged with non-repair of the same bridge and liability to repair. The record stated a trial of this presentment at the Spring assizes in the year 20 Edw. III., and an acquittal of the bishop as not liable; it further stated, that the jury being asked who was bound to repair, said they did not know, and being asked when and by whom it was first built or repaired, said about sixty years since, and then of alms, and that a bishop of L. bestowed 40*s.* on the workmen repairing it of his alms and not otherwise. In addition to this record, the defendants put in a writ of privy seal of June 28th, 20 Edw. III., for a grant of pontage to the town of K. (where the bridge was), reciting as the cause of the grant, that the bridge was ruinous and no person bound to repair in certain, according to that which was found by inquest. They also put in the grant of pontage dated in the same year. The Court held that this evidence was admissible on behalf of the defendants. The Court also considered that the special findings of the jury might have been regular, according to the practice in the time of Edw. III., and that, at all events, the acquittal of the bishop, followed by the writ and grant of pontage, was evidence to negative the existence of a prescriptive liability to repair the bridge in any person. (Reg. v. Sutton, 8 Ad. & Ell. 516; 3 Nev. & P. 569, S. C.)

Bridge enlarged by an individual.

In the case of R. v. West Riding of Yorkshire (2 East, 353, n.), defendants were indicted for not repairing a public carriage bridge; plea, that certain townships had immemorially repaired: issue taken thereon. The facts were that there had been immemorially a foot bridge till 1745, when the townships enlarged it to a horse bridge, and afterwards to a carriage bridge, at their own expense; that the riding had never repaired it. It was held that this evidence did not maintain the defendant's plea; and further, that where a party is bound to repair a foot bridge, he shall not discharge himself by turning it into a horse or carriage bridge, but shall still repair it as a foot bridge, i. e. pro ratâ.

Converting a foot into a horse bridge.

Repairing of house adjoining bridge.

A tenant at will of a house, which adjoins to a public bridge, is bound to repair the house, so that the public be not prejudiced by the want of repair, although, being only tenant at will, he be not bound to repair as to his landlord. (Reg. v. Watson, 2 Ld. Raym. 856; 1 Salk. 357, S. C.)

Infants.

Guardian.

An infant, whose guardian is in possession of an estate in respect of which there is a liability to repair a bridge, is not liable to an indictment for non-repair either as owner or occupier A guardian in socage may be liable. (R. v. Sutton, 5 Nev. & M. 353; 1 Har. & W. 429, S. C.)

Lords or tenants of manors.

A liability being laid, ratione tenuræ, in the lords of a manor to repair a bridge by reason of the demesnes of the manor is good. (R. v. Bucknall, 2 Lord Raym. 804.) And as the obligation is by reason of the demesnes of the manor, if part of the demesnes be granted to an individual, he will be obliged to contribute to the repairs. (Id.; Deac. C. Dig. 168.) If a manor be held by the service or tenure of repairing a common bridge or highway, and that manor afterwards comes to be divided into several hands; every one of these alienees, being tenants of any parcel either of the demesnes or services, shall be liable to the whole charge, and they are contributory among themselves. And though the lord of the manor might upon the several alienations agree to discharge those that had purchased of him of such repairs, yet that shall not alter the remedy for the public, but only bind the lord and those that claim under him. As the whole manor, and every part of it, in the possession of one tenant, was once chargeable with the reparations, so it shall remain, notwithstanding any act of the proprietor: it shall not be in his power to apportion the charge whereby the remedy for the public benefit shall be made more difficult, or by alienations to persons unable, to render it, in respect of the parts which should come into such hands, quite frustrate. (R. v. Duchess of Buccleugh, 1 Salk. 358.)

III. Who liable to repair by Statute.

By the Great Charter, 9 Hen. III. c. 15, "no town nor freeman shall be distrained to make bridges nor banks, but such as of old time and of right have been accustomed." And none can be compelled to make new bridges where never any were before, but by act of parliament. (2 Inst. 701.) This statute is no more than declaratory of the common law. (2 Inst. 700.)

Who to repair by statute. 9 Hen. 3, c. 15.

By the 22 Hen. VIII. c. 5, (called the Statute of Bridges,) after reciting by section 2, that "in many parts of this realm it cannot be known and proved what hundred, riding, wapentake, city, borough, town, or parish, nor what person certain or body politic ought of right to make such bridges decayed, by reason whereof such decayed bridges, for lack of knowledge of such as own to make them, for the most part lie long without any amendment, to the great annoyance of the king's subjects."

22 Hen. 8, c. 5.

Sect. 3, for remedy thereof, enacts, "that in every such case the said bridges, if they be without city or town corporate, shall be made by the inhabitants of the shire or riding within the which the said bridge decayed shall happen to be; and if it be within any city or town corporate, then by the inhabitants of every such city or town corporate wherein such bridges shall happen to be; and if part of any such bridges so decayed happen to be in one shire, riding, city, or town corporate, and the other part thereof in another shire, riding, city, or town corporate, or if part be within the limits of any city or town corporate, and part without and part within one riding and part within another, that then in every such case the inhabitants of the shires, ridings, cities, or towns corporate shall be charged and chargeable to amend, make, and repair such part and portion of such bridges so decayed as shall lie and be within the limits of the shire, riding, city, or town corporate, wherein they be inhabited at the time of the same decays." This statute is only in affirmance of the common law. (2 Inst. 700.)

Bridges out of cities, &c.

Bridges in cities, &c.

Bridges broken in the Highways.]—This extendeth only to common bridges in the Queen's highways, and not private bridges, to mills, or the like; the remedy in which case is not by indictment, but by action. (2 Inst. 701; 1 Hawk. c. 77, s. 19.)

Construction of stat. 22 Hen. 8, c. 5.

Within a City or Town Corporate.]—It hath been questioned whether a borough, which hath no bridge within its own limits, be not liable to contribute to the repairs of a county bridge. (1 Hawk. c. 77, s. 19; 1 Keb. 68.)

It seems that where the Queen enlarges the boundaries of a city by annexing part of the county to the county of the city, the enlarged part is to be considered as parcel of the old county of the city, so as to charge the inhabitants with the repairs of bridges, which were situate at the time of the statute within the county at large; for as the statute lays no absolute charge till the bridge is in decay, and as the bridges in question (which were within the county of Norfolk when the statute was made) were not then actually in decay, the statute had no operation on them before they were annexed to the city of Norwich. (R. v. Norwich, 1 Stra. 177; and see R. v. St. Peter, York, 2 Lord Raym. 1249; Deacon, C. Dig. 165.)

The inhabitants of a town are not bound to repair a bridge out of the town. (R. v. Gamlingay, 3 T. R. 513.)

Where townships have enlarged a bridge, which they were before bound to repair as a foot bridge to a carriage bridge, they shall be liable pro ratâ. (R. v. West Riding of Yorkshire, 2 East, 353, n., ante, 452.)

By the Inhabitants.]—The persons to be charged by this act are comprehended under the word inhabitants; which word, being the largest word of the kind, is needful to be explained.

First, although a man be dwelling in a house in a foreign county, city, or town corporate, yet if he hath lands in his own possession and manurance in the county, city, or town corporate, where the decayed bridge is, he is an inhabitant, both where his person dwelleth, and where he hath lands in his own possession.

Secondly, if a man dwelleth in a foreign shire, city, or town corporate, and keepeth a house and servants in another shire, city, or town corporate, he is an inhabitant in each shire, city, or town corporate within this statute.

3. Who liable to Repair by Statute.

Thirdly, ex vi termini, every person that dwelleth in any shire, city, or town corporate, though he hath but a personal residence, yet he is said in law to be an inhabitant, or a dweller there, as servants or the like; but this statute extendeth not to them, but to such householders who may be distrained for non-payment; and it would be infinite and impossible to tax every inhabitant being no householder.

Fourthly, every corporation and body politic residing in any county, city, or town corporate, or having lands or tenements in any county, city, or town corporate, which they keep in their own hands and occupation, are said to be inhabitants there within the purview of this statute.

Fifthly, an infant that hath house or lands by descent or purchase, is liable to the public charge; and so is the husband of a feme covert. (2 Inst. 702.) See further as to who are inhabitants, post, "Constables."

IV. Concerning the 300 Feet at the Ends of Bridges.

Bridges built before the 20th March, 1836. County bound to keep in repair 300 feet of the highway at each end.

Bridges built before the 20th March, 1836.]—Stat. 22 Hen. VIII. c. 5, s. 9, after reciting, "Forasmuch that albeit bridges decayed were amended and repaired according to the tenor of this act, yet nevertheless, if speedy remedy for the amendment of the ways next adjoining to every of the ends of such bridges should not be had and made, the king's subjects should take little or none avail or commodity in many parts of this realm by the making of the bridges: in consideration whereof," it is enacted, "that such part and portion of the highways in every part of this realm, as well within franchise as without, as lie next adjoining to the ends of any bridges within this realm, distant from any of the said ends by the space of three hundred foot, be made, repaired, and amended as often as need shall require; and that the justices of the peace in every shire of this realm, franchise, city, or borough, or four of them at the least, whereof one to be of the quorum, within the limits of their commissions and authorities, shall have power and authority to inquire, hear, and determine in the king's general sessions of peace, all manner of annoyances of and in such highways, so being and lying next adjoining to any ends of bridges within this realm, distant from any one of the ends of such bridges three hundred foot, and to do in every thing and things concerning the making, repairing, and amending of such highways, and every of them, in as large and ample manner, as they might and may do, to and for the making, repairing, and amending of bridges, by virtue and authority of this present act"

Common law liability to repair the roads at ends of bridges.

The county is, by the common law, bound primâ facie to repair the road at the ends of every bridge, which bridge it is bound to repair; the above statute of 22 Hen. VIII. has fixed the length at 300 feet. (Per Lord Eldon, C., R. v. West Riding of Yorkshire, 5 Taunt. 284; and see R. v. West Riding of Yorkshire, 4 B. & Ald. 623.) The reason why the county is thus bound to repair this addition to the bridge is, that it is considered as intimately connected with the bridge itself; and it is difficult to ascertain the precise limits of the bridge from the continuation of arches on each side of the river. (R. v. West Riding of Yorkshire, 7 East, 588.)

The inhabitants of a county in which a new bridge was built (before 20th March, 1836,) within 300 feet of an old bridge in another county, were held liable to repair such new bridge. (R. v. Devonshire, 14 East, 477.) The county of Devon is divided from the county of Dorset by the river Yarty, over which there is a bridge maintained by Dorset, the inhabitants of which, in course, under stat. 22 Hen. VIII. c. 5, maintained the road for 300 feet on the Devonshire side from the bridge as part of such bridge. At the distance of 150 feet from the bridge on the same side, the road about thirty years ago led through a ford occasioned by a small stream which runs into the Yarty; but about that time, in order to avoid the inconvenience of the ford, a smaller bridge was built over it by an individual, which having been generally used by the public ever since, was considered as having been adopted by the county. The smaller bridge having fallen into decay, and requiring repair, the inhabitants of Devon were called upon to repair it; which they objected to on the ground that being within 300 feet of the former bridge over the Yarty, which was repairable by Dorset, the inhabitants of Devon were no more bound to repair the smaller bridge than they were the road for that distance before that bridge was built, though lying within the limits of their county. Whereupon this indictment was preferred against them for the non-repair of the smaller bridge, and a verdict passed for the crown. And upon a motion for a new trial Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said, "Each is a substantive bridge in a different county, and the new bridge cannot be considered as an appendage to the other. The statute of Hen. VIII. attaches equally on the inhabitants of each county in respect of its own bridge. It makes no difference that the new bridge was first built by an individual, if it were afterwards adopted by the public as of great public utility. While it continued a road, it was repairable as part of the old bridge; but now that there is a substantive bridge built on the Devonshire side, it is repairable as a bridge by the inhabitants of the county in which it is situate, according to the statute."

4. Concerning the Ends of Bridges.

And see R. v. Inhabitants of Gloucestershire (1 C. & M. 506), which was the case of an indictment under the above act, and in which it was considered by Cresswell, J. "That it was not material to the liability of the county whether the bridge was originally necessary for the convenience of the public or not."

When others than county liable.

It may be taken as a general rule that where any district, corporation, public body, or private individual, by prescription or tenure, is liable to repair a bridge, it is an intendment of law, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that the liability extends to three hundred feet of the approaches at each end of the bridge. (Reg. v. Lincoln, Mayor, &c., 2 Nev. & Per. 273; 8 Ad. & Ell. 65, S. C.) And such presumption is not rebutted by proof that the party has been known to repair only the fabric of the bridge, and that the only repairs known to have been done to the highway have been performed by commissioners under a turnpike road act. (Ib.)

A bridge originally built by subscription, in lieu of a foot bridge, having become a public benefit, is chargeable on the county; the highway, within the limits of 300 feet at each end, is bound by the same rule of law with respect to it as the bridge itself, and the charge of the repairs of such highway, within such limit, belongs primâ facie to the party charged with the repair of the bridge itself; and if the inhabitants of a county be indicted for the non-repair thereof, they cannot exonerate themselves except by pleading specially that some other is bound by prescription or tenure to repair the same. (West Riding of Yorkshire v. R., 2 Dow, 1; 5 Taunt. 284; 7 East, 583; 3 Smith, 437, S. C.)

If the bridge be on a turnpike road, and the county make default in repairing the 300 feet at the end of a bridge built before the 20th March, 1836, perhaps the road trustees might be made liable to the repair. (See Bussey v. Storey, 1 Nev. & M. 639; 4 B. & Adol. 98, S. C.)

Where the road by which a bridge was approached passed between meadows which were occasionally flooded by a river, and for convenient access to the bridge a raised causeway had been made, having arches or culverts at intervals for the passage of the flood water, which were equally necessary to the safety of the main bridge and the causeway: it was held that the inhabitants of the county were not bound to repair such arches, being at the distance of more than 300 feet from the end of the main bridge. (R. v. Oxfordshire, 1 B. & Adol. 289.)

Bridges built after 20th March, 1836. County not liable to repair roads leading to.

Bridges built after 20th March, 1836.]—With respect to bridges to be built after the 20th March, 1836, the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 50, s. 21, (the General Highway Act,) enacts, "that if any bridge shall hereafter be built, which bridge shall be liable by law to be repaired by and at the expense of any county or part of any county, then and in such case all highways leading to, passing over, and next adjoining to such bridge shall be from time to time repaired by the parish, person, or body politic or corporate, or trustees of a turnpike road, who were by law before the erection of the said bridge bound to repair the said highways: provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to exonerate or discharge any county or any part of any county from repairing or keeping in repair the walls, banks, or fences of the raised causeways and raised approaches to any such bridge, or the land arches thereof."

V. Manner, &c. of Repairs, Widening, Diverting, &c.

Manner of repairing.

Those who are bound to repair public bridges must make them of such height and strength as shall be answerable to the course of the water, whether it continues in the old channel or makes a new one. (1 Hawk. c. 77, s. 1.)

Entering lands.

Persons bound to repair county bridges may, by the common law if necessary, enter on any adjoining lands for such repairs, or lay thereon the requisite materials. (1 Hawk. c. 77, s 1.)

Widening.

Those who are bound to repair bridges are not necessarily bound by the common law to widen them, at least the county are not so bound. (R. v. Devonshire, 4 B. & Cres. 670; 2 Nev. & M. 212, S. C.; Cumberland v. Rex, 3 B. & Pul. 354.) And no persons are compellable to build, or contribute to the building of any new bridge, without an act of parliament; nor can the inhabitants of a county, by their own authority, merely change a bridge or highway from one place to another. (2 Inst. 700.) But the statutes 14 Geo. II. c. 33, s. 1, (a) and 43 Geo. III. c. 59, s. 2, allow the quarter sessions to compel the county to widen or change old bridges, or build new ones.

Building a new.

Changing.

Sessions may alter situation of county bridges,

The following is the enactment of the 43 Geo. III. c. 59, s. 2, which incorporates and supplies many defects in the enactment of the 14 Geo. II. c. 33, s. 1: It enacts, "that where any bridge or bridges, or roads at the ends thereof, repaired at the expense of any county, shall be narrow and incommodious, it shall and may be lawful to and for the said justices, at any of their general quarter sessions, to order and direct such bridge or bridges, and roads, to be widened, improved, and made commodious for the public; and that where any bridge or bridges, repaired at the expense of any county, shall be so much in decay as to render the taking the same wholly down necessary or expedient, it shall and may be lawful to and for the said justices, at any of their said general quarter sessions, to order and direct the same to be rebuilt, either on the old site or situation, or on any new one more convenient to the public, contiguous to or within 200 yards of the former one, as to such justices shall seem meet; and if, for the purpose of altering the situation, or of widening or enlarging any such bridge or bridges, road or roads as aforesaid, it shall be necessary to purchase any land or ground, [or by stat. 54 Geo. III. c. 90, 'any building or buildings, or other erections,'] it shall and may be lawful for such county surveyor or surveyors, by and under the direction of such justices at their general quarter sessions as aforesaid, to set out and ascertain the same, not exceeding in the whole one acre at any one such bridge as aforesaid, and to contract and agree with the owner or owners of such land, and persons interested therein, for the purchase thereof, either by a sum in gross or by an annual rent, at the option of such owner or owners; and if the said surveyor or surveyors cannot agree with the said owner or owners for the purchase thereof, or the recompence to be made for the same, or by reason of such owner or owners not being to be found shall be prevented from treating, then and in every such case the said justices in their general quarter sessions shall impannel a jury, and assess the compensation and satisfaction for such land, and for the trespass and damage to be done by the execution of the powers of this act, in the same manner as they are authorised and empowered to do by the said above-mentioned act of the thirteenth year of the reign of his present majesty, in relation to highways; and all and every the clauses, powers, provisions, exemptions, penalties, matters and things in the said act contained, as well with respect to impannelling juries, examining and swearing witnesses, payment of expenses, enabling bodies politic, corporate, and collegiate, and other incapacitated persons, to sell and convey, and all other the powers and provisions of the said act, shall be, and the same are hereby extended and applied to the works by this act authorised to be done and performed, as far as the same are applicable, as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if the same were herein particularly repeated and re-enacted; provided that no money shall be applied to the amendment or alteration of any such bridge or bridges, until presentment shall have been made of the insufficiency, inconveniency, or want of reparation of such bridge or bridges, in pursuance of some or one of the statutes made and now in force concerning public bridges." By the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 49 (post, 467,) justices at sessions are empowered to raise money on the credit of the county rates for altering, widening, repairing, improving, or re-building county bridges.

R.* 279, "As to the power of justices to change roads, by changing the local situation of a bridge, there certainly are old cases against it, and they were properly decided: because previous to statute 14 Geo. II. c. 33, the sessions had no power to change the situation of bridges; but that act impliedly gives them that power, for it enables them to purchase lands adjoining any county bridge, for the more commodious enlarging and convenient rebuilding the same. This, therefore, impliedly gives them the power of altering the position of the bridge to suit the convenience of the public."

Sessions may borrow money on county rates for the purpose of widening, &c. bridges.

By 54 Geo. III. c. 90, s. 2, all the powers and provisions of the 43 Geo. III. c. 59, (except as to bridges hereafter to be erected,) are extended "as well to bridges and the roads at the ends thereof repaired by the inhabitants of hundreds and other general divisions in the nature of hundreds, as to bridges and the roads at the ends thereof repaired by the inhabitants of counties."

R. v. Justices of Dorsetshire and others, 15 East, 594. The justices of Dorset having, under stat. 43 Geo. III. c. 59, contracted for the building of a new bridge in a different site in lieu of the old one, which was ruinous; and having directed the old bridge to be taken down before the new one was passable, for the benefit of the old materials to be used by the contractor in finishing the new bridge; the Court of Queen's Bench refused a writ of prohibition to them to restrain them from pulling down the old before the new bridge was passable; though there were strong affidavits of the inconvenience and loss to be sustained by the neighbourhood in being obliged to use a roundabout way in the interval; referring the complaints to the ordinary remedy by indictment, if the pulling down the old bridge under these circumstances were a nuisance; and seeing no occasion to interfere by applying a prompt remedy of a novel kind in modern practice. Bayley, J., there asked, "If the justices had not changed the site of the bridge, would they not have a right to use the materials of the old bridge in building the new one? Then can they be obliged to incur the additional expense of providing all new materials for the new bridge, because they have exercised the discretion given to them in changing it to another site?

43 Geo 3, c. 59.

By 43 Geo. III. c. 59, s. 1, (called Lord Gower's act,) surveyors of county bridges in England were empowered to get materials for the repair of county bridges and roads at the ends thereof, and to remove obstructions, in the same manner as surveyors of highways under stat. 13 Geo. III. c. 78. But the latter act is expressly repealed by the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 50, and to maintain the effect of the enactment in the 43 Geo. III. c. 59, s. 1, the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 50, s. 22, re-enacts in nearly the same terms as follows: "that the several powers and authorities hereby vested in the surveyor of highways, as well for the getting of materials, as the preventing and removing of all nuisances and annoyances, shall be and the same are hereby vested in the surveyor of county bridges, and the roads at the ends thereof repairable therewith; and the several penalties, forfeitures, matters, and things in this act contained relating to highways shall be and the same are hereby extended and applied, as far as the same are applicable, to such bridges, and the roads at the ends thereof as aforesaid, the said surveyor or surveyors of county bridges making satisfaction and compensation for all trespass and damage done in the execution of the powers of this act in such and the same manner as the surveyors of highways are required to make under the provisions of this act." (See the various clauses of the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 50, as to these powers, post, "Highways in General," Vol. III.)

Powers for getting materials and preventing nuisances as to, contained in the General Highway Act, to extend to county bridges and roads at the ends thereof.

Sect. 2. see it, ante, 456.

Tools and materials, &c. vested in surveyor.

Sect. 3. "And the right and property of all tools, implements, timber, bricks, stones, gravel, and other materials, purchased, gotten or had, or to be purchased, gotten or had by or by the order of justices in counties, or the surveyor of county bridges for the time being, or in any respect belonging to such counties, shall be and the same are hereby vested in such surveyor for the time being; in whom, upon any action or indictment being commenced or prosecuted, such property may be laid."

Actions for damages to bridges, or for property of county, to be in name of surveyor.

Sect. 4. "The inhabitants of counties shall and may sue for any damages done to bridges and other works maintained and repaired at the expense of such counties respectively, and for the recovering of any property belonging to such counties, in the name of their surveyor, and also shall and may be sued in the name of such surveyor; and no action or prosecution to be brought or commenced by or against the inhabitants of counties, by virtue of this act, in the name of the said surveyor, shall abate or be discontinued by the death or removal of such surveyor, or by the act of the surveyor, without the consent of the justices at their general quarter sessions assembled, but the surveyor for the time being shall be deemed the plaintiff or defendant in such actions, as the case may be. provided always, that every such surveyor in whose name any action or suit shall be commenced, prosecuted, or defended in pursuance of this act, shall always be reimbursed and paid out of the monies in the hands of the treasurer of the public stock of such county respectively, all such costs and charges as he shall be put unto or become chargeable with by reason of his being so made plaintiff or defendant therein; and also all the costs and charges of prosecuting any indictment or indictments, or other proceedings, against any person or persons whomsoever."

Surveyor indemnified.

By sect. 5, the county are not bound to repair a new bridge unless erected in a substantial and commodious manner, under the direction or to the satisfaction of the county surveyor. (See the enactment, ante, 450.)

Orders respecting bridges in Yorkshire to be made by sessions held first week after Easter.

Sect. 6. "All orders and proceedings made and had within the county of York, relative to county bridges, shall in future be made and had by the justices of the respective ridings assembled at the annual and general quarter sessions of the peace holden the first whole week after Easter, and at no other sessions whatever within such ridings, except at such adjournment as shall be made at the above annual and general quarter sessions so holden as aforesaid, for the express purpose of carrying such orders made as aforesaid into effect; provided nevertheless, that it shall and may be lawful for any two justices of the said ridings respectively, in cases of emergency, to give such orders for making temporary bridges, or such temporary repairs as shall be necessary for the temporary accommodation of the public."

Sect. 7. "Nothing herein contained shall extend to any bridges or roads which any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, is, are, or shall be liable to maintain or repair by reason of tenure or by prescription, or to alter or affect the right to repair such bridges or roads."

Act not to extend to bridges repaired by reason of tenure, &c.

Stat. 54 Geo. III. c. 90, s. 2, recites, "And whereas it is expedient that the provisions of the said act, except as after mentioned, should be extended to bridges repaired by the inhabitants of hundreds and other general divisions of counties;" and enacts, "that the said act and all the powers and provisions of stat. 43 Geo. III. c. 59, (except as to bridges hereafter to be erected,) are extended 'as well to bridges and the roads at the ends thereof repaired by the inhabitants of hundreds, and other general divisions in the nature of hundreds, as to bridges and the roads at the ends thereof repaired by the inhabitants of counties.'"

These provisions extended to bridges in hundreds, &c.

By stat. 55 Geo. III. c. 143, s. 1, (a) after reciting the provisions of 43 Geo. III. c. 59, s. 1, and 54 Geo. III. c. 90, above noticed, and that "it is expedient that surveyors of county bridges and other persons, being under contract for the rebuilding or repairing such bridges, or bridges repaired by the inhabitants of hundreds and other general divisions of counties in the nature of hundreds, should have a more extended power for procuring materials than is at present vested in such surveyors of county bridges, by the operation of the said first recited act, 'so far as relates to the procuring of stone for such purposes from quarries;' it is enacted, "that it shall and may be lawful to and for every surveyor of such bridges in each and every county within that part of the United Kingdom called England, appointed or to be appointed by the justices at any general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden for such county; and also to and for the bridge master or all and every persons or person who may at the passing of this act, or from and after the passing thereof, be under contract for the rebuilding or repairing of any public bridge, built or repaired at the expense of the inhabitants of any such county, hundred, or general division as aforesaid; and such surveyor and surveyors and also such other person or persons, are hereby authorised and empowered, with the consent and by the order of two justices of the peace, acting for the county in which such bridge is intended to be rebuilt or repaired, first had and obtained for that purpose, to search for, work, dig, get and carry away any stone, in, from or out of any quarry or quarries whatsoever, within the county or counties to which such bridge may belong; other than and except such quarries as may be situated within a garden, yard, avenue to a house, lawn, park, paddock, or inclosed plantation, or as may now or hereafter have ornamental timber trees growing thereon, without the license or consent of the owner or owners of such quarry or quarries, as such surveyor or other person or persons shall judge necessary for the rebuilding or repairing of such bridges respectively, provided such quarry or quarries shall have been worked within the last three years preceding the time when such bridge shall be about to be rebuilt or repaired; the said surveyor or other person or persons making such satisfaction and recompence for the value of such stone, and also for the damage to be done to such quarry or quarries by the getting and carrying away the same, as shall be agreed upon between him or them and the owner, occupier, or other person interested in such quarry or quarries respectively; and in case they cannot agree, or such owner or occupier or other person interested shall refuse to treat, then and in every such case the justices of the peace at their general or quarter sessions, or any two or more of them appointed for that purpose, fourteen days' notice having been given to the owner or his agent of the intention to require a jury, shall cause the value of such stones and amount of such damage to be inquired into and ascertained by a jury of indifferent men of the county, riding, division, city, town, liberty, or precinct wherein the same shall be situated; and to that end shall summon and call before such jury and examine upon oath (which oath

VII. Assessments and Contracts for Repairs, &c.; Expenses of, &c.

Assessments for Repairing, &c.]—The mode of taxing and collecting the monies necessary for the repairs of bridges, and the highways at the ends thereof, was regulated in the first instance by 22 Hen. VIII. c. 5, and afterwards by the 1 Anne, stat. 1, c. 18, and the 12 Geo. II. c. 29, s. 1.

Assessments, &c.

By the 22 Hen. VIII. c. 5, s. 4, "in every such case (ante, 457) where it cannot be known and proved what persons, lands, tenements and bodies politic owen to make and repair such bridges, that for speedy reformation and amending of such bridges, the justices of peace within the shires or ridings wherein such decayed bridges been out of cities and towns corporate, and if it be within cities or towns corporate, then the justices of peace within every such city or towns corporate, or four of the said justices at the least, whereof one to be of the quorum, shall have power and authority within the limits of their several commissions and authorities, to call before them the constables of every town and parish being within the shire, riding, city, or town corporate, as well within liberty as without, wherein such bridges or any parcels thereof shall happen to be, or else two of the most honest inhabitants within every such town or parish in the said shire, riding, city, or town corporate, by the discretion of the said justices of peace, or four of them at the least, whereof one to be of the quorum, and at and upon the appearance of such constables or inhabitants the said justices of peace or four of them, whereof one to be of the quorum, with the assent of the said constables or inhabitants, shall have power and authority to tax and set every inhabitant in any such city, town or parish within the limits of their commissions and authorities, to such reasonable aid and sum of money as they shall think by their discretions convenient and sufficient for the repairing, re-edifying and amendment of such bridges, and after such taxation made, the said justices shall cause the names and sums of every particular person so by them taxed to be written in a roll indented, and with their assent may tax the inhabitants; and shall also have power and authority to make two collectors of every hundred, for collection of all such sums of money by them set and taxed, which collectors, receiving the one part of the said roll indented, under the seals of the said justices, shall have power and authority to collect and receive all the particular sums of money therein contained, and to distrain every such inhabitant as shall be taxed and refuse payment thereof in his lands, goods and chattels, and to sell such distress, and of the sale thereof retain and perceive all the money taxed, and the residue (if the distress be better) to deliver to the owner thereof, and that the same justices or four of them, within the limits of their commissions and authorities, shall also have power and authority to name and appoint two surveyors, which shall see every such decayed bridge repaired and amended from time to time, as often as need shall require, to whose hands the said collectors shall pay the said sums of money taxed and by them received; and that the collectors, and surveyors and every of them, and their executors and administrators of them and every of them, from time to time shall make a true declaration and account to the justices of peace of the shire, riding, city, or town corporate wherein they shall be appointed collectors or surveyors, or to four of the same justices, whereof one to be of the quorum, of the receipts, payments and expenses of the said sums of money; and if they or any of them refuse that to do, then the same justices of peace or four of them, from time to time, by their discretions, shall have power and authority to make process against the said collectors and surveyors, and every of them, their executors and administrators, and the executors and administrators of every of them, by attachments under their seals, returnable at the general sessions of the peace, and, if they appear, then to compel them to account as is aforesaid, or else if they or any of them refuse that to do, then to commit such of them as shall refuse to wards, there to remain without bail or mainprize till the said declaration and account are truly made."

Justices may call together the constables, &c.;

Sect. 6. "Provided always, that this act or any thing therein contained be not prejudicial to the liberties of the five ports or members of the same; and for reformation of annoyances of bridges within the said ports and members."

Sect. 8. "The justices of peace or four of them shall have full power and authority to allow such reasonable costs and charges to the said surveyors and collectors as by their discretions shall be thought convenient."

22 Hen. 8, c. 5, concerning the amending of bridges further continued.

By the 1 Anne, st. 1, c. 18, after reciting, "Whereas by an act of parliament in the two-and twentieth year of the reign of King Henry the Eighth, intituled "An Act concerning Repairing and Amending of Bridges in the Highways," it is amongst other things therein enacted, that in every case where it cannot be known and proved that persons, lands, tenements and bodies politic ought to make and repair such bridges, that for speedy reformation and amending of such bridges the justices of the peace within their several counties, shires, ridings, divisions, cities and towns corporate, or any four of them, whereof one to be of the quorum, shall within the limits of their several commissions call before them the constables of every town and parish, or else two of the most honest inhabitants of every town and parish, and with the assent of the said constables or inhabitants, shall tax and set every inhabitant in such city, town and parish to such reasonable aid and sums of money as they shall think by their discretions convenient, for the repairing of such bridges, and after such taxation made shall cause the names and sums of every particular person so by them taxed to be written in a roll indented, one part whereof is to be delivered, under the hands and seals of the said justices, to two collectors appointed by the said justices for every hundred, who are thereby empowered to collect the same, which method and manner of taxing and collecting the said money for repair of decayed bridges and the highways thereunto adjoining, having by long experience been found very troublesome, burthensome and chargeable to the several counties, cities, towns corporate, ridings, and divisions: and whereas in many places within this kingdom more money than is necessary for the repair of such bridges hath been taxed and collected, or the money, which hath been so taxed and collected hath been misemployed, and not laid out in the repair of such bridges as was intended; for remedy of all which mischiefs and inconveniences for the future, it is enacted, that all and every the clauses, matters and things in the said act of the two-and twentieth year of the reign of the said King Henry the Eighth not hereby altered shall be and continue in full force and virtue, to all intents, constructions, and purposes whatsoever, relating to the repairing of decayed bridges and the highways thereunto adjoining."

1 Ann. st. 1, c. 18.

Sect. 2. "For the more easy taxing and collecting of the money for the repair of decayed bridges, and that the same may be duly applied to the purposes for which it is intended, the justices of the peace within the several limits of their commissions, shall at their general or quarter sessions of the peace, from and after the first day of May which shall be in the year of our Lord 1702, have full power and authority, upon due presentment to them made, that any bridge within their respective commissions or authorities is out of repair, and which by them hath usually or ought to have been repaired and maintained, to assess upon every town, parish or place within their respective commissions, in proportions upon respective town and parish as they usually have been assessed, towards the repair of bridges; which money so assessed as aforesaid shall be levied and collected by the respective constables of each parish, township, hamlet or vill, or by such other person and persons, and in such manner as the said justices by their order at such sessions shall in that behalf direct and appoint, and the money thereby raised shall (by such constables or other persons so as aforesaid by them collected) be paid over by them to the high constables of every hundred in any such county, city, riding, or division, in six days after they shall have received the same, and the high constables shall and are hereby required, in ten days after their receipt, to pay the same into the hands of such person and persons as the said justices by their order at such sessions shall direct and appoint to be treasurers and receivers of the same, and the money thereby raised shall be employed and accounted for according to the orders and directions of the said justices for and towards the amending of such decayed bridges and the highways at the end of the said bridges, from time to time as need shall require; and the said assessments shall be levied by distress and sale of the goods of every person so assessed not paying the same within ten days after demand, rendering the overplus of the value of the goods so distrained to the owner and owners thereof, the necessary charges of making and selling such distress being first deducted."

For collecting money for repair of decayed bridges justices of peace may assess every town, &c. in proportion.

Assessment, how to be levied, &c.

Treasurer to be appointed, and monies how employed.

On nonpayment, to be levied by distress.

Sect. 3. "And to the end that the money which is hereby intended to be assessed and levied may be duly collected, paid and applied to the several purposes for which it is intended, it is enacted, that every high constable, churchwarden, overseer of the poor or petty constable, or other person that shall neglect to assess, collect or pay the money hereby intended to be raised as is hereinbefore directed, shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of forty shillings, and every treasurer that shall pay any money but by order of such justices of the peace at such sessions (which order the said justices are hereby required and commanded to make only for the building, repairing or amending such bridges and the highways at the end of such bridges as aforesaid) shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of five pounds."

By this statute it will be seen that justices may now without indictment or presentment order repairs to any county or hundred bridges to any extent. (See 1 B. & Ald. 317.)

By the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 49, intituled "An Act to provide for repairing, improving and rebuilding County Bridges," (21st June, 1841,) reciting that "The expense of maintaining, altering, widening, repairing, improving and rebuilding county bridges and approaches thereto, is in some instances considerable, and it is expedient that the money required for that purpose should, in certain cases, be borrowed on security of the county rate; it was therefore enacted, that when it shall appear to the justices assembled at any general or quarter sessions of the peace to be holden at any time after the passing of this act in any county, riding or division in England or Wales, that the amount of any estimate approved by the said justices for the upholding, maintaining, supporting, altering, widening, repairing, improving or rebuilding of any county bridge or bridges, or the approaches thereto, or the land arches connected therewith, which any county is legally bound to repair or maintain, shall exceed one-fourth of the amount of the ordinary annual assessment for the rate of any county, riding or division, (such ordinary assessment to be taken on an average of such rate for the last seven years preceding,) it shall be lawful for the justices in quarter sessions assembled from time to time to Justices may agree with persons for loans.

Copies of agreements to be kept by the clerk of the peace.

Justices may charge the county rate with interest on the money borrowed, and such further sum as shall insure the repayment thereof in fourteen years.

Sect. 2. "That it shall and may be lawful for the said justices and they are hereby authorised and required to charge the rate to be raised upon such county, riding, or division, not only with the interest of the money so borrowed, but also with the payment of such further sum as shall insure the payment of the whole of the sum borrowed within fourteen years from the time of borrowing the same; and such sums shall be assessed on the county, riding or division, in such manner as county rates are directed to be assessed under the laws in force for that purpose, and shall be paid and applied, under the direction of the justices, in discharge of the interest and of so many of the principal sums on the said securities as such money will extend to discharge in each year, until the whole of the money for which such securities shall be made, and the interest thereof, shall be fully paid and discharged; and the justices shall and they are hereby required to fix one or more day or days in each year on which such payment shall be made, and shall make orders for assessments in due time, so as to provide for the regular payment thereof; and such justices shall also and they are hereby required to appoint a proper person to keep an exact and regular account of all the receipts and payments under the authority of this act, in a book or books, separate and apart from all other accounts, and the same to adjust and settle in such manner that it may easily be seen what interest is growing due, and what principal money has been discharged, and what remains due, and the books or book so adjusted and settled to deliver into Court at any general or quarter sessions to be held for such county, riding or division; and the justices shall also and they are hereby required at every such sessions carefully to inspect all such accounts, and to make orders for carrying the purposes of this act into execution, in such manner as to them shall seem meet; and the justices so assembled in sessions as aforesaid shall direct in what order such securities shall be discharged, by drawing lots or otherwise, as they shall think fit, taking care to discharge, in the first place, all such securities as shall bear the highest rate of interest."

Books to be kept of receipts and payments.

Notice to be given of borrowing money on mortgage of the county rate.

Sect. 3. "Provided always, that the justices shall not make any order for the borrowing money upon mortgage of the rate for any of the purposes aforesaid, unless a notice in writing of the intention to make the application, signed by two at least of the justices usually acting in and for the division within which the bridge in question is situated, shall have been given to the clerk of the peace four weeks previous to the holding of the sessions at which such application is intended to be made, and shall also have been published in the newspaper or newspapers in which notice of holding the quarter sessions is usually published, together with such last-mentioned notice.

Power of sessions to reimburse fees of clerk of peace.

The sessions are not authorised to order the payment by the bridgemaster to the clerk of the peace of a per-centage on all money to be raised for the repair of bridges in a particular district in lieu of all his fees for indictments, presentments, &c. for bridges within it, although such per-centage was claimed as an ancient fee, and had been paid without dispute for a long period of time. (R. v. Houldgrave, 1 B. & Ald. 312.) Et Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "I accede fully to the doctrine laid down by Lord Kenyon in the case of R. v. Essex, 4 T. R. 591, that wherever a duty is imposed on a county, and where costs incidentally and necessarily arise in questioning the propriety of acts done to enforce that duty, the magistrates who have the superintendence over the county purse have necessarily a right to defray such expenses out of the county stock. It is therefore quite clear, that in this case the magistrates had a jurisdiction over the subject-matter. They had a full right to order these expenses to be defrayed out of the county stock; but the question is, whether they had a right to make that order in these terms. It is not necessary for us to say whether the order is bad in point of form, as being on the bridgemaster and directing him to pay this money absolutely, and not out of such funds as may at the time be in his hands, for I think it cannot be supported on another ground. The magistrates had no authority to make an accumulated compensation of this nature to the clerk of the peace; their duty was at the end of each year to ascertain how much business had been done by him and what sum was due for it; but here they have, instead of taking the items of his bill division, substituted a sort of average computation. They have in this order directed the bridge-master to pay an ancient and accustomed fee of 1s. in the pound on all the money raised in lieu of all the fees due to him upon all business relating to the indictments and presentments for not repairing bridges and roads in this hundred. Now how can that be for a moment considered as an award by them to him of a fair compensation for his trouble? It does not depend on his trouble, and is not more or less in proportion to it; then this Court, seeing that the magistrates have here adopted an improper and illegal rule for computing the amount of this compensation, can do no otherwise than quash this order, which is founded on that computation."

Contracts for repairs of bridges not repairable by county.

By the General Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, s. 107, 108, for the better amendment of bridges which are not repairable by the county, counties are empowered to contract and compound for the repair of such bridges. See the act, post, "Highways, Turnpike," Vol. III.

Contracts, &c. for widening, diverting, or building new bridges.

Widening, Diverting, or Building New Bridges.]—By the provisions contained in the 14 Geo. II. c. 33, s. 1; 43 Geo. III. c. 59, s. 2, and 54 Geo. III. c. 90, s. 1, the quarter sessions may contract for the purchase of lands, buildings, and other erections, for the purpose of widening, diverting, or building new bridges. See the enactments, ante, 456, 457.

VIII. Modes of Prosecution for Non-Repairs.

Mode of prosecution.

In general, the modes of prosecution for the non-repair of or nuisances to bridges are the same as those for the non-repair of and nuisances to highways, and the reader is referred to title "Highways in General," Vol. III. for any further information not to be found under this title. The modes are either—by criminal information—by presentment—or by indictment.

Action for.

Generally speaking an action will not lie against the county by an individual, for a county bridge being out of repair, on the ground that no action will lie for a public injury; (Russell v. Men of Devon, 2 T. R. 667;) but in the case of special damage, it will sometimes lie. (See title "Highways in General," Vol. III; "Nuisance," Vol. V.)

1. By Criminal Information.

1 By criminal information.

In cases of very aggravated neglect to repair, or where there appears little chance of obtaining justice by preferring an indictment, the Court of Queen's Bench will grant a criminal information against the party liable to repair. (R. v. ——, 1 Stra. 180; see "Information," Vol. III.) But this course of proceeding is very rarely resorted to, the more usual one being by presentment or indictment. (2 Inst. 701.)

2. By Presentment.

2. By presentment in Queen's Bench.

The presentment of a public bridge for non-repairs, &c. may at common law be before the Queen's Bench or at the assizes. (2 Inst. 701.)

At court leet.

Decays of bridges are also presentable in the leet or torn. (2 Inst. 701.)

22 H. 8, c. 2, s. 1.

By stat. 22 Hen. VIII. c. 5, s. 1, "Be it enacted by the king our sovereign lord, and the lords spiritual and temporal, and the commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by authority of the same, that the justices of peace in every shire of this realm, franchise, city, or borough, or four of them at the least, whereof one to be of the quorum, shall have power and authority to inquire, hear, and determine in the king's general sessions of peace, of all manner of annoyances of bridges broken in the highways, to the damage of the king's liege people, and to make such process and pains upon every presentment afore them for the reformation of the same, against such as owen to be charged for the making or amending of such bridges, as the king's justices of this bench use commonly to do, or as it shall seem by their discretions to be necessary and convenient for the speedy amendment of such bridges."

8. Prosecution for Non-Repairs, &c.

Four of them at the least.]—If the bridge be within a franchise which hath not four justices and a sessions of its own, the justices of the county shall inquire; but if the franchise be a county of itself, and hath not four justices, one of them being of the quorum, it is not within this statute, but is left to the remedy which it had at common law. (2 Inst. 702.)

Construction of 22 Hen. 8, c. 5, s. 1.

And to make Process.]—Sect. 5. "And where any bridge or bridges lien in one shire or riding, and such persons inhabitants, bodies politic, lands or tenements, which owen to be charged to the making and amending of such bridges, lien and abiden in another shire or riding, or where such bridges been within any city or town corporate, and the persons inhabitants, bodies politic, lands or tenements, that owen to make or repair any such bridges, lien and been out of the said cities and towns corporate; be it enacted, that in every such case the justices of peace of the shire, city or town corporate, within the which such decayed bridges, or any part thereof shall happen to be, shall have power to inquire, hear, and determine all such annoyances, being within the limits of their commissions or authorities; and if the annoyance be presented, then to make process into every shire within this realm, against such as owen to make or amend any such bridges so presented before them to be decayed, to the annoyance and let of the passage of the king's subjects, and to do further in every behalf in every such case, as they might do by authority of this act, in case that the persons or bodies politic, lands or tenements, which owen to be charged to the amending or making of such bridges, or any part thereof, were in the same shire, riding, city or town corporate, where such annoyance shall happen to be. And that all sheriffs, and bailiffs of liberties and franchises, shall truly serve and execute such process, as shall come to their hands from the said justices of peace afore whom any presentment shall be had for any such annoyance, according to the tenor and effect of the said process to them directed, without favour, affection, or correction, upon pain to make such fine as shall be set upon them or any of them by the discretion of the said justices."

Process for.

This statute of 22 Hen. VIII. is confirmed by the 1 Anne, stat. 1, c. 18, except so far as the proceedings are altered by the last provision.

1 Anne, st. 1, c. 18.

This act of Anne empowers justices on presentment before them to lay such a sum on every parish towards the repair as each has been accustomed to collect; it directs the proceedings to originate in the jurisdiction where the defect exists, and provides that no certiorari shall be allowed to remove them. But this last proviso extends only to bridges which the county is bound to repair, and where a district or individual is charged, or the duty comes in question, the 5 Will. & Mary, c. 11, allows the removal. (R. v. Inhabitants of Hanworth, 2 Stra. 900; and see further, Inhabitants of Cumberland v. The King, 3 B. & P. 354, post, 475.)

Certiorari.

The court of quarter sessions cannot impose more than one fine for the non-repair of a bridge; however insufficient that fine may be, the only remedy is by a second indictment. This was held in the case of R. v. Machynlleth, &c. 4 B. & Ald. 469. In that case an order of sessions of the county of Montgomery was removed by certiorari into the Court of King's Bench The order was as follows: "It is ordered, that the fine heretofore imposed by the Court on the inhabitants of the township of Machynlleth and the parish of Pennegoes, for not repairing Pontfelingerrig bridge, be, and the same is hereby increased by the sum of 200*l.*" On the motion for quashing this order, it appeared from the affidavits that the defendants had been presented at the January sessions, 1818, for the non-repair of the bridge in question, to which presentment they at the same sessions submitted, and a fine of 300*l* was imposed and afterwards levied upon them. At Michaelmas sessions, 1820, the fine not having been sufficient, the order in question was made, imposing a second fine of 200*l.* The Court were of opinion, that the power of the sessions was at an end after the first fine, and that they had no jurisdiction to impose a second, and they quoted the case of R. v. Old Malton, id. 470, n. (a), as an authority directly in point, and the order of sessions was quashed.

Fine for non-repairs.

8. Prosecution for Non-Repairs, &c.

By stat. 12 Geo. II. c. 29, s. 13, no money shall be applied to the repair of bridges until presentment be made by the grand jury at the assizes or sessions of their insufficiency, inconveniency, or want of reparation. Now, however, by stat. 55 Geo. III. c. 143, s. 5, ante, 467, county bridges repaired under contract may be repaired without presentment, &c.

3. By Indictment, and herein of the Plea, Certiorari, Evidence, Trial, Judgment.

3. By indictment.

Indictment.]—Where a bridge is so out of repair as to be prejudicial to the public, it may be the subject of indictment.

We have already noticed, ante, 447 to 454, who are liable for the non-repair of county bridges.

Who may be made defendants.

Fine and contribution amongst several.

Any particular inhabitant of a county, or tenant of land charged to the repairs of a bridge, may be made defendant to an indictment for not repairing it, and be liable to pay the whole fine assessed by the Court for the default of repairs, and shall be put to his remedy at law for a contribution from those who are bound to bear a proportionable share in the charge; for the necessity of the case requires the greatest expedition in cases of this nature; for bridges being of absolute necessity are not to lie unrepaired till suits are determined. (1 Hawk. c. 77, s. 2.)

Venue.

The venue must be laid in the county where the bridge lies. (See post, 476.)

Form of indictment.

The indictment ought to state what sort of bridge it is, whether for carts or carriages, or for horses or footmen only. (R. v. Sainthill, 2 Ld. Raym. 1175; 1 Salk. 359.) Such statement must correspond with the proof. Where an indictment alleged that a bridge was a public carriage bridge, and also for the Queen's subjects passing and repassing on foot, and upon the evidence it appeared, that it had been used by passengers on horseback and on foot, and not with carriages, it was held, that the defendants could not be convicted of any part of the charge. (R. v. Lancashire, per Bayley, J., Lancaster Sum. Ass. 1820; Stark. on Evid. part iv. 316.)

The ancient form of an indictment as mentioned in 2 Inst. 701, is Quod pons publicus et communis situs in altâ regiâ viâ super flumen seu cursum aquæ, &c. In many indictments in modern times, the words super flumen, &c. are omitted; but in such indictments, they must be considered as virtually included in the true import of the word bridge; for otherwise such indictments would be vicious, there being many structures bearing the name of a bridge erected across a steep ravine, and in modern times over an ancient road crossed in a transverse direction by a new road, having no reference to water, and which unquestionably the county is not bound to repair. (Per Tenterden, C. J., in R. v. Oxfordshire, 10 B. & Cres. 301.)

As to the statement of the termini, see "Highways in General," Vol. III.

If the right to use the bridge be only at particular times, it must be so described. (R. v. Marquis of Buckingham, 4 Camph. 189. Post, "Highways in General," Vol. III.)

It must be stated that the bridge is public, and that it is in decay. (Andr. 285.)

A parish may be indicted for non-repair of a bridge without stating any other ground of liability than immemorial usage. (R v. Inhabitants of Hendon, 4 B. & Adol. 628.)

Where the indictment is against the inhabitants of any particular town, it is necessary to show that the bridge is within the town, and it is insufficient to charge that it is within the parish, unless the parish also be alleged to be within the town: moreover, as this is a charge against common right, a consideration must be shown for the liability of the inhabitants of the town; and it has been held, that no sufficient consideration is shown by alleging that the inhabitants of the town were liable by reason of the tenure of certain lands, for as inhabitants they cannot hold lands. (R. v. Machynlleth, 2 B. & Cres. 166; 3 D. & R. 388, S. C.; and see R. v. St. Giles, Cambridge, 5 M. & Sel. 261.)

8. Prosecution for Non-Repairs, &c.

In an indictment against a hundred for not repairing by prescription, although the hundred may have varied at different times in its component parts, it may, nevertheless, be charged as a hundred immemorially. And the same with respect to a corporation, if it be alleged that the "corporation" have repaired, and the component parts of it be not specified by describing it "as the mayor, aldermen," &c. (R. v. Oswestry, 6 M. & Sel. 361.)

Where a party is bound to repair ratione tenuræ, that circumstance must be set forth on the record. Thus even against a lord of the manor it will not suffice to charge a prescription without these expressions. (R. v. Bucknall, 2 Ld. Raym. 792, 804; ante, 451.)

Where this duty is charged the indictment must show the place in which the lands are situate. (2 Hale, 181.) The very terms "by reason of his tenure" should then also be inserted, and the Courts will not allow the words "owner and proprietor" to be substituted in their room. (R. v. Kerrison, 1 M. & Sel. 439.) But in presentments by the grand jury there is no occasion to show who ought to repair, it is sufficient if the defect be shown and the bridge stated to be public. (Andr. 285) Sed query.

A corporation must be charged as being bound by prescription, unless it is chargeable merely by reason of the tenure of certain lands. (Anon. 13 Rep. 33; ante, 451.)

Plea to.

Plea.]—It hath been resolved that it is not sufficient for the defendants to an indictment for not repairing a bridge, to excuse themselves by showing either that they are not bound to repair the whole, or any part of the bridge, without showing what other person is bound to repair the same: and it is said that in such case the whole charge shall be laid upon such defendants by reason of their ill plea. (1 Hawk. c. 77, s. 4.)

In an indictment for not repairing a highway, a special verdict was found. The indictment alleged that a certain part of the highway, at the township of Quick, in the West Riding, &c , to wit, a certain part thereof lying next adjoining the west end of a certain public bridge there called Tamewater Bridge, and within the distance of 300 feet thereof, &c. was and yet is very ruinous, &c. And that the inhabitants of the West Riding of, &c. of right ought to repair, &c. Plea, not guilty. The evidence (as far as it is material to this point) was, that the township of Quick lay in the parish of Saddleworth, in the said riding, which parish had been immemorially divided into four districts called Mears, in one of which mears, called Shaw Mear, the highway in Quick (hereinbefore mentioned) lay; and that the 300 feet at the other end of the bridge lay in another mear; and that each mear had respectively repaired the said respective highways, &c. The main argument was upon the liability of the county to repair these ends of 300 feet each, in the same manner as they were liable to repair the bridge. This was decided in the affirmative. But in arguing it was said by Mr. Holroyd, who was counsel for the crown, and not contradicted by the Court, that no question could arise as to any special liability of the respective mears, because the general issue only was pleaded; and any question of that sort, he said, could only be raised by a special plea. He cited R. v. City of Norwich, 1 Stra. 180, 182. The counsel for the defendants argued against this, upon the principle of assuming that these ends were highways, and not parts of the bridge. This, however the Court overruled. (R. v. W. R. Yorkshire, 7 East, 588; 3 Smith's Rep. 467, S. C.)

It is suggested, however, that this doctrine must be understood only of indictments against the county, and not of indictments against individuals, or bodies corporate. (1 Russ. 356; 2 Saund. 159, n. 10.)

Though the county, under the plea of not guilty, can only prove that the bridge was not a public bridge, or that it was in good condition, they may give evidence that particular individuals have been accustomed to repair, not immediately for the purpose of throwing the liability on them, but to afford ground for the jury to conclude that the bridge is not public. (R. v. ———, 2 M. & Sel. 262.)

It is said that where the defendants plead, whether necessarily or otherwise, that others ought to repair, and traverse the charge against themselves, the attorney-general may, in such case, take a traverse upon a traverse, by insisting that the defendants are bound to repair, and traversing the charge against the parties named in the plea: that on this last traverse issue must be taken, and that the attorney-general may afterwards surmise that the defendants are liable to repair, and that the whole matter shall be tried by an indifferent jury, &c. (1 Hawk. c. 77, s. 5.)

In a plea by the inhabitants of a county, that the inhabitants of a particular township have immemorially repaired the highway at the end of a county bridge, situate within the township, it is not necessary to allege any consideration for such prescription. (R. v. W. R. Yorkshire, 4 B. & Ald. 623.)

The plea must correspond exactly with the facts which come out in evidence. Therefore a plea by the inhabitants of the county, that certain townships had immemorially used to repair a bridge, is disproved by evidence that the townships had enlarged the bridge to a carriage bridge, which they had before been bound to repair as a foot bridge. (R. v. W. R. Yorkshire, 2 East, 353: and see R. v. Surrey, 2 Campb. 455; R. v. Duchess of Buccleugh, 1 Salk. 357; 6 Mod. 150, S. C.; R. v. Cumberland, 3 B. & P. 354. Post, "Highways in General," Vol. III.)

So where upon an indictment against a county, the defendants pleaded that J. S. was liable ratione tenuræ, and it appeared that J. S. had purchased part of an estate, the owner of which, both before and after the purchase, had repaired the bridge: it was held, that this was not sufficient evidence to support the plea. (R. v. Oxfordshire, 16 East, 223.) Et per Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The defendants have not maintained their plea. It is pleaded that M., and all those whose estate he hath, have immemorially repaired. Now, there is no evidence that he and those who had the estate have repaired, for it appears that since he purchased the estate another person has repaired. It would have been more correct to have pleaded that 'he and those whose estate he hath with others have repaired,' instead of which, the burthen is cast on him impartibly, without giving him the benefit of a contribution from Lord Cadogan. But I should be sorry to conclude the county from bringing forward their case."

So where a county pleaded that by a certain act of parliament for amending the road, certain trustees were directed to lay out the tolls thereby granted in repairing the roads, and were empowered to make and repair bridges; that the bridge in question was erected by the trustees under and by virtue of that act; and that the trustees were liable and ought to repair: it was held, that the bridge being built for public purposes in a public highway, the common law liability to repair attached upon the inhabitants of the county as soon as it was built; and that the plea was clearly insufficient to exonerate them, as it did not aver that the trustees had funds adequate to the repair of the bridge: and even if that fact had been averred and proved, still the county would have been primarily liable, and must have taken their remedy against the trustees. (R. v. Oxfordshire, 6 D. & R. 231; 4 B. & Cres. 194; and see R. v. Netherthong, 2 B. & Ald. 179.)

Removal by certiorari.

CERTIORARI.]—By 1 Ann. st. 1, c. 18, s. 5, it is enacted, "That all matters concerning the repairing and amending of the bridges and highways herein-before mentioned, shall be determined in the county where they lie, and not elsewhere; and that no presentment or indictment for not repairing such bridges, or the highways at the end of such bridges, shall be removed by certiorari out of the said county into any other Court."

In the case of R. v. Cumberland, 6 T. R. 194, the chief question was, whether an indictment for not repairing a bridge could be removed by certiorari or not? To show that it could not, the defendants relied on the above clause; but the prosecutor contended that it was intended only to prevent defendants removing such presentments or indictments, and did not take away the cer- tiorari from the prosecutor. Lord Kenyon, C. J. stated several cases in which informations and indictments for non-repair of bridges had been removed by writs of certiorari applied for by the prosecutors. And that therefore the Court were of opinion that the certiorari was properly issued. He also stated, that if it were otherwise it would be an anomalous case in the law of England, for that in these cases the defendants are the inhabitants of a county, and if the indictments cannot be removed by certiorari, they must be tried by the very persons who are parties to the cause.

8. Prosecution for Non-Repair, &c.

This case afterwards came by writ of error before the House of Lords, where the above judgment was affirmed. (Inhabitants of Cumberland v. The King, 3 Bos. & Pull. 354.)

A certiorari lies to remove an order made by the justices concerning the repair of a bridge, pursuant to a private act of parliament; and the justices ought to return the private act upon which their order is founded. (Dalt. 504.)

(R. v. Hamworth, 2 Stra. 900.) Upon motion to quash a certiorari to remove an indictment against the defendants at sessions, for not repairing a bridge, it was insisted, that by stat. 1 Ann. c. 18, the certiorari is taken away. To which it was answered, and resolved by the Court, that this act extendeth only to bridges where the county is charged to repair; and that where a private person or parish is charged, and the right will come in question, the act of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 11, hath allowed the granting a certiorari; and therefore they refused to quash.

In such a case the certiorari must be moved for before judgment has been pronounced in the inferior Court. Therefore where, upon an indictment at the quarter sessions for not repairing a bridge, a verdict was found for the crown, and judgment pronounced accordingly, the Court of Queen's Bench would not allow a certiorari to issue to remove the indictment for the purpose of taking objections to it. Per Curiam. The defendants have thought proper to take the chance of succeeding at the sessions. They ought clearly to have applied for a certiorari before the trial, and it ought not to issue in this late stage of the proceedings. They can now avail themselves of objections to the indictment by writ of error only. (R. v. Machynlleth, 1 B. & C. 142; 3 D. & R. 388, S. C.)

Evidence.

EVIDENCE AND WITNESSES.]—The preceding observations as to who are liable to repair will for the most part show the requisite evidence for the prosecution or defence; and see further, "Highways in general," Vol. III.

It lies on the prosecutors to prove that the bridge is a public bridge repairable by the county. On an indictment for not repairing arches as part of a bridge, it would be strong evidence that they were part of the bridge, if they were erected at the same time as the main bridge, or if the inhabitants of the county had from time to time repaired 300 feet of the road beyond these arches, which (if they were part of the original bridge) they would have been liable to do. (See per Bayley, J., in R. v. Oxfordshire, 1 B. & Adolp. 299, note.)

Where the indictment charged a corporation with a prescriptive obligation to repair a bridge, and a charter of a corporation granted by Edw. VI. was given in evidence, from the terms of which it appeared to be doubtful whether the corporation had before existed immemorially, and whether lands had not been given for the repair of the bridges (R. v. Stratford-upon-Avon, 14 East, 348); but parol evidence was given that the corporation had in fact repaired the bridge as far back as living memory could go; it was held that parol evidence and the charter might be taken in aid of each other, and that the preponderance of evidence was, that this was a corporation by prescription, although words of incorporation were used in the incorporating part of the charter only; and that the corporation were still bound to repair by prescription and not by tenure. (Id.)

Evidence of inhabitants to be taken.

The 1 Ann. st. 1, c. 18, s. 13, recites, "'Whereas many private persons, or bodies politic or corporate, are of right obliged to repair such decayed bridges, and the highways thereunto adjoining, but because the inhabitants of the county, riding or division, in which such decayed bridge or highways lie, have not been allowed, upon informations or indictments brought against such person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, for not repairing such decayed bridges, and the highways thereunto adjoining, by the judges before whom such information or indictment is to be tried, to be legal witnesses;" and enacts, "that in all informations or indictments to be brought and tried in any of her Majesty's Courts of Record at Westminster, or at the assizes or quarter-sessions of the peace, the evidence of the inhabitants, being credible persons, or any of them, of the town, corporation, county, riding or division, in which such decayed bridge or highway lies, shall be taken and admitted in all such cases, in the courts aforesaid; any custom, rule, order or usage to the contrary notwithstanding." Previous to this statute such witnesses were, in some instances, held to be competent on the ground of necessity. (R. v. Carpenter, 2 Show. 47; R. v. The Inhabitants of Kirdford, 2 East, 561.)

8. Prosecution for Non-Repairs, &c.

1 Ann. c. 18, s. 13.

Trial.

Jurors.

TRIAL. JURORS.]—By 1 Ann. st. 1, c. 18, s. 5, ante, 474, all matters concerning the repairing and amending of bridges and the highways thereunto adjoining shall be determined in the county where they lie and not elsewhere.

It seemeth that no inhabitant of a county ought to be a juror for the trial of an issue, whether the county be bound to such repairs or not; and therefore the jury must come from some adjacent county. (1 Hawk. c. 77, s. 6.)

What justices may try.

And it seemeth that the same objection may lie as to the justices, where they are (as it may probably happen) all interested: in which case it seemeth that the trial shall be in the next county; for where an impartial trial cannot be had in the proper county, it shall be tried as near to the same as may be; as in the case of R. v. Norwich, concerning a county bridge, the trial was in Suffolk. (2 Burr. 859, 860.) But now, by a special statute, viz. 1 Ann. st. 1, c. 18, supra, an inhabitant of the county in such case may be a witness.

Where the bridge lies within the county of a city or town corporate, and the point in dispute is whether the inhabitants of the city or the county at large ought to repair, on a suggestion of these facts on the record, and that consequently no impartial investigation can take place in either of these jurisdictions, the venire will be awarded into the county adjacent to the larger division. (R. v. Inhabitants of the City of Norwich, 1 Stra. 177.)

Judgment.

JUDGMENT.]—The judgment of the Court upon a conviction will generally be regulated by those principles which govern the judgment on conviction for not repairing highways; and for which see "Highways in general;" "Fine," Vol. III.

It seems that in some cases where the evidence is greatly in favour of the non-liability of the defendants to repair, the Court of Queen's Bench will, upon motion, direct a rule to be drawn up for staying the judgment, upon payment of the costs of prosecution; the county in the meantime proceeding to indict the parties whom they contend to be liable. (R. v. Oxford, 16 East, 223.) The Court, however, will not stay judgment generally, but only till further order; and, if the trial of another indictment be not proceeded in with all despatch, judgment will be given. (R. v. Southampton, 2 Chit. 215.)

Fines, &c. to be paid to the treasurer.

By 1 Ann. stat. 1, c. 18, s. 4, after reciting that "Whereas upon presentments and indictments for not repairing such bridges, and the highways at the end of such bridges, the fines imposed and set upon such presentments and indictments, and other fines and issues for not repairing, building and amending such bridges, and the highways at the end of such bridges, are returned into the Court of Exchequer, or other Courts;" it is enacted that no fine, issue, penalty or forfeiture, shall hereafter be returned into the Court of Exchequer, or other Court, but shall be levied and paid into the hands of the treasurer or treasurers, so as aforesaid appointed by the said justices, to be accounted for by the said treasurer, and to be applied by the said justices towards the building, repairing or amending such bridges, and the highways at the end of such bridges, and to no other end or purpose whatsoever."

We have already seen that the court of quarter sessions cannot impose more than one fine for the non-repair, however insufficient that fine may be, and the only remedy, if the defendant still neglect to repair. (R. v. Machynlleth, 4 B. & Ald. 469; ante, 471.) 8. Prosecution for Non-Repairs, &c.

IX. Injuries, &c., to Public Bridges.

It is a misdemeanor at common law maliciously to destroy or materially to damage any public bridge, it being a nuisance to all the Queen's subjects. (2 East, P. C. 108.) At common law.

The General Turnpike Acts, 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, s. 121, and 4 Geo. IV. c. 59, s. 72, (post, "Highways, Turnpike," Vol. III.,) enact, that if any person shall wilfully pull down or damage, or cause any damage or injury to be done to any bridge, arch, wall or other building or erection set up by the trustees, &c. of any turnpike road on such road, &c. he shall be subject to the penalty of 40*s* over and above the damage done, to be recovered as therein pointed out. Under Turnpike Act.

By the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 50, s. 22, "The several powers and authorities hereby vested in the surveyor of highways, as well for the getting of materials, as the preventing and removing of all nuisances and annoyances, shall be and the same are hereby vested in the surveyor of county bridges, and the roads at the ends thereof repairable therewith; and the several penalties, forfeitures, matters and things in this act contained relating to highways shall be and the same are hereby extended and applied, as far as the same are applicable, to such bridges and the roads at the ends thereof as aforesaid; the said surveyor or surveyors of county bridges making satisfaction and compensation for all trespass and damage done in the execution of the powers of this act, in such and the same manner as the surveyors of highways are required to make under the provisions of this act." Powers of Highway Act for preventing nuisances to extend to county bridges and approaches to.

By 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 13, "If any person shall unlawfully and maliciously pull down, or in anywise destroy any public bridge, or do any injury with intent, and so as thereby to render such bridge or any part thereof dangerous or impassable, every such offender shall be guilty of felony, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding four years; and, if a male, to be once, twice or thrice publicly or privately whipped, (if the court shall so think fit,) in addition to such imprisonment." See the general clauses of this act, post, "Malicious Injuries to Property," Vol. V. Destroying, &c. bridges, felony. Punishment.

To the punishment of imprisonment, besides whipping, may be added hard labour for the whole or any part of the imprisonment, and with or without solitary confinement, (7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 27,) such confinement not exceeding one month at any one time, nor three months in any one year. (7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 5.)

The offence is not triable at any quarter sessions. (5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1.) Not triable at sessions.

By the 43 Geo. III. c. 59, s. 4, actions for damages done to bridges, &c. and for the recovering of any property belonging to counties, may be brought in the name of the surveyor, &c. ante, 458. Actions for injuries to.

Building Act.

THIS act is the 14 Geo. III. c. lxxviii., relating to London and its precincts, the provisions, however, being extremely long and local, are not here inserted. It is partially amended by the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 75.

In the case of Rix and another, 4 D. & R. 332; 2 D. & R. M. C. 249, S. C. where justices omitted to set out in the record of a conviction on the act the evidence adduced on the hearing of the information as nearly as possible in the words used by each of the witnesses, in pursuance of the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, a mandamus was granted to compel them to set it out.

I. What constitutes the Offence of Burglary.

The word burglar seemeth to have been brought unto us out of Germany, by the Saxons, and to be derived of the German burg, a house, and larron a thief, probably from the Latin, latro, latronis. Derivation.

Burglary is a felony at common law, in breaking and entering a dwelling-house of another, in the night, with intent to commit some felony within the same, whether the felonious intent be executed or not. (Hale's Sum. 49; and see 2 Russ. 900; 4 Bla. Com. 227.) Definition of offence at common law.

As to burglary by breaking out of a house, see post, 494. Burglary by breaking out of a house.

As to burglary and attempt to murder, see post, 495. Burglary and attempt to murder.

As to housebreaking and stealing in a dwelling-house, or in shops, &c., see "Larceny," Vol. III. Housebreaking and stealing in.

1. What is a Burglary.

I. As to the Breaking.

Must be a breaking.

What is one.

To constitute a burglary, there must be an actual or constructive breaking, into the house. Every entrance into the house by a trespasser is not a breaking in this case. As if the door of a mansion house stand open, and the thief enter, this is not breaking. So, if the window of the house be open, and a thief with a hook or other engine draweth out some of the goods of the owner, this is no burglary, because there is no actual breaking of the house. But if the thief breaketh the glass of a window, and with a hook or other engine draweth out some of the goods of the owner, this is burglary, for there was an actual breaking of the house. (3 Inst. 64; 1 Hale, 551.) Where a window was a little open, and not sufficiently so to admit a person, and the prisoner pushed it wide open and got in, this was held to be no sufficient breaking. (R. v. Smith, Car. C. L. 293; R. & M. 178, S. C.) If there be an aperture in a cellar window to admit light, through which a thief enters in the night, this is not burglary. (R. v. Lewis, 2 Car. & P. 628; R. v. Spriggs, 1 Moo. & R. 357.)

Violence is not necessary.

There is no need of any demolition of the walls, or any manual violence, to constitute a breaking. Lord Hale says, "These acts amount to an actual breaking, viz. opening the casement or breaking the glass window, picking open the lock of a door, or putting back the lock, or the leaf of a window, or unlatching the door that is only latched." (1 Hale, 552; and see Pugh v. Griffiths, 7 A. & El. 836; R. v. Widan, 7 C. & P. 432; R. v. Wheldon, 8 C. & P. 247; R. v. Hyams, 7 C & P. 441.) Where a glass window was broken, and the window opened with the hand, but the shutters in the inside were not broken; this was ruled to be burglary, by Ward, C. B., Powis and Tracy, justices, and the Recorder; but they thought this the extremity of the law; and on a subsequent conference, Holt, C. J., and Powel, C. J., doubting and inclining to another opinion, no judgment was given. (2 East's P. C. 487. See R. v. Bailey and Spencer, post, 485, 486.) Where an entry was effected by taking the glass out of a door, it was holden to be a burglary. (R. v. John Smith, Russ. & R. 417.)

Entering by chimney.

If a thief enter by the chimney, it is a breaking; for that is as much closed as the nature of things will permit. (1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 4; 4 Bla. Com. 226.) And it would be a burglarious breaking to constitute burglary, though the party does not enter any of the rooms of the house. Thus in R. v. Brice, (R. & R. 450,) the prisoner got in at a chimney, and lowered himself a considerable way down, just above the mantel piece of a room on the ground floor. Holroyd and Burrough, justices, thought this was not a breaking and entering of the dwelling-house, on the ground that he was not in the dwelling-house till he was below the chimney-piece. The rest of the judges, however, held otherwise; for that the chimney was part of the dwelling-house, that the getting in at the top was a breaking of the dwelling-house, and that the lowering himself was an entry therein.

Must be a fastening.

Where the prisoner effected an entry, by pulling down the upper sash of a window, which had not been fastened, but merely kept in its place by the pulley weight: the judges held this to be a sufficient breaking to constitute burglary, even although it also appeared that an outside shutter, by which the window was usually secured, was not closed or fastened at the time. (R. v. Haines and Harrison, R. & R. 451; and see R. v. Hyams, 7 C. & P. 441.) Where an entry was effected, first into an outer cellar, by lifting up a heavy iron grating that led into it, and then into the house by a window: and it appeared that the window, which opened by hinges, had been fastened by means of two nails as wedges, but could notwithstanding easily be opened by pushing; the judges held that opening the window, so secured, was a breaking sufficient to constitute burglary. (R. v. Hall, R. & R. 355.) So where a party thrust his arm through the broken pane of a window, and in so doing broke some more of the pane, and removed the fastenings of the window and opened it. (R. v. Robinson, R. & M. 327. And see R. v. Bird, 9 C. & P. 44.)

1. What is a Burglary.

But if a window thus opening on hinges, or a door, be not fastened at all, opening them would not be a breaking, within the definition of burglary. Even where the heavy flat door of a cellar, which would keep closed by its own weight, and would require some degree of force to raise it, was opened; it had bolts by which it might have been fastened on the inside, but it did not appear that it was so fastened at the time: the judges were divided in opinion whether the opening of this door was such a breaking of the house as constituted burglary. (R. v. Cullan, R. & R. 157.) It was holden in Brown's case (2 East's P. C. 487) that it was. It seems the only difference between these two cases is, that in Brown's case there were no interior fastenings, but in Cullan's there were, though not used. In a later case it has been held by Bolland, B., that the lifting up of a trap door covering a cellar, which was merely kept in its place by its own weight, and which had no fastenings, because it being a new trap door, they had not been put on, is not a sufficient breaking to constitute a burglary. (R. v. Lawrence, 4 C. & P. 231. See R. v. Russell, R. & M. 377; R. v. Smith, supra.)

Where thing shut with its own weight.

Where the offender, with intent to commit a felony, obtains admission by some artifice or trick for the purpose of effecting it, he will be guilty of burglary, for this is a constructive breaking. Thus where thieves, having an intent to rob, raised the hue and cry, and brought the constable, to whom the owner opened the door; and when they came in they bound the constable and robbed the owner; this was held a burglary. So if admission be gained under pretence of business; or if one take lodgings with a like felonious intent, and afterwards rob the landlord; or get possession of a dwelling-house by false affidavits without any colour of title, and then rifle the house; such entrance being gained by fraud, it will be burglarious. (2 East's P. C. 485.) So in A. Hawkin's case, O. B. 1704, (2 East's P. C. 485,) she was indicted for burglary; upon evidence it appeared that she was acquainted with the house, and knew that the family were in the country; and meeting with the boy who kept the key, she prevailed upon him to go with her to the house, by the promise of a pot of ale; the boy accordingly went with her, opened the door, and let her in, whereupon she sent the boy for the pot of ale, robbed the house, and went off; and this being in the night time, it was adjudged that the prisoner was clearly guilty of burglary. (And see Doe v. Carter, 8 T. R. 302.) If a servant conspire with a robber, and let him into the house by night, this is burglary in both; (1 Hale, 553; 1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 14; R. v. Cornwall, 2 Str. 881;) for the servant is doing an unlawful act; and the opportunity afforded him of doing it with greater ease rather aggravates than extenuates the guilt. But if a servant, pretending to agree with a robber, open the door and let him in for the purpose of detecting and apprehending him, this is no burglary, for the door is lawfully open. (Reg. v. Johnson, 1 Car. & Mar. 218.)

Entering by fraud a constructive breaking.

A breaking may be also constructive, as where in consequence of violence commenced or threatened, in order to obtain entrance, the owner, either from apprehension of the force, or with a view more effectually to repel it, opens the door through which the robbers enter. But where no fraud or conspiracy is made use of, or violence commenced or threatened, in order to obtain an entrance, there must be an actual breach of some part of the house, though it need not be accompanied with any violence as to the manner of executing it. (2 East's P. C. 486.)

So entering by threats.

Some part of the house must be broken. Where the prisoner opened the area gate with a skeleton key, and from the area passed into the kitchen, through a door which did not appear to have been shut at the time; the judges held that opening the area gate was not a breaking of the dwelling-house, as there was no free passage, in the time of sleep, from the area into the house. (R. v. Davis, R. & R. 322.) So, breaking a door, which formed part of the outward fence of the curtilage of a dwelling-house, and which opened, not into any building, but into a yard only, was holden not to be a breaking of the dwelling-house; the premises consisted of a dwelling-house, warehouses, and stables, surrounding a yard; there was an immediate entrance to the dwelling-house from the street, and a gate and gateway, under one of the warehouses, leading into the yard; the prisoner entered the premises by breaking this gate: the judges held that this was not burglary: that breaking this gate, which was part of the outward fence of the curtilage, and not opening into any of the buildings, was not a breaking of any part of the dwelling-house. (R. v. Bennett, R. & R. 289.) A shutter-box partly projected from a house, and adjoined the side of the shop window, which side was protected by wooden panelling, lined with iron: held, that the breaking and entering the shutter-box did not constitute burglary. (R. v. Paine, 7 Car. & P. 135.) As to what is a dwelling-house, see post, 485, and post, "House," Vol. III.

Must be into part of a house.

1. What is a Burglary.

Breaking inner rooms, &c.

A burglary may be committed by a breaking on the inside: for though a thief enter a dwelling-house in the night-time through the outer door being left open, or by an open window, yet, if when within the house, he turn the key or unlatch a chamber door, with intent to commit felony, this is burglary. (R. v. Johnson, 2 East's P. C. 488.) And this may be done by a servant, who sleeps in an adjacent room, unlatching his master's door, and entering his apartment with intent to kill him; (1 Hale, 544; 2 East's P. C. 488;) or to commit a rape on his mistress; (Gray's case, 1 Stra. 481.) But Lord Hale doubts whether a guest at an inn is guilty of burglary by rising in the night, opening his own door, and stealing goods from other rooms. (1 Hale, 554.) And it seems certain that breaking open a chest or trunk is not in itself burglarious; (Fost. 108, 109; 2 East's P. C. 488;) and, according to the better opinion, the same principle applies to cupboards, presses, and other fixtures, which, though attached to the freehold, are intended only the better to supply the place of moveable depositories. (Fost. 109) And Mr. J. Foster there says, "in questions between the heir or devisee, and the executor (see 2 Vern. 508; 1 P. Wms. 94;) those fixtures may with propriety enough be considered as annexed to and parts of the freehold. The law will presume that it was the intention of the owner, under whose bounty the executor claimeth, that they should be so considered; to the end that the house might remain to those who, by operation of law, or by his bequest, should become entitled to it, in the same plight he put it or should leave it, entire and undefaced. But in capital cases I am of opinion that such fixtures, which merely supply the place of chests and other ordinary utensils of household, should be considered in no other light than as mere moveables, partaking of the nature of those utensils, and adapted to the same use." See 1 Hale, 555; 2 East's P. C. 489; see also the valuable work on Fixtures by Messrs. Amos and Ferard.

Breaking out of a house.

It was formerly doubted whether the breaking might not be subsequent to the entry; as if the prisoner being in the house, without violence, should break it, in order to escape with his booty; (1 Hale, 554;) but this difficulty was removed by 12 Ann. c. 7, and now by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 11, which see, post, 494.

Unlocking and opening a hall door of a house and running away, is a sufficient breaking out of the house. (R. v. Lawrence, 4 C. & P. 231; see R. v. Compton, 7 C. & P. 139, post, 495.)

2. As to the Entry.

There must be an entry.

It is essential that there should be an entry as well as a breaking. (1 Hale, 555.)

What amounts to.

It is deemed an entry when the thief breaketh the house, and his body, or any part thereof, as his foot or his arm, is within any part of the house; or when he putteth a gun into a window which he hath broken, (though the hand be not in,) or into a hole of the house which he hath made, with intent to murder or kill; this is an entry and breaking of the house; but if he doth barely break the house, without any such entry at all, this is no burglary. (3 Inst. 64; 2 East's P. C. 490.)

Thieves came by night to rob a house; the owner went out and struck one of them; another made a pass with a sword at persons he saw in the entry, and in so doing his hand was over the threshold. This was adjudged burglary by great advice. (2 East's P. C. 490.)

1. What is a Burglary.

In the case of George Gibbons, Old Bailey, June, 1752 (Fost. 107; 2 East's P. C. 490;) who was indicted for burglary in the dwelling-house of John Allan, it appeared in evidence that the prisoner in the night time cut a hole in the window shutters of the prosecutor's shop, which was part of his dwelling-house, and putting his hand through the hole took out watches and other things, which hung in the shop within his reach; but no entry was proved, otherwise than by putting his hand through the hole. This was held to be burglary, and the prisoner was convicted.

Introducing the hand through a pane of glass, broken by the prisoner, between the outer window and an inner shutter, for the purpose of undoing the window latch, is a sufficient entry. (R. v. Bailey, R. & R. 341.) So would the mere introduction of the offender's finger. (R. v. Davis, R. & R. 499; and see 1 Hale, 533.)

So, an entry down a chimney is a sufficient entry into the house, for the chimney is part of the house. (R. v. Brice, R. & R. 450, ante, 482.)

But an entry through a hole in the roof, left for the purpose of admitting light, is not a sufficient entry to constitute burglary; for a chimney is a necessary opening, and needs protection; whereas, if a man choose to leave a hole in the wall or roof of his house instead of a fastened window, he must take the consequences. (R. v. Spriggs, 1 Moo. & Rob. 357.)

It is even said that discharging a loaded gun into a house is a sufficient entry. (1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 11; 1 Hale, 555; 4 Camp. 220; Pickering v. Rudd, 1 Stark. 48.)

If the instrument with which the house is broken happen to enter the house, but without any intention upon the part of the burglar to effect his felonious intent (as, for instance, to draw out the goods) with it, this will not be a sufficient entry to constitute a burglary. (R. v. Hughes & al, 1 Leach, 496; see R. v. Roberts, 2 East's P. C. 487.)

The prisoner raised a window which was not bolted, and he thrust a crowbar under the bottom of the shutter (which was about half a foot within the window) so as to make an indent on the inside of the shutter, but from the length of the bar his hand was not inside the house. This was held not to be a sufficient entry to constitute burglary. (R. v. Rust and Ford, R. & M. 184; Car. C. L. 293, S. C. by the name of R. v. Roberts.)

Where the house was broken, but not entered, and the owner for fear threw out his money, it was holden to be no burglary; though clearly robbery, if taken in the presence of the owner. (2 East's P. C. 490.)

Where thieves bored a hole through the door with a centre-bit, and part of the chips were found in the inside of the house, by which it was apparent that the end of the centre-bit had penetrated into the house, yet as the instrument had not been introduced for the purpose of taking the property or committing any other felony, it was decided that this was not sufficient to constitute burglary. (R. v. Hughes, 2 East's P. C. 491.)

If divers come in the night to do a burglary, and one of them break and enter, the rest of them standing to watch at a distance, this is burglary in all. (3 Inst. 64.)

The entry need not be at the same time as the breaking, provided both be in the night: therefore, if thieves break a hole in the house one night, with intent to enter another night, and commit felony, which they execute accordingly, it is burglary. (1 Hale, 551.)

3. As to the Dwelling-house and Residence.

The burglary must be in a dwelling-house.

The breaking and entering, to constitute a burglary, must be into the dwelling-house of another, that is to say, a house which the occupier or his family usually reside, or in other words dwell and lie in.

Church.

It has been said that a church may be the subject of burglary (3 Inst. 64; 1 Hale, 556); but this seems questionable (see 1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 17); the act,

1. What is a Burglary.

7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 11, merely mentions "dwelling-house." There is an express provision as to breaking and entering into and stealing chattels in a church, 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 10, post, "Larceny," Vol. III.

Person must reside in it.

A house under repair, or a building intended for and constructed as a dwelling-house, in which no one lives, though the owner's property is deposited there, is not a place in which burglary can be committed; for it cannot be deemed his dwelling-house, until he has taken possession and began to inhabit it; (1 Leach, 185; Fuller's case, 2 East's P. C. 498; 1 Leach, 196, n.; Elsmore v. St. Briavells, 2 M. & R. 514; 8 B. & Cress. 461, S. C.;) nor will it make any difference if one of the workmen engaged in the repairs sleep there in order to protect it; (1 Leach, 186, in notis;) nor though the house is ready for the reception of the owner, and he has sent his property into it preparatory to his own removal, will it become for this purpose his mansion. (R. v. Hallard, 2 East's P. C. 498; R. v. Thompson, Id.; 2 Leach, 771.) So if the landlord of a house purchase the furniture of his out-going tenant, and procure a servant to sleep there in order to guard it, but without any intention of making it his own residence, a breaking into the house will not amount to burglary. (R. v. Davis, 2 Leach, 876; R. v. Smith, 2 East's P. C. 497; R. v. Fuller, Id. 498; 1 Leach, 196, n.) The mere casual use of a tenement will not suffice. (1 Hale, 557.) Where neither the owner nor any of his family have slept in the house, it is not his dwelling-house, so as to make the breaking into it burglary, though he had used it for his meals and all the purposes of his business. (R. v. Martin, R. & R. 108.) If a man die in his leasehold house, and his executors put servants in it, and keep them there at board wages, burglary may be committed in breaking it, and it may be laid to be the executor's property. (2 East's P. C. 499.)

What actual residence necessary or not.

It is not absolutely necessary to make it burglary that any person should be actually within the house at the time the offence is committed. For if the owner leaves it animo revertendi, though no person resides there in his absence, it will still be his mansion. (1 Hawk. c. 37, s. 11.) As if a man has a house in town and another in the country, and goes to the latter in the summer, the nocturnal breaking into either, with a felonious design, will be burglarious; (Fost. 77; 2 East's P. C. 496, Nutbrown's case;) so if he goes a journey. (R. v. Murray, 2 East's P. C. 496.) And though a man leaves his house and never means to live in it again, yet if he uses part of it as a shop, and lets his servant and his family live and sleep in another part of it, for fear the place should be robbed, and lets the rest to lodgers, the habitation by his servant and family will be a habitation by him, and the shop may still be considered as part of his dwelling-house. (R. v. Gibbons, R. & R. 442.) But where the prosecutor, an upholsterer, left the house in which he had resided with his family, without any intent of returning to live in it, and took a dwelling-house elsewhere, but still retained the former house as a warehouse and workshop; two women, employed by him as work-women in his business, and not as domestic servants, slept there to take care of the house, but did not have their meals there, or use the house for any other purpose than sleeping in it as a security to the house; the judges held that this was not properly described as the dwelling-house of the prosecutor. (R. v. Flannagan, R. & R. 187.)

Residence by a servant.

The occupation of a servant in that capacity, and not as tenant, is in many cases the occupation of the master, and will be a sufficient residence to render it the dwelling-house of the master. (R. v. Stock, R. & R 185, post, 490; R. v. Wilson, R. & R. 115.) Where the prisoner was indicted for burglary in the dwelling-house of J. B. J. B. worked for one W. who did carpenter's work for a public company, and put J. B. into the house in question, which belonged to the company, to take care of it, and some mills adjoining. J. B. received no more wages after than before he went to live in the house. It was held not rightly laid. (R. v. Rawlings, 7 Car. & P. 150.) If a servant live in a house of his master's at a yearly rent, the house cannot be described as the master's house, though it is on the premises where the master's business is carried on, and although the servant has it because of his service. The servant is in such a case the tenant of the master, who might have distrained for rent, and could not arbitrarily have removed him, and consequently, the occupation of the servant cannot be deemed the occupation of the master. (R. v. Jervis & al. R. & M. 7; and see further, post, 489; "Larceny," Vol. III.)

1. What is a Burglary.

Every permanent building, in which a party may dwell and lie, is deemed a dwelling-house, and burglary may be committed in it. A set of chambers in an inn of court or college is deemed a distinct dwelling-house for this purpose. (1 Hale, 556; 1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 11.) So even a loft over a stable, used for the abode of a coachman, which he rents for his own use and that of his family, is a place which may be burglariously broken. (R. v. Turner, 1 Leach, 305.) So also burglary may be committed in a lodging-room; (1 Leach, 89;) or in a garret used for a workshop, and rented together with an apartment for sleeping, and if the landlord does not sleep under the same roof, the place may be laid as the mansion of the lodger. (1 Leach, 237; see further post, 491, 492.) But burglary cannot be committed in a tent or booth in a market or fair, even although the owner lodge in it; (1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 35; 1 Hale, 557;) because it is a temporary, not a permanent, edifice. But if it be a permanent building, though used only for the purposes of a fair, it is a dwelling-house. (R. v. Smith, 1 M. & Rob. 256.)

What a sufficient house.

A set of chambers in inn of court, &c.

The term "mansion-house," in its common sense, not only includes the dwelling-house but also all outhouses, as barn, stable, cow-house, dairy-house, if they be parcel of the mansion, though they be not under the same roof or joining contiguous to it. (1 Hale, 558, 559.)

Outhouses, &c.

And all outhouses, within the same curtilage, with the dwelling-house, occupied and immediately connected and communicating with it, may be the subject of burglary, and the burglary, in such cases, may be alleged to have been in the dwelling-house. Formerly this was the case with respect to all buildings within the curtilage. But by stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 13, "no building, although within the same curtilage with the dwelling-house, and occupied therewith, shall be deemed to be part of such dwelling-house for the purpose of burglary, or for any of the purposes aforesaid, unless there shall be a communication between such building and dwelling-house, either immediate or by means of a covered and inclosed passage leading from the one to the other." This provision made an important alteration in the law as it previously stood, for no communication as that pointed out by the act was absolutely necessary at common law to constitute burglary, see cases, infra, note(a). Where the prosecutor's house consisted of two rooms for living in,

7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 13.

(a) The following decisions will show how the law stood previously to the above act of 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29. Their insertion is deemed useful, especially in deciding questions arising as to what is a house to constitute the offence of arson; as to which, see post, "Burning."

This offence was deemed to be committed by breaking open a shop built close to a dwelling-house, although no one slept in it, and it had no internal communication with the principal mansion. (R. v. ——, 1 Leach, 357.) And a building used with a dwelling-house and opening into an inclosed yard belonging thereto was deemed parcel of the dwelling-house, though it also opened into an adjoining street, and although it had no internal communication with the dwelling-house. (R. v. Lithgo, R. & R. 357.) And where the prosecutor's house was at the corner of a street, and adjoining thereto was a workshop, beyond which a stable and coach-house adjoined, all were used with the house, and had doors opening into a yard belonging to the house, which yard was surrounded by adjoining buildings, &c. making altogether an inclosed yard; the workshop had no internal communication with the house, and it had a door opening into the street; its roof was higher than that of the dwelling-house; the street door of the workshop was broken open in the night and the offender being indicted for burglary and convicted, the judges held this workshop was parcel of the dwelling, and that the conviction was right. (R. v. Chalking, R. & R. 334.) So where the prisoner broke into a goose-house opening into the prosecutor's yard, into which his house also opened, and the yard was surrounded partly by other builings of the homestead and partly by a wall, some of the buildings had doors opening backward, and there was a gate in one part of the wall opening upon a road; this goose-house was held to be part of the dwelling-house. (R. v. Clayburn and another, R. & R. 360.)

another room used as a cellar, and a wash-house on the ground-floor, and of three bed-rooms up stairs, one of them over the wash-house, and the bed-room over the house-place communicated with that over the wash-house, but there was no internal communication between the wash-house and any of the rooms of the house, but the whole was under the same roof; and the defendant broke into the wash-house, and was breaking through the partition wall between the wash-house and the house-place; it was holden that the defendant was properly convicted of burglary, in breaking the house. (R. v. Burrows, R. & M. 274.) To be within the meaning of this statute, the building must be occupied with the house in the same right; and, therefore, where a house let to and occupied by A. adjoined and communicated with a building let to and occupied by A. and B., it was holden that the building could not be considered a part of the dwelling-house of A. (R. v. Jenkins, R. & R. 244.) If there be any doubt as to the nature of the building broken and entered, a count may be inserted for breaking and entering a building within the curtilage. (See "Larceny," Vol. III. and Jervis's Arch. C. L. 9 ed. 306.)

Divided house.

A dwelling-house may be so divided as to form two or more dwelling-houses within the meaning of the word in the definition of burglary. See the authorities, post, 492.

4. As to the Ownership in the House.

Who the owner of the house.

It is necessary to ascertain to whom the mansion belongs, and to state that with accuracy in the indictment. If the rule, observes Mr. East, (2 East's P. C. 499, 500,) by which to ascertain this ownership may be compressed with sufficient discrimination into a small compass, I should say generally, that where the legal title to the whole mansion remains in the same person; there, if he inhabit it either by himself, his family, or servants, or even by lotted to a variety of trades and there were two wings annexed to it, both of which were used as dwelling-houses and were occupied by different persons, but had no internal communication with the building, though the roofs of all were connected, and the entrances of all were out of the same common enclosure, the case was considered otherwise, and it was holden not a dwelling-house, for the purpose being evidently a distinct tenement, and occupied jointly, while the adjoining houses were the respective abodes of individuals. (Egginton's case, 2 East's P. C. 424; 2 B. & P. 508; 2 Leach, 913, S. C.)

It was holden that burglary might take place in respect of a building eight or nine yards distant from a dwelling-house, and with only a paling between them; (1 Hale, 558;) and an outhouse in the yard of a dwelling-house was considered parcel of the dwelling-house if the yard was inclosed, though the occupier had another dwelling-house opening into the yard, and he let such dwelling-house with certain easements in the yard. (Ry. & Mo. C. C. 13; and see Brown's case, 2 East's P. C. 493.) But it was even then laid down, that if the outhouse was at a considerable distance, as if it stood a bowshot from it, so as not to be reasonably esteemed parcel of the principal dwelling, nor within the curtilage, it would not answer to this description. (1 Hale, 144.) And in more recent times it has been decided, that an outhouse several feet from the mansion, and unconnected by any common inclosure, is not a place in which burglary can be committed. (Garland's case, 2 East's P. C. 493; 1 Leach, 144.) And a building separated from a dwelling-house by a public road, however narrow, was held not to be a parcel of the dwelling-house, if there was no common fence or roof to connect them, though it were held by the same tenure, and though some of the offices necessary to the dwelling-house adjoined it, and though there was an awning extending from it to the dwelling-house. But if it be made a sleeping-place for any of the servants of the dwelling-house, it may be deemed a distinct dwelling-house. (R. v. Westwood, R. & R. 495.)

A door which only forms part of the outward fence of the curtilage, and opens into no building, but into the yard only, was not such a part of the dwelling-house as that the breaking thereof would constitute burglary. (R. v. Bennett, R. & R. 289.)

An area gate, opening into the area only, was not deemed part of the dwelling-house, so as to make the breaking thereof burglary, if there was any door or fastening to prevent persons in the area from entering the house, although such door or fastening might not be secured at the time. (R. v. Ouns, R. & R. 322.)

his guests, the indictment must lay the offence to be committed against his mansion. And so it is if he let out apartments to inmates who have a separate interest therein, if they have the same outer door or entrance into the mansion in common with himself. But if distinct families be in the exclusive occupation of the house, and have their ordinary residence or domicile there, without any interference on the part of the proper owner, or if they be only in possession of parts of the house as inmates to the owner, and have a distinct and separate entrance, then the offence of breaking, &c. their separate apartments must be laid to be done against the mansion-house of such occupiers respectively.

1. What is a Burglary.

Nice questions frequently arise as to whether a party dwells in and occupies a house in his own right, or as the servant of another. A workman was employed at 15*s.* a-week wages, and a cottage free of rent and taxes, for himself and his family to dwell in: upon an indictment for burglary, the judge at the trial held, that as the workman occupied this cottage for his own benefit, and not for the use or benefit of his master, it was well described as the dwelling-house of the workman; and upon a reference to the judges, they were of the same opinion. (R. v. Joblin, R. & R. 525; and see R. v. Smythe, 5 Car. & P. 202; R. v. Jarvis, R. & M. 7, infra.) Where a toll-gate-house, erected by the trustees of a turnpike as and for the dwelling-house of the person who might be employed to collect the tolls at a particular gate, was broken and entered in the night time; and upon an indictment for the burglary, it appeared that the trustees had let the tolls to Ward, and Ward had employed Ellis (at weekly wages, with the privilege of living in the toll-house in question) to collect them, and that Ellis dwelt in the house for that purpose: the indictment having described this as the dwelling-house of Ellis, the judges held the description to be correct, for Ellis had the exclusive possession; it was unconnected with any premises of Ward's, and Ward did not appear to have any interest whatever in it. (R. v. Camfield, R. & M. 42.) And where a servant lived rent-free in a house belonging to his master, and his master paid the taxes, and his master's business was carried on in the house; but the servant and his family were the only persons who slept in the house; and that part of the house in which his master's business was carried on, was at all times open to those parts in which the servant lived; upon an indictment for breaking and entering that part of the house in which the master's business was carried on, it was held, that it might be described as the servant's house; but it was not decided that it might not also be described as the house of the master. (R. v. Witt, R. & M. 248.)

If a servant live in the house of his master at a yearly rent, the house cannot be described as the master's house though it be on the premises where the master's business is carried on, and although the servant has it because of his service. (R. v. Jervis, R. & M. 7; and see R. v. Smythe, 5 C. & P. 202.)

G. Brown was indicted for burglary in the dwelling-house of M. Graydon, and stealing thereout oats. A second count stated it to be in the dwelling-house of T. Trumball. Graydon, a farmer, had a dwelling-house in which he lived, a stable, cowhouse, cottage, and barn, all in one range of buildings in the order mentioned, and under one roof; but they were not inclosed by any wall or court yard, nor was there any communication from one to the other within. Trumball's family resided in the cottage by agreement with Graydon, when he went into his service; but Trumball paid no rent; only an abatement was made in his wages on account of his family residing in the cottage. Some corn having been missed out of the barn, Trumball and another person put a bed in the barn, and went and slept there, and a few nights after they had so done, the prisoner unlocked the barn door, and took away a quantity of oats. After conviction, judgment was respited upon a doubt whether it could be considered as the dwelling-house either of Graydon or Trumball. Upon a reference it was agreed, (Mich. T. 1787,) by all the judges, that the sleeping in the barn made no difference. But they held, (Buller, J., doubting,) that this was no more than a license to Trumball and servant to lodge in the cottage, and not a letting it to him; and that the barn, as well as the rest of the buildings, being under the same roof, continued parts of the mansion-house of Graydon. And many of the judges inclined to think that if there had been a demise of the cottage to Trumball, the barn would still have continued part of Graydon's dwelling-house in point of law. (G. Brown's case, 2 East's P. C. 501.) So in another case, where the servant of three partners in trade had weekly wages, and particular rooms assigned to him, as lodging for himself and his family, over the bank and brewery office of his employers, with which his lodging communicated by a trap door and a ladder, it was holden by the twelve judges, that a burglary committed in the banking room was well laid as in the dwelling-house of the three partners. (R. v. Stockton and others, 2 Taunt. 339; 2 Leach, 1015; Russ. & Ry. 185, S. C. nom. R. v. Stock.)

Where the prisoner was indicted for burglary in the dwelling-house of J. B. J. B. worked for one W. who did carpenter's work for a public company, and put J. B. into the house in question, which belonged to the company, to take care of it, and some mills adjoining. J. B. received no more wages after than before he went to live in the house. It was held not rightly laid. (R. v. Rawlins, 7 C. & P. 150.)

A gardener lived in a house of his master, quite separate from the dwelling-house of his master, and the gardener had the entire control of the house he lived in, and kept the key; it was held, that, on an indictment for burglary, the gardener's house might be laid either as his or his master's. (R. v. Rees, 7 C. & P. 568.)

Married women.

If a house be tenanted by a married woman, it must in all cases be deemed the house of her husband, and not of her, even although she live separate from her husband. (Farr's case, Kel. 43; 2 East's P. C. 504; and see Boggett v. Frier, 1 East, 301; R. v. Smythe, 5 Car. & P. 202.) Where a married woman lived apart from her husband, upon an income arising from property vested in trustees for her separate use, the judges held that a house which she had lived in was properly described as her husband's dwelling-house, though she paid the rent out of her separate property, and the husband had never been in it. (R. v. French, Russ. & Ry. 491.) Upon an indictment for burglary in the dwelling-house of George Gillings, it appeared that Gillings owned and had built the house in question, but had never lived in it; that suspecting his wife of infidelity with one Webdale, they agreed to separate, and he told her she might live in the house in question, and gave her a bed and bedding, &c. for the purpose; she afterwards lived and cohabited with Webdale in the house, with the knowledge of her husband; Webdale paid the expenses of housekeeping, but never paid any rent for the house to Gillings; the judges held, that the house was properly described as the dwelling-house of the husband. (R. v. Wilford, Russ. & Ry. 517.)

A prisoner was indicted for breaking into the house of Elizabeth A. and stealing her goods. There was a second count, laying the property of the goods in the Queen. It was shown by proof of the record, that the husband of Elizabeth A. had been convicted of felony; and it was also proved, that he was still in prison under the sentence, and that the articles stolen were his before his conviction, and had remained in the house from the time of his apprehension, and that the wife continued in possession of the house and goods till they were stolen by the prisoner. It was held that the prisoner might be properly convicted of larceny on the second count, which laid the property of the goods in the queen, although there had been no office found; and that he could not be convicted of housebreaking, as that part of the indictment which laid the goods and the house to be those of Elizabeth A. could not be supported. (Reg. v. Whitehead, 9 C. & P. 429.)

A house in part of which a man lives, and other parts of which he lets to lodgers, may be considered and described as his house, though he has taken the benefit of the Insolvent Debtor's Act, and executed an assignment including the house, if the assignee has not taken possession; at least, no objection can be made if in other counts it be stated as the house of the assignee, and in others of the lodger in whose room the offence was committed. (R. v. Ball, R. & M. C. C. 30.)

1. What is a Burglary.

In the case of persons employed by the crown or public companies, the same rule prevails as in other cases. If burglary be committed in the invalid office at Chelsea, in Somerset House, in Whitehall, in any of the public offices or royal palaces, the mansion must be laid as the Queen's. (1 Leach, 324, and in notis; R. v. Williams, 1 Hale, 522.)

Public offices, palaces, &c.

The same principle applies to corporations; for if a burglary be laid to be in the dwelling-house of one of the officers belonging to the African Company, it will be bad, although a corporation cannot be resident. (Kel. 37; 1 Leach, 324, in notis; 2 East's P. C. 501.) But it has been holden that if the agent of a trading company resides in the house of his employers in town, it may properly be laid as his dwelling. (R. v. Margette, 2 Leach, 930.) So a city hall may be described as the residence of the clerk to the company to whom it belongs (id. in notis.) The ground for these two last decisions is stated to be that the punishment of burglary was intended to protect the actual occupant from the terror of disturbance during the hours of darkness and repose, but it would be absurd to suppose that that terror which is of the essence of the crime could from a breaking and entry in one place produce an effect in another. (2 Leach, 931.) J. Picket was indicted for burglary in the dwelling-house of the East India Company, which is inhabited by their servants; and he was convicted and executed. O. B. April, 1765. (2 East's P. C. 501.) C. Maynard was indicted for burglary in the mansion-house of the master, fellows, and scholars of Bennet College, in Cambridge. It appeared that he broke into the buttery of the college, and there stole some money; and it was agreed by all the judges, upon a reference to them, that it was burglary. (C. Maynard's case, 2 East's P. C. 501.)

Corporations, and public bodies.

If by an actual severance all internal communication be cut off, the partitions become distinct houses, so that if one house is divided to accommodate the families of two partners, though the rent and taxes of the whole are paid out of the common fund, each part will be regarded as a mansion. (R. v. Jones, 1 Leach, 537; 2 East's P. C. 504; Tracy v. Talbot, Salk. 532.) But a house, the joint property of partners in trade in which their business is carried on, may be described as the dwelling-house of all the partners, though only one of the partners resides in it. (R. v. Athea, R. & M. 329.)

Where house divided.

If the chamber of a guest at an inn be forced open and his goods stolen, the burglary must be laid in the dwelling-house of the landlord. (1 Hale, 557; R. v. Prosser, 2 East's P. C. 502; 2 MS. Sum. 249.) And the same in all other cases where the occupier has the use merely and no interest in the apartments he occupies. (See 1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 26.)

Inn.

Where inmates have several rooms in a house of which they keep the keys, and inhabit them severally with their families, yet if they enter at one outer door with the owner, these rooms cannot be said to be the dwelling-houses of the inmates, but the indictment ought to be for breaking the house of the owner. But if the owner inhabit no part of the house, or even if he occupy a shop or a cellar in it, but do not sleep therein, the apartments of such inmates shall be considered as their respective dwelling-houses. (Carrell's case, 1 Leach, 237; Trapshaw's case, 1 Leach, 427; and see 1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 26.)

Inmates.

If the owner, who lets out apartments in his house to other persons, sleep under the same roof, and have but one outer door common to him and his lodgers, such lodgers are only inmates, and all their apartments are parcel of the one dwelling-house of the owner. (Kel. 84.) But if the owner do not lodge in the same house, or if he and the lodgers enter by different outer doors, the apartments so let out are the mansion for the time being of each lodger respectively, even though the rooms are let by the year. (2 East's P. C. 505, post, 493.) Where a servant of the prosecutor dwelt in a part of the house, and the rest (excepting the shop) was let off to lodgers: the judges held that the shop, which was in the prosecutor's occupation, was properly described as the dwelling-house of the prosecutor. (R. v. Gibbons, Russ. & Ry. 442, ante, 486. Where the prosecutor, having a dwelling-house with a shop adjoining to it, with separate entrances from the street, but the shop having a back door into a passage in the house, let the shop to his son, who used it as a place of business only, and did not reside there; a burglary having been committed in the shop, the judges held that it was properly described in the indictment as the dwelling-house of the father. (R. v. Sefton, R. & Ry. 202.)

Owner letting off part, but not residing in residue.

If the owner let off a part, but do not dwell in the part he reserves for himself, then the part let off is deemed in law the dwelling-house of the party who dwells in it, whether it communicates internally with the other part or not; but the part he has reserved for himself is not the subject of burglary: it is not his dwelling-house, for he does not dwell in it; nor can it be deemed the dwelling-house of the tenant, for it forms no part of his lodging. (1 Leach, 89, 237, 437.) Where a coachman rented the loft over a coachhouse and stables, and he and his family resided in it, a burglary committed in it was holden to be well laid to have been committed in the dwelling-house of the coachman. (R. v. Turner, 1 Leach, 305.) The governor of the workhouse at Birmingham, under a contract for seven years with the guardians and overseers of the poor of that place, occupied and dwelt in the governor's house, with the exception of one room, which the guardians and overseers reserved for themselves as an office, and three other rooms as store-rooms; the clerk of the guardians and overseers kept one key of the office, the governor another, for the purpose of securing the effects in case of fire, and the room was cleaned and taken care of by the governor's servant: this office being broken and entered in the night time, ten of the judges held that it could not be described as the dwelling-house of the governor. (R. v. Wilson, R. & Ry. 115.) So where the owner of a dwelling-house, warehouse, and counting-house, within the same curtilage, let the dwelling-house to his warehouseman at a yearly rent: the counting-house and warehouse being broken and entered in the night time, the judges held that this was not burglary; that the counting-house and warehouse could not be described as the dwelling-house of the master; because the dwelling-house was occupied by the warehouseman as tenant, and not as servant; nor could they be described as the dwelling-house of the tenant, for they formed no part of his holding. (R. v. Jarvis, R. & M. 7. See R. v. Smythe, 5 Car. & P. 202.)

Owner letting whole of house to different tenants.

If the owner let the whole of a dwelling-house, retaining no part of it for his or his family's dwelling, the part each tenant occupies and dwells in is deemed in law to be the dwelling-house of such tenant, whether the parts holden by the respective tenants communicate with each other internally or not. Thus where the owner of a house divided the shop into two by a partition, each having a door opening into the street, and let one of them and some rooms in the house to Choice, and the other with the remainder of the house to Ryan; at the end of each shop was a door, opening into a common passage, that led to one common staircase; Choice paid 100*l.* a-year and the taxes for the whole house, for his part; Ryan 80*l.* a-year for his; each had his separate family, separate kitchen, &c.; but the rooms occupied by each opened on the common staircase above-mentioned: upon an indictment for burglary, it appeared that the prisoner entered at the window of the common staircase, unlocked the door of Ryan's shop, and entered it; and the judges held that the place was rightly described in the indictment as the dwelling-house of Ryan. (R. v. Bailey, R. & M. 23.) One Richards let her dwelling-house to her son Josiah, and a warehouse, communicating internally with the dwelling-house, to Josiah and his younger brother, at a separate rent; Josiah lived in the dwelling-house, and constantly used the communication between that and the warehouse; both brothers carried on their joint business in the warehouse: the warehouse being broken and entered in the night time, the judges held that it could not be deemed a part of the dwelling-house, as the dwelling-house was holden under a demise to Josiah alone, and he alone dwelt in it, and the warehouse was holden under a distinct demise to himself and his brother. (R. v. Jenkins, R. & R. 244.) Where a lodger occupied a sleeping-room on the first floor, and a workshop in the attic, and the rest of the house was occupied by other lodgers, a burglary in the workshop was holden by the judges to be well laid to have been committed in the dwelling-house of the lodger who rented it. (R. v. Carrell, 1 Leach, 237.)

A man cannot be indicted for burglary in his own house. Therefore if the owner of a house break and enter into the room of his lodger and steal his goods, he can only be convicted of the larceny. (Kel. 84; 2 East's P. C. 502, 506.)

1. What is a Burglary.

Burglary in offender's own house.

5. As to the Time of committing the Offence.

The breaking and entry must be in the night time. (4 Bla. Com. 224.) As to what shall be reckoned night, and what day, for this purpose the 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 86, s. 4, enacts, "That so far as the same is essential to the offence of burglary, the night shall be considered and is hereby declared to commence at nine of the clock in the evening of each day, and to conclude at six of the clock in the morning of the next succeeding day (a)."

The offence must be in the night time.

The breaking and entering must both be committed in the night time; if the breaking be in the day and the entering in the night, or the breaking in the night and the entering in the day, it is no burglary. (1 Hale, 551.) But the breaking may be in one night, and the entering in another. (1 Hale, 551; R. v. Jordan, 7 C. & P. 432.) The breaking, however, must be with intent to enter, and the entry with intent to commit a felony. Where the prisoner took the glass out of a door on Friday night, with intent thereby to enter the house, and afterwards on the Sunday night, and before the glass was replaced, he entered by the aperture he had thus made; the judges held, that the breaking being originally with intent to enter, and the breaking and the entering being both in the night time, the offence amounted to burglary, notwithstanding the time that had elapsed between the breaking and the entry. (R. v. Smith, R. & R. 417.)

What shall be deemed night.

Both the breaking and entry must be in the night.

6. As to the Intention.

There can be no burglary but where the indictment both expressly alleges, and the verdict also finds an intention to commit some felony: for if it appear that the offender meant only to commit a trespass, as to beat the party, or the like, he is not guilty of burglary. (1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 18; 3 Inst. 65; 1 Hale, 561.) In the case of R. v. Knight and Roffey, the prisoners were indicted for a burglary in the dwelling-house of Mary Snelling, the indictment stating the intent to be to steal the goods of Leonard Hawkins. It appeared from the evidence that Hawkins, who was an excise officer, had seized some bags of tea in a shop, entered in the name of Smith, as being there without a legal permit, and had removed them to Mary Snelling's, where he lodged. The prisoners and many other persons broke open Mary Snelling's house in the night, with intent to take his tea. Smith did not appear to have been in company with them; but it was shown that they supposed the tea to belong to Smith; and that the act was committed either in company with him, or by his procurement. The jury being directed to find as a fact with what intent the prisoners broke and entered the house, found that they intended to take the goods on the behalf of Smith; and upon the point being reserved, the twelve judges were of opinion that the indictment was not supported, as however outrageous the conduct of the prisoners was in so endeavouring to get back Smith's goods, still there was no intention to steal. But if the indictment had been for breaking the house with intent feloniously to rescue goods seized, &c., which is felony by stat. 19 Geo. II. c. 34, some of the judges thought that it would have been burglary. But even in that case it was agreed, that evidence must be given on the part of the prosecutor to show that the goods were uncustomed, in order to throw the proof upon the prisoners that the duty was paid; but being found in oil cases, or in great quantities in an unentered place, would have been sufficient for that purpose. (2 East's C. P. 510.) It seems the better opinion, that an intention to commit a rape, or other such crime, which is made felony by statute, and was a trespass only at common law, will make a man guilty of burglary, as much as if such offence were a felony at common law; because wherever a statute makes any offence felony, it incidentally gives it all the properties of felony at common law. (1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 18.)

The burglary must be with a felonious intent.

(a) Anciently the day was accounted to begin only at sun-rising, and to end immediately upon sunset: but the better opinion at the time of passing the above enactment seems to be, that if there be day light, or crepusculum, (twilight,) enough begun or left to discern a man's face withal, it was no burglary. (3 Inst. 63; 1 Hale, 350; 2 East's P. C. 509.) But this did not extend to moon-light, for then many midnight burglaries would go unpunished; and besides the malignity of the offence does not so properly arise from its being done in the dark, as at the dead of night, when all the creation, except beasts of prey, are at rest, when sleep has disarmed the owner, and rendered his castle defenceless. (4 Bla. Com. 224.) The ancient law appears to be the most reasonable. In the summer there is but a very short time when there is not day-light sufficient to discover the countenance of the offender; and it is well known that a very considerable portion of the offences of this nature are committed during that light. Besides, the same reason why moon-light is not sufficient to protect the burglar would apply to twilight.

1. What is a Burglary.

Immaterial whether intent be executed.

It is immaterial whether the felonious intent be executed or not: thus they are burglars who, with a felonious intent, break any house or church in the night, although they take nothing away. And herein this offence differs from robbery, which requires that something be taken, though it be not material of what value. J. Dobbs was indicted for burglary, in breaking and entering the stable of J. Bayley, part of his dwelling-house, in the night, with a felonious intent to kill and destroy a gelding of one A. B. there being. It appeared that the gelding was to have run for 40 guineas, and that the prisoner cut the sinews of his fore-leg to prevent his running, in consequence of which he died. Parker, C. J. ordered him to be acquitted; for his intention was not to commit the felony by killing and destroying the gelding, but a trespass only to prevent his running, and, therefore, no burglary. But the prisoner was again indicted for killing the gelding, and capitally convicted. (Dobb's case, 2 East's P. C. 513; see 1 Hale, 561.) If the breaking and entering be at different times, both must appear to have been done with the same felonious intent. (R. v. Smith, R. & R. 417.) The felonious intent with which the prisoner broke and entered the house cannot be proved by positive testimony; it can be proved only by the admission of the party, or by circumstances from which the jury may presume it. Where it appears that the prisoner actually committed a felony after he entered the house, this is satisfactory evidence, and almost conclusive, that the intent with which he broke and entered the house was to commit that felony. Indeed the very fact of a man's breaking and entering a dwelling-house in the night time is strong presumptive evidence that he did so with intent to steal; and the jury will be warranted in finding him guilty, unless the contrary be proved. (Arch. Peel's Acts, 40.) And where a man was found in the night time in the chimney of a shop, just above the mantel-piece, and before he had entered the shop; the jury found him guilty of burglary with intent to steal upon this evidence merely, and the judges confirmed the conviction. (R. v. Brice, R. & R. 450; ante, 482.)

As to what is a variance in the statement of the intent, see post, 496.

II. Burglary by breaking out of a House.

Breaking out of house.

By the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 11, "if any person shall enter the dwelling-house of another with intent to commit felony, or being in such dwelling-house shall commit any felony, and shall in either case break out of the said dwelling-house in the night time, such person shall be deemed guilty of burglary." As to the punishment, see post, 497.

This offence is not triable at any quarter sessions, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1.

In R. v. Lawrence, 4 C. & P. 281, Bolland, B., held, that escaping from a house by lifting a heavy flap door which had no fastening, but was kept down by its own weight, was not a sufficient breaking out of a house.

It is not the less a burglary, because the defendant was lawfully in the house, as a lodger, or a guest at an inn. (Reg. v. Wheeldon, 8 C. & P. 447.)

2. Burglary by breaking out of a House.

An indictment for breaking out of a house stated that the prisoner "did break to get out," and in another that he "did break and get out:" it was held not sufficient since the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 11, which uses the words "break out." (R. v. Compton, 7 Car. & P. 139.)

III. Burglary and Assaulting with intent to Murder, &c.

By the 7 Will. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 86, s. 2, "Whosoever shall burglariously break and enter into any dwelling-house, and shall assault with intent to murder any person being therein, or shall stab, cut, wound, beat, or strike any such person, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof, shall suffer death." By sect. 6 of this statute, principals in the second degree and accessories before the fact are punishable in the same way.

Burglary and attempt to murder.

Accessories.

This offence is not triable at any quarter sessions, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1.

Not triable at sessions.

The defendant may be found guilty of the burglary only, if the assault with intent to murder be not proved; or he may be found guilty of an assault only; (7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 11, ante, p. 285;) or, if a larceny also be charged, he may be found guilty of the larceny only. (See Jervis's Arch. C. L. 9 ed. 315.)

Defendant may be found guilty of one of the offences.

The indictment for this offence must charge both the burglary and the striking, and the proof must correspond with the indictment. Where A was indicted for burglary in the house of S. W. and striking D. James, the burglary was proved as laid, but the person struck was D. Jones, it was held, that the prisoner must be acquitted of the capital charge and convicted of the burglary only. (Reg. v. Parfitt, 8 C. & P. 288.)

Form of indictment.

It is not necessary to state the instrument, or means by which the injury was inflicted. (R. v. Briggs, 1 Mood. C. C. 318.)

IV. Indictment for Burglary.

The indictment must describe the facts necessary to constitute the offence of burglary, viz. the breaking and entering a dwelling-house of another in the night-time, and with some felonious intent.

Description of offence.

The words broke and entered must both be inserted, both of them being essential to constitute the offence. (1 Hale, 550.) The word burglariously is necessary, (4 Co. 39, 40;) as also the word feloniously, as in other felonies; and it must be stated that the offence was committed in a mansion or dwelling-house; and if it be stated to have been in a "house" merely, the proceedings will be defective (1 Hale, 550.) When the place is an outhouse which adjoins the mansion, it must either be laid in the dwelling-house generally, or in a stable, &c part of the dwelling-house, either of which methods may be adopted. (1 Leach, 144; 2 East's P. C. 512, 513.)

Breaking and entering.

Dwelling house.

Care must be taken that the local description of the house be according to the fact, as a variance would be fatal. If it be not expressly stated where the dwelling-house is situated, it shall be taken to be situated at the place named in the indictment by way of special venue. (See R. v. Napper, R. & M. 44.) And if two parishes having been named, the house is stated to be "at the parish aforesaid," the last parish shall be intended. (R. v. Richards, 1 M. & Rob 177.) Where it appeared that the dwelling house was in the parish of A. and an outhouse connected and occupied with it in the parish of B, and a burglary was committed in the outhouse, one of the questions reserved for the opinion of the judges was, whether the dwelling-house was properly described in the indictment, as being in the parish of B.; but the judges gave no opinion upon this point, having decided the case upon another ground. (R v. William Bennett and another, R. & R. 289.)

Local description of.

The name of the owner of the house must be stated with such certainty to a common intent, as is in general necessary in the description of the party who has sustained the injury. An error in such statement would be fatal. (2 Leach, 774; 2 East's P. C. 514.) See the cases and authorities as to who is to be deemed the owner, &c. ante, 488 to 493.) The owner may be described by an assumed name, by which he had been known for the preceding five years, and during that time had never been known by his original name. (R. v. Norton, R. & R. 510.) Where a person was indicted for burglary in the house of Sarah Lunns, and her name appeared to be London, he was acquitted of the capital part of the charge; (1 Leach, 253, in notis); and though it is said to be doubtful whether the leaving of a blank for the surname would not be vicious; (1 Hale, 558; Cole's case, Moore, 466); there can be but little doubt that at the present day such an omission would be material. (3 Chit. C. L. 1113.) As to the mode of describing the ownership in companies, &c. see "Indictment," Vol. III. If there be any doubt whether the house broken and entered belongs to A., B., or C., to obviate the difficulty, counts alleging it to be the dwelling-house of A., B., and C., respectively should be inserted.

Ownership of house.

4. Indictment for.

Time.

It must be stated that the offence was committed in the night-time; and it is not only necessary to state a day and year, but also an hour about which the offence was committed; in order that it may appear to the Court to be at a time when there could be no daylight remaining. If this be wanting, the defendant can only be convicted of a simple larceny. At the Lancaster Lent Assizes, 1771, (R. v. Waddington, 2 East's P. C. 513,) there was an indictment for burglary, alleging the fact to have been committed in the night, but not expressing about what hour it was done; Mr. J. Gould held the indictment insufficient as for a burglary, and directed the prisoner to be found guilty of a simple felony only. He said, that according to the old doctrine, a burglary might be committed at any time between sun-setting and sun-rising; but that the rule now established is, that it cannot be committed during the crepusculum; that therefore it is necessary to specify the hour, in order that the fact may appear upon the face of the indictment to be done between the twilight of the evening and that of the morning. But it is not necessary that the evidence should correspond with the allegation either as to the day or hour, so that it shows the offence to have been committed in the time of darkness. (2 Hale, 179.) Both breaking and entering must be charged to have taken place in the night, or there is no charge of burglary. (1 Hale, 549.) The hour should, though after twelve o'clock at night, be stated to be in the night of the preceding day.

Felonious intent.

The felonious intent must be stated, and this correctly so; for if it be stated that the defendant intended to commit one species of felony, and it is proved that he intended another, the indictment will be bad. (1 Hale, 561; R. v. Dobbs, 2 East's P. C. 513; R. v. Dingley, 2 Leach, 840; 2 East's P. C. 510, 514.)

Ownership of goods.

Where the intent laid was to steal the goods of J. W., and it appeared in evidence that no goods of any person of the name of J. W. were in the house, but that the name of J. W. had been inserted in the indictment by mistake; the judges held the variance to be fatal, and the defendant was accordingly acquitted. (R. v. Jenks, 2 East's P. C. 514; 2 Leach, 774.) Where A. was charged with breaking into the house of K., and stealing the goods of M.; it was proved by M. that K., his brother-in-law, had taken the house, and that M., (who lived on his property), carried on the trade of a silversmith for the benefit of K. and his family, having himself neither a share in the profits nor a salary. M. stated that he had authority to sell any part of the stock, and might take money from the till, but that he should tell K. of it; and that he sometimes bought goods for the shop, and sometimes K. did it: it was held, that M. was a bailee, and that the goods in the shop might properly be laid as his property. (Reg. v. Bird, 9 Car. & P. 44.)

If an actual larceny is averred, and it is proved that the theft was not complete, the defendants must be acquitted. (2 Leach, 708; R. v. Furnival, R. & R. 445; 2 East's P. C. 514.) Nor can a previous stealing in the same house be connected with a subsequent breaking, so as to support this charge. (Id.) On the other hand, if a felony has been actually committed, an aver-ment of the intent to commit it will suffice. (1 Hale, 560.) Where there is a doubt as to what specific felony was intended, the intention should be laid differently in separate counts. (2 East's P. C. 515.) 4. Indictment for.

The burglariously breaking and entering a dwelling-house, with intent to commit a rape, is not a crime which includes an assault; and therefore, in an indictment for such a burglary, the prisoner cannot be convicted of any assault under the 11th sect. of the stat. 1 Vict. c. 85. (Reg. v. Watkins, 1 Car. & M. 264; see ante, "Assault.")

If bank notes, or other valuable securities, be stolen, conclude "against the form of the statute," &c.; for although this is not necessary as to the burglary, yet if that part of the charge fail, such a conclusion would be deemed to be necessary in order to convict for the larceny. (R. v. Pearson, 5 C. & P. 121.) Conclusion.

V. Trial.—Verdict.

This offence is not triable at any quarter sessions; 5 & 6 Victi. c. 38, s. 1. Not triable at sessions.

The indictment may be so laid as to comprise several offences, arising out of the same transactions, so that the prisoner may be found guilty of part and acquitted of the rest. As if the prisoner be charged with burglariously breaking and entering the dwelling-house, and stealing goods of the value of 40*s.*, he may be acquitted of breaking and entering in the night-time, &c. and yet found guilty of stealing in the dwelling-house. (R. v. Withal and Overend, 1 Leach, 88, and 2 East's P. C. 517; and R. v. Hungerford, id. See "Indictment," Vol. III.) Verdict where several offences charged.

Or upon such an indictment the prisoner may be acquitted of the capital charges, viz. of the burglary, and of stealing in the dwelling-house to the value of 40*s.*, and be convicted of the simple larceny. (1 Hale, 561.)

Upon an indictment for burglary and larceny against two, one may be found guilty of the burglary and the larceny, and the other of the larceny only. (R. v. Butterworth, R. & R. 520.) Against several defendants.

VI. Punishment for.

By the 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 86, s. 3, it is enacted, "That whosoever shall be convicted of the crime of burglary shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be transported beyond the seas for the term of the natural life of such offender, or for any term not less than ten years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years." To the punishment of imprisonment may be added hard labour with or without solitary confinement, such confinement not exceeding one month at any one time, nor three months in any one year. (Id. s. 7; see "Larceny," Vol. III.) Punishment for burglary.

For burglary and assaulting, with intent to murder, &c. the offender shall suffer death. (7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict c. 86, s. 2, ante, 495.) This sentence may be recorded; 4 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 11. (See "Judgment," Vol. III.) Punishment for burglary and attempt to murder, &c.

VII. Reward for Apprehending, &c. a Burglar.

It may be observed, that it is provided by stat. 24 Hen. VIII. c. 36, that there shall be no forfeiture of lands or goods for killing any person that attempts to commit burglary. But besides this indulgence to a person killing such an offender in defence of his house, there are special advantages and rewards for apprehending him. (See 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 28; "Rewards," Vol. V.) Indemnity and reward.

8. Offence, &c.

VIII. Offence of having House-breaking Instruments.

Persons having house-breaking implements.

Stat. 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 4, for the purpose of preventing burglary and house-breaking, enacts, "That every person having in his or her custody or possession any picklock, key, crow, jack, bit, or other implement, with an intent feloniously to break and enter into any dwelling-house, warehouse, coach-house, stable, or out-building: or being armed with any gun, pistol, hanger, cutlass, bludgeon, or other offensive weapon; or having upon him or her any instrument with intent to commit any felonious act; every person being found in or upon any dwelling-house, warehouse, coach-house, stable, or outhouse, or in any inclosed yard, garden, or area, for any unlawful purpose, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond within the true intent and meaning of this act; and it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace to commit such offender, (being thereof convicted before him by the confession of such offender, or by the evidence on oath of one or more credible witnesses) to the house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding three calendar months; and every such picklock key, crow, jack, bit, and other implement; and every such gun, pistol, hanger, cutlass, bludgeon, or other offensive weapon; and every such instrument as aforesaid, shall, by the conviction of the offender, become forfeited to his majesty."

Punishment.

Implements, how disposed of.

In the case of R. v. Brown, 8 T. R. 26, (upon stat. 23 Geo. III. c. 88, now repealed by the above stat. 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 1,) a warrant of commitment was holden defective, because it did not state that the defendant was apprehended with the implements of house-breaking upon him at the time of such apprehension. Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, that he yielded with great reluctance to the objection.

IX. Forms.

(1.) Warrant to apprehend a burglar where he actually stole goods.

County of } To the Constable of FORASMUCH as A. I. of , in the county of , yeoman, hath this day made information and complaint upon oath before J. P. Esquire, one of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county, that yesterday in the night the dwelling house of him, the said A. I. at aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, was feloniously and burglariously broken open, and one silver tankard of the value of 5l. of the goods and chattels of him the said A. I. feloniously and burglariously stolen, taken, and carried away from thence; and that he hath just cause to suspect and doth suspect that A. O. late of , in the county of , labourer, the said felony and burglary did commit; these are therefore in her said Majesty's name to command you, that immediately upon sight hereof you do apprehend the said A. O. and bring him before me to answer the premises, and to be further dealt withal according to law. Herein fail you not. Given under my hand and seal the day of in the year of our Lord .

(2.) Commitment for like offence.

[Commencement as usual, as ante, p. 9]: that the said C. D. on , about the hour of twelve in the night, at , in the county aforesaid, the dwelling-house of A. B. there situate, feloniously and burglariously did break and enter, with intent the goods and chattels of the said A. B. in the said dwelling-house then and there being, then and there feloniously and burglariously to steal, take and carry away, and then and there in the said dwelling-house, twelve silver spoons of the goods and chattels of the said A. B., then and there feloniously and burglariously did steal, take and carry away. And you the said keeper, &c. [as usual, as ante, p. 9, to the end.]

(3.) Commitment for breaking out of a house.

[Commencement as usual, as ante, p. 9]: that the said C. D. on , at the parish of , in the county of , being in the dwelling-house of A. B. there situate, twelve silver spoons of the goods and chattels of the said A. B., in the said dwelling-house then and there being found, then and there in the said dwelling-house feloniously did steal, take and carry away; and that the said C. D., so being in the said dwelling house as aforesaid, and having committed the felony aforesaid, on the day and year aforesaid, about the hour of twelve in the night of the same day, at the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, feloniously and burglariously did break out of the said dwelling house, against the form of the statute in that case made and provided. And you the said keeper, &c. [as usual, as ante, p. 9, to the end.]

(4.) Indictment for burglary, laying an intent to steal as well as actual theft.

—— *(to wit) THE jurors for our Lady the Queen upon their oath present, that C. D. late of the parish of , in the county of, labourer, on the day of , in the year of the reign of our Lady the now Queen Victoria, about the hour of one in the night of the same day, with force and arms, at the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, the dwelling house of A. B. there situate, feloniously and burglariously did break and enter * with intent the goods and chattels of the said A. B.* [or of one G. H.] in the said dwelling house then and there being, then and there feloniously and burglariously to steal, take and carry away, and then and there in the said dwelling house, with force and arms, one silver tea pot of the value of 5l. [here state the articles stolen as in an indictment for larceny] of the goods and chattels of the said A. B. [or G. H.] in the said dwelling house then and there being found, then and there feloniously and burglariously did steal, take and carry away, against the peace of our said Lady the Queen, her crown and dignity. [If bank notes or other valuable security be stolen, conclude also, against the form of the statute in that case made and provided.] [If there be any doubt as to the ownership of the house or goods, add other counts accordingly. Also, as burglary is a breaking and entering of a dwelling house with intent to commit a felony, (and whether a felon at common law or by statute, is immaterial, 1 Hawk. c. 38, s. 38), if there be any doubt of the intent with which the offence was committed, it may be varied in different counts accordingly. See Jervis's Arch. C. L. 9th edit. 301.]

(5.) Indictment for burglary and assaulting, &c. with intent to murder.

[Same as in last precedent to the asterisk (*) and then proceed as follows:] and then and there in the said dwelling house in and upon the said A. B. in the said dwelling house then and there living, feloniously did make an assault with intent him the said A. B. then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought to kill and murder, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our Lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

(6) The like against two persons for a burglary with intent to steal.

—— to wit. THE jurors for our Lady the Queen upon their oath present, that C. D. late of the parish of , in the county of , labourer, on the day of , in the year of the reign of our Lady the now Queen Victoria, about the hour of twelve in the night of the same day, with force and arms at aforesaid, the dwelling house of A. B. there situate, feloniously and burglariously did break and enter, with intent the goods and chattels of the said A. B. in the said dwelling house then and there being found, then and there feloniously and burglariously to steal, take and carry away, against the peace of our said Lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

(7.) Indictment on 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 11, for burglary in breaking out of a house, ante, 494.

—— to wit. THE jurors for our Lady the Queen upon their oath present, that C. D. late of the parish of , in the county of , labourer, on the day of , in the year of the reign of our Lady the now Queen Victoria, about the hour of twelve in the night of the same day, at aforesaid, being in the dwelling house of A. B. there situate, twelve silver spoons of the value of six pounds, of the goods and chattels of the said A. B. in the said dwelling house then and there being, with force and arms, then and there in the said dwelling house feloniously did steal, take and carry away; and that the said C. D. being so as aforesaid in the said dwelling house, and having committed the felony aforesaid in manner and form aforesaid, he the said C. D. afterwards, to wit, on the same day and year aforesaid, about the hour of twelve in the night of the same day, with force and arms, at aforesaid, the said dwelling house of the said A. B. then and there feloniously and burglariously did break out of the same, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our said Lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

48 Geo. 3, c. 75.

The stat. 48 Geo. III. c. 75, after reciting, that "whereas no provision hath yet been made by the laws now in force for providing suitable interment in churchyards or parochial burying grounds, for such dead human bodies as may be cast on shore from the sea by wreck or otherwise, in that part of the United Kingdom called England: and whereas it is expedient that provision should be made for the decent interment of such bodies," it is enacted, "that from and after the passing of this act, the churchwarden and churchwardens, overseer and overseers of the poor for the time being of the respective parishes throughout England, in which any dead human body or dead human bodies shall be found thrown in or cast on shore from the sea, by wreck or otherwise, shall, and he and they is and are hereby required, upon notice to him or them given that any such body or bodies are thrown in or cast on shore by the sea, and is or are lying within the bounds of the parish for which he or they shall be churchwarden or churchwardens, overseer or overseers of the poor, to cause the same to be forthwith removed to some convenient place, and with all convenient speed to cause such body or bodies to be decently interred in the churchyard or burial ground of such parish, so that the expenses attending on such burial do not exceed the sum which at that time is allowed in such parish for the burial of any person or persons buried at the expense of such parish: provided always, that in case any such body or bodies shall be thrown in or cast on shore from the sea in any extra-parochial place where there is no churchwarden or churchwardens, overseer or overseers of the poor, then and in every such case the constable or headborough of such place shall, on notice being given to him that such body or bodies is or are lying in such extra-parochial place, forthwith to cause such body or bodies to be removed to some convenient place, and with all convenient speed cause the same to be buried in such and the like manner as the churchwardens and overseers within England are hereby required to bury such body or bodies."

Where dead bodies cast on shore, churchwardens, &c. inter them in churchyard.

In extra parochial places.

Minister to perform funeral service, &c.

Sect. 2. "Every minister, parish clerk, and sexton of such respective parishes shall perform their several and respective duties in such and the like manner as is customary in other funerals, and shall admit of such body or bodies being interred in such churchyards or burial grounds without any improper loss of time, receiving for the same, by way of compensation, such and the like sums as in cases of burials made at the expense of such parishes."

Rewarding persons finding bodies, and giving notice to parish officers.

Sect. 3. "In case any person or persons shall find any such body or bodies cast on shore from the sea, by wreck or otherwise, and shall within six hours thereafter give notice thereof to some one of the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the parish for the time being in which such body or bodies shall be found, or to the constable or headborough for the time being, in case such body or bodies shall be found in any extra-parochial place, or cause such notice to be left at his or their last or usual place or places of abode, then and in every such case such person or persons shall receive the sum of 5*s*. for his, her or their trouble, such sum to be forthwith paid to the person or persons first giving such notice only: but nevertheless that no greater sum than 5*s*. shall be paid for any one notice, although there may be a greater number of such bodies than one."

Penalty on not giving notice.

Sect. 4. "In case any person or persons shall find any such body or bodies cast on shore from the sea by wreck or otherwise, and shall not within six hours thereafter give notice to some one of the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the parish for the time being in which such body or bodies shall be found, or to the constable or headborough for the time being, in case such body or bodies shall be found in any extra-parochial place, or cause such notice to be left at his or their last or usual place or places of abode, then and in every such case such person or persons shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of 5*l.*" 48 Geo. 3, c. 75.

Sect. 5. "All necessary and proper payments, costs, charges and expenses which shall be made or incurred in or about the execution of this act, shall be made and paid by the churchwarden or churchwardens, overseeer or overseers, constable or headborough for the time being of such respective parishes and places as aforesaid." Expenses to be paid by churchwardens, &c.

Sect. 6. "And for the purpose of reimbursing him or them all such payments, costs, charges and expenses," it is enacted, "that it shall and may be lawful to and for any one justice of the peace for the county or place within that part of the United Kingdom called England, in which any such body or bodies shall have been so removed and buried as aforesaid, by any writing under his hand, (a) to order and direct (b) the treasurer for such county to pay such sum or sums of money to such churchwarden and churchwardens, overseer and overseers, constable or headborough, for his or their costs and expenses in or about the execution of this act (after the same shall have been duly verified on oath), as to the said justice shall seem reasonable and necessary; and such treasurer shall and he is hereby authorised and required forthwith to pay the sum or sums of money so ordered and directed to be paid to the person or persons empowered to receive the same; and such treasurer shall be allowed the same in his accounts." Who are to be reimbursed by county treasurer.

Sect. 7. "In case any such churchwarden or churchwardens, overseer or overseers, constable or headborough, shall refuse or neglect to remove or cause to be removed such body or bodies from the sea shore to some convenient place prior to the interment thereof, for the space of twelve hours after such notice given to him or them, or left in writing at his or their last or usual place or places of abode by any person or persons whomsoever, or shall neglect or refuse to perform the several other duties required of him and them by this act, then and in every such case every such churchwarden or overseer, constable or headborough, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of 5*l.*" Penalty on parish officers neglecting to inter bodies.

Sect. 8. "All penalties and forfeitures which shall be incurred under this act, if not paid on conviction, shall be levied and recovered by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender or offenders, by warrant (c) under the hand and seal of any justice of the peace for the county or place where the offence shall happen (which warrant such justice is hereby empowered to grant on the confession of the party, or upon the evidence of any credible witness upon oath), and the surplus of the money arising by such distress and sale shall be returned on demand to the owner of such goods and chattels after deducting the costs and charges of making, keeping, and selling the distress; and such penalties and forfeitures, when recovered, shall be paid to the informer or informers; and in case sufficient distress shall not be found, or such penalties and forfeitures shall not be paid forthwith, it shall and may be lawful to and for such justice, and he is hereby authorised and required, by warrant under his hand and seal, to cause the offender or offenders to be committed to the common gaol or house of correction of such Recovery of penalties.

(b) Where a party framed an order, purporting to be the order of a magistrate on the treasurer of a county, to reimburse one Cose the expenses of burying a dead body cast on shore: it was held by a majority of the judges, that this was a forgery, though there was no such magistrate as the individual mentioned in the order, and though the order did not state Cose to be a parish officer, or that the expenses incurred were reasonable and necessary. county or place, there to remain without bail or mainprize, for any time not exceeding two calendar months nor less than fourteen days, unless such penalties and forfeitures, and all reasonable charges attending the recovery thereof, shall be sooner fully paid and satisfied."

Form of conviction.

Sect. 9. "In all cases where any conviction shall be had for any offence or offences committed against this act, or against any order of sessions, or any matter in pursuance of this act, the form of conviction shall be in the words or to the effect following; (that is to say)

"BE it remembered, that on this day of in the year of the reign of A. B. is convicted before one of his Majesty's justices of the peace for the of having [as the offence shall be] and I the said do adjudge him [or them] to forfeit and pay for the same the sum of . Given under my hand and seal the day and year aforesaid."

Sect. 10. "If any person or persons shall think himself, herself, or themselves aggrieved by any judgment or determination, or by any matter or thing done in pursuance of this act, such person or persons may appeal to the justices of the peace at the first general or quarter sessions of the peace to be holden for the county or place (within which the matter of appeal shall arise) next after the expiration of one calendar month from the time such matter of appeal shall have arisen, the person or persons appealing having first given ten days' notice at least of his or their intention to bring such appeal, and of the matter thereof, to the person or persons so appealed against, and forthwith after such notice entering into a recognizance, before some justice of the peace for such county or place, with sufficient sureties conditioned to try such appeal and abide the order and award of the said court thereon; and the said justices at such sessions, upon due proof of such notice and recognizance having been given and entered into, are hereby authorised and required to hear and determine the matter of such appeal in a summary way, and to make such determination therein, and to award such costs to either of the parties, or otherwise, as they shall judge proper; and the said justices may, if they see cause, mitigate any fine, penalty, or forfeiture, and may also order such further satisfaction to be made to the party injured as they shall judge reasonable; and all such determinations of the said justices shall be final, binding, and conclusive upon all parties to all intents and purposes whatsoever."

Proceedings not to be quashed for want of form (b).

Sect. 11. "Where any distress shall be made for any sum of money to be levied by virtue of this act, the distress itself shall not be deemed unlawful, nor the party or parties making the same be deemed a trespasser or trespassers on account of any defect or want of form in the information, summons, conviction, warrant of distress, or other proceedings relating thereto; nor shall the party or parties distrained be deemed a trespasser or trespassers ab initio, on account of any irregularity that shall be afterwards done by the party or parties so distraining, but the person or persons aggrieved by such irregularity shall and may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action upon the case."

Penalties to be paid by persons incurring same, and not by parish.

Sect. 12. "All penalties and expenses attendant thereon, which shall be incurred under the provisions of this act, shall be paid and borne by the person or persons incurring the same, and that the parish or place wherein such person or persons ought to have acted in the duties prescribed by this act shall be wholly exempted therefrom.

Lords of manors, &c. to pay same fee as heretofore on interring bodies, &c.

Sect. 13, after reciting, that "whereas in cases of dead wrecks, wherein no living person is found, or owner known, the lords of manors on which any such dead body or dead bodies may be washed in, and who are entitled to wreck there, have usually paid a small fee for the placing such body or bodies in the ground in the state in which the same have been found, and such payments have been adduced and admitted as proof on trials at common law, of the right of such lords of manors to wrecks in such

I. Of Houses, Churches, Buildings, &c.

Offence by common law.

Maliciously and voluntarily burning the house of another by night or by day is felony at the common law. (1 Hawk. c. 39.)

Offence by statute.

By stat. 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 89, s. 3, "Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to any church or chapel, or to any chapel for the religious worship of persons dissenting from the United Church of England and Ireland, or shall unlawfully or maliciously set fire to any house, stable, coach-house, outhouse, warehouse, office, shop, mill, malt-house, hop-oast, barn, or granary, or to any building or erection used in carrying on any trade or manufacture, or any branch thereof, whether the same or any of them respectively shall then be in the possession of the offender, or in the possession of any other person, with intent thereby to injure or defraud any person, shall be guilty of felony, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be transported beyond the seas for the term of the natural life of such offender, or for any term not less than fifteen years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years."

Punishment for.

By sect. 12, "Where any person shall be convicted of any offence punishable under this act for which imprisonment may be awarded, it shall be lawful for the Court to sentence the offender to be imprisoned, or imprisoned and kept to hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction, and also to direct that the offender shall be kept in solitary confinement for any portion or portions of such imprisonment, or of such imprisonment with hard labour, not exceeding one month at any one time, and not exceeding three months in any one year, as to the Court in its discretion shall seem meet."

Provisions extend to farm buildings.

It having been doubted whether the above provisions extended to the setting fire to a hovel or shed not being appendant to a house, it is enacted by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 62, s. 1, "That whoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to any hovel, shed, or fold, or to any farm building, or any building or erection used in farming land, whether the same or any of them respectively shall then be in the possession of the offender, or in the possession of any other person, with intent thereby to injure or defraud any person, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be transported beyond the seas for the term of the natural life of such offender, or for any term not less than fifteen years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years."

Punishment of whipping.

Sect. 3. "That every male person under the age of eighteen years who shall be convicted of any offence under this act shall be liable, at the discretion of the court before which he shall be convicted, in addition to any other sentence which may be passed upon him, to be publicly or privately whipped, in such manner, and as often, not exceeding thrice, as the Court shall direct."

Sect. 4. "That this act shall be deemed a part of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 89.

1. Of Houses, Churches, &c.

By the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1, these offences are not triable at any quarter sessions.

Offence not triable at sessions.

With respect to what building the offence extends at common law, it extends only to a dwelling-house, and to all outhouses that are parcel thereof, though not contiguous to it, nor under the same roof; as in the case of burglary, the barn, stable, cow-house, sheep-house, dairy-house, mill-house. (1 Hale, 567.) But if the barn or out-house be not parcel of a dwelling-house, it is not felony unless the barn have hay or corn in it; and then, though it be no parcel of a dwelling-house, it is felony. (3 Inst. 67.)

What house, or building, &c. the offence extends to.

The above statutes do not alter the nature of the offence, or create any new offence, except that they extend to the burning of other buildings than dwelling-houses, or out-houses parcel thereof.

The building in respect of which the offence is committed must come within the ordinary and established meaning of the words used in the statutes. The mere using the building for a particular purpose does not necessarily alter the nature of the building. Therefore a building intended for and constructed as a dwelling-house, but which had not been completed or inhabited, and in which the owner had deposited straw and agricultural implements, was held not a house, outhouse or barn within the 9 Geo. I. (Elsmore v. St. Briavells, 2 Man. & R. 514; 8 B. & Cres. 461, S. C.)

An open building in a field, at a distance from and out of sight of the owner's house, though boarded round and covered in, (R. v Ellison, Moody, C. C. 336,) a cart-hovel, consisting of a stubbled roof supported by uprights, in a field at a distance from other buildings, (R. v. Parrot, 6 Car. & P. 402,) was not within the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 89. But an open shed in a farm-yard, composed of upright posts supporting pieces of wood laid across them, and covered with straw as a roof, was. (R. v. Stallion, 1 Mood. C. C. 398, and see R. v. Houghton, 5 C. & P. 555.) So was a pig-stye in a yard, into which the back door of the prosecutor's house opened, and which yard was bounded by fences and other buildings of the prosecutor, and by a cottage and barn let to a tenant, but which did not open into the yard. (R. v. James, 1 Car. & Kir. 303.) But now by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 62, s. 2, supra, it is an offence to set fire to any farm building.

A school-room, which was separated from the dwelling-house by a narrow passage, about a yard wide, the roof of which was partly overhung by that of the dwelling-house, the two buildings, together with some others, and the court which inclosed them, being rented by the same person, was ruled to be well described as an outhouse. (R. v. Winter, Russ. & Ry. 295.)

As to how far the burning of part of a dwelling-house, &c. may be an offence: North was indicted for feloniously, wilfully and maliciously, against the form of the statute 9 Geo. I. c. 22, setting fire to a certain outhouse of J. Taylor, situate at Knaresborough. It appeared that the prisoner had set fire to and burnt part of a building of the prosecutor, which was situated in a yard of his at the back of his dwelling-house, which was in the street of the town of Knaresborough. The building was about four or five yards distant from the dwelling-house, but not joined to it. The yard was inclosed on all sides, in part by the dwelling-house, in another part by a wall, in a third part by a railing, which separated it from a field, and in the remaining part by a hedge. The prosecutor kept a public house, and also carried on the business of a flax dresser. The buildings set fire to, and in part burned, consisted of a stable and a chamber over it, which was used by the prosecutor as a shop for keeping and dressing flax. It was objected on behalf of the prisoner that this building was not an outhouse within the stat. 9 Geo. I. c. 22, as that must be understood to mean outhouses, which in contemplation of law were not part of the dwelling, which it was insisted this was, and that the indictment should have been for arson at common law. The jury found the prisoner guilty, and the point was reserved. November, 1795, (Hotham, B. absent), all the other judges agreed that the verdict was right. They said, that though for some purposes this might be part of the dwelling-house, yet still in fact it was an outhouse. In Breeme's case it was considered that the stat. 9 Geo. I. did not alter the nature of the crime, or create any new offence, but only excluded the principal from clergy more clearly than he was before. (North's case, 2 East's P. C. 1021.)

Upon the construction of stat. 9 Geo. I. c. 22, it has been holden that a common gaol is a house within the meaning of it. The entrance to the prison was through the dwelling-house of the gaoler, and the prisoners were sometimes allowed to lie in it. All the judges held that the dwelling-house was to be considered as part of the prison, and the whole prison was the house of the corporation to whom it belonged. One set of the counts there laid it to be the house of the corporation, another of the gaoler, and a third of the person whom the gaoler suffered to live in the dwelling-house. (Donovan's case, Lanc. 1770; 2 Bl. Rep. 682; 2 East's P. C. 1020, S. C.; post, 507.)

A cotton-mill was held to be within the meaning of the 9 Geo. III. c. 29, s. 2, relating to the burning of mills. (Anon. 2 Russ. 493.)

It matters not whose house was burnt.

At common law the offence could not be committed by a party in burning his own house. And a person seised in fee, or but possessed for years, of a house standing by itself at a distance from all others, could not commit felony in burning the same. So a man so seised or possessed of a house in a town, who burned his own with an intent to burn his neighbour's, but in the event burned his own only, was not guilty of felony; it was, however, certainly an offence highly punishable in regard to the malice thereof, and the great danger to the public which attended it; and the offender was liable to be severely fined, and imprisoned during the Queen's pleasure, and set on the pillory, and bound to his good behaviour. (1 Hawk. c. 39, s. 3; Breeme's case, 1 Leach, 220, 4th ed.; Holme's case, Cro. Car. 376.) The frequent commission of the latter offence, and the very serious mischief that resulted from its being merely a misdemeanor, at last attracted the attention of the legislature, and the party who would occasion, by burning his own possessions, an injury to another, the extent of which in many cases cannot be calculated, is now guilty of a felony; formerly by 43 Geo. III. c. 58, usually called Lord Ellenborough's Act, and now by 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 89, s. 3, supra.

The burning must be maliciously and unlawfully.

The burning must be done unlawfully and maliciously to constitute the offence; for if it be done by mischance or negligence, it is no felony. (3 Inst. 67). As if an unqualified person in sporting happen to set fire to the thatch of a house; or even if a man were shooting at the poultry of another, by which means the house is fired, that is, provided he did not mean to steal the poultry, but merely to commit a trespass; for otherwise the first intent being felonious, the party must abide all the consequences. (East's P. C. 1019; 1 Hale, 569.)

But if a man maliciously intending only to burn one person's house happen thereby to burn the house of another, it is certain that he may be indicted as having maliciously burned the house of that other; for where a felonious design against one man misseth its aim, and takes effect upon another, it shall have the like construction as if it had been levied against him who suffers by it. (1 Hawk. c. 39, s. 5; 1 Hale, 569.)

Even if a man by wilfully setting fire to his own house burn also the house of one of his neighbours, it will be felony; (see R. v. Probert, 2 East's P. C. 1031; R. v. Isaac, id.); for the law in such a case implies malice, particularly if the party's house were so situate that the probable consequences of its taking fire was that the fire would communicate to the houses in its neighbourhood. (See per Parke, J. in Sweetapple v. Jesse, 5 B. & Adol. 31; 2 Nev. & M. 41, S. C.)

There must be a burning.

Neither a bare intention to burn a house, nor even an actual attempt to do it by putting fire to part of a house, will constitute the offence, if no part of it be burned: but if any part of the house, &c. be burned, the offence will be complete, notwithstanding the fire afterwards be put out, or go out of itself. (1 Hawk. c. 39, s. 4; 5 East's P. C. 1020.) Where it was proved that the floor near the hearth was scorched, and it was in fact charred in a trifling way, that it had been at a red heat, though not in a blaze, it was held, that the offence was complete. (Reg. v. Parker, 9 Car. & P. 45.) But in another case, where it appeared that a small fagot was set on fire on the boarded floor of a room, and that the fagot was nearly consumed—that the boards of the floor were scorched black, but not burnt, and that no part of the floor was consumed; it was held that the offence was not complete. (R. v. Russell, 1 C. & Marsh. 541.) And where, upon an indictment on the repealed statute of 9 Geo. I. c. 22, for setting fire to a paper mill, it appeared that the defendant set fire to some paper that was drying in one of the lofts, but no part of the mill itself was burnt; the judges held that it did not amount to an offence within the act. (R. v. Taylor, 1 Leach, 49.) And where the defendant set fire to a parcel of unthrashed wheat, it was holden not to be within the statute. (R. v. Judd, 2 T. R. 255.)

1. Of Houses, Churches, &c.

The attempt to commit arson is a misdemeanor at common law, and as such may be punished severely. (1 Wils. 139; see ante, "Attempts.")

The burning must be with the intention to injure some person who is not identified with the defendant. Therefore a married woman cannot be indicted for setting fire to the house of her husband with intent to injure him. (R. v. March, R. & M. 182.)

The burning must be with intent to injure.

Where the offence consists of the setting fire to the house of a third person, the intent to injure that person is inferred from the act, for every person is deemed to intend the necessary consequence of his own act; and therefore, where the defendant was indicted for setting fire to a certain mill, with intent to injure the occupiers thereof, it was holden that he was properly convicted, although it appeared at the trial that he was a harmless, inoffensive man, and had no motive to induce him to commit the act. (R. v. Farrington, R. & R. 207.) But this doctrine can only arise where the act is wilful; and, therefore, if the fire appear to be the result of accident, the party who is the cause of it will not be liable. (Supra.) On the other hand, where the defendant is charged with setting fire to his own house, the intent to defraud cannot be inferred from the act itself, but must be proved by other evidence. Where, therefore, upon an indictment for arson, with intent to defraud an insurance company, the policy was inadmissible, by reason of its not being stamped, a majority of the judges held that it could not be received in evidence, and, as the insurance could not otherwise be proved, the defendant ought to be acquitted. (R. v. Gilson, R. & R. 138; Jervis's Arch. C. L. 9 ed. 320.)

As to the form of the indictment in describing the building, it is sufficient to use the language used by the act, calling it a house, &c. according to the fact. (2 East's P. C. 1033.) Although the premises set on fire form part of the mansion, being within the curtilage, it will be no variance to charge them as an outhouse in general terms. (R. v. North, 2 East's P. C. 1033; ante, 505.) Where the indictment described the house in some of the counts as "a certain outhouse," in others as "a certain house," and the evidence was of a burning of a school-room, separated from the dwelling-house by a small passage, but the roof of one extending over the roof of the other; the judges are understood to have holden that the evidence satisfied the description in both sets of counts. (R. v. Winter, R. & R. 295; ante, 505.) So, where the indictment charged the burning of "a certain house" of the corporation of Liverpool, and the proof was of a burning of a gaol belonging to the corporation, the judges held it to be sufficient. (R. v. Donnevan, 2 W. Bl. 682; 2 East's P. C. 1020; 1 Leach, 69, S. C. ante, 506.)

Form of indictment.

The name of the owner of the house, &c. must be stated in the same manner as in burglary. (R. v. Standfield, 2 East's P. C. 1034.) It is therefore necessary to determine the party to whom the premises belong. This, however, is not so difficult an investigation as in the case of a burglarious entry, for it may be inferred, from the cases deciding that a party cannot, at common law, be guilty of arson by setting fire to houses in which he has an interest, what possession is sufficient in the party charged as the owner. When any doubt is entertained on this part of the subject, the difficulty may be obviated by the insertion of several counts to correspond with the evidence. (See

1. Of Houses, Churches, &c.

3 Chit. C. L. 1126.) If the premises be described as in the possession of A. B. proof that they are in the possession of the tenants of A. B. will support the indictment. (R. v. Ball, R. & M. C. C. 30.) So if the possession of a house be obtained wrongfully, it may be described as the house of the wrongful occupier. (R. v. Wallis, Moody, C. C. 334.) If a man, maliciously intending to burn the house of A., happen to burn the house of B., he may be indicted as having maliciously burned the house of B. (1 Hawk. c. 18, s. 18.) Where a parish pauper set fire to a house in which he was put to reside by the overseers, and the trustees, in whom the legal ownership was vested, were not known, it was holden that it might be described as the house of the overseers, or of persons unknown. (R. v. Rickman, 2 East's P. C. 1034.) As to describing the ownership of the house in burglary, see ante, 488.

The parish in which the building is alleged to have been situated must be stated according to the fact; a variance will be fatal. On an indictment for setting fire to a stack of pulse, it was holden that the offence was not of a local nature. (R. v. Woodward, Moody, C. C. 323.) But in this case the indictment gave no local description to the property destroyed. (Jervis's Arch. C. L. 9 ed. 317.)

A variance between the day stated in the indictment, as that on which the offence was committed, and the day proved, will be immaterial. Where the indictment alleged the offence to have been committed in the night-time, and it was proved to have been committed in the day-time, the judges held the variance to be immaterial. (R. v. Minton, 2 East's P. C. 1021.)

It is necessary to aver that the defendant "feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously" set fire, &c. (See 2 East's P. C. 1021; R. v. Turner, R. & M. C. C. 239.)

As the words of the statute must be strictly pursued, it will be essential, in laying the intent, not to omit the word "thereby." (Anon. 5 Ev. St. 334.)

It was holden by six judges against five, that on the trial of an indictment on 43 Geo. III. c. 58, laying the intention to defraud the insurers, an unstamped policy of insurance could not be given in evidence. (R. v. Gelson, 2 Leach, 1007; 1 Taunt. 95; R. & R. 138, S. C.)

Where a house was robbed and burnt, the defendant being found in possession of some of the goods which were in the house at the time it was burnt, was admitted as evidence tending to prove him guilty of the arson. (R. v. Rickman, 2 East, 1035.)

II. Burning of Houses with Persons therein.

Burning houses with persons therein.

The 7 Will. I V. & 1 Vict. c. 89, s. 2, enacts, "That whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to any dwelling-house, any person being therein, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall suffer death."

The sentence under this section may be recorded; (4 Geo. IV. c. 48.) See title, "Judgment," Vol. III.

Not triable at sessions.

Indictment for.

—— THE jurors for our Lady the Queen upon their oath present, that C. D. late of the parish of , in the county of , labourer, on the day of , in the year of the reign of our Lady the now Queen Victoria, to wit, at the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, feloniously, unlawfully and maliciously did set fire to a certain dwelling-house of A. B. there situate, the said A. B. then being in the said dwelling-house, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our Lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

III. Burning of Stacks, Farm Produce, or Implements in Farm Buildings.

Setting fire to stacks of corn, &c.

The 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 89, s. 10, enacts, "That whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to any stack of corn, grain, pulse, tares, straw, haulm, stubble, furze, heath, fern, hay, turf, peat, coals, charcoal. or wood, or any steer of wood, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be transported beyond the seas for the term of the natural life of such offender, or for any term not less than fifteen years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years."

As to adding hard labour or solitary confinement to the imprisonment, see sect. 12, ante, 504.

Setting fire to farm produce or implements in farm buildings.

The 7 & 8 Vict. c. 62, s. 2, enacts, "That whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to any hay, straw, wood, or other vegetable produce being in any farm house or farm building, or to any implement of husbandry being in any farm house or farm building, with intent thereby to set fire to such farm house or farm building, and to injure or defraud any person, shall be liable to the pains and penalties of unlawfully and maliciously setting fire to the said farm house or farm building with intent thereby to injure or defraud such person." By sect. 3, ante, 504, males under eighteen may be whipped, in addition to any other sentence, and the act is, by sect. 4, to be deemed part of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 89.

These offences are not triable at any quarter sessions. (5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1.)

The property in respect of which the offence is committed must come within the ordinary and established meaning of the words used in the statute. An indictment for setting fire to a stack of beans, (R. v. Woodward, Moody C. C. 323), or barley, (R. v. Swathens, 4 C. & P. 548), is good; for the Court will take notice that beans are pulse, and barley corn; but it is said that a stack of stubble cannot be described as a stack of straw. (R. v. Turner or Reader, 4 C. & P. 245; R. & M. C. C. 241, S. C.) And setting fire to a score of faggots, which were piled one upon another in a loft which was made by means of a temporary floor put over an archway roofed in between two houses, and under which carts could go, is not setting fire to a stack of wood within the 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 89, s. 10. (R. v. Aris, 6 C. & P. 348.)

It was never doubted that burning one rick, &c. was within the statute, 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 7, though that statute has ricks in the plural. (See Hussel's case, 1 Leach, 1.)

[Commencement as usual, ante, p. 9, (No. 1.)] on the day of A. D. , at the parish of , in the said county, unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously did set fire to a certain stack of barley, [corn, grain, pulse, straw, hay, or wood, according to the fact,] of A. B. then and there being , against the form of the statute in that case made and provided. And you the said keeper, &c. [as usual as ante, p. 9, to the end.]

Commitment on 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 80, s. 10, for setting fire to a stack of corn, &c.

—— THE jurors for our Lady the Queen upon their oath present, that C. D. late of the parish of , in the county of , labourer, on the day of , in the year of the reign of our Lady the now Queen Victoria, with force and arms, at the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, maliciously, and unlawfully did set fire to a certain stack of hay of and belonging to one A. B. then and there being against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our said Lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

Indictment for the like offence.

IV. Burning of Crops, Woods, &c.

By stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 17, if any person shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to any crop of corn, grain or pulse, whether standing or cut down, or to any part of a wood, coppice or plantation of trees, or to any heath, gorze, furze, or fern, wheresoever the same may be growing, every such offender shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be transported beyond the seas for the term of seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years; and, if a male, to be once, twice or thrice publicly or privately whipped, (if the Court shall so think fit,) in addition to such imprisonment." See the general clauses affecting all the provisions of this act, "Malicious Injuries to Property," Vol. V.

Setting fire to crops of corn, &c. woods, &c.

By the 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 5, it shall not be lawful for any Court to direct that any offender shall be kept in solitary confinement for any longer period than one month at a time, or than three months in the space of one year.

The offence is not triable at any quarter sessions. (5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1.)

Where A. and B. were charged with setting fire to a wood, and it appeared that they set fire to a summer-house, which was in the wood, and that from the summer-house the fire was communicated to the wood, it was held, that they might be properly convicted on this indictment under the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 17. (Reg. v. Price, 9 Car. & P. 729.)

[Commencement as usual, ante, p. 9, (No. 1.)] on the day of A. D. *, at the parish of , in the said county, unlawfully, maliciously and feloniously did set fire to a certain crop of barley of A. Butcher.

Conspiring to raise price of victuals.

By stat. 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 15, if butchers conspired not to sell their victuals but at certain prices, they were subject to severe penalties, but that act was repealed by the 5 Geo. IV. c. 95. I. Concerning the Packing, Weight and Quality of Butter, &c.

Former acts repealed.

By stat. 36 Geo. III. c. 86, s. 19, the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 26, and so much of 4 Will. III. c. 7, as discharges persons from the effect of any part of 13 & 14 Car. II. for preventing frauds in the sellers of butter after the factor or buyer hath contracted for the same, are repealed; and new regulations are made respecting the packing, weight and sale of butter as follows:—

Regulations for making vessels for packing butter.

By sect. 1. Every cooper or other person who shall make any vessel for the packing of butter shall make the same of good and well-seasoned timber, and tight and not leaky, and shall groove in the heads and bottoms thereof; and every such vessel shall be a tub, firkin, or half-firkin, and no other; and shall, when delivered by any such cooper or person making the same, be of the weight and proportion, and capable of containing the several quantities of butter hereinafter mentioned, viz. every tub shall weigh of itself, including the top and bottom, not less than 11lb. nor more than 15lb. avoirdupois weight, and neither such top nor bottom shall be more than five-eighths of an inch thick in any part thereof, and shall be capable of containing 84lb. average of butter, and not less; every firkin shall weigh of itself, including the top and bottom, not less than 7lb. nor more than 11lb., and neither the top nor bottom shall be more than four-eighths of an inch thick in any part, and shall be capable of containing not less than 56lb. of butter; and every half firkin shall weigh of itself, including the top and bottom, not less than 4lb. nor more than 6lb., and neither the top nor bottom shall be more than three-eighths of an inch thick in any part, and it shall be capable of containing not less than 28lb. of butter, on pain of forfeiture by the cooper or other person making the same, of 10*s.* for every such vessel. (b)

Weight of firkin.

Of half-firkin.

Name, place of abode, and weights to be branded.

Sect. 2. And every such maker, before such vessel shall go out of his possession, shall, on the outside of the bottom, with an iron, brand his christian name and surname at full length, in permanent and legible letters, together with the exact weight or tare thereof, on the like penalty.

And by stat. 38 Geo. III. c. 73, s. 1, Every such maker shall moreover mark in like manner, in addition to his name, his place of abode, or dwelling, in the following manner, viz. if he dwell in a city or market town, then the name thereof; if in a village, township, liberty, hamlet, or other division of a parish, then the name of the parish wherein the same is situate; and if in an extra-parochial place, then the name of the next adjoining parish; on pain of forfeiting 10*s.* for every default therein.

Factors buying or selling in vessels not legally marked.

Sect. 2. And every factor or agent for buying or selling butter for others, who shall buy, sell, or offer to sale, or have in his custody for sale, or shall order, consign, forward or send, any vessel containing butter for sale, which shall not be made, and externally marked, and have the butter therein imprinted, according to the directions of this and the above act, shall forfeit 20*s.* for every such offence.

(a) An Act of Parliament will most probably be passed this Session for the repeal of 4 W. & M. c. 7; 36 Geo. III. c. 86, and 38 Geo. III. c. 73, and if so it will be found in the Addenda, Vol. VI. under title "Butter and Cheese."

(b) The avoirdupois weight is that by which the sale of butter is regulated, and a custom in a particular place, that every pound of butter shall weigh eighteen ounces, is bad, being contrary to the express provision of the legislature, the object of which is to establish a uniformity of weights and measures. (Noble v. Durell, 3 T. R. 271; Hockin v. Cooke, 4 T. R. 314; R. v. Major, id. 760.) But it has never been decided that a custom to sell by a lump of a particular weight exceeding sixteen ounces is invalid in law. See post, "Weights and Measures," Vol. VI.

1. Packing, Weight and Quality of.

Sect. 3. And every cheesemonger or seller or dealer in butter on his own account, who shall offer for sale, or have in his possession for sale, any vessel containing such butter, which shall not be externally marked as aforesaid, shall forfeit 10s. for every such offence.

Or cheesemongers and others.

Directions for packing of butter.

By stat. 36 Geo. III. c. 86, s. 3, And every dairyman, farmer, or seller of butter, or other person who shall pack any butter for sale, shall pack the same in vessels so made and marked as aforesaid and no other, and shall properly soak and season such vessel before such packing, and when so soaked and seasoned shall, on the bottom thereof on the inside, and on the top on the outside, with an iron, brand his christian and surname at full length in like letters, and also on the outside of the top, and on the bouge or body thereof, the true weight or tare of such empty vessel when so soaked and seasoned, and also his name in like manner on the bouge or body across two different staves at least, to prevent the same being taken out and changed; and shall distinctly and at full length imprint his christian and surname upon the top of the butter in such vessel when filled, on pain of forfeiting 5*l.* for every default thereof.

Quantities to be packed in each vessel.

Butter not to be mixed.

What salt to be used.

Sect. 4. And every dairyman, farmer, or seller of butter, or other person, packing butter for sale, shall, (exclusive of the tare of such vessel,) pack in every tub not less than 84lb., firkin, 56lb., and half-firkin, 28lb., net, of good and merchantable butter; and no butter which is old or corrupt shall be mixed or packed up into any such vessel with that which is new and sound, nor shall any whey butter be packed or mixed with that which is made of cream, but every such vessel shall be of one sort and goodness throughout; and no butter shall be salted with any great salt, but with fine small salt, and not intermixed with more than is needful for its preservation; on pain of forfeiting 5*l.* for every offence.

Practising fraud in the sale of butter.

Sect. 5. And if any change, alteration, fraud, or deceit, shall be used or practised, either in the vessel wherein butter is packed for sale as aforesaid, or in the butter itself, whether in quantity, quality, weight or otherwise, or in any such brands or marks as aforesaid, or in the staves whereon the same shall be placed, or in any other manner howsoever after the packing thereof for sale as aforesaid; every person concerned therein shall forfeit 30*l.* for every such offence.

To deliver the full quantity.

Sect. 6. And every cheesemonger, dealer in butter, or other person who shall sell any tub, firkin, or half-firkin, shall deliver therein the full quantity aforesaid, and in default shall be liable to make satisfaction for what is wanting, and be liable to an action for recovery of such satisfaction, with costs.

Not to be re-packed for sale again.

Sect. 7. And no cheesemonger, dealer, or other person, shall re-pack for sale any butter in any such vessel as aforesaid, on pain of forfeiting 5*l.* for every tub, firkin, or half-firkin so re-packed.

Foreign butter.

Sect. 8. Provided that no person shall be liable to any of the penalties of this act for using any such vessel as aforesaid after the British butter packed therein hath been taken thereout, for the re-packing for sale any foreign butter, who shall first entirely cut out or efface the names of the original dairyman, farmer, or seller of butter, leaving the name and tare of the cooper, and the tare of the original dairyman, farmer or seller thereon, and shall afterwards with an iron brand his name in words at length and the words foreign butter in permanent and legible letters, upon the bouge or body of every such vessel across two staves at the least, to denote that such butter is foreign butter.

Counterfeiting or forging marks.

Sect. 9. And if any person shall hereafter be convicted of counterfeiting or forging any of the names or marks of such owners, farmers, or dairymen, as aforesaid, or any part thereof, or cause the same to be done, he shall for every offence forfeit 40*l.*

In an action brought by a farmer to recover the price of fifteen firkins of butter, sold by him to defendant, it appeared that the firkins were not marked according to the act. It was held, that the provisions which required the vessel to be branded with the name of the cooper, seller, &c. being intended for the protection of the public against fraud, indirectly prohibited any sale of butter in vessels not properly marked; that the subject-matter of this contract was in such a state from the vessels not being properly marked, that the sale of it was forbidden by act of parliament, and consequently that the contract of sale was void, and the plaintiff could not recover. It was held, further, that although there was a penalty imposed in the same clause of the act which directed the thing to be done, yet the remedy of the public against a person infringing the clause was not thereby limited to a proceeding for the penalty; but that the clause might be used against him as a defence to an action. (Forster v. Taylor, 3 Nev. & M 244; 5 B. & Adol. 887, S. C.; and see Cope v. Rowlands, 2 M. & W. 149.)

1. Packing, Weight and Quality of.

By sect. 13, 14, and stat. 38 Geo. III. c. 73, s. 4, all penalties above 5*l.* are to be recovered in the courts at Westminster; and all offences against this act, the mode of determining which is not hereinbefore prescribed, and where the penalty shall not exceed 5*l.*, shall be heard and determined by one justice of the county, &c. or place where the offence shall be committed, or alleged to be committed, who on proof upon oath by one witness may levy such penalties by distress (a) and sale of the offender's goods, (returning the overplus, after deducting the costs,) to be applied to the use of the informer; and for want of sufficient distress, or if such penalty be not forthwith paid, such offender shall be committed to the gaol or house of correction, without bail, for (not exceeding) three calendar months, nor less than twenty-eight days, unless such penalty and all reasonable charges be sooner paid.

Recovery and application of penalties.

Sect. 11. And the conviction may be drawn out in the following form, or to the like effect:

Form of conviction.

County of } BE it remembered, that on this day of , A. O. is convicted } before J. Conviction. The act gives a form of conviction, see ante, 515.

Buttons.

Foreign buttons. FOREIGN BUTTONS.]—By stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 13, s. 2; 4 Will. III. c. 10, s. 2, no person shall sell or offer to sale, or import, any foreign bone, lace, cut work, embroidery, fringe, band strings, buttons, or needle-work, made of thread and silk, or either of them, or any foreign buttons whatsoever, on pain that he who shall offer them to sale shall forfeit the same and 50*l.*, and the importer shall forfeit the same and 100*l.* half to the king and half to him that shall sue.

Search for foreign buttons. And by sect. 3 of both acts, on complaint and information given to a justice of the peace, at reasonable times, he shall issue his warrant to the constable to enter and search for such manufactures in the shops being open, or warehouses and dwelling-houses of such persons as shall be suspected, and to seize the same.

Wooden buttons. WOODEN BUTTONS.]—By stat. 10 Will. III. c. 2, no person shall make, sell, or set on, any buttons made of wood only, and turned in imitation of other buttons, on pain of 40*s.* a dozen, half to the king and half to him that shall sue in any court of record. Wooden Buttons.

In R. v. Roberts, 1 Ld. Raym. 712, an information was exhibited against the defendant, for having made wooden buttons contrary to the statute. Upon trial, the jury found a special verdict, that all the button was of wood, but there was in it a shank of wire. And after argument, judgment was given for the king, namely, that this was a button of wood, notwithstanding the shank, which is no essential part of buttons; for buttons of silk and hair have no shanks. See also Dunn v. Hinchdy, 2 Ld. Raym. 1273.

Cloth Buttons.]—By the said act, 10 Will. III. c. 2, no person shall make, sell, or set on, any buttons made of cloth, serge, drugget, frize, camlet, or other stuffs of which clothes are usually made, on pain of 40*s.* a dozen, half to the king and half to him that shall sue in any court of record. Cloth buttons.

And by stat. 8 Ann. c. 6, no tailor or other person shall make, sell, set on, use, or bind on any clothes, any buttons or button-holes made of or used, or bound with serge, drugget, frize, camlet, or other stuffs of which clothes are usually made; on pain of 5*l.* a dozen, half to the king and half to him that shall sue in any court of record; or on complaint to two justices, they may summon witnesses, and levy the penalty, and return the overplus, if any be; and if any person is aggrieved, he may appeal to the next sessions.

But by this act no power is given to make distress. The next stat. is the 4 Geo. I. c. 7, whereby it is enacted as follows:—

No tailor or other person shall make, sell, set on, use, or bind on any clothes, any buttons or button-holes made of, or used, or bound with cloth, serge, drugget, frize, camlet, or any stuffs that clothes are usually made of, (velvet excepted,) on pain of 40*s.* for every dozen of such buttons and button-holes, or in proportion for any lesser quantity, to be determined by one justice where the offence shall be discovered, or the offender shall inhabit, on oath of one witness, in three months after the offence committed; and to be distributed, (charges of conviction first deducted,) half to the informer and half to the poor of the parish or place where the offence shall be discovered; if not paid, (being lawfully demanded,) in fourteen days after conviction, the justice shall issue his warrant to the constable where the offender dwells, or can be found, to levy it by distress and sale; and where no sufficient distress can be found, he shall be committed to the common gaol of the county or place where he shall be found, to be kept to hard labour for three calendar months.

Sect. 6. Persons aggrieved may appeal to the sessions, giving sufficient notice; and the determination in such sessions shall be final by any order or warrant made by any justice upon any such conviction, and the sessions may allow costs to the party aggrieved.

Sect. 9. Tailors or other persons, causing their apprentices or servants to make such clothes, shall themselves be subject to the penalties in this act contained.

Sect. 8. All such clothes, made with such buttons and button-holes, exposed to sale, shall be forfeited and seized to the uses in this act, to be recovered and disposed of as the other penalties.

And by stat. 7 Geo. I. st. 1, c. 12, no person shall use or wear on any clothes, (velvet excepted,) any such buttons or button-holes, on pain of 40*s.* for every dozen of such buttons or button-holes, or in proportion for every lesser quantity of such buttons and button-holes, on conviction by confession or oath of one witness; and any justice of the peace, where the offence shall be committed, or the offender shall inhabit, shall, on complaint or information on oath of any credible person, in one month after the offence, summon the party, and on his appearance or contempt, examine the matter, and on due proof by confession, or oath of one witness, convict the offender, and on refusal to pay when demanded, at the time appointed by the justice, cause the forfeiture by his warrant to be levied by distress and sale; the said penal- Using or wearing cloth buttons.

ties to be half to him on whose oath the party shall be convicted, and half to the poor of the parish where the offence shall be committed. And persons aggrieved may appeal to the next quarter sessions, giving eight days' notice; and the judgment of the said sessions shall be final.

To him on whose oath the party shall be convicted.]—This is almost the only instance where a share of the penalty is given in express words, in a popular action, to the party on whose oath any person is convicted; and the contrary doctrine seems generally to prevail, that the defendant shall not be condemned upon the sole testimony of the plaintiff, swearing for his own interest. It is certainly against the common law, that such a person should be a witness at all; and therefore his right to give evidence in his own cause, and the power to convict the defendant upon that sole evidence, must depend on the express words of some statute.

Metal buttons.

Metal Buttons.]—The first and indeed the only act of parliament to regulate the manufacture of metal buttons was passed in the year 1796, 36 Geo. III. c. 60. All the other statutes before mentioned were passed for employing and encouraging the consumption of raw silk and mohair yarn, see 7 Geo. I. st. 1, c. 12. At the time of passing the 36 Geo. III. the manufacture and sale of metal buttons had been for many years a great branch of trade in this kingdom, but the increase of the manufacture had been greatly impeded by the fraudulent practice of marking the buttons as "gilt" or "plated," which, in fact, were not so, to the great injury of the purchaser and of the fair trader. This statute was therefore passed to regulate the sale of metal buttons, but the 20th section enacts it shall not extend to certain buttons.

Ordering false marks on buttons.

The first section of this statute, 36 Geo. III. c. 60, enacts that no person who shall order or apply for any metal buttons from any manufacturer or maker of buttons shall direct the words gilt or plated, or any other word, letter, figure, mark, or device indicating the quality, to be printed, cast, stamped, or marked in or upon any part of such buttons, or any word, letter, figure, mark, or device, whether the same do or do not indicate the quality, to be printed, &c. or marked in or upon the underside of such buttons, unless such person do at the same time order such buttons to be gilt with gold or plated with silver respectively; and no person shall procure or purchase any metal buttons not being so gilt or plated, having the words gilt or plated, or any other word, &c. or device printed, &c. or marked thereon, or any word, &c. printed, &c. on the underside, whether the same do or do not indicate the quality, knowing the same not to be so gilt and plated as aforesaid; on pain of forfeiting in every such case such buttons, and also 5*l.* for any quantity not exceeding twelve dozen, and if above, after the rate of 1*l.* for every twelve dozen.

No marks to be used but such as express the real quality.

Sect. 2. And no person shall print, cast, stamp, or mark, or cause to be so done, upon any part of any metal button, the words gilt or plated, or any other word, letter, figure, mark or device, indicating the quality, or on the underside, whether the same do or do not indicate the quality, unless such buttons are before bonâ fide plated with silver, or afterwards gilt with gold, or destroyed before sold; and no person shall put or affix upon any such buttons having the words gilt or plated, or other words, &c. or devices as aforesaid indicating the quality, on any part thereof, or on the underside, whether the same do or do not indicate the quality, any ornament whatsoever, unless those parts not covered thereby be bonâ fide plated or gilt before such ornament be put or affixed thereon. And no person shall put or pack, or cause to be put or packed for sale, upon any card, paper, or other substance, or sell or expose to sale any metal buttons, not being gilt or plated as aforesaid, if the words gilt or plated, or any other word, &c. or device as aforesaid, indicating the quality, be printed, &c. or marked thereon, or upon such card, (not being the pattern card,) paper, or other substance; or on the underside of such buttons, whether the same do or do not indicate the quality, knowing the same not to be so gilt or plated; on pain of forfeiting, in every such case, such buttons, and also 5*l.* for any quantity exceeding one dozen, and not exceeding twelve dozen; and if above twelve dozen, after the rate of 1*l.* for every twelve dozen.

Nor any buttons to be packed with false marks.

36 Geo. 3, c. 60.

A conviction upon this clause, charging that the defendants did the act "unlawfully and fraudulently, contrary to the form of the statute," is bad, without expressly charging that they did it "knowingly;" and such defect is not cured by a proviso in the statute, that no conviction for any offence in the act should be set aside for want of form, or through the mistake of any fact, circumstance, or otherwise, provided the material facts alleged were proved; for this in effect requires all material facts to be alleged, and knowledge is a material fact to constitute such an offence. (R. v. Jukes, 8 T. R. 536.)

No other than words gilt or plated to be used.

Sect. 3. And no person shall print, &c. or mark, or cause so to be done, in or upon any metal button, any word, letter, figure, mark, or device indicating the quality thereof, except the words gilt or plated; or shall pack or cause to be packed for sale in or upon any card, (except the pattern card,) paper, or other substance, or parcel; or offer or expose to sale, or cause to be sold or exposed to sale any metal buttons having any word, &c. or device indicating the quality thereof, other than the words gilt or plated, printed, &c. or marked thereon; on pain of forfeiting such buttons, together with 5*l.* for any quantity exceeding one dozen, and not exceeding twelve dozen; and if exceeding twelve dozen, after the rate of 1*l.* for every twelve dozen.

Except words double and treble gilt.

Sect. 4. Provided, that nothing herein shall extend to inflict any fine, penalty, or punishment upon any person, who shall print, &c. or mark, or cause to be printed, &c. the words double gilt in or upon any metal buttons, or put, place, or pack for sale in or upon any card (except the pattern card), paper, or other parcel, or expose to sale any such buttons, having the words double gilt thereon; provided continually from the time of gilding thereof gold shall remain put and equally spread upon the upper surface of the said buttons, exclusive of the edges, in the proportion of ten grains to such quantity of the said buttons, the upper surfaces of which, exclusive of the edges, shall be equal to the superficies of a circle twelve inches in diameter; or who shall print, &c. the words treble gilt in or upon any metal buttons, or put upon any card, &c. or expose to sale any metal buttons having the words treble gilt thereon, having fifteen grains to the like quantity of buttons as aforesaid, on the like superficies as aforesaid; any thing hereinbefore said to the contrary notwithstanding.

Except the pattern card.]—The defendant was convicted upon the above statute for unlawfully and fraudulently placing for sale upon certain cards and papers divers dozens of metal buttons, marked with the words double gilt and treble gilt, the same not being so gilt within the meaning of the statute; but the conviction did not negative the exception introduced in the clause, that the buttons had not been exposed to sale in this instance upon the pattern cards; wherefore the court quashed the conviction. (R. v. Jukes, 8 T. R. 542).

Penalty on making false bills of parcels, &c.

Sect. 5. And if any person shall make out, send, or deliver, for, with, or in relation to, any metal buttons, any list, bill of parcels, or invoice expressing therein any other than the real quality of such buttons, knowing the same, he shall forfeit 20*l.*

Penalty on making buttons of different qualities.

Sect. 6. No person shall knowingly intermix, or cause to be intermixed, any metal button or buttons that shall not be bonâ fide gilt or plated, upon any card (except pattern card), paper, or other substance, whereon or wherein any metal button or buttons so gilt or plated shall be put, nor intermix the same in any other manner, on pain of forfeiting such buttons, and also 5*l.* for any quantity exceeding one dozen, and not exceeding twelve dozen; if exceeding twelve dozen, 1*l.* for every twelve dozen.

What gilt and plated buttons.

Sect. 7. And for the better ascertaining what shall be deemed a gilt or plated button, no metal buttons shall be deemed gilt buttons unless continually, from the time of gilding thereof, gold shall remain equally spread upon the upper surface thereof, exclusive of the edges, in the proportion of five grains to a superficies of a circle twelve inches in diameter; and no metal buttons shall be deemed to be plated, unless the superficies of the upper surface thereof be made of a plate of silver fixed upon copper, or a mixture thereof with other metals, previous to the same being rolled into sheets or fillets.

Recovery and application of penalties.

Sect. 8, 14, 15, and 16. One justice, where the offence is committed or the offender resides, may, by warrant, cause such metal buttons as shall be liable to forfeiture under this act to be seized, and to keep them in safe custody, for the purpose of producing the same in evidence upon any prosecution or action, and when no further necessary, such justices shall order such buttons to be destroyed. And two justices where any offender shall reside, or where any offence shall be committed, may hear and determine the same, who, on information or complaint, within three calendar months, shall summon the party accused and witnesses on each side, and examine into the facts, and on proof either by confession, or oath of one witness, shall give judgment for the pecuniary penalty with costs, to be allowed by such justices, and shall levy the same by distress (a), and cause sale thereof, if not redeemed within five days inclusive of the day of seizure; half to the informer or person suing, and half to the poor, and for want of sufficient distress, shall commit such offender to gaol where the information shall be laid, for any time not exceeding three calendar months, unless such penalty and costs be sooner paid.

Appeal.

Sect. 9. If any person shall think himself aggrieved by the judgment of such justices, he may (on giving security with sufficient surety to the amount of such penalty and costs, together with such further costs as shall be awarded in case such judgment be affirmed) appeal to the next sessions where such conviction shall be made, who may summon and examine witnesses, and hear and finally determine the same, and award costs as they shall think reasonable.

Mitigation.

Sect. 10. Provided that the said justices, and also such sessions, may mitigate any such penalty, so as not to reduce the same below one half; or where such penalties shall be less than 40*l.* below 20*l.*

Form of conviction.

Sect. 11 and 12. And the conviction may be in the following form (mutatis mutandis), as the case may be, which shall be effectual without stating the case, or the facts, or the evidence, in any particular manner.

BE it remembered, that on the day of , in the year of our Lord , at , in the county of , A. I. came before us J. P. and K. B., two of his Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county, [city, or place, as the case may be], and informed us that A. O. of , on the day of , now last past, at , in the said county, [city, or place, as the case may be], here set forth the fact for which the information is laid]: Whereupon the said A. O., after being duly summoned to answer the said charge, appeared before us on the day of , at , in the said county, [city, or place], and having heard the charge contained in the said information, declared he was not guilty of the said offence [or as the case may be, did not appear before us pursuant to the said summons]; [or "did neglect and refuse to make any defence against the said charge;"] but the same being fully proved before us upon the oath of A. W., a credible witness, [or as the case may be], acknowledged and voluntarily confessed the same to be true; and it manifestly appeared to us that the said A. O. is guilty of the offence charged upon him in the said information; we do therefore hereby convict him of the offence aforesaid, and do declare and adjudge that he the said A. O. hath forfeited the said buttons, together with the sum of of lawful money of Great Britain, for the offence aforesaid, to be distributed as the law directs, according to the form of the statute in that case made and provided. Given under our hands and seals the day of .

And no such conviction shall be set aside for want of form, or through the mistake of any fact, circumstance, or other matter whatsoever, provided the material facts alleged in the conviction be proved to the satisfaction of the said court.

Witnesses not appearing.

Sect. 13. Witnesses not appearing, having been duly summoned, without

36 Geo. 3, c. 60.

Sect. 17. Any person may be a witness notwithstanding his being an inhabitant of the parish or place where the offence shall be committed.

Inhabitants may be witnesses.

Sect. 18. And if any person liable to any of the offences aforesaid shall, before information against him, discover to two justices the persons by whose order he did the act which subjected him to such penalty, so as such person be convicted thereof, he shall not be liable to the penalty, but shall be entitled to a moiety of the penalty as other informers.

Offenders discovering by whom employed, indemnified.

Sect. 19. Provided also, that if any maker of buttons, who shall have ordered any metal buttons to be gilt, shall before the burnishing thereof appear before two justices, and prove by one witness that he ordered the said buttons to be gilt in manner required by this act, and delivered gold sufficient for that purpose, or paid or contracted to pay a proper sum in that behalf, and shall afterwards prosecute such gilder or other person to conviction, he shall not be liable to any fine, forfeiture, penalty, or punishment, on account of the said buttons not being gilt with gold; any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

Manufacturers not liable to penalties in certain cases.

Sect. 20. Provided also, that this act shall not extend to buttons made of gold, silver, tin, pewter, lead, or mixtures of tin and lead, or iron tinned, or of Bath or white metal, or any of these metals inlaid with steel, or buttons plated upon shells.

Buttons to which act not to extend.

Sect. 15. No information shall be exhibited, or action brought, unless within three calendar months after the offence committed.

Limitation of proceedings.

Sect. 21. Every suit or action commenced against any person for what he may do in pursuance of this act shall be commenced within six calendar months.

Buying of Titles.

By the common law.

By the Common Law.]—It seemeth to be a high offence at common law to buy or sell any doubtful title to lands known to be disputed, to the intent that the buyer may carry on the suit, which the seller doth not think it worth his while to do, and on that consideration sells his pretensions at an under rate; and it seemeth not to be material whether the title so sold be a good or bad one, or whether the seller were in possession or not, unless his possession were lawful and uncontested; for all practices of this kind are by all means to be discountenanced, as manifestly tending to oppression, by giving oppor-

Cards and Dice.

Duties.

By the second section of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 18, the duties for cards and dice are:—

"For and upon every license to be taken out annually by every maker of playing cards or dice in the united kingdom, the sum of five shillings:

"And for and in respect of every pack of playing cards which shall be made fit for sale or use in the united kingdom, the sum of one shilling:

"And for and in respect of every pair of dice which shall be made fit for sale or use in the united kingdom the sum of twenty shillings."

These duties and all other the regulations respecting them are under the commissioners of the stamp duties.

Search warrant. (a)

The only provision of the act which relates peculiarly to the jurisdiction of magistrates is contained in the 19th section, which enacts, "That whenever there shall be cause to suspect that any person shall make or cause to be made any playing cards or dice in any house or place whatsoever in any part of the united kingdom, without license duly obtained as by this act required, upon affidavit being made of such suspicion by any person before any justice of the peace for the county or place where such cards or dice shall be or shall be suspected to be making or made, it shall and may be lawful for any officer employed by and acting under the commissioners of stamps, in the day-time, and in the presence of a constable or other lawful officer of the peace (who is hereby required to be aiding and assisting therein,) by warrant from such justice of the peace before whom such affidavit shall be made, to be directed to such officer of stamps as aforesaid, which warrant the said justice of the peace is hereby authorized and required to grant, to break open the door or any part of such house or place in which any such cards or dice shall so as aforesaid be suspected to be so made or making, and thereupon to enter into such house or place, and to seize all cards or dice which shall be therein found, made, or begun to be made, and all the tools, materials and utensils for making such cards or dice which shall be there found; and all such cards, dice, tools, materials and utensils shall be seized and carried away, and shall be detained and lodged in any place appointed for that purpose by the said commissioners or their proper officer, and shall be absolutely forfeited, and shall and may be sold or destroyed by the direction and at the discretion of the said commissioners."

Forgery, &c. of.

With respect to the forgery of cards and dice the 35th section of the act enacts, "That if any person shall forge or counterfeit, or shall cause or procure to be forged or counterfeited, any type, die, seal, stamp, mark, plate or device, or any part of any type, die, seal, stamp, mark, plate or device, which shall be at any time provided, made or used, by or under the authority of the commissioners of stamps in pursuance of this act; or shall counterfeit or shall cause or procure to be counterfeited or resembled, the impression of any such type, die, seal, stamp, mark, plate or device, or any part thereof, upon any playing card or dice, or upon any label, thread, or paper; or shall forge or counterfeit the name, handwriting or signature of any sealing officer, or other officer of stamps, to or upon any wrapper, paper or material in which any dice shall be actually enclosed; or shall forge or counterfeit, or shall cause or procure to be forged or counterfeited any mark or name, or any part of any mark or name, directed to be used by the commissioners of stamps in pursuance of this act, in order to distinguish the maker of any such cards or dice respectively, and printed or marked on or affixed to or making part of the wrapper, label or paper in which any playing cards or dice shall be actually enclosed, with intent to defraud his Majesty, his heirs or successors, of any of the duties at any time by law payable upon cards or dice; or shall utter, or sell or expose to sale, or part with for use or play, any card, die, ace of spades, label, wrapper, or Jew whatsoever, with such counterfeit seal, stamp, mark, device, impression, name or signature, knowing the same to be counterfeit; or shall privately or fraudulently use any seal, stamp, mark, plate, device or label at any time provided, made or used by or under the authority of the commissioners of stamps in pursuance of this act, with intent to defraud his Majesty, his heirs and successors, of any of the duties at any time by law payable upon cards or dice; every person convicted of any such offence in due form of law shall be adjudged a felon, and shall suffer death."

But by 1 Will. IV. c. 66, the punishment of death for this offence is abolished, and the offender is subjected to transportation or imprisonment. (See "Forgery," Vol. III.)

RATES for Carriage of Goods.]—The stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 39, after reciting the 24th section of 3 Will. & M. c. 12, and the 3d section of the stat. 21 Geo. II. c. 28, (which empowered magistrates at the quarter sessions to fix rates of carriage and impose penalties on persons taking other rates, which enactments are set out in prior editions of this work, tit. "Carriers,") enacts, that the same shall be repealed, and also, "any other powers or provisions in the said recited acts contained, which relate to the settling the rates of the carriage of goods."

"There is nothing unreasonable in a carrier requiring a greater sum when he carries goods of greater value, for he is to be paid not only for his labour in carrying, but for the risk which he runs, which is greater in proportion to the value of the goods. I would not, however, have it understood that carriers are at liberty by law to charge whatever they please: a carrier is liable by law to carry every thing which is brought to him, for a reasonable sum to be paid for the same carriage, and not to extort what he will." Per Lawrence, J. (Harris v. Packwood, 3 Taunt. 272)

London Porterage Act.]—There are various regulations contained in the act of 39 Geo. III. c. lviii. as to the rates for porterage and the delivery of goods by carriers and innkeepers within London and Westminster, the borough of Southwark and places adjacent, which, though local, yet as they concern so large a portion of the magistracy and public, it is thought fit here to notice.

London Porterage Act, 39 Geo. 3, c. lviii.

The act is only cumulative in its provisions, and does not take away the modes of punishing offences (therein mentioned) which existed previously to the passing of the act, and therefore it was held in R. v. Douglas, (1 Campb. 212,) that a person might be indicted on 30 Geo. II. c. 24, for obtaining by false pretences a larger sum than he was entitled to.

By the first section of the act, after reciting "whereas great exactions and abuses are daily practised in the porterage or delivery of boxes, baskets, packages, parcels, trusses, game and other things, within the cities of London and Westminster, and the borough of Southwark, and the suburbs and liberties thereof respectively, and other parts contiguous thereto, brought by stage waggons, carts, public stage coaches or carriages; and whereas the laws now in being are insufficient for the prevention of such exactions and abuses:" it is enacted, "that from and after the 5th day of July, 1799, no innkeeper, warehousekeeper or other person, to whom any box, basket, package, parcel, truss, game or other thing whatsoever, not exceeding fifty-six pounds weight, is brought by any stage waggon or cart, or any public stage coach or carriage, or any porter or other person employed by such innkeeper, warehousekeeper or other person, in the porterage or delivery of any such box, basket, package, parcel, truss, game or other thing, within the cities of London and Westminster, and the borough of Southwark, and the suburbs and liberties thereof respectively, and other parts contiguous thereto, not exceeding the distance of half a mile from the end of the carriage pavement in the several streets and places within the said cities, borough and liberties, shall ask or demand, or receive or take, in respect of such porterage or delivery, any greater rate or price than the several rates or prices hereinafter mentioned: (that is to say,)

Rates for porterage of parcels not exceeding half a cwt.

"For any distance not exceeding a quarter of a mile, the sum of three pence:

"For any greater distance than a quarter of a mile, but not exceeding half a mile, the sum of four pence:

"For any greater distance than half a mile, but not exceeding one mile, the sum of six pence:

"For any greater distance than one mile, but not exceeding one mile and a half, the sum of eight pence:

"For any greater distance than one mile and a half, but not exceeding two miles, the sum of ten pence: and so in like manner the additional sum of three pence for every further distance not exceeding half a mile."

Sect. 2. "If any porter or other person employed in the porterage or delivery of such boxes, baskets, packages, parcels, trusses, game or other things as aforesaid, shall ask or demand, or receive or take, of and from any person or persons in respect of such porterage or delivery, any greater sum or sums than the rates or prices herein before fixed on that behalf, such porter or other persons shall for every such offence forfeit a sum not exceeding twenty shillings, nor less than five shillings."

Penalty on taking more than rates.

Sect. 3. "Before any such box, basket, packet, package, parcel, truss, game, or other thing whatsoever is sent from the inn, warehouse or other place to which the same is brought or conveyed, there shall be made out and given to the porter or other person employed in the delivery thereof, a card or ticket, whereon shall be distinctly printed, written or marked, the name and description of the inn, warehouse or other place from whence the same is sent, and the sum due for the carriage thereof, and also the sum due for the porterage or delivery thereof, according to the rates and prices aforesaid, and the Christian name and surname of the porter or other person employed in such delivery, which card or ticket shall be delivered by the porter or other person employed as aforesaid, at the same time, and together with such box, basket, packet, package, parcel, truss, game or other thing; and if any such box, basket, or other article shall be sent from any inn, warehouse, or other place, without such card or ticket as aforesaid, every such innkeeper, warehousekeeper, or other person, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding forty shillings, nor less than five shillings; and any porter or other person employed in the delivery of any such box, basket, or other article, who shall not at the time of such delivery leave therewith such card or ticket as aforesaid, or who shall wilfully alter, obliterate or deface any thing written or expressed thereon, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of forty shillings; and if any such porter or other person shall, upon the delivery of such box, basket or other article, ask or demand, or take or receive any larger sum for the carriage of such article than is written or expressed as aforesaid, every such porter or other person shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of twenty shillings."

Penalty on innkeeper, &c. not making out such.

On porter not delivering or defacing same.

On porter overcharging.

Parcels brought by coaches shall be delivered in six hours, &c.

Sect. 4. "Every box, basket, package, parcel, truss, game or other thing, brought to any inn, warehouse or other place, by any public stage coach or carriage, other than stage waggons, for the purpose of delivery within the limits aforesaid, (except where the same shall be directed to be left till called for,) shall be delivered according to the direction thereof within six hours after the arrival of any such box, basket or other article, at such inn, warehouse or other place, unless such arrival shall be between the hours of four in the evening and seven in the morning, and in that case every such delivery shall be made within six hours after such hour in the morning, and in default thereof every innkeeper, warehousekeeper or other person, to whose inn, warehouse or other place such box, basket or other article shall be brought as aforesaid, shall forfeit and pay for every such offence any sum not exceeding twenty shillings, nor less than ten shillings."

Parcels brought by waggons to be delivered in 24 hours.

Sect. 5. "Every box, basket, package, parcel, truss, game or other thing brought to any inn, warehouse or other place, by any public stage waggon for the purpose of delivery within the limits aforesaid, (except where the same shall be directed to be left till called for,) shall be delivered according to the direction thereof within twenty-four hours after the arrival of any such box, basket or other article at such inn, warehouse or other place, and in default thereof every innkeeper, warehousekeeper or other person, to whose inn, warehouse or other place, such box, basket or other article shall be brought as aforesaid, shall forfeit and pay for every such offence any sum not exceeding twenty shillings, nor less than ten shillings."

Parcels directed to be left till called for.

Sect. 6. "Every such box, basket, package, parcel, truss, game or other thing brought to such inn, warehouse or other place as aforesaid, which shall be directed to be left till called for, shall, upon the demand of the person properly authorized to receive the same, be delivered to such person without any charge or demand whatsoever, other than what is justly due for the carriage thereof, and the additional sum of two pence for the warehouse room thereof; and if the same be not delivered to such person upon such demand, or any charge other than as aforesaid be made or received in respect thereof, every innkeeper, warehousekeeper or other person, to whose inn, warehouse or other place such box, basket or other article shall be brought as aforesaid, shall forfeit and pay for every such offence or overcharge any sum not exceeding twenty shillings, nor less than ten shillings."

Warehouse room.

Sect. 7. "If such box, basket, or other article so directed to be left till called for, be not sent for from such inn, warehouse or other place, before the end of one week after the same is brought to such inn, warehouse or other place, it shall be lawful to and for such innkeeper, warehousekeeper or other person, to charge and receive the further sum of one penny for the warehouse room thereof, and so in like manner if the same be not sent for before the end of the second or any subsequent week, to charge the further sum of one penny weekly."

Sect. 8. "If any such box, basket, or other article brought to such inn, warehouse, or other place as aforesaid, which is not directed to be left till called for, shall, before the same is sent for delivery from such inn, warehouse, or other place, be demanded by any person properly authorized to receive the same, such box, basket, or other article shall be thereupon delivered to such person so demanding the same; and it shall in such case be lawful to and for such innkeeper, warehousekeeper, or other person, to charge and take the sum justly due for the carriage thereof, and also the sum of two pence for the warehouse room thereof; but if the same be not delivered to such person upon such demand, or any charge other than as aforesaid be made or received in respect thereof, every innkeeper, warehousekeeper, or other person, to whose inn, warehouse, or other place such box, basket, or other article shall be brought as aforesaid, shall forfeit and pay for every such offence any sum not exceeding twenty shillings, nor less than ten shillings."

Proviso for parcels not directed to be left till called for.

Sect. 9. "And for the preventing the misbehaviour of porters or other persons employed in the porterage or delivery of such boxes, baskets, packages, parcels, trusses, game, or other things as aforesaid," it is further enacted, "that upon complaint made of any non-delivery, neglect, misconduct, or misbehaviour in such employment to any justice of the peace within whose jurisdiction the offence has been committed, or the offender shall be or reside, it shall and may be lawful to and for such justice of the peace to grant a warrant to bring before him the person against whom such complaint shall be made, and upon proof, made upon oath, (which oath such justice is hereby empowered to administer,) of any such non-delivery, neglect, misconduct, or misbehaviour of such porter or other person, to impose a fine or penalty upon such porter or other person not exceeding the sum of twenty shillings, nor less than five shillings."

Misbehaviour of porters punishable by one justice, by fine.

Sect. 10. "If any person to whom such box, basket, package, parcel, truss, game, or other article as aforesaid shall be directed, shall, upon the delivery thereof, neglect or refuse to pay to the porter or other person employed to deliver the same, the money justly due for the carriage thereof, and also due for the porterage or delivery thereof, according to the rates aforesaid, or for the warehouse room thereof, as the case may be, it shall and may be lawful to and for any justice of the peace within whose jurisdiction such neglect or refusal shall be made, or the person charged with such offence shall reside, upon complaint thereof made, to grant a warrant to bring before him the person against whom such complaint shall be made, and upon proof thereof, made upon oath, (which oath such justice is hereby empowered to administer,) to award reasonable satisfaction to the party grieved, for his damage and costs, and for his loss of time in recovering the same, and on non-payment of the sum so awarded, by warrant under his hand and seal, to levy the same by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender, rendering to such offender the overplus of such distress, if any there be, after deducting the charges of making the same."

Recovery of rates of porterage.

Distress.

Sect. 11. "No person shall be prosecuted for any offence against this act, unless information of such offence be given to a justice of the peace within fourteen days next after the commission of such offence."

Sect. 12. "Nothing in this act shall extend, or be construed to extend, to authorize the employment of any porter or other person in the porterage or delivery of parcels within the city of London contrary to the laws and usages of the said city."

Not to authorize employment of porters contrary to usage of London.

Sect. 13. "And, for the speedy recovery of all and every the penalties and forfeitures which shall be incurred under this act," it is further enacted, "that it shall and may be lawful for any one or more justice or justices of the peace within whose jurisdiction any offence or offences against this act shall be Indictable for not carrying a passenger.

It would seem that a common carrier for the carriage of passengers may, under circumstances, be indicted for refusing to carry one. (Per Patteson, J., in Pozzi v. Shipton, 1 P. & D. 12.)

Larceny by or from carrier.

It hath been holden that a carrier embezzling goods which he has received to carry to a certain place, is not guilty of felony, because there was not a felonious taking; but is liable only to a civil action. (1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 3, 5.)

But it hath been resolved that if a carrier open a pack and take out part of the goods, with intent to steal it, he may be guilty of felony; in which case it may be said, not only that such possession of a part distinct from the whole was gained by wrong, and not delivered by the owner, but also that it was obtained basely, fraudulently and clandestinely, in hopes to prevent its being discovered at all, or fixed upon any one when discovered. (1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 5.)

Also it seems clear that if a carrier, after he has brought the goods to the place appointed, take them away again secretly, with intent to steal them, he is guilty of felony, because the possession which he received from the owner being determined, his second taking is in all respects the same as if he were a mere stranger. (1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 5.)

Also it hath been resolved, if goods be delivered to a carrier to be carried to a certain place, and he carries them to another place, and disposeth of them to his own use, that this is felony; because this declareth that his intention originally was not to take the goods upon the agreement and contract of the party, but only with a design of stealing them. (Kel. 81, 82.)

Where the prosecutor had sent forty sacks of wheat to the prisoner, a warehouseman and wharfinger, for safe custody, and the prisoner emptied several sacks of the wheat contained in them, which he sold, and then substituted for it other wheat of an inferior quality; it was doubted at first whether, as the prisoner had appropriated to his own use the whole of the wheat in each of the sacks which he had emptied, he could be deemed guilty of larceny; but upon the question being referred to the judges, they were unanimously of opinion that taking the whole of the wheat out of a sack was as much larceny as the taking of a part merely; and the prisoner had judgment accordingly. (R. v. Brazier, R. & R. 337.)

Upon an indictment against the captain of a ship for larceny, it appeared that the ship, laden with casks of butter, and bound from Waterford to Newhaven, put into Cowes on her way, through stress of weather; most of the casks were stowed in the hold, and battened down, but some were on deck; the prisoner had thirteen of them on deck landed at Cowes, pretending they were his own property; and when he arrived at Newhaven, he informed the consignees that these casks had been thrown overboard: the judges held that this was not larceny; but it seemed to be admitted at the trial, that if the prisoner had broken bulk by taking the thirteen casks from those which were battened down, he must have been convicted. (R. v. Edward Madox, Russ. & Ry. 92.)

A., the owner of a boat, was employed by B., the captain of a ship, to carry a number of wooden staves ashore in his boat. B.'s men were put into the boat, but were under the control of A., who did not deliver all the staves, but took one of them away to the house of his mother: held, that this was a bailment of the staves to A., and not a charge only; and that a mere non-delivery of the staves would not have been a larceny in A.; but that if A. separated one of the staves from the rest, and carried it to a place different from that of its destination, with intent to appropriate it to his own use, that was equivalent to a breaking of bulk, and therefore would be sufficient to constitute a larceny. (R. v. Howell, 7 Car. & P. 325.)

3. Other Matters as to.

So where a person, not being the servant of the prosecutor, received from him a parcel containing notes to take to a coach office, and on the way he abstracted the notes, and applied them to his own use, he was holden guilty of larceny. (Reg. v. Jenkins, 9 C. & P. 38.)

This rule as to carriers and other bailees, however, does not extend to their servants: if the servant of a carrier convert the property entrusted to him to his own use, he will be guilty of larceny, even in cases where a conversion by his master would be merely a breach of trust. Upon an indictment for stealing a quantity of barilla, it appeared that the prosecutors employed one Bryant, a master carman, to cart some barilla for them from the London Docks, and Bryant sent Harding, his carter, for it; Harding, in collusion with others, whilst on his way from the docks with a cart-load of the barilla, allowed the others to take away the whole of it, together with the cart, horses, &c.: some doubt being entertained whether, as the barilla was delivered to Harding to carry, he could be deemed guilty of larceny in converting it to his use, the question was submitted to the judges; but they were unanimously of opinion that this was larceny in the servant, and that it was immaterial whether the barilla was stated to be the property of the prosecutors or of Bryant. (R. v. Harding and others, R. & R. 125; and see further, "Larceny," Vol. III.)

Carrier may indict for goods stolen as his own property.

Where goods are stolen from the carrier, he may prefer an indictment against the felon, as for his own goods; for though he has not the absolute property, yet he has such a possessory property that he may maintain an action of trespass against any one who takes them from him, and so may indict a thief for taking them; and the indictment will be good also, if it charge that the goods are the property of the real owner. (Kel. 39.)

Person stealing his own goods from carrier.

There is a special case, wherein it is said, that a man may commit larceny by stealing his own goods delivered to the carrier, with intent to make him answer for them; for the carrier had a special kind of property in the goods, in respect whereof, if a stranger had stolen them, he might have been indicted generally as having stolen the said carrier's goods; and the injury is altogether as great, and the fraud as base, where they are taken away by the very owner. (1 Hawk. c. 34, s. 30.)

Liability when robbed.

Where goods are delivered to a carrier, and he is robbed of them, he shall be charged and answer for them, by reason of the hire: this was at the common law, before the hundred was answerable over to him; because such robbery might be by consent and combination, carried on in such a manner that no proof could be had of it. (Lane v. Cotton, 1 Salk. 143; Boyce v. Chapman, 2 Scott, 365.)

And although it may be thought a hard case that a poor carrier who is robbed on the road, without any manner of default in him, should be answerable for all the goods he takes, yet the inconvenience would be far more intolerable if he were not so; for it would be in his power to combine with robbers, or to pretend a robbery, or some other accident, without a possibility of remedy to the party; and the law will not expose him to so great a temptation, but he must be honest at his peril. (Lane v. Cotton, 12 Mod. 482; 1 Salk. 143, S. C. See the case of Latham v. Stanbury, 3 Stark. 143.)

I. Importation of.

Importation of.

The importation of cattle from foreign countries and the colonies is now regulated, and the duties fixed by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 47, for which act see "Excise and Customs," Vol. II.

The 5 Geo. III. c. 43, s. 11, relative to the importation of cattle from the Isle of Man, and the 5 Geo. III. c. 10, made perpetual by the 16 Geo. III. c. 8, relative to the importation of cattle from Ireland, are repealed by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 105. See "Excise and Customs," Vol. II.

By the 6th article of the union with Scotland, no Scots cattle carried into England shall be liable to any other duties than those to which cattle of England are liable.

II. Buying and Selling, &c. of.

None shall buy and sell in the same market.

By stats. 3 & 4 Edw. VI. c. 19, and 3 Car. I. c. 4, ss. 7 and 8, no person shall buy any ox, steer, ront, cow, heifer, or calf, and sell the same again alive in the same market or fair, on pain of forfeiting double value, half to the king, and half to him who shall sue. And the said statute 3 & 4 Edw. VI. c. 19, is not repealed by stat. 12 Geo. III. c. 71, which repeals the general forestalling, ingrossing, and regrating act of 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 11, and other subsequent acts enforcing the same; but hath no reference to any preceding act. But it seems questionable, if the statutes 3 & 4 Edw. VI. c. 19, and 3 Car. I. c. 4, ss. 7 and 8, be not expired. See Tyrwhitt and Tyndal's Digest of Statutes, title Cattle.

2. Buying and Selling, &c. of.

By 31 Geo. II. c. 40, no salesman, broker, or factor, employed in buying cattle for others, shall buy for himself in London, or within the Bills of Mortality, on penalty of double the value of the cattle bought or sold.

Drovers not to drive on Sunday.

III. Killing and Maiming of.

By stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 16, "if any person shall unlawfully and maliciously kill, maim, or wound any cattle, every such offender shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding four years; and if a male, to be once, twice, or thrice publicly or privately whipped, (if the Court shall so think fit), in addition to such imprisonment." See the general clauses affecting all the provisions of this act, "Malicious Injuries to Property," Vol. V.

Killing or maiming cattle.

But by the 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 2, so much of the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, ss. 16, 18, as relates to the punishment of persons convicted of any of the offences therein specified, is repealed; and it is enacted, "That every person convicted after the commencement of this act (1st Oct. 1837) of any of such offences respectively, shall be liable to be transported beyond the seas for any term not exceeding fifteen years, and not less than ten years; or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years;" and by sect. 3, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement, such confinement not exceeding one month at any one time, nor three months in any one year.

Punishment.

It is no offence at common law to main a horse. Thus an indictment at common law charged that the prisoner "on the 23d of May, 33 Geo. III. with force and arms at, &c. one black gelding of the value of 30*l*. of the goods and chattels of William Collyer, then and there being, then and there unlawfully did maim, to the great damage of Collyer, and against the peace," &c. But upon reference to the judges after conviction, they all held that the indictment contained no indictable offence; for if the case were not within the Black Act, the fact in itself was only a trespass; for that the words vi et armis did not imply force sufficient to support an indictment. (R v. Ranger, 2 East's P. C. 1074.) This, however, is now remedied by the above act.

Offence at common law.

To bring a case within the prior act of 9 Geo. I. c. 22, the offender must have been actuated by malice against the owner of the animal, and not merely against the animal itself. (See R. v. Pearce, 2 East's P. C. 1072; 1 Leach, 527, S. C.; R. v. Kean, 2 East's P. C. 1073; 1 Leach, 539, n. S. C.; R. v. Shepherd, 1 Leach, 539; 2 East's P. C. 1073, S. C.) And malice against the servant or relative of the owner was not within the act; (R. v. Austen, Russ. & Ry. C. C. 490;) nor was malice against a stranger. (Curtis v. Hundred of Godley, 3 B. & Cres. 248; 5 D. & R. 73, S. C.)

Malice.

But this is now otherwise under the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, the 25th section of which provides that the act shall apply to cases whether the offence were conceived against the owner of the property in respect of which it was committed or otherwise. See the enactment, title "Malicious Injuries to Property," Vol. V. p. 22.

It is not necessary to give evidence of express malice, for this will be presumed till the contrary appears. (2 East's P. C. 1074; ante, tit. "Burning," 506.) If it appear that the act was done purposely, the jury may thence presume that it was done maliciously. In Dawson's case, who was indicted for poisoning horses, in order to prevent them from running a race, defendant

3. Killing or Maiming of.

having betted against them, it was holden that this intent was sufficient to bring the case within the act, and defendant was convicted and executed. (See 3 Chit. C. L. 1087, n.; and see R. v. Dobbs, 1 East's P. C. 573.)

If, however, it appear on the evidence that the defendant was a servant to the prosecutor, and, in irritation, because his master would not let him have another horse to drive in a team, he committed the injury on the horse which he desired to have exchanged, he will not be deemed within the act. (1 Leach, 539.)

Nor will a man who maims cattle to prevent their trespassing on an inclosure. (Id. in notis; 2 East's P. C. 1073.)

The prosecutor may give evidence of administering at different times to show the intent; but if the jury are satisfied that the prisoner administered the poison under an idea that it would improve the appearance of the horse, they ought to acquit him. (Rex v. Mogg, 4 C. & P. 364.)

Nature of the cattle.

Horses, mares and colts, as well as oxen, &c. are within the meaning of the act; (Paty's case, 2 Bla. Rep. 721; 2 East's P. C. 1074;) so are asses; (R. v. Whitney, R. & M. C. C. 3;) so are pigs. (R. v. Chapple, R. & R. 77.)

Nature of injury to.

Unless the maim or wound were mortal it was not felony within the 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 7. (R. v. Haywood, 2 East's P. C. 1076; R. & R. 16, S. C.) But it is otherwise under the present act. J. Haywood was tried on an indictment on the Black Act, (9 Geo. I. c. 3, s. 2,) containing two counts; one for maliciously maiming, the other for maliciously wounding a gelding, against the statute, &c. It appeared that the prisoner had maliciously and with an intent to injure the prosecutor, driven a nail into the frog of the horse's foot, which had at the time rendered the horse useless to the owner; but at the trial the prosecutor said that the horse was likely to do well, and to be perfectly sound again in a short time. After conviction, judgment was respited upon a doubt whether as the horse was likely to recover, and as the wound was not a permanent injury, the offence were within the statute. In Michaelmas term, 1801, all the judges held the conviction right. The words of the stat. 9 Geo. I. c. 22, are, "shall unlawfully and maliciously kill, maim or wound any cattle," &c. which word "wound" appears to be used as contradistinguished from a permanent injury, such as maiming. (Id.)

Injuring a sheep by setting a dog at it, is not a maiming or wounding within the act. (R. v. Hughes, 2 C. & P. C. N. P. 420; R. v. Chalkley, R. & R. 258; sed quære, Deac. C. D. 204.)

But where the prisoner set fire to a cow-house in which was a cow, which was burnt to death, Taunton, J., held, that the prisoner could be convicted upon an indictment for killing the cow. (R. v. Haughton, 5 C. & P. 559.)

And pouring acid into the eye of a mare, and thereby blinding her, is a maiming within the act. (R. v. Owens, R. & M. C. C. 205.)

It should seem, however, that giving poison to a person's horse, however maliciously done, is no felony, and not within the act, unless the horse die, the words of the act being "kill, maim, or wound." An attempt to commit a felony is an indictable misdemeanor, and it should seem that the offender in such a case might be indicted accordingly. See ante, "Attempts."

The indictment.

It is not necessary to aver in the indictment that the animals are cattle, in order to bring them within the statute; (2 Bla. Rep. 733;) but it must state the species of cattle wounded or injured; to state that the prisoners wounded certain cattle is insufficient. (R. v. Chalkley, Russ. & Ry. 258.)

If the statement be, that he maimed certain cattle, viz. a mare, there must be evidence that the animal maimed is of the description specified. (Id.)

If a prisoner mix poison with the corn intended for the feed of eight horses, and then gives each horse his feed from this mixture, an indictment, charging that he did administer the poison to the eight horses is correct. (Rex v. Mogg, 4 C. & P. 364.)

On an indictment for maliciously killing two sheep, the property in them may be laid to be in the agister. (R. v Woodward, 2 East's P. C. 653.)

The indictment must conclude against the statute. (R. v. Ranger, 2 East's P. C. 1074.)

IV. Ill-treatment of.

By the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 59, intituled "An Act to consolidate and amend the several Laws relating to the cruel and improper treatment of Animals, and the mischiefs arising from the driving of Cattle, and to make other Provisions in regard thereto;" reciting, "Whereas frequent accidents arise from improperly driving cattle, and many and great cruelties are practised by improperly driving and conveying cattle to, at and from public markets and otherwise, as well as in slaughtering and keeping and detaining the same without food and nourishment, to the great and needless increase of the sufferings of dumb animals and to the demoralization of the people, and whereby the lives and property of his majesty's subjects are greatly endangered and injured: and whereas it is expedient to reduce into one act, and to alter, amend and enlarge the powers and provisions of several acts now in force relating to the cruel and improper treatment of cattle, and the mischiefs arising from the driving thereof, and also to prevent as far as possible the cruel and improper treatment of cattle and other animals, and to make divers provisions in regard thereto:" it is enacted, "that the act hereinafter mentioned, (that is to say,) an act passed in the third year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Fourth, intituled 'An Act to prevent the cruel and improper treatment of Cattle,' and so much of an act passed in the third year of the reign of his present majesty, intituled 'An Act for the more effectual Administration of Justice in the Office of a Justice of the Peace in the several Police Offices established in the Metropolis, and for the more effectual Prevention of Depredations on the River Thames and its Vicinity for three years,' as recites and enacts as follows, (that is to say,) 'And whereas divers places in and about the metropolis are kept and used for the purpose of fighting or baiting of bears or other animals, at which places idle and disorderly persons commonly assemble, to the interruption of good order and the danger of the public peace; be it therefore enacted, that any person who shall, within five miles of Temple Bar, keep or use or shall act in the management or conducting of any premises or place whatsoever for the purpose of fighting or baiting of bears, cock-fighting, baiting or fighting of badgers or other animals, shall, on conviction thereof before any one justice of the peace, forfeit any sum not exceeding five pounds, and in default of immediate payment shall be liable to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding two months, unless the said penalty shall be sooner paid,' shall be and the same are hereby severally repealed, and made null and void to all intents and purposes, save and except as to any penalties or forfeitures incurred and not recovered, and to any offences or other matters committed and done before the passing of this act."

5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 59.

Repeals 3 Geo. 4, c. 71, and part of 3 Will. 4, c. 19.

4. Ill-treatment of.

5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 59. Persons cruelly beating or ill-treating cattle, &c. or improperly driving same, &c. may be fined or imprisoned.

Sect. 2. "If any person shall from and after the passing of this act wantonly and cruelly beat, ill-treat, abuse or torture any horse, mare, gelding, bull, (a) ox, cow, heifer, steer, calf, mule, ass, sheep, lamb, dog or any other cattle (b) or domestic animal, or if any person who shall drive any cattle or other animal shall by negligence or ill usage in the driving thereof, be the means whereby any mischief, damage or injury shall be done by any such cattle or other animal, every such offender, being convicted of any or either of the said offences before any one justice of the peace for the city, town or county in which any such offence shall have been committed, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay (over and above the amount of the damage or injury (if any) done thereby, which damage or injury shall and may be ascertained and determined by such justice,) such a sum of money not exceeding forty shillings nor less than five shillings with costs, as to such justice shall seem meet; or the offender shall, in default of payment, be committed to the common gaol or house of correction for the city, town or county in which such offence shall have been committed, there to be imprisoned for any time not exceeding fourteen days; provided that nothing in this act contained shall prevent or abridge any remedy by action against the employer of any such offender where the amount of the damage is not sought to be recovered by virtue of this act."

Persons keeping pits for fighting dogs or baiting bears, &c. guilty of a nuisance, and liable to penalties. (c)

Sect. 3. "And whereas cruelties are greatly promoted and encouraged by persons keeping houses, rooms, pits, grounds or other places for the fighting or baiting of dogs, bulls, bears or other animals, and for fighting cocks, and by persons aiding or assisting therein, and the same are great nuisances and annoyances to the neighbourhood in which they are situate, and tend to demoralize those who frequent such places; be it therefore enacted, that from and after the passing of this act, if any person shall keep or use any house, room, pit, ground or other place for the purpose of running, baiting or fighting any bull, bear, badger, dog or other animal, (whether of domestic or wild nature or kind,) or for cock-fighting, or in which any bull, bear, badger, dog, or other such animal shall be baited, run or fought, every such person shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds nor less than ten shillings for every day in which he shall so keep and use such house, room, pit, ground or place for any of the purposes aforesaid; provided always, that the person who shall act as the manager of any such house, room, pit, ground, or other place, or who shall receive any money for the admission of any person thereto, or who shall assist in any such baiting or fighting, or bull-running, shall be deemed and taken to be the keeper of the same for the purposes of this act, and be liable to all such penalties as are by this act imposed upon the person who shall actually keep any such house, room, pit, ground or other places for the purposes aforesaid."

The person who shall be manager of such house to be deemed the keeper.

Parties impounding cattle to provide sufficient food for them (d).

Sect. 4. "And whereas great cruelties are practised by reason of keeping and detaining horses, asses, and other cattle and animals impounded and confined without food frequently for many days; for remedy whereof be it enacted, that from and after the passing of this act every person who shall impound or confine, or cause to be impounded or confined, any horse, ass, or other cattle or animal, in any common pound, open pound, or close pound, or in any inclosed place, shall and he is hereby required to find, provide, and supply such horse, ass, and other cattle or animal so impounded or confined, daily with good and sufficient food and nourishment for so long a time

(c) See further the provisions in the Police Acts relative to this offence, "Police," Vol. V.

(d) It seems that under this section the person who is bound to supply food to impounded cattle is the distrainer or person at whose suit they are impounded, and not the pound-keeper. But if the pound-keeper supplies the food at the request of the distrainer, or the distrainer joins with the pound-keeper in a subsequent sale of the cattle under this act, the pound-keeper and the distrainer are for this purpose to be considered as one. (Mason v. Newland, 9 Car. & P. 575.)

It seems also that the section excludes as such horse, ass, or other cattle or animal shall remain and continue so impounded or confined as aforesaid; and every such person who shall so find, provide and supply any such horse, ass, or other cattle or animal, with such daily food and nourishment as aforesaid, shall and may, and he and they are hereby authorised and empowered to recover of and from the owner or owners of such cattle or animal not exceeding double the full value of the food and nourishment so supplied to such cattle or animal as aforesaid, by proceeding before any one justice of the peace within whose jurisdiction such cattle or animal shall have been so impounded and supplied with food as aforesaid, in like manner as any penalty or forfeiture, or any damage or injury, may be recovered under and by virtue of any of the powers or authorities in this act contained, and which value of the food and nourishment so to be supplied as aforesaid such justice is hereby fully authorised and empowered to ascertain, determine, and enforce as aforesaid; and every person who shall have so supplied such food and nourishment as aforesaid shall be at liberty if he shall so think fit, instead of proceeding for the recovery of the value thereof as last aforesaid, after the expiration of seven clear days from the time of impounding the same, to sell any such horse, ass, or other cattle or animal, openly at any public market (after having given three days public printed notice thereof) for the most money that can be then got for the same, and to apply the produce in discharge of the value of such food and nourishment so supplied as aforesaid, and the expenses of and attending such sale, rendering the overplus (if any) to the owner of such cattle or animal." Sect. 5. "In case any horse, ass, or other cattle or animal shall at any time so remain impounded or confined as aforesaid without sufficient daily food or nourishment more than twenty-four hours, it shall and may be lawful to and for any person or persons whomsoever from time to time and as often as shall be necessary to enter into and upon any such common pound, open pound or close pound, or other inclosed place in which any such cattle or animal shall be so impounded or confined, and to supply such cattle or animal with such good and sufficient food and nourishment during so long a time as such cattle or animal shall so remain and continue impounded or confined as aforesaid, without being liable to any action of trespass or other proceeding by any person or persons whomsoever for or by reason of such entry or entries for the purposes aforesaid." (b)

Persons may enter pounds for the purpose of feeding cattle. (b)

Sect. 6. "In case any such person who shall so impound or confine, or cause to be impounded or confined, any such horse, ass, or other cattle or animal as aforesaid, shall refuse or neglect to find, provide, and supply such daily good and sufficient food and nourishment to such cattle and animal so impounded or confined as aforesaid, he and they shall for every day during which he or they shall so refuse or neglect to find, provide and supply the same as aforesaid, forfeit and pay the sum of five shillings; which last sum and sums of money shall and may be recoverable by proceeding before any one justice of the peace in like manner as hereinbefore provided for the recovery of any penalty, forfeiture, damage or injury as hereinbefore mentioned."

any right in the owner of the cattle to supply them with food while in the pound.

(a) The distrainer who supplies the food may either apply to a magistrate to allow any sum not exceeding double the value of the food, or may sell the cattle; but no magistrate ought to allow more than the actual value of the food, if the owner of the cattle was willing to supply the food himself. (Id.)

If the cattle be sold under the act, the distrainer can only get the single value of the food, and not the amount of the damage for which the cattle were distrained, as all the overplus beyond the value of the food and the expenses of the sale, is to be returned to the owner of the cattle. (Id.)

(b) This section does not give any person a right to any payment; it merely allows charitable persons to supply food to impounded cattle, without being liable to an action for doing so. (Id.) purpose of slaughter, being frequently resold or compelled to work, or kept without sufficient food; for remedy whereof be it further enacted, that if any person keeping or using any house or place for the purpose of slaughtering or killing any horse or cattle (which shall not be for butcher's meat) shall at any time hereafter slaughter or kill any horse or cattle (not being for butcher's meat) without having previously taken out a license for that purpose, and without having previously affixed over the outer gate or entrance from the public highway to said licensed premises, the board and inscription in manner and form prescribed according to the provisions of an act of parliament passed in the twenty-sixth year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled 'An Act for Regulating Houses and other places kept for the purpose of Slaughtering Horses,' (see 'Horses, Slaughtering of,' Vol. III.) every such person shall, for every such offence, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding five pounds nor less than ten shillings, or be liable to such punishment as in the said act is provided."

26 Geo. 3, c. 71.

Horses to be slaughtered within three days after purchase, and in meantime to be provided with food.

Sect. 8. "Every person so keeping or using any house or place for the purpose of slaughtering or killing horses or other cattle shall kill and slaughter every such horse or cattle within three days next after such horse or other cattle shall have been purchased by or brought and delivered to him or any person in his service and employ, for the purpose of slaughter as aforesaid, and shall also in the meantime, and until such horse or other cattle shall have been so slaughtered, find and provide such horse or other cattle with good and sufficient daily food and nourishment, and shall also at the time of receiving such horse or cattle for the purposes aforesaid, enter in the book which by the said act of the twenty-sixth of George the Third is required to be kept by such person for the purposes in the said act mentioned, a correct description of the colour and gender of the horse so purchased by or delivered to him for the purposes aforesaid, with the date of receiving the same; and if any such horse or other cattle so received for the purpose of being slaughtered as aforesaid shall be employed in any manner of work, or shall not be supplied with good and sufficient food during the time he shall survive, every such person so receiving every such horse or other cattle shall for each and every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding forty shillings nor less than five shillings for every day on which such offence shall be committed or continued." (See "Horses, Slaughtering of," Vol. III.)

Any constable or peace officer, or the owner of any cattle, may seize offenders.

Sect. 9. "And for the more easy and effectual apprehension of all offenders against this act, be it further enacted, that when and so often as any of the said offences shall happen, it shall and may be lawful to or for any constable or other peace officer, or for the owner of any such cattle or animal, upon view thereof, or upon the information of any other person (who shall declare his, her, or their name or names and place or places of abode to the said constable or other peace officer), to seize and secure by the authority of this act, and forthwith and without any other authority or warrant to convey any such offender before any one justice of the peace within whose jurisdiction the offence shall have been committed, to be dealt with according to law, and such justice shall forthwith proceed to examine upon oath any witness or witnesses who shall appear or be produced to give information touching any such offence (which oath the said justice is hereby authorised and empowered to administer)."

As to names of offenders.

Sect. 10. "If any person who shall be apprehended for having committed any offence against this act shall refuse to discover his name and place of abode to the justice before whom he shall be brought, such person refusing shall immediately be delivered over to a constable or other peace officer, and shall by him be conveyed to the common gaol or house of correction for the city, town, or county within which the offence shall have been committed, or in which the offender shall have been apprehended, there to remain for a space not exceeding one calendar month, or until he shall make known his name and place of abode to the said justice."

Limitation as to summary proceedings.

Sect. 11. "The prosecution of every offence punishable under this act shall be commenced within three calendar months next after the commission of the offence, and not otherwise; and the evidence of the party complaining shall be admitted in proof of the offence, and also the evidence of any overseer or inhabitant of the parish in which the offence shall have been committed, notwithstanding any forfeiture or penalty incurred by the offence may be payable to the overseers of the poor of such parish."

5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 59.

Sect. 12. "In every case of a conviction under this act, where the sum which shall be awarded for the amount of the damage or injury done, or which shall be imposed as a penalty by any such justice as aforesaid for any offence contrary to this act, shall not be paid either immediately upon or after the conviction, or within such period as such justice shall at the time of the conviction appoint, it shall be lawful for such justice (unless where otherwise specially directed) to commit the offender to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be imprisoned only, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, according to the discretion of such justice, for any term not exceeding fourteen days, where the amount of the sum awarded, or the penalty imposed, or both, (as the case may be,) together with the costs, shall not exceed five pounds, and for any term not exceeding two calendar months where the amount, with costs, shall exceed five pounds; the commitment to be determinable in each of the cases aforesaid upon payment of the sum or sums awarded and costs."

As to convictions.

Sect. 13. "It shall be lawful for any one such justice as aforesaid, in all cases in which no other mode of proceeding is specially provided or directed by this act, or in any case where any person shall not be conveyed before any justice by the authority of this act, upon information or complaint made by any person of any offence against the provisions of this act, within fourteen days next after the commission of any such offence, to summon the party accused to appear before such justice, or before any other justice of the peace, at a time and place to be by him named; and either on the appearance of the party accused, or in default thereof, it shall be lawful for such justice or any other justice, at the time and place to be appointed for such appearance, to proceed to examine into the matter, and upon due proof made thereof by voluntary confession of the party, or by oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, to award, order, give judgment or convict for the damage or injury, penalty or forfeiture, as the case may be."

Mode of proceeding for penalties, &c.

Sect. 14. "In every case where there shall be a conviction for any offence contrary to this act, the same shall be drawn or made out according to the form following, or to the effect thereof, or as near thereto as the case shall require; (videlicet,)

Form of conviction.

5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 59.

Penalty on constable refusing or neglecting to serve summons, &c.

Sect. 16. "If any constable or other peace officer shall refuse or neglect to serve or execute any such summons or warrant granted or issued by any justice of the peace pursuant to any of the provisions of this act, every such constable or peace officer so offending, and being convicted thereof upon the information of any person before any justice of the peace, shall forfeit any sum not exceeding five pounds as shall be awarded by such justice, and in default of payment thereof shall be committed by such justice to the county gaol or house of correction of the city, town or county in which such justice has jurisdiction, there to be kept for the space of time not exceeding one calendar month, unless such penalty shall be sooner paid."

Distribution of penalties, &c.

Sect. 17. "All pecuniary penalties which shall be recovered before any justice of the peace under the provisions of this act shall respectively be divided, paid and distributed in the following manner; (that is to say,) one moiety thereof to the overseers of the poor of the parish in which any of the offences aforesaid shall have been committed, to be by such overseers applied in aid of the rates of their respective parishes, and the other moiety thereof, with full costs, to the person who shall inform and prosecute for the same, or to such other person as to such justice shall seem fit and proper; and that all and every sum or sums of money which shall or may be ascertained, determined, adjudged and ordered by any justice of the peace, under the authority of this act, to be paid as the amount of any damage or injury occasioned by the commission of any of the offences hereinbefore mentioned, shall be paid to the person who shall or may have sustained such damage or injury according to the order or determination and at the discretion of any such justice."

Informants or complainants not disqualified.

Sect. 18. "Upon the hearing of any information or complaint exhibited or made under any of the provisions of this act, any person giving or making such information or complaint, or other person, shall be deemed and is hereby declared to be a competent witness, notwithstanding he may be entitled to any part of the pecuniary penalty, on the conviction of any offender, upon any such information or complaint as aforesaid."

Limitation of actions.

(a) A mare was distrained damage feasant by A. and detained in the pound by the pound-keeper B. for several days. B. supplied the mare with food while in the pound, and A. and B. joined in selling the mare for the keep: held, in an action of trover by the owner of the mare against A. and B., that if they bonâ fide and honestly intended to sell the mare under the provisions of sect. 4 of this act, they were entitled to notice of action, and to have the venue laid in the proper county; but on these facts the judge would not nonsuit, but left it to the jury to say whether the defendants meant bonâ fide to act upon the provisions of that statute; and that, if they did, the defendants were entitled to their verdict. (Mason v. Newland, 9 Car. & P. 575.)

A hired driver of a cabriolet having brought home the horse apparently much ill-used by him, the owner's son (in the owner's absence) called in a policeman, and told him that the driver had ill-used the horse. The policeman said, that if the complainant charged the driver with cruelty to the horse, he would take him into custody. The complainant said, "I do;" and the policeman apprehended the driver under sect. 9: held, that the complainant must be considered not as a party giving information to the officer, in consequence of which the driver was arrested, but as a principal causing the arrest to be made; and that he was not entitled to the notice of action which the statute requires to be given to persons sued for any thing done in pursuance of it. 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 36.

By stat. 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 36, intituled "An Act for establishing a New Court for the Trial of Offences committed in the Metropolis and parts adjoining," [25th July, 1834,] reciting, "Whereas it is expedient, for the more effective and uniform administration of justice in criminal cases, that offences committed in the metropolis and certain parts adjoining thereto should be tried by justices and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery in the city of London;" it is enacted, "That the lord mayor for the time being of the city of London, the lord chancellor or lord keeper of the great seal, and all the judges for the time being of his majesty's Courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas and Exchequer, the chief judge and the two other judges in bankruptcy, the judges of the admiralty, the dean of the arches, the aldermen of the city of London, the recorder, the common serjeant, the judges of the sheriff's court of the city of London, for the time being, and any person or persons who hath or shall have been lord chancellor, lord keeper, or a judge of any of his majesty's superior courts of Westminster, together with such others as his majesty, his heirs and successors, shall from time to time name and appoint by any general commission as hereinafter stated, shall be and be taken to be the judges of a court to be called the 'Central Criminal Court,' to which his majesty, and his heirs and successors, may direct his general commission as hereinafter mentioned; and which court shall have jurisdiction to hear, try and determine all offences committed or alleged to be committed as hereinafter specified."

The lord mayor of London, the lord chancellor, the judges, the aldermen, recorder and common serjeant of London, and such others as his majesty may appoint, to be judges of a court to be called the "Central Criminal Court."

His majesty may issue a commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery for London and Middlesex, and certain parts of Essex, Kent and Surrey.

Sect. 2. "It shall be lawful for his majesty, his heirs and successors, from time to time to command and cause to be issued commissions of oyer and terminer, to inquire of, hear and determine all treasons, murders, felonies and misdemeanors committed within the city of London and county of Middlesex, and those parts of the counties of Essex, Kent and Surrey, within the parishes of Barking, East Ham, West Ham, Little Ilford, Low Layton, Walthamstow, Wanstead St. Mary, Woodford and Chingford, in the county of Essex; Charlton, Lee, Lewisham, Greenwich, Woolwich, Eltham, Plumstead, St. Nicholas Deptford, that part of St. Paul Deptford which is within the said county of Kent, the liberty of Kidbrook, and the hamlet of Mottingham, in the county of Kent; and the borough of Southwark, the parishes of Battersea, Bermondsey, Camberwell, Christchurch, Clapham, Lambeth, St. Mary Newington, Rotherhithe, Streatham, Barnes, Putney, that part of St. Paul Deptford which is within the said county of Surrey, Tooting, Graveney, Wandsworth, Merton, Mortlake, Kew, Richmond, Wimbleton, the Clink Liberty, and the district of Lambeth Palace; in the county of Surrey; and also commissions of gaol delivery to deliver his majesty's gaol of Newgate of the prisoners therein charged with any of the offences aforesaid, committed within the limits aforesaid; and it shall be lawful for the justices and judges of the Central Criminal Court aforesaid, or any two or more of them, to inquire of, hear, determine, and adjudge all such treasons, murders, felonies and misdemeanors, and all treasons, murders, felonies and misdemeanors which might be inquired of, heard and determined under any commission of oyer and terminer for the city of London or county of Middlesex, or commission of gaol delivery to deliver the gaol of Newgate, or which, in case the parts of the counties of Essex, Kent and Surrey respectively comprised within the limits aforesaid had been counties of themselves, might have been inquired of, heard and determined under commissions of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery for such counties, and to deliver the said gaol of Newgate at such times and places in the said city or the suburbs thereof as by the said commissions shall be appointed, or as the said justices and judges by virtue and in pursuance thereof, or any two or more of them, shall appoint, and to award and issue all precepts and process, and use and exercise all powers and authorities belonging to justices of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery: provided always, that such court shall have power and jurisdiction to proceed on every such commission so issued as aforesaid, and act under such commission until a new commission shall be issued." 1 & 5 W. 4, c. 36.

Sect. 3. "The district situated within the limits of the jurisdiction hereinbefore established shall be deemed and taken to be, in all cases tried before the said justices and judges, one county for all purposes of venue, local description, trial, judgment and execution, not herein specially provided for; and that in all indictments and presentments preferred and tried before the said justices and judges the venue laid in the margin shall be as follows: 'Central Criminal Court to wit;' and all offences which in other indictments would be laid to have been committed in the county where the trial is had, and all material facts which would be in other indictments averred to have taken place in the county where the trial is had, shall, in indictments prepared and tried in the said court, be laid to have been committed and averred to have taken place 'within the jurisdiction of the said court.'" (a)

New district to be considered as one county and venue to be "Central Criminal Court to wit," &c.

Sect. 4. "The sheriffs of the city of London and of the counties of Middlesex, Essex, Kent and Surrey, respectively, shall execute and obey all precepts and process which the said justices and judges shall award, issue and direct unto them respectively, and shall, whenever required and commanded, summon and return from the said city of London and county of Middlesex, and from the parts of the said counties of Essex, Kent and Surrey within the limits of this act, a competent number of persons qualified according to law to inquire of, present and try all offences and other matters cognizable by the said justices and judges; and the persons so returned, whether taken wholly from the city of London or the said counties, or taken indiscriminately from the said city and the said counties, shall have authority to inquire of, present, hear, try and determine all such offences and other matters, and all issues and all matters of fact arising out of such trials or relating thereto, notwithstanding that such persons are not inhabitants of the city, county or place where such offences or other matters may be committed or arise; and any person having served upon any grand jury or petty jury summoned and returned from the said counties of Essex, Kent and Surrey, under the authority of this act, shall henceforth be exempt for and during twelve calendar months next after such service from serving upon any jury in any court (except the sessions of the peace) to be holden for the county in which such juror shall reside."

Power to summon juries from London or from the counties, or from both indiscriminately, to try all offences cognizable by the act.

As to jurors residing within the limits of the act in Essex, Kent and Surrey.

Sect. 5. "And whereas, for the more convenient distribution of prisoners, as well before trial as after, and also for rendering more effectual the punishment of imprisonment, it may be expedient that power should be given to appoint from time to time in what places of confinement within the limits of this act such prisoners shall be kept in custody; be it therefore further enacted, that it shall be lawful for his majesty by and with the advice of his privy council, from time to time to order and direct in what gaol, house of correction, or other prison, being within the limits of this act, any person or persons charged with or convicted of offences committed or alleged to have been committed within the limits of this act shall be imprisoned or kept in custody; and that when and so often as his majesty, by and with the advice of his privy council, shall be pleased to give such orders and directions, the said justices and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, and all justices of the peace, coroners and other magistrates acting within the limits of this act, shall commit all persons charged or convicted before them to such gaol, house of correction, or other prison as in such orders or directions shall be expressed and commanded, any law, usage or custom to the contrary notwithstanding; provided nevertheless, and it is hereby declared, that the city, county or place in which the offence of such person or persons was committed or alleged to have been committed shall be liable to and charged with the expense of supporting and maintaining such prisoner during his imprisonment in such gaol, house of correction or other prison, at and after such rate as his majesty, by and with the advice of his privy council, shall order and direct, and shall be paid by the treasurer of the said city, county or place in which such offence was committed or alleged to have been committed: provided nevertheless, that the county of Middlesex and city of Westminster and liberty of the Tower of London shall not be liable to any charge for the support and maintenance of any prisoner charged with any offence in the said county, city or liberty, who shall be committed to his majesty's gaol of Newgate."

His majesty, by order in council, to appoint the places of confinement for prisoners.

(a) But every indictment should also contain a statement of the county in which the offence was committed and the material facts took place. And where such statement was omitted, and the indictment having been removed, was tried by a Middlesex jury, the Court arrested the judgment. (Reg. v. Stowell, 12 L. J. Rep. M. C. 111.) But indictments with the Central Criminal Court venue may still be tried in the county in which they show the offence to have been committed. (Reg. v. Meyer and Albert, ib. 117.)

4 & 5 W. 4, c. 36.

Penitentiary at Milbank to be one of the prisons under this act.

Sect. 6. "The general penitentiary at Milbank shall be considered one of the prisons in which his majesty by virtue of this act may, with the advice of his privy council, direct any persons charged or convicted of offences within the limits of this act to be imprisoned and kept in custody."

Persons sentenced to imprisonment beyond the limits of this act may be removed to the penitentiary at Milbank.

Sect. 7. "It shall be lawful for his majesty, by an order in writing to be notified in writing by one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, to direct that persons who may be sentenced to imprisonment by any court or competent authority for any offence committed beyond the limits of this act, and who, having been examined by an experienced surgeon or apothecary, shall appear to be free from any putrid or infectious distemper, and fit to be removed, shall be removed to the penitentiary at Milbank, there to be imprisoned for and during their respective terms of imprisonment" [The 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 38, s. 13, extends the power given by this section to offences committed within the limits of this act.]

Regulations in all penitentiary acts shall apply to prisoners confined there by the authority of this act.

Sect. 8. "All provisions and regulations expressed and contained in all acts made for the government of the general penitentiary at Milbank, and all powers given by such acts for the confinement, employment and management of convicts removed thereto in pursuance of such acts, shall be applicable and made available in respect of all persons, who may be removed or sent to such penitentiary in pursuance of any order in council made by the authority of this act, as fully, to all intents and purposes, as if the said regulations, provisions and powers were expressed and given by this act." [The 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 38, s 14, extends the powers contained in penitentiary acts to all prisoners confined therein.]

Persons convicted may be imprisoned either in the county gaol or in Newgate.

Sect. 9. "It shall be lawful to and for the said justices and judges of oyer and terminer and of gaol delivery, or any two or more of them, to commit any person or persons who shall be brought before them charged with any offence cognizable by such justices and judges under and by virtue of this act, or who shall be convicted or attainted before them, to such gaol, house of correction, or other prison as may be specified in any order of council to be made by virtue of this act, or if no such order shall have been made, then to the common gaol, house of correction or other prison of the city, county or place to which such offender might have been committed if this act had not passed, or to his majesty's gaol of Newgate, there to remain until discharged by due course of law, or in execution of his or their respective judgments; and in case of such commitment to the said gaol of Newgate, execution of such judgments shall and may be had and done upon such person or persons by the sheriffs of the said city of London in the same way and as fully to all intents and purposes as if the offence of which such person or persons was or were convicted had been committed in the said city of London."

Sheriffs of London may execute judgments.

Sect. 10. "Until his majesty shall be pleased, by and with the advice of his privy council, to order and direct in what gaol, house of correction or other prison persons charged with or convicted of offences committed or alleged to have been committed within the limits of this act shall be imprisoned or kept in custody, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace or coroner acting in and for the said counties of Essex or Kent, so far as relates to the said several parishes lying within their respective counties, to commit any person or persons charged with any of the offences aforesaid cognizable by the said justices and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery by virtue of this act to his majesty's gaol of Newgate; and also for any justice of the peace or coroner acting in and for the said county of Surrey, so far as relates to the several parishes above mentioned lying within the said county of Surrey, to commit any person charged with any of the offences aforesaid cognizable by the justices and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery by virtue of this act to his majesty's gaol of Horsemonger Lane or Newington, in and for the county of Surrey."

4 & 5 W. 4, c. 36.

Justices and coroners in Essex and Kent to commit offenders to Newgate, and justices and coroners in Surrey to commit offenders to Horsemonger Lane, and certify examinations to the court.

Sect. 11. "Every justice or coroner acting within the limits of this act shall specify in the commitment that the person or persons charged are committed under the authority of this act; and such justice or coroner shall in all such cases take the like examinations, informations, bailments and recognizances, and certify the same to the said justices of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, as they are required by an act passed in the seventh year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Fourth, intituled 'An Act for improving the Administration of Criminal Justice in England;' and any justice of the peace or coroner, in default of so doing, shall be liable to the same fines and penalties to be imposed by the said justices and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery in the same manner as is mentioned in the said act; and when any person or persons shall be committed to his majesty's gaol for the county of Surrey for any offence cognizable by the said justices and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery by virtue of this act, by a commitment specifying that such person or persons is or are committed under the authority of this act, the sheriff of the said county of Surrey, or the keeper of the gaol for the said county, shall, six days at least before the sitting of the next court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery appointed under the authority of this act, or at such other time as the said justices and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, or any two or more of them, shall from time to time direct, cause such person and persons with their commitments and detainers, to be safely removed from the gaol of the said county of Surrey, without the issuing of any writ of habeas corpus, or other writ, to the said gaol of Newgate, there to remain until delivered by due course of law."

Justices and coroners to specify that persons are committed under this act, and to take examinations, &c. as required under 7 Geo. 4. c. 64. See "Examination," Vol. II.

Power to remove prisoners from county gaol of Surrey to Newgate.

Power to order payment of expenses to prosecutors and witnesses.

Sect. 12. "It shall be lawful for any two of the said justices and judges of oyer and terminer and of gaol delivery to order and direct the costs and expenses of prosecutors and witnesses, in all cases where prosecutors and witnesses may be by law entitled thereto, to be paid by the treasurer of the county in which the offence of any person prosecuted would have been tried but for this act; and that every such treasurer or some known agent shall attend the said justices and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery during the sitting of the court, to pay all such orders."

Treasurer of county, or his agent, to attend court to pay orders.

Sect. 13. "No bill of indictment for any misdemeanor (other than perjury or subornation of perjury) which can or may be presented to the grand jury at any sessions of the peace for the said city of Westminster and borough of Southwark, and counties of Middlesex; Essex, Kent and Surrey respectively, in which such misdemeanor was committed or alleged to have been committed, shall be presented to the grand jury to be summoned under the authority of this act, unless the prosecutor or other person presenting such indictment shall have been bound by recognizance to prosecute or give evidence at the sessions to be held under the authority of this act against the person or persons accused of such misdemeanor, or unless such person or persons accused shall have been committed to or detained in custody, or shall be bound by recognizance to appear at the said sessions to be held under the authority of this act."

No indictment to be presented to grand jury unless the prosecutor has been bound by recognizance. (a)

4 & 5 W. 4, c. 36.

Court of Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London may contract with justices of Essex, Kent and Surrey, for support of their prisoners in Newgate.

Sect. 14. "It shall be lawful for the Court of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the city of London, having the government and ordering of the said gaol of Newgate, to enter into agreement with the justices of the peace for the said counties of Essex, Kent and Surrey, for the support and maintenance in the said gaol of Newgate of any prisoner or prisoners so committed or removed thereto under the authority of this act; and that the sum to be paid for the support and maintenance of such prisoner or prisoners in the said gaol of Newgate, and for their removal therefrom, shall be after such rate and in such manner as shall be settled and agreed by and between a committee of the said aldermen to be appointed from time to time by the said court of aldermen and a joint or separate committee of the magistrates of the said respective counties of Essex, Kent and Surrey, to be appointed at the general or quarter sessions of the peace of the said counties respectively to be holden next after the first day of January in every year; and in case the said committee, or either of them, shall not make such settlement or agreement as aforesaid, then the rate and manner in which such support and maintenance shall be paid shall, on the application of the said committee of aldermen at any time after the expiration of one month from the said respective sessions, be fixed and determined by such of the said justices and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, or any two or more of them, as hath or shall have been justices of his majesty's superior courts of Westminster; and that the amount of such support and maintenance, to be ascertained in manner aforesaid, shall be paid by the treasurer of the respective counties of Essex, Kent and Surrey, in such manner as the said justices and judges shall order and direct."

If they cannot agree, the judges to settle the amount.

Sessions to be holden in London or the suburbs twelve times at least in every year.

Sect. 15. "The said justices and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery to be appointed under the authority of this act, or any two or more of them, shall hold a session for the said city of London and county of Middlesex, and the parts of the counties of Essex, Kent and Surrey hereinbefore mentioned, in the said city of London or suburbs thereof, at least twelve times in each and every year (and oftener if need be), such times to be fixed by general orders of the said court, which any eight or more of the said judges of his majesty's courts of Westminster are hereby empowered to make from time to time."

Indictments found at the sessions of the peace may be removed before justices of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery. (a)

Sect. 16. "It shall be lawful for his majesty's court of King's Bench, or any judge thereof, or any commissioner of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery under this act, being a judge of any of the superior courts of Westminster, or the chief judge or any other judge of the Court of Bankruptcy, or the recorder for the said city of London for the time being, if such court, judge, or recorder shall think proper, to issue any writ or writs of certiorari, or other process, directed to his majesty's justices of the peace acting in and for the cities of London and Westminster, the liberty of the Tower of Lon-

(a) This section does not affect the removal of indictments from the Central Criminal Court into the Queen's Bench. Such removal is entirely regulated by the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 33, (the Certiorari Act,) and a defendant removing such indictment under the latter statute becomes liable, in case of conviction, to pay the prosecutor the costs occasioned by such removal. (Reg. v. Hawdon, 9 Dowl. 100; post, "Certiorari.")

The judges of the Central Criminal Court have no power, as such, to issue any habeas corpus, or other process, to bring in a party who is in custody of the sheriff of Middlesex on a civil suit, in order that he may be committed to Newgate, to be tried for a misdemeanor before that Court; and the above 16th section does not apply to such a case. don, the borough of Southwark, and the counties of Middlesex, Essex, Kent and Surrey, or either of them, commanding the said justices of the peace, or any or either of them, to certify and return into the said court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery indictments or presentments found or taken before the said justices of the peace, or any of them, of any offences cognizable by virtue of this act, and the several recognizances, examinations and depositions relative to such indictments and presentments, so that the same offences may be dealt with, tried and determined by the said justices and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery; and also for the like purpose, by writ or writs of habeas corpus, to cause any person or persons who may be in the custody of any gaol or prison charged with any offences cognizable under this act to be removed into the custody of the keeper of the gaol of Newgate." 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 36.

Sect. 17. "The justices of the peace acting in and for the said cities of London and Westminster, the liberty of the Tower of London, the borough of Southwark, and the counties of Middlesex, Essex, Kent and Surrey, shall not, at their respective general or quarter sessions of the peace or any adjournment thereof, try any person or persons charged with any capital offence, or with any of the following offences committed or alleged to be committed within the limits of this act; that is to say, housebreaking, stealing above the value of five pounds in a dwelling-house, horse-stealing, sheep-stealing, cattle-stealing, maliciously wounding cattle, bigamy, forgery, perjury, conspiracy, assault with intent to commit any felony, administering or attempting to administer poison with intent to kill or to do some grievous bodily harm, administering drugs or other things or doing any thing with intent to cause or procure abortion, manslaughter, destroying or damaging ships or vessels, the breaking of shops, warehouses, counting-houses and buildings within the curtilage of dwelling-houses, killing sheep with intent to steal the carcases, the uttering of all forged instruments, and the various offences enumerated in the act passed in the first year of the reign of his present majesty, intituled 'An Act for reducing into one Act all such Forgeries as shall henceforth be punished with Death; and for otherwise amending the Laws relative to Forgery,' forging the assay marks on gold or silver plate, and all the offences relating to coin enumerated in the act passed in the second year of the reign of his present majesty, intituled 'An Act for consolidating and amending the Laws against Offences relating to the Coin,' the abduction of women, bankrupts not surrendering under their commission or concealing their effects, breaking down bridges and banks of rivers, taking rewards for helping to stolen goods, personating any officer, seaman, or other persons in order to receive any wages, pay, allowance, or prize money due or supposed to be due, or any out-pensioner of Greenwich hospital in order to receive any out-pension allowance due or supposed to be due, sending threatening letters and using threats to extort money, larceny on navigable rivers and canals, and stealing and destroying goods in progress of manufacture, and larcenies after a previous conviction, embezzlement, larceny by clerks and servants, and receivers of stolen goods, whether such person or persons shall be charged as principal offenders or as accessories before or after the fact." (See further, title "Sessions." Vol. V.)

Quarter sessions restrained from trying certain offences.

1 Will. 4, c. 60.

2 Will. 4, c. 34.

Sect. 18. "Every recognizance which shall have been or shall be entered into for the prosecution before his majesty's justices of the peace aforesaid of any person for any offence cognizable under this act, and any recognizance for the appearance as well of any witness to give evidence upon any bill of indictment or presentment for any such offences as of any person to answer our lord the king for or concerning any such offence, or to answer generally before such justice of the peace, shall, in case any such writ of certiorari or habeas corpus be issued for the purpose of removing such indictment or presentment or such person so in custody as aforesaid, be obligatory on the parties bound by such recognizance to prosecute and appear and give evidence and do all other things therein mentioned with reference to the indictment or presentment or the person so removed as aforesaid before the justices and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery acting by virtue of this act, in like manner as if such recognizance had been originally entered into for prosecuting such offence, appearing, or giving evidence, or doing such other things before the said justice and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery: provided that in cases of removal from the jurisdiction of justices of the peace for the said cities of London or Westminster, the liberty of the Tower of London, the borough of Southwark, or counties of Middlesex and Surrey, two days' notice, and in case of removal from the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace for the counties of Essex and Kent one week's notice, shall have been given either personally or by leaving the same at the place of residence as of which the parties bound by such recognizance are therein described, to appear before the court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery instead of the said other justices: provided also, that it shall be lawful for the court, judge, or recorder who shall grant such writ of certiorari or habeas corpus, and it is hereby required that such court, judge, or recorder shall cause the party applying for such writ or writs, whether he be the prosecutor or party charged with such offence, to enter into a recognizance in such sum, and with or without sureties, as the court, judge or recorder may direct, conditioned to give such notice as aforesaid to the parties bound by such recognizance to appear before the said court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery instead of before the said other justices respectively, and to do such other things as such court, judge or recorder shall direct."

Recognizances for prosecuting, giving evidence, &c. before sessions of peace to be obligatory on persons entering into same to prosecute, give evidence, &c. before justices of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery.

Notice of change of court to be given to parties entering into recognizances.

Justices may deliver over indictments found at sessions to the justices of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery.

Sect. 19. "It shall be lawful for the said justices of the peace acting in and for the said cities of London and Westminster, the liberty of the Tower of London, the borough of Southwark, and for the said counties of Middlesex, Essex, Kent and Surrey, if they shall think fit, to certify, transmit, and deliver to the said justices and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery any indictment or presentment found or taken before them at their said respective general or quarter sessions of the peace, or at any adjournment thereof, for any offence or offences cognizable by the said justices and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery by virtue of this act, in the same manner to all intents and purposes as the said justices of the peace might or could do if the said court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery was holden in the county where such indictments or presentments were found or taken."

Justices to settle officers' fees, or a salary, and direct how same shall be paid.

Sect. 20. "It shall be lawful for the said justices and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, in sessions assembled, and they are hereby authorised and required, to ascertain, make, and settle a table of fees and allowances to be received and taken by the several officers of the said court, and from time to time to alter and vary the same as may to them appear just and reasonable, which said table of fees and allowances shall be hung up in the court of sessions, and a copy thereof transmitted to the clerks of the peace of the said counties of Middlesex, Essex, Kent and Surrey; or it shall be lawful for the said justices and judges to ascertain, make and settle a salary in lieu of such fees and allowances, to be paid to the said officers or either of them for the performance of their respective duties, as to the said justices and judges of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery shall seem reasonable and just, and to order and direct how and in what manner and by whom such fees and allowances or salary shall be paid, and also to order and direct such portion as they shall think fit of the expense of preparing calendars and sessions papers, and of other expenses incident to this act, to be borne and paid by the treasurer of each of the said counties, and such portion shall be paid by such treasurers accordingly; provided nevertheless, that the county of Middlesex shall not be liable to any portion of the expense of preparing calendars or sessions papers, or of any other expenses incident to this act, to which the said county would not have been liable in case this act had not been passed."

Sessions of the peace not to be affected by the sessions holden in pursuance of this act.

Sect. 21. "Nothing herein contained shall hinder or prevent, or shall be construed to hinder or prevent, the justices of the peace for the said cities of London and Westminster, the liberty of the Tower of London, the borough of Southwark, and the said counties of Middlesex, Essex, Kent and Surrey, from holding their respective general or quarter sessions of the peace in their respective jurisdictions during the sitting of the said court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery to be held in pursuance of this act; and that neither this act, nor the commissions of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery from time to time to be issued under the authority of this act, shall supersede, interfere with, or affect any other commission or commissions of oyer and terminer to be at any time issued by his said majesty, his heirs and successors in the said counties of Essex, Kent and Surrey, or the jurisdiction by virtue thereof, nor hinder or prevent the justices of oyer and terminer to be from time to time appointed by any commission to be issued under the authority of this act from holding their respective sessions at one and the same time, it being the true intent and meaning of this act, that the justices to be named and appointed in and by any other commissions of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery to be hereafter issued in the said counties of Essex, Kent, and Surrey; shall have the like power and jurisdiction to inquire of, hear, and determine all offences by virtue of such commissions which they would have had if this act had not been made; provided nevertheless, that they shall not be required or obliged to inquire of, hear, and determine, or to deliver the respective gaols or prisons of the same last-mentioned counties of any person or persons whose offence or offences is, are, can, or may be inquired of, dealt with, tried and determined under and by virtue of the commissioners of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, to be from time to time issued under the authority of this act." Sect. 26. "This act shall be deemed and taken to be a public act, and shall be judicially taken notice of as such by all judges, justices and others, without being specially pleaded."

7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 77.

By 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 77, intituled "An Act to assimilate the Practice of the Central Criminal Court to other Courts of Criminal Judicature within the Kingdom of England and Wales with respect to Offenders liable to the Punishment of Death," (17th July, 1837,) reciting, that "it is expedient to assimilate the practice of the Central Criminal Court to other courts of criminal judicature within the kingdom of England and Wales with respect to offenders liable to the punishment of death;" it is enacted, "that from and after the passing of this act it shall not be necessary that any report should be made to her Majesty, her heirs and successors, in the case of any prisoner convicted before the said Central Criminal Court, and now under sentence of death, or who may be hereafter convicted before such Court and sentenced to the like punishment, previously to such sentence being carried into execution; any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding."

No report to be made to her Majesty of the case of any capital convict at the Central Criminal Court.

The judge before whom any offender already under sentence of death has been tried, may direct execution to be done on such offender.

Sect. 2. "With respect to offenders now under sentence of death, that in case any judge, being a judge of one of the superior courts of Westminster Hall, before whom any such offender has been tried, shall be of opinion that under the circumstances of such offender's case the sentence of the law ought to be carried into effect, it shall be lawful for such judge and he is hereby required, as soon after the passing of this act as conveniently may be, to order and direct execution to be done on such offender at such time and place as he shall think fit (the time so to be appointed not being less than seven days nor more than twenty-one days from the making of such order); and thereupon the sheriff or other proper officer in whose custody any such offender shall be, shall carry such sentence into effect at such time and place as may be specified in such order."

The Court may abstain from pronouncing judgment on persons convicted of crimes liable to the punishment of death, and order the same to be entered of record.

Sect. 3. "That whenever any offender shall hereafter be convicted before the said Court of any crime for which such offender shall be liable to the punishment of death, and the Court shall be of opinion that under the particular circumstances of the case such offender is a fit and proper subject to be recommended for the royal mercy, it shall and may be lawful for such Court, if it shall think fit so to do, to direct the proper officer then being present in Court to require and ask (whereupon such officer shall require and ask) if such offender hath or knoweth any thing to say why judgment of death should not be recorded against such offender; and in case such offender shall not allege any matter or thing sufficient in law to arrest or bar such judgment, the Court shall and may and is hereby authorised to abstain from pronouncing judgment of death upon such offender, and instead of pronouncing such judgment to order the same to be entered of record, and thereupon such proper officer as aforesaid shall and may and is hereby authorised to enter judgment of death on record against such offender in the usual and accustomed form, and in such and the same manner as is now used, and as if judgment of death had actually been pronounced in open Court against such offender by the Court."

Such record to have same effect as if judgment pronounced.

Sect. 4. "That a record of every such judgment so entered as aforesaid shall have the like effect to all intents and purposes and be followed by all the same consequences as if such judgment had actually been pronounced in open Court."

Court to direct execution to be done on certain offenders.

Sect. 5. "That whenever any offender shall hereafter be convicted before the said Court of any offence for which such offender shall be liable to and shall receive sentence of death, and the said Court shall be of opinion that under the circumstances of the case the judgment of the law ought to be carried into effect, it shall be lawful for the said Court and such Court is hereby required to order and direct execution to be done on such offender in the same manner as any court of assize is empowered to order and direct execution by the law as it stood before the passing of this act." 7 W. 4 & 1 V. c. 77.

Sect. 6. "Provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall affect her majesty's royal prerogative of mercy." Not to affect the royal prerogative.

Sect. 7. "Provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to prejudice or affect the rights, interests, privileges, franchises or authority of the lord mayor, aldermen and recorder of the city of London, or their successors, or to prohibit, defeat, alter, or diminish any power, authority or jurisdiction which at the time of making this act the said lord mayor, aldermen and recorder for the time being of the said city did or might lawfully use or exercise, except so far as is otherwise by this act expressly provided." Saving the rights of the city of London.

Sect. 9. "That this act shall be deemed to be a public act, and shall be judicially taken notice of as such by all judges, justices, and others." Public act.

I. The Nature of the Writ. Its Use. When it lies in general.

Nature of the writ.

NATURE of the Writ.]—A certiorari is an original writ, issuing out of the Court of Chancery or the Queen's Bench, directed in the Queen's name to the judges or officers of inferior courts, or to justices at sessions, or out of sessions, commanding them to certify or to return the records or proceedings in a judicial matter depending before them, to the end that the party may have the more sure and speedy justice before the Queen, or such justices as she shall assign to determine the cause. (1 Bac. Abr. Certiorari, A.; Com. Dig. Certiorari.)

It is agreed that the Court of Queen's Bench, having a general superintendency over all courts of inferior jurisdiction, may award a certiorari to remove the proceedings from any of them, except some particular statute or charter invest them with absolute judicature. (Hawk. b, 2, c. 27, s. 22; Bac. Abr. Certiorari, B.; Carth. 494; 12 Mod. 386; Com. Dig. Certiorari, A. 1.)

What certified without certiorari.

Justices of the peace may indeed deliver or send into the Queen's Bench indictments found before them, or recognizances of the peace taken before them, or force recorded by them, without any certiorari. (Dalt. c. 195.)

Habeas corpus where defendant in custody.

If there be an indictment to be removed, and the defendant be in actual custody, it is usual and proper to have a habeas corpus to remove him, and a certiorari to remove the record, for without the former the defendant must continue in the same custody. (2 Hale, 210; R. v. Duchess of Kingston, 1 Cowp. 283; R. v. Bethell, 1 Salk. 149; see post, "Habeas Corpus," Vol. III.)

Use of the writ.

Its Use.]—The use of a certiorari is for the superior court the better to consider and determine the validity of appeals, indictments, or presentments and other judicial proceedings, and to prevent a partial and insufficient trial, or judgment, or the execution of a wrongful judgment, which it is thought would take place in the original jurisdiction. (2 Hale, 210; 4 Bla. Com. 320; Dick. Sess. 381.)

On the removal of an indictment, the trial will be either at bar or at nisi prius, by a jury of the county out of which the indictment is brought; (4 Bla. Com. 320, 321;) and if a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in such county, the court will, on a suggestion entered on the record, order it to be tried in the next adjoining one. (3 Burr. 1330; 6 T. R. 195. So a special jury may be obtained in the superior court, (5 T. R. 626,) and more time for the trial may be thus obtained, or it may be brought on more expeditiously than in the inferior court. (Id.) So after a special verdict on an indictment at the Old Bailey for murder, the proceeding may be removed by certiorari, in order to obtain the opinion of the superior court. (2 Ld. Raym. 1577.) It may also be requisite to issue process of outlawry against the defendant in those places where the justice's authority does not extend, but where the writ of the Court of Queen's Bench can reach him, as that Court may issue process in any part of the kingdom. (5 T. R. 478, 503, 505; 2 Hale, 210; 4 Bla. Com. 320, 321; Dick. Sess. 381; Hand's Pract. 46.) Thus it seems to be absolutely necessary, where the offender has escaped from the county in which he committed the offence, before any process is issued against him; for, though a magistrate's warrant may be backed into any other county, yet it may be uncertain in what county he may be; and every difficulty is obviated by removing the proceeding into the supreme court of criminal jurisdiction. (5 T. R. 503.) And in case of felony, if after the removal and the issuing process, the defendant come in upon the exigent, the Queen's Bench will grant a procedendo, by which the record may be carried back to the place where the indictment was taken. (6 Hen. VIII. c. 6; 5 T. R. 478.) So that by this means effectual process is obtained, and a trial in the most convenient place secured to the prosecutor.

1. What it is, and use of.

Also on the part of an indicted defendant too this writ may frequently be advantageous; as for the purpose of obtaining the judgment of the Court as to the validity of the proceedings, and to have a decision of the superior court on a demurrer. (Hand. 40; Cowp. 460.) So also to enable him to plead her Majesty's pardon. (2 Hale, 210; 4 Bla. Com. 320; Dick. Sess. 381.) So also where the defendant is a public officer, and his attendance is necessary where he resides, (1 Chit. Rep. 571, notes,) this will be desirable. It may also be desirable where he is indicted at the assizes for a nuisance, in order to compel a view of the premises, so as to enable him to shape his defence, which he cannot obtain from the judges in the country, without the prosecutor's consent. (1 Sess. Cas. 180; 2 Barnard. 214.) Another ground for desiring this writ on the part of the defendant may be, that an inferior court cannot, in criminal cases, grant a new trial upon the merits, but only for irregularity in the formal proceedings, and this advantage may be gained by the removal. (13 East, 416, n. b; 2 Salk. 650; 7 Mod. 85, n. a; 1 Dougl. 380; 1 Stra. 113, 392; Fost. 198; Sayer, 202.) If, after a verdict against the defendant at the assizes, the judge entertain doubts as to the nature of the offence, the defendant may be brought up by habeas corpus, and committed to Newgate, and the indictment removed into the Queen's Bench by certiorari, for the opinion of the Court. (Rep. temp. Hardw. 371; 1 Salk. 149; Hawk. b. 2, c. 27, s. 31.) If, however, the defendant be out on bail, and the proceedings be removed at the instance of the prosecutor, it seems that the original recognizances will be discharged. (2 Leach, 560.) But he may be compelled to put in fresh bail before the higher tribunal in the manner hereafter noticed. (Hand's Pract. 43.)

When it lies.

When it lies in general.]—Except where a statute otherwise directs, this writ of certiorari lies in all judicial proceedings in which a writ of error does not lie(a), and it is a consequence of all inferior jurisdictions erected by act of parliament to have their proceedings returnable in the Queen's Bench. (Groenvelt v. Burwell, 1 Ld. Raym. 469; R. v. Inhabitants of ———, in Glamorganshire, 1 Ld. Raym. 580; R. v. Justices of Cashiobury, 3 D. & R. 35.) And therefore a certiorari lies to justices of the peace, even in such cases which they are empowered by statute finally to hear and determine; and the superintendency of the Court of Queen's Bench is not taken away without express words. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 23.)

Right to take away only by express enactment.

For the certiorari being a beneficial writ for the subject, cannot be taken away without express words. If, therefore, a statute authorising a summary conviction before a magistrate, give an appeal to the sessions, who are directed to hear and finally determine the matter, it does not take away the certiorari, even after such an appeal made and determined. (R. v. Jukes, 8 T. R. 542.) So, although the Conventicle Act, (22 Car. II. c. 1,) enacted that "no other Court whatsoever should intermeddle with any causes of appeal upon that act, but that they should be finally determined in the quarter sessions only;" yet it was decided that the Court of Queen's Bench was not ousted of its right by certiorari. (R. v. Moreley, 4 Burr. 1040.) Also it was there said, that the words above-mentioned only meant that the facts should not be re-examined. (Id.)

(a) In this respect the proceeding by certiorari differs from a right of appeal. A certiorari always lies unless it is expressly taken away, and an appeal never lies unless it is expressly given by statute. (R. v. Hanson, 4 B. & Ald. 521.) The practice of taking away the certiorari by statute, which Lord Kenyon thought had become too frequent, (see 8 T. R. 542,) did not begin to prevail till the beginning of the reign of Will. III. not long after the introduction of appeal to the sessions, which came into general use towards the latter end of the reign of Charles II. (Paley, Conv. 212.)

1. What it is, and use of.

So where a new offence is created by statute and directed to be tried in an inferior court, if such court be established according to the course of common law, all the common law consequences attach upon the proceedings, one of which is, that the indictment may be removed into the Court of Queen's Bench. (R. v. Wordley, 4 M. & Sel. 508; R. v. Hube, 5 T. R. 542; and see R. v. Rogers, 5 B. & Ald. 773; Hartley v. Hooker, Cowp. 524.)

May be so taken away though no other mode of appeal given,

But the writ of certiorari may be taken away by statute, although no appeal is given to the sessions. (R. v. Justices of St. Alban's, 5 D. & R. 538; 3 B. & Cres. 698.) Or although an appeal is given to the sessions, and they make an order subject to a case. (R. v. Middlesex, 8 D. & R. 117; 4 D. & R. M. C. 41, S. C.)

and though proceedings are clearly irregular or informal.

And where justices proceed under a statute, by a clause of which the writ of certiorari is taken away, the Court have no power to issue such a writ, although the justices may have proceeded informally. (R. v. Casson, 3 D. & R. 136.)

A railway act directed that compensation for lands taken by the company in certain cases should be assessed by a special jury; that the deviation from that line of railway mentioned in the act should not exceed a specified distance; and that no proceedings taken in pursuance of the act should be removed by certiorari. A certiorari was applied for to remove an inquisition, on affidavits that the jury appeared by the inquisition not to be special, though the case was one in which a special jury was requisite; and that there had been a deviation greater than the act allowed. The writ was refused, because, if the proceedings were in pursuance of the act, the certiorari was taken away, and if not in pursuance of the act they were merely void. (Reg. v. The Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 11 Ad. & Ell. 202, n.)

A railway act provided, that in case of dispute about the value of lands taken by the company, the sheriff, under-sheriff, coroner, or some person who should have filled one of those offices, should summon a jury to assess the damages, and should give judgment, which verdict and judgment were thereby made a record, and certiorari was taken away for any proceeding in pursuance of such act. The sheriff of L. appointed a deputy, who presided:—neither the sheriff, nor under-sheriff, nor other qualified person being present, but the inquisition purported to have been taken before the sheriff: Held, that notwithstanding the inquisition was made a record, affidavits were admissible, to show that the proceeding was coram non judice; and, secondly, that the proceeding, though irregular, was nevertheless a proceeding taken in pursuance of the act, and could not be removed by certiorari. (Reg. v. The Sheffield and Manchester Railway Company, 3 Per. & D. 111; 11 Ad. & Ell. 194, S. C.)

And Court will not directly or indirectly interfere.

And generally, when thus taken away, the Court will not directly or indirectly in any manner enable a defendant to remove proceedings before it. (See R. v. Eaton, 2 T. R. 472; R. v. Justices of Yorkshire, 1 Ad. & E. 563.) Nor will they interfere so as to review the proceedings by mandamus. (R. v. Yorkshire, 5 B. & Adol. 1003; 3 Nev. & M. 93, S. C.)

But crown not bound by such enactment unless named.

But even where the right to this writ is taken away by the express legislative enactment, the crown is not bound by it, unless expressly mentioned. (R. v. Anon. 2 Chit. Rep. 136; R. v. Hube, 5 T. R. 542; R. v. Davies, 5 T. R. 626; R. v. Cumberland, 6 id. 194.) And it seems that the attorney-general may in all cases have a certiorari on behalf of the defendant. (1 East, 303, n.; 4 Burr. 2458; and see R. v. Burgess, 1 Ld. Kenyon, 135.) And this rule, that a statute taking away certiorari does not bind the crown unless named, is not limited to cases where the crown has an actual interest, but extends to all prosecutions in the name of the Queen. And the rule is not defeated by the prosecutor having become nominally defendant; as where a conviction has been quashed at sessions, with costs to be paid by the prosecutor, and he seeks to quash the order of sessions. (Rex v. Boultbee, 4 Ad. & Ell. 498.)

Nor does such enactment apply where there is no jurisdiction.

Nor does an enactment, taking away the writ of certiorari, extend to cases where the Court below has no jurisdiction. (See R. v. Justices of Derbyshire, 2 Ld. Kenyon, 209; and R. v. Fowler, 1 Ad. & Ell. 836; R. v. Yorkshire,

5 T. R. 629; R. v. Somersetshire, 6 D. & R. 469; 5 B. & Cres. 816.) But where by a clause in a statute it is provided that no summary conviction under it shall be removed by certiorari, and upon the face of a conviction, it may be that the justices have no jurisdiction, or that having jurisdiction, they have omitted to set it forth, the defendant cannot obtain a certiorari to remove such conviction, unless he shows by affidavit that there was no jurisdiction. (R. v. Long, 1 M. & R. 139.) And where an order or a conviction under a statute shows a jurisdiction upon the face of it, it has been doubted whether, under any circumstances, a certiorari ought to issue. (Anon. 1 B. & Adol. 382.) But according to a later case, it seems that on the question of jurisdiction to make an order or conviction the Court may, on the order or conviction being removed, look into the facts and receive affidavits. (Reg. v. Bolton, 1 Ad. & Ell. N. S. 66; 4 P. & D. 679, S.C.; R. v. Sheffield, &c. Railway Co. supra.) Upon a certiorari to remove an order of sessions relating to an order of removal, the clerk of the peace returned the original order, the order of sessions, and a statement of facts from which it appeared, that the notice of the grounds of appeal was insufficient under the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 81: it was held, that as the order of sessions was good on the face of it, and the sessions had not stated any case for the opinion of the Court, the statement of the clerk of the peace could not be noticed. (Reg. v. Inhabitants of Abergele, 5 Ad. & Ell. 795.)

1. What it is, and use of.

A paving act empowered commissioners to levy rates, giving to parties grieved an appeal to the quarter sessions, whose order was to be final; and no order, rate, &c. was to be removed by certiorari. On appeal against a rate, the respondents objected to the admission of certain evidence; the sessions, by a majority of eleven magistrates to eight, held the evidence admissible; three of the eleven magistrates were partners in a company to which belonged certain premises assessed to the rate in the name of the occupier. The sessions having quashed the rate, it was held, that a question in the cause having been decided by a Court improperly constituted, on account of the interest of the three magistrates, the clause prohibiting certiorari did not operate; and the Court of Q. B. had the order of sessions brought up by certiorari, and quashed it on affidavit of the above facts, although the affidavits did not satisfy the Court that the magistrates had acted partially. But if a party to the appeal, knowing of the interest, expressly or impliedly assent to the interested magistrate acting, such party cannot afterwards make the objection. (Reg. v. Cheltenham (Commissioners, &c.) 1 Ad. & E. N. S. 467.)

Nor where there is malversation.

Where an indictment was framed on an offence created by a statute taking away the certiorari, and contained also counts for another offence as to which it was not taken away, the writ was held issuable. (R. v. Saunders, 5 D. & R. 611; and see R. v. Fowler, 1 Ad. & Ell. 836.)

Nor where the writ is only partially taken away.

And where by the words of a statute the certiorari is taken away, but by its general tenor that is only done to give the option of appeal to the sessions, the right of proceeding by certiorari is only barred by the party adopting the method of appeal. On a motion to remove by certiorari a conviction by a justice on stat. 16 Geo. III. c. 30, (now repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27,) to prevent the stealing of deer, it was objected that no certiorari lay; for by the 23d section it is enacted, that no conviction or judgment should be removed by certiorari. But the Court were of opinion that the result of the several provisions in the act was, that the defendant had an option either to remove the proceedings from before the convicting justice by certiorari, or to appeal to the sessions; that if he had adopted the latter mode, the certiorari would have been barred, but not in the former case. Buller, J. The language of the Court has always been, that the king has a right to remove proceedings by certiorari of course; but that where a defendant makes an application of this sort, he must always lay a ground for it before the Court. Lord Mansfield, C. J. has laid down this distinction again and again, that on the part of the crown it is a matter of course for the Court to grant it, but not so on the part of the defendant. And Buller, J. on a subsequent day said, that the rule requiring the defendant to lay a ground before the Court for granting a certiorari had obtained since the time of Car. II., and that it appeared that it was then held as clear law, that a certiorari ought not to be granted but upon a ground shown. (R. v. Eaton, 2 T. R. 89.)

Nor where it is taken away to give defendant an option of appealing.

1. What it is, and use of.

Where a subsequent statute not taken away, the writ in express terms.

Where a statute imposed penalties to be recovered on summary conviction, and took away the right of certiorari, and a later statute on the same subject imposed additional penalties on other persons, and contained a clause by which it was provided that all the powers, provisions, exemptions, penalties, forfeitures, payments, remedies, matters and things contained in the former act should be as effectual for carrying the same into execution as if re-enacted; it was held, on a conviction on the latter statute, that the clause in the former statute taking away certiorari was extended by inference to the new statute. (R. v. Fell, 1 B. & Adolph. 380.) A river navigation act provided that no proceeding to be taken in pursuance thereof should be removed by certiorari: by a subsequent statute for improving the same navigation, it was enacted that all the powers, provisions, exemptions, rules, remedies, regulations, penalties, forfeitures, articles, matters and things whatsoever contained in the former act should be in full force, and extend to and be applied and enforced as to that act and the matters therein contained, in as full a manner to all intents and purposes as if therein re-enacted; it was held, that these were sufficient words to take away the certiorari on proceedings under the latter act. (R. v. Justices of Yorkshire, W. R. 1 Adol. & Ell. 563.)

II. What Proceedings removable by, and on what Grounds granted.

In general.

In general.]—A certiorari does not lie to remove other than judicial acts, ante, 553. Therefore it does not lie to remove a mere order of Court or warrant of apprehension issued by a magistrate; (R. v. Lloyd. Cald. 309; R. v. Lediard, Say. 6;) nor a poor rate; (R. v. King, 2 T. R. 235; R. v. Wavell, 1 Dougl. 116;) nor an assessment of the land-tax; (R. v. King, 2 T. R 234;) nor a warrant of distress to levy a poor rate; (Exp. Taunton, 1 Dowl. P. C. 54;) nor an appointment of a surveyor under the Highway Act, 13 Geo. III. c. 78, when that act was in force. (R. v. Justices of St. Alban's, 5 D. & R. 538; 3 B. & Cres. 698, S. C.) But an appointment of overseers prior to the New Poor Law Act could be removed by certiorari. (R. v. Warwick, 2 Stra. 991; see R. v. Somersetshire, 1 D. & Ry. 443.) It lies to the Poor Law Commissioners to bring up an order to build a workhouse. (R. v. P. L. Com. 8 A. & Ell. 54.)

A recognizance.

The Court has refused to grant the writ to remove a recognizance before justices of oyer and terminer, &c. because the Court below is most proper to judge upon the whole circumstances of the case, which are equitably to be considered whether it ought to be estreated or not. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 33; Lofft, 321.)

Order of estreat.

It will lie to remove an order of sessions to estreat a recognizance. (See R. v. Yorkshire, W. R. Js., 7 A. & Ell. 583; 2 N. & P. 457, S. C.)

A presentment.

A presentment at a court leet for a nuisance; (Cowp. 458,) and an information at the quarter sessions, for exercising a trade without having served an apprenticeship, (Cowp. 369,) have been held removable by this writ.

An information.

Articles of peace.

Articles of the peace exhibited at quarter sessions and the order to find sureties made thereupon, are removable by this writ, and the Court of Queen's Bench may examine into the sufficiency of the articles to warrant the order. (Reg. v. Dunn, 4 Per. & Dav. 415.)

Railway inquisition.

Where an act of parliament for making a railway directed that inquisitions for assessing compensation to the owners of lands required by the company should be taken before the sheriff of the county, and that such inquisitions and judgments thereupon should be kept by the clerk of the peace among the records of the county, and be deemed records to all intents, &c.: it was held, first, that a certiorari lies even after judgment to remove such an inquisition; secondly, that the rule to show cause why the writ should not issue was properly directed to the clerk of the company, although the inquisition was out of their custody. (Reg. v. Manchester and Leeds Railway Co. 1 Per. & D. 164.)

Indictments and presentments.]—The writ lies to remove indictments from the sessions, and other inferior criminal jurisdictions, before verdict.

2. What proceedings removable by, &c.

Indictments and presentments.

At the instance of the crown the writ is demandable of absolute right, and the Court is bound to grant it. (1 Burr. 2458; R. v. Eaton, 2 T. R. 89; 1 East, 303, n. d.) And, therefore, when it is applied for by the attorney-general, or other officer of the crown, either as a prosecutor, or when he takes up the defence of the party indicted, on account of his being an officer of the crown, or for some other reason, it must issue as a matter of course, and the Court or judge has no discretion to exercise; (Id. ibid.; 4 Burr. 2458; 1 East, 303, n. d.; R. v. Thomas, Mich. Term, 1815;) and even where a statute takes away the certiorari, it does not, as we have already seen, extend to the crown, unless expressly mentioned, ante, 554.

At the instance of the crown.

And upon the ground that every indictment is at the suit of the Queen, the writ was before the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 33, usually awarded as a matter of course to private prosecutors, and this even from the Old Bailey, though it was even before that act, as it still is now, in the power of the judges to refuse it or to award a procedendo, if cause be shown why it ought not to have been issued. (See Cases in King's Bench, 38; R. v. Lewis, 4 Burr. 2458; R. v. Gwynne, 2 Burr. 752.) But now, by the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 33, for preventing the vexatious removal of indictments into the Court of Queen's Bench, s. 1, after reciting that "it is expedient to prevent prosecutors of indictments and presentments from vexatiously removing the same out of inferior courts into his Majesty's Court of King's Bench:" it is enacted, "that from and after the passing of this act, [21 August, 1835,] no writ of certiorari shall issue from the Court of King's Bench at Westminster for removing into that Court any indictment or presentment from any court of session, assize, oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery, or any other Court, at the instance of the prosecutor or any other person, (except his majesty's attorney-general,) without motion made first in the Court of King's Bench, or before some judge of that Court, and leave obtained to remove such indictment or presentment, in the same manner as similar motions may now be made and leave given where such application is made on the part of defendants; any law, practice or use to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding."

At the prosecutor's instance.

5 & 6 W. 4, c. 33.

The mere fact of a defendant on an indictment at sessions being in the commission of the peace for the county has been considered not a sufficient ground within the above enactment for removing the indictment at the prosecutor's instance. (R. v. Fellowes, 4 Dowl. 607.) But it would be otherwise where he has been guilty of endeavouring to create prejudices in his favour, as by circulating among the other magistrates a printed account of the charges brought against him, or the like. (Reg. v. Grover, 8 Dowl. 325.) And in a recent case of an indictment at a borough sessions for a libel, where the number of jurors in the borough was small, and the defendant was intimate with many of them, a certiorari was granted to remove it. (Reg. v. Ousley, 6 Jur. 62; Garbett v. Ouseley, id. 193, cor. Williams, J.; and see Reban v. Trevor, 4 Jur. 292.)

It is left to the discretion of the Court or judge either to grant or deny it at the prayer of the defendant. (R. v. Lewis and others, 4 Burr. 2456; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 27.) And in the exercise of their discretion it is seldom granted when the offence charged against him is serious, and particularly affecting the public. Thus they generally refuse to remove an indictment for any heinous misdemeanor. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 28; R. v. Pusey, 2 Stra. 717. They refused it in a recent case of an indictment for an impious libel; R. v. Heywood, 4 Jur. 413. As to removing an indictment for murder, see R. v. Mead, 3 D. & R. 301; R. v. Thomas, 4 M. & Sel. 442; or for an unnatural crime, see R. v. Holden, 2 Nev. & M. 167; 5 B. & Ad. 347; for a felony, see R. v. Penprase, 4 id. 575; 1 Nev. & M. 312.) So they are still more reluctant to grant these applications without the assent of the prosecutor, when they are made to remove proceedings from a jurisdiction of superior eminence, as before justices of assize or gaol delivery, or from the Central Criminal Court, or from the Old Bailey, or from the Middlesex sessions, or any other court where any of the judges preside. (R. v. Wartnaby, 2 Ad. & Ell. 435; R. v.

At the defendant's instance.

2. What Proceedings removable by, &c.

Duchess of Kingston, Cowp. 283; Anon. 1 Salk. 144; 1 Sess. Ca. 314; Burr. 877, 1202; 1 Ken. Rep. 135; 1 Chit. C. L. 379.)

But they will grant the writ where they are satisfied by affidavit that any difficult point of law is likely to arise at the trial more fit to be discussed by a superior tribunal. (R. v. Moule, 5 Ad. & Ell. 539; R. v. Morton, 1 Dowl. N. S. 543.) And in a recent case the Court removed an indictment by certiorari, at the instance of the defendant, from the Central Criminal Court, on the suggestion that it involved points of law arising out of proceedings in Chancery relative to matters of account. (R. v. Wartnaby, 2 Adol. & Ell. 435; and see R. v. Josephs, 8 Dowl. 128; but see R. v. Morton, supra.)

Also if it be clearly shown by affidavit that there is a probability of partiality or unfairness in the trial, the certiorari will be granted. (R. v. Lewis, 2 Stra. 704; R. v. Fawle, 2 Ld. Raym. 1452; R. v. Waddington, 1 East, 167; R. v. Penpraze, 4 B. & Ad. 575; 1 Nev. & M. 312; R. v. Hunt, 3 B. & Ald. 444; R. v. Holden, 2 Nev. & M. 167; 5 B. & Ad. 347; Rohan v. Trevor, 4 Jur. 292; see also R. v. Fellows, supra.) But a very strong case must be made out. (Id.) It is not sufficient ground for the issuing of the writ that prejudices existed against the defendant, unless there was some prejudice in the court below. (R. v. Matthews, 1 Chit. Rep. 751, n.; and see R. v. Mead, 3 D. & R. 301; R. v. Jacobs, 3 Jur. 999.) In a recent case the Court refused to grant the writ to remove an indictment from the quarter sessions, on the ground that the chairman of the court was intimate with the father of the prosecutrix. (Reg. v. Renshaw, 5 Jur. 801.) If the prosecutor's attorney be under-sheriff, and attended the grand jury at the time of finding the bill, or the like, the writ will be granted. (R. v. Webb, 2 Stra. 1068; Reg. v. Knatchbull, 1 Salk. 150.)

If the prosecution appear to rest on slight foundation, or it be doubtful whether in point of law it be sustainable, and the defendant's general character be good; (R. v. Wells, 1 Stra. 549; Nehuff's case, 1 Salk. 151; Bac. Abr. Certiorari, A.;) or if the prosecution seem to originate in malice; (1 Barnard. 41; Bac. Abr. Certiorari, A.;) or where there has been vexatious delay, and by reason of the absence of the judges a trial has not been obtained; (R. v. Morgan, 2 Stra. 1049; R. v. Ferguson, Rep. temp. Hardw. 370;) the writ will in general be allowed. So it will be allowed if the prosecutor put the defendant to unnecessary delay and expense, and harass him by continuing proceedings, without bringing the matter to trial. (2 Stra. 1049; Com. Dig. Certiorari, D.)

On an indictment for a nuisance, where it is necessary to the defendant to have a view of the premises, a certiorari will be granted for the purpose, upon affidavit that he cannot otherwise obtain it. (1 Barnard. 214; 1 Sess. Cas. 180.)

Where the defendant was a public officer, (a deputy register,) and his personal attendance was daily necessary, the Court granted a certiorari to remove an indictment from the Old Bailey to Gloucester, where the defendant resided; (1 Chit. Rep. 571, n.)

The writ will not, it seems, in any case be granted for the changing the place of trial, where the indictment arises in a town which is a county of itself, for in such instances a particular course of proceeding is directed by the 38 Geo. III. c. 52, in order to have a trial by a jury of the county at large. (R. v. Holden, 2 Nev. & M. 167; 5 B. & Adol. 352, 353, S. C.)

Where there are several defendants, it was considered in one case, under very peculiar circumstances, that all should concur in the application on their or one of their behalves. (R. v. Hunt and others, 3 B. & Ald. 444.) But this must not be considered as a general rule. (See post, 565.)

Convictions and orders, &c.

Convictions and Orders, &c.]—Convictions, and orders of justices at or out of sessions, and other summary judicial proceedings, may be removed into the Court of Queen's Bench by this writ of certiorari, in order that the same may be quashed for any defect apparent on the face of them. But the defect must be so apparent, otherwise the writ will not be granted. Nor will it be granted if on the face of the conviction or order it appears that the magistrates had jurisdiction, and that they duly exercised it. The Court or judge will not enter into any examination or discussion of the facts or reasons upon which the conviction or order was made, (R. v. Justices of Cashiobury, 3 D. & Ry. 35; R. v. Justices of Monmouthshire, 8 B. & Cres. 137; 2 M. & R. 172, S. C.; Anon., 1 B. & Adol. 382; R. v. St. James, Westminster, 2 B. & Ad. 241; R. v. Justices of Cheshire, 8 A. & Ell. 398; R. v. Abergele, 5 Ad. & Ell. 795; post, 574,) provided the justices had jurisdiction to make it. (Ante, 555.)

2. What Proceedings removable by, &c.

Even although the conviction or order be a nullity, yet it seems a certiorari may be awarded to remove it, in order to quash it. (Reg. v. Yorkshire, W. R., Js., 2 Nev. & P. 457; 7 Ad. & Ell. 583, S. C.)

A certiorari will not be granted to bring up the inquisition of a compensation jury unless defects in the inquisition be positively sworn to. Thus where a statute directed that a railway company should not take lands unless set out in a schedule to the act, or certified by justices to have been omitted by mistake, it was held not sufficient to show that lands which were the subject of the inquisition were not in the schedule, without negativing the fact of the certificate. (Reg. v. Manchester and Leeds Railway Company, 8 Ad. & E. 413.)

By a local act trustees were authorised to take lands for the improvement of a harbour; and in case of disagreement with the landowner as to the price to be paid him, or of his refusal to treat, to direct a sheriff to summon a jury by whom the price was to be assessed. If the jury gave a greater sum than that offered by the trustees, or the same sum, they were to pay all the costs; if a less sum, the costs to be paid equally by both parties; and in the former event, to be recovered by a distress warrant from a magistrate: it was held, that it belonged to the trustees to have the inquisition of the jury properly drawn up, and that therefore they could not object to the sum awarded by it, or have it brought up by certiorari to quash it on the ground that it did not state the disagreement or the refusal to treat, so as to show that the jury had jurisdiction, and that it did not state the proportion of the sum assessed to the sum offered, so as to ascertain which party was to pay the costs. (Reg. v. Swansea Harbour Trustees, 1 Per. & D. 512; 8 Ad. & E. 413, S. C.)

Discretionary power to grant.

The Court or judge has in all cases a discretionary power to grant the writ or not. (R. v. Bass, 5 T. R. 252; see R. v. Manchester and Leeds Railway Company, 8 A. & E. 413.) It will not in general be granted unless it be shown that some injustice has been or will be done in the inferior jurisdiction. (R. v. Bass, 5 T. R. 252.) Et per Lord Kenyon, "A certiorari is not to be granted ex debito justitiæ, but the application is made to the sound discretion of the Court, which will not be well exercised if they do not give an opportunity to the party applying for the writ to litigate any probable cause." Et per Ashurst, J., "If it had appeared that the justices had exceeded their jurisdiction, the Court would have granted a certiorari, in order that the conviction might be quashed, even though no objection were made to the want of jurisdiction below." (Id.) In general a mere informality in a conviction or order, having no reference to the merits of the case, ought not of itself to be the inducement for removing it, but that inducement ought to be of some substantial defect in the justice and legality of the proceeding itself. (See R. v. Justices of Denbighshire, 1 B. & Ad. 616.) The conduct of the party applying for the writ may be frequently taken into consideration. (R. v. South Holland Drainage Committee, 8 A. & E. 429.)

When granted pending or after an appeal.

Pending an appeal, a certiorari will rarely be granted; and if granted, it may be quashed. (R. v. Sparrow, 2 T. R. 196, n.)

A rule was made in the Court of Queen's Bench, E. 1 Anne, Reg. Generalis, that no certiorari should be granted to remove orders of justices, from which the law has given an appeal to the sessions, before the matter be determined on the appeal, because it hinders the privilege of appealing; and if any order be removed before appeal, it shall be sent down again; but if the time of appeal be expired, the case is not within the rule. By Holt, C. J. But afterwards, M. 4 Anne, in the case of Shellington, it was held that advantage must be taken of this rule upon the motion to file the order; for that after it is filed, it is too late. (R. v. Shellington, 1 Salk. 147.)

But in the case of the borough of Warwick, (R. v. Warwick, 2 Str. 991,) there was an appeal from a poor-rate, and the sessions made an order that the churchwardens should produce the books at an adjourned day; before which a certiorari was brought to remove that order: and it was held to lie, though the appeal was depending, else the order must be obeyed before the validity of it can be determined. It was also held that an appointment of overseers may be removed before an appeal to the sessions; for the rule laid down in 1 Salk 147, extends only to the case where there is a limited time for appealing, as to the next quarter sessions; but the statute of 43 Eliz. c. 2, is not so restrained, and, consequently, it can never be said that the time for appealing is out; and if the appeal from an appointment is lodged, there can be no certiorari till the sessions have made a determination; and a certiorari brought, pending such appeal, shall be superseded. After the appeal has been determined and the conviction confirmed, then indeed it may be removed as in other cases; (R. v. Jukes, 8 T. R. 625;) but if the conviction has been quashed, it cannot be removed, unless the sessions have merely quashed it subject to a case for the opinion of the Court; for when quashed, it does not appear on the face of the order of sessions but that they quashed it on the merits. If indeed a case be granted, then the order of sessions and case may be removed by that writ, and the opinion of the Court taken upon them; and if the Court quash the order, it will have the effect of setting up the conviction, which may then be enforced. (See R. v. Allen, 15 East, 333; 1 Arch. J. P. 212.) Where an appeal against an order of removal had been tried with the acquiescence of the appellants and the respondents, and the order quashed, a certiorari to remove the proceedings for the purpose of quashing the order of sessions was refused, although the respondents received no notice of trial, as required by a rule of court of the sessions, and were consequently wholly unprepared for the trial. (R. v. Yorkshire, E. R. Js., 3 Nev. & M. 93; 5 B. & Ad. 1003, S. C.)

If the sessions upon appeal quash or confirm an order of justices, and both orders are brought before the Court of Queen's Bench by certiorari, then, if the order of justices be bad upon the face of it, and the order of sessions confirm it, the Court will quash both orders; if the order of sessions quash it, the Court will intend that it was quashed for defect of form, and will confirm the order of sessions; but if the order of justices be good upon the face of it, then, if the sessions confirm it, the Court of course will confirm the order of sessions; or if the sessions quash it, the Court will intend that it was quashed upon the merits, and confirm the order of sessions. (South Cadbury v. Braddon, 2 Salk. 607; Set. & Rem. 172; 1 Arch. J. P. 213.)

An order of sessions confirming a rate was removed by certiorari into the Court of Queen's Bench; that Court quashed the order of sessions. A subsequent rate having been made by the sessions, open to the same objection, pending the argument on the above case, but against which no appeal was made: it was held, that as the objection was made express matter for an appeal to the sessions, the appellants were not entitled to have the rate quashed on certiorari, it being good upon the face of it. (Reg. v. Middlesex, Js., 1 Per. & D. 102; 9 Ad. & Ell. 540, S. C.)

As to the removal of orders of removal, and orders for the relief of children by parents, by certiorari, for the purpose of quashing them, see title "Poor," Vol. IV.

III. Within what time the Writ must be applied for.

Indictments, &c.

Indictments, &c.]—A certiorari may remove a record that shall come within its description, before the time of its return, though there were no such record in esse at the time of its teste, nor at the time when it was first delivered to the Court below. (2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27, s. 23.) And it seems that a certiorari may also remove an indictment which is discontinued below. (Ibid. s. 74.)

In all cases the application should be made time enough for the trial to take place at the next holding of the Court in which it is the object to have it heard. (R. v. Perkins, 1 Chit. C. L. 2d edit, 381.)

In misdemeanors must be before jury sworn.

By stat. 60 Geo. III. c. 4, s. 3, 4, 5, in cases of misdemeanor the certiorari must be delivered before the jury are sworn; but by sect. 4, it may be applied for and issued before the indictment has been found, in the like cases, in the same manner, and upon the same terms and conditions as if such writ of certiorari had been applied for after such indictment had been found.

3. Time of applying for.

In prosecutions by indictments and informations in the Crown Office, the application for the writ should regularly be made before issue joined. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 10, 30; R. v. Roupel, Cowp. 369, 458; R. v. Hube, 5 T. R. 542)

In prosecutions in Crown Office, before issue joined.

The writ will never be granted to remove an indictment after conviction, unless for some special cause; as where the judge below is doubtful what judgment to give. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 31.)

Not after conviction.

In R. v. D. Jackson, (6 T. R. 145,) the defendant had been convicted at the quarter sessions upon an indictment for extortion, and then removed the indictment between verdict and judgment, and obtained a rule calling upon the prosecutor to show cause why judgment should not be arrested for some objections to the indictment. And Lord Kenyon said, that the removing of proceedings in this stage from inferior jurisdictions ought to be discouraged; that in cases where the punishment is discretionary, and this Court should be of opinion, after hearing the case argued, that the judgment ought not to be arrested, a procedendo must be awarded, and the party sent back again to the inferior jurisdiction, to receive judgment; that he thought the Court should adopt the same mode in this instance; and that the defendant might bring a writ of error after judgment, if the record were erroneous. This decision seems to have been confined to cases in which the judgment was discretionary; but if the verdict should be at the Midsummer sessions, after Trinity Term, and the defendant come in, as he must, to receive judgment at the ensuing Michaelmas sessions, and the judgment be not discretionary, but definite by law, it is manifest that it might be a vexatious case, if a certiorari could not be issued between the verdict and judgment, inasmuch as it might happen, where imprisonment for a month, or other certain period, was the legal penalty, that before the certiorari could be sued out, the defendant might have suffered the greater portion of the judgment. (Observations of Mr. King, editor of the 22d edition of Burn's Justice.) And in the above case of R. v. Seton, the certiorari which had issued before verdict was quashed, quia improvidè emanavit.

In R. v. Oxfordshire, (13 East, 411,) the defendants were indicted at the assizes, and found guilty of the non-repair of a public bridge. And afterwards a motion was made in the Court of Queen's Bench for a certiorari to remove thither the indictment and proceedings, for the purpose of moving for a new trial. But it was resolved by the Court that they had not the power of entering into the merits of verdicts, and granting new trials in proceedings before inferior jurisdictions; and they refused the certiorari. (And see R. v. Pennegoes Machynlleth, 1 B. & C. 142; 2 D. & R. 209; 3 D. & R. 388, S. C.; R. v. Nicholls, 2 Stra. 1227; R. v. Whiston, 6 Jur. 1039.)

Even where a defendant, in an indictment for a misdemeanor, surreptitiously obtained an acquittal by not complying with the practice of the sessions in giving notice of trial and bringing on the indictment for trial after disposing of the felonies, the Court of Queen's Bench would not grant a certiorari to remove the indictment, in order to set aside the verdict. (Reg. v. Unwin, 7 Dowl. 578.)

Where defendant has confessed the charge.

In R. v. Gwynne, (2 Burr. 749,) the Court (on a defended motion) granted a procedendo, at the instance of the defendants, upon an indictment for an assault at the quarter sessions at Brecon, removed into the Queen's Bench by certiorari, because the certiorari had not issued till after the defendants had confessed the assault below; though the conviction was not after trial, and though several of the justices were sworn to be near relations of Mr. Gwynne, one of the defendants,—namely, his father, two brothers, and an uncle.

Where a special verdict.

Where there has been a special verdict, even at the Old Bailey, it may be removed in order to be argued and more solemnly decided in the superior Court. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 31; Bac. Ab. Certiorari, A.) But in the case of R. v. Nichols, (13 East, 412, notis,) which was the case of an indictment for a conspiracy, Lee, C. J., said he knew no instance of a special verdict from Hicks's Hall removed into the Queen's Bench, and that if a conviction were removed thither by certiorari, the Court would not give judgment upon it. It seems, however, that this is only so where the fine is uncertain. (Id.)

If the application be neglected until too late, the only course left to the party is a writ of error, under which, however, defects only apparent on the face of the indictment can be taken advantage of. (R. v. Seton, 7 T. R. 373; R. v. Pennegoes, 1 B. & Cres. 142; 2 D. & R. 209, S. C.)

3. Time of applying for.

Railway inquisition.

A certiorari to remove an inquisition under a railway act may be applied for after judgment. (R. v. Manchester, &c. Railway Co., 1 P. & D. 164.)

Convictions, orders, &c.

Convictions, Orders, &c.]—In the case of convictions, orders, and summary proceedings before magistrates, the proceedings may be removed by certiorari after judgment, because they can only be removed by certiorari. (R. v. Seton, 7 T. R. 373; R. v. Jackson, 6 T. R. 145.)

Must be in six months after conviction.

By 13 Geo. II. c. 18, s. 5, it is enacted, "that no writ of certiorari shall be granted, issued forth, or allowed, to remove any conviction, judgment, order, or other proceedings had or made by or before any justice or justices of the peace of any county, city, borough, town corporate or liberty, or the respective general or quarter sessions thereof, unless such certiorari be moved or applied for within six calendar months next after such conviction, judgment, order, or other proceedings shall be so had or made, and unless it be duly proved upon oath that the said party or parties suing forth the same hath or have given six days' notice thereof in writing to the justice or justices, or to two of them, (if so many there be,) by and before whom such conviction, judgment, order, or other proceedings shall be so had or made, to the end that such justice or justices, or the parties therein concerned, may show cause, if he or they shall so think fit, against the issuing or granting such certiorari."

The term "other proceedings" in this enactment, means other proceedings ejusdem generis, and therefore does not extend to indictments. (See R. v. James, 1 East, 303, n.) It does not extend to an application by the crown or prosecutor. (Id.; and see R. v. Farewell, 2 Stra. 1209; Paley on Conv. 215; R. v. Berkeley, 1 Ld. Ken. 80.)

The six calendar months must be computed from the date of the conviction or order. (R. v. Boughey, 4 T. R. 281.) And the writ to remove an order of sessions, subject to a case to be stated, must be applied for within six calendar months after the order made, and not within six months after settling the case; and this whatever may have been the cause of the delay. (R. v. Bloxam, 3 N. & M. 385; 1 Ad. & Ell. 386, S. C.; 1 Chit. Stat. 133, n. c.) In strictness, cases ought to be settled sedente curiâ. (R. v. Sussex, 1 M. & Sel. 631, 734; R. v. Kaye, 1 D. & R. 436.) And so as to an order of sessions. (Lofft, 544.) But the writ to remove an order for stopping a highway, may be applied for within six months after such order has been confirmed at sessions, though more than six calendar months have elapsed since the order was made. (R. v. Middlesex Js., 5 Ad. & Ell. 626.)

When the sessions commenced on the 5th April, and an order of sessions was made on the 7th April, an application made at a judge's chambers on the 3d October, and allowed on or before the 7th October, for a certiorari to remove an order of removal, was held within sufficient time. (R. v. Abergele (Inhabitants), 5 Ad. & Ell. 795.)

Pending or after an appeal.

As to the applying for the writ pending or after an appeal, see ante, 559.

IV. Mode of obtaining the Writ; Notice of Application and Recognizance to be entered into.

Indictments, &c.

Indictments, Presentments, &c.]—The mode of applying for the writ of certiorari to remove an indictment or presentment is regulated by several legislative provisions.

In term time grantable only on motion.

By stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 11, (made perpetual by statute 8 & 9 W. & M. c. 33,) after reciting, in sect. 1, that abuses had existed in the removal of indictments by certiorari, sect. 2 enacts, "that in term time no writ of certiorari whatsoever, at the prosecution of any party indicted, be hereafter granted, awarded, or directed out of the said Court of King's Bench, to remove any such indictment or presentment of trespass or misdemeanor, before trial had, from before the said justices in the said courts of general or quarter sessions of the peace, unless such certiorari shall be granted or awarded upon motion of counsel, and by rule of Court made for the granting thereof, before the judge or judges of the said Court of King's Bench sitting in open Court, and that all the parties indicted, prosecuting such certiorari, before the allowance thereof, shall find two sufficient manucaptors, who shall enter into a recognizance before one or more justices of the peace of the county or place, in the sum of twenty pounds, [see the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 33, s. 2, infra,] with condition at the return of such writ to appear and plead to the said indictment or presentment in the said Court of King's Bench, and at his and their own costs and charges to cause and procure the issue that shall be joined upon the said indictment or presentment, or any plea relating thereunto, to be tried at the next assizes to be held for the county wherein the said indictment or presentment was found, after such certiorari shall be returnable, if not in the cities of London, Westminster, or county of Middlesex; and if in the said cities or county, then to cause or procure it to be tried the next term after, wherein such certiorari shall be granted, or at the sitting after the said term, if the Court of King's Bench shall not appoint any other time for the trial thereof; and if any other time shall be appointed by the Court, then at such other time, and to give due notice of such trial to the prosecutor, or his clerk in Court; and that the said recognizance and recognizances, taken as aforesaid, shall be certified into the said Court of King's Bench, with the said certiorari and indictment, to be there filed, and the name of the prosecutor (if he be the party grieved or injured) or some public officer to be indorsed on the back of the said indictment; and if the person prosecuting such certiorari, being the defendant, shall not, before allowance thereof, procure such manucaptors to be bound in a recognizance as aforesaid, the justices of the peace may and shall proceed to trial of the said indictment at the said sessions, notwithstanding such writ of certiorari so delivered."

4. Mode of obtaining it.

Recognizance to be given for trying the issue next assizes.

Except in London and Westminster.

Certiorari granted without recognizance void.

Sect. 3, as to costs, will be found post, 575.

Sect. 4. Provided always, "that in any of the vacations writs of certiorari may be granted by any of the justices of their Majesties' Court of King's Bench, [or since 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45, s. 1, any judge of either of the superior courts,] whose names shall be indorsed on the said writ, and also the name of such person at whose instance the same is granted; and that the party or parties indicted, prosecuting such certiorari, shall, before the allowance of such writ or writs of certiorari, find such sureties, in such sum and with such conditions as are before mentioned and specified in this present act."

How grantable in vacation.

The like provisions are enacted by sect. 5, concerning the removal of indictments by certiorari within the counties of Chester, Lancaster, and Durham.

And by statute 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 33, s. 2, after reciting that "it is expedient to extend the powers of an act passed in the fifth year of the reign of King William the Third and Queen Mary, intituled 'An Act to prevent Delays of Proceedings at the Quarter Sessions of the Peace,'" it is enacted, "That instead of the recognizance now by law required to be entered into before the allowance of a writ of certiorari, every person indicted or presented in any court of session, assize, oyer and terminer, gaol delivery, or any other court, who shall obtain a writ of certiorari for removing any indictment or presentment whatever into the Court of King's Bench, (not being in custody for want of bail to answer such indictment or presentment,) shall before the allowance of such writ, enter into a recognizance before one of his Majesty's justices of the Court of King's Bench, or before a justice of the peace of the county or place in which the offence is charged to have been committed, or in which such person shall reside, in such sum and with such sureties as the said Court of King's Bench, or one of his Majesty's justices of the said Court, shall by indorsement on the said writ order and direct; which recognizance shall contain the same conditions as are now by the said act and another act passed in the eighth and ninth year of the reign of King William the Third, intituled 'An Act to make perpetual and more effectual an Act' intituled 'An Act to prevent Delays at the Quarter Sessions of the Peace,' required in cases of indictments removed from the general or quarter sessions of the peace; and thereupon all the clauses and provisions contained in the said several acts with respect to costs or otherwise shall extend to such last-mentioned recognizances; and every person being in custody for want of bail to answer the charge contained in such indictment or presentment shall be detained in custody until the like recognizances as are hereinbefore directed to be entered into (previous to the allowance of such writ of certiorari) shall have been entered into, or until such person be discharged by due course of law."

Affidavit to support application.

The application for the certiorari, whether to a court or judge, except when made by the attorney-general, should be supported by an affidavit stating the grounds for it, and as to what grounds are sufficient see ante, 557; R. v. Inhabitants of Clace, 4 Burr. 2458; R. v. Stannard, 4 T. R. 161; R. v. Burgess, 1 Ken. Rep. 531. In a recent case it was held that a defendant applying to remove an indictment from sessions by certiorari, on account of the probability that difficult points of law will arise, must state in his affidavit specific grounds on which legal difficulties will occur; and that it was not sufficient to show that the obstruction complained of by the indictment consists of buildings of great value, which have stood thirty or forty years. (R. v. Joule, 5 Ad. & Ell. 539; Reg. v. Morton, 1 Dowl. N. S. 543.) An affidavit for a certiorari to remove an inquisition taken to assess compensation under a railway act, should set out an exact copy of the inquisition, or account for the omission. It should also distinctly set out particular facts, sufficient to raise a question of law, and a presumption of error in the inquisition: an affidavit therefore which, after reciting that the inquisition stated certain lands were authorised to be taken under the act, added generally, "which deponent asserts is not the fact," is insufficient. (Reg. v. Manchester and Leeds Railway Co., 3 Nev. & Per. 439.) Corroborating affidavits may be read after a rule has been granted, but not affidavits containing new matter. (R. v. Berkley, 1 Ken. 81.) The affidavit should be entitled only, "In the Queen's Bench," and not in the name of the prosecution in the court below. (Ex parte Nohro, 1 B. & Cres. 267; sed vide R. v. Lewis, 2 Stra. 704.) But the affidavits in support of an application to quash a certiorari after the removal of the cause to the Court above ought to be entitled in the cause, though before it was so removed they ought to be entitled in the Queen's Bench merely. (Reg. v. Jones, 8 Dowl. 80.) Where a party has once failed on account of the insufficiency of the affidavit to obtain a rule for a certiorari, the Court will not in general allow him to renew the application on amended affidavits, especially if he appears to have suffered no injury, and to have assented to the proceedings below. (Reg. v. Manchester and Leeds Railway Company, 1 Per. & D. 164; 8 Ad. & E. 413, S. C.)

The rule or order.

On an application to the Court for the writ to remove an indictment for misdemeanor, the rule is absolute in the first instance, but in cases of felony it is nisi only. (Reg. v. Spencer, 8 Dowl. 127.) On an application to a judge, it must be on a summons to show cause. To remove an order of sessions where no case has been stated, the rule, or judge's order or fiat in vacation, is nisi. (R. v. Inhabitants of Chipping Sodbury, 3 Nev. & M. 105.) Where a case has been stated, it seems that the rule nisi is obtained on counsel's signature only. To remove a record from an inferior jurisdiction, to have execution, the rule is nisi only. (Pawsey v. Gooday, 3 Dowl. 605.) To remove a conviction or order of justices, the rule is nisi only. The judge's signature must be placed to his fiat. (See post, 568.) On the production of the rule or fiat, and entering into the requisite recognizance, when the application is made by a party indicted, the writ is made out and delivered to the party applying for it.

Imposing terms on defendant.

In some cases terms will be imposed upon a defendant on granting him a certiorari. In one case, where the writ was applied for to remove an indictment at the Old Bailey for cheating, the Court imposed the condition of the defendant's undertaking to try it the same term, which was a benefit to the prosecutor, who by the practice at the Old Bailey sessions could not have tried it so soon. (R. v. Nehuff, 1 Salk. 150.) Where one defendant had removed an indictment by certiorari, the Court would not compel him to submit to terms as to the time of proceeding to trial, although he may have been the only defendant who has entered into the proper recognizances, and great delay may be the result of not so interfering. (Rex v. Hunt, 6 Dowl. 5.)

4. Mode of obtaining it.

The recognizance to be entered into.

If the application be made at the instance of the prosecutor, no recognizance, as required by the above statutes, is necessary, for they extend only to applications "by the party indicted." (See 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 52; R. v. Battams, 1 East, 305; and R. v. Spencer, 9 Ad. & Ell. 485; decided on the 5 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 2, post, 566.) But if the application be made by the party indicted, then this recognizance must be entered into before the certiorari is allowed. (1 Salk. 149; Com. Dig. Certiorari, B.) If several persons be included in the same indictment, and some of them find sureties, and the others not, it has been said that the proceedings as to the first will be valid; (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 50; Com. Dig. Certiorari, B.;) but according to a more recent case, a certiorari obtained by one of several defendants, removes the indictment as to all, and the previous recognizances of all are discharged, though the parties not applying for the certiorari do not give any fresh security. And on an application being made, under such circumstances, for a procedendo, unless the defendants not suing out the certiorari would enter into recognizances, the Court refused even a rule to show cause. (Rex v. Boxall, 4 Ad. & Ell. 513; and see Keat v. Goldstein, 7 B. & Cres. 525; 1 M. & Ry. 305, S. C.; R. v. Hunt, 6 Dowl. 5.) It seems that a married woman need not enter into the recognizance where she is indicted with her husband. (2 Hale, 213.) The recognizance will not be forfeited unless the prosecutor gives rules according to the course of the court. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 58.) The recognizance, as we have seen by sect. 2, must be certified to the Court of Queen's Bench, together with the certiorari and indictment.

Convictions, orders, and summary proceedings.

Convictions, Orders, &c.]—We have already seen, that by the 13 Geo. II. c. 18, s. 5, ante, 562, no writ of certiorari shall be granted or issued to remove any conviction, judgment, order, or other proceeding had or made by or before any justice of the peace, or general or quarter sessions, unless it be duly proved upon oath that the party or parties suing for the same hath or have given six days' notice thereof in writing to the justice or justices, or to two of them, (if so many there be,) by and before whom such conviction, judgment, order, or other proceeding shall be so had or made, to the end that such justice or justices, or the parties therein concerned, may show cause, if he or they shall so think fit, against the issuing or granting such certiorari.

Notice of application must be given.

This enactment does not bind the crown, (see ante, 554,) nor does it extend to indictments. (R. v. Battams, 1 East, 298.)

The circumstance of an order of sessions having been made, subject to a case for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench, will not dispense with the six days' notice. (R. v. Sussex, 1 M. & Sel. 631.)

By whom notice to be given.

The notice must be given by the party at whose instance the certiorari is to be applied for. The writ could not be issued at the instance of any other party than the one who has given the notice, although the latter avowedly drops the proceeding, and although it is too late to give a fresh notice. (R. v. Justices of Kent, 3 B. & Adol. 250.) The notice must state distinctly the name of the party applying for the writ. (R. v. Lancashire, 4 B. & Ald. 289.) Et per Curiam—"The notice should be given by the party suing out the writ, and that circumstance should appear upon the face of the notice itself, for the object of it, stated by the statute, is to enable the justices to show cause against the granting the certiorari, and they may show for cause that the party suing out the writ was a stranger to the county, and not interested in the order. The justices therefore ought to have their attention called to the name of the party by the notice itself." (Reg. v. Justices of Shrewsbury, 9 Dowl. 501; S. C. as Reg. v. How, 11 Ad. & Ell. 159.) But a notice signed in the name of a solicitor, who describes himself "solicitor for the present churchwardens and overseers of Market Harborough," is sufficient. (Reg. v. Solly, 9 Dowl. 115.) A notice "on behalf of the churchwardens and overseers of S.," if signed only by one churchwarden, is not sufficient. (R. v. Cambridgeshire, 3 B. & Adol. 887.) So a notice of motion for a certiorari to remove an order of quarter sessions, made on appeal, which set forth the names of the appellant and of the respondents, and was subscribed by "J. B. attorney for the respondents," was held sufficient, though it did not expressly state that the respondents were the parties suing forth the writ. (Reg. v. Justices of Wilts, 9 Dowl. 524.) So a notice given on behalf of a parish, signed by the attorney for the parish, is sufficient; (Rex v. Inhabitants of Abergele, 5 Ad. & Ell. 795;) and a notice for a certiorari to remove an order relating to a borough, signed by "A. and B., solicitors for C., a ratepayer of the township of M., within and part of the said borough," is primâ facie proof of notice from the party suing forth the writ, without any affidavit by C. that the solicitors acted by his authority. (Reg. v. Justices of Lancashire, 3 Per. & D. 86.)

4. Mode of obtaining it.

To whom notice to be given.

The notice must be given to the justice or justices, or to two of them (if so many there be) by and before whom the conviction, judgment, order, or other proceding was had. Service on the parties interested in supporting the proceedings merely, will not suffice. (R. v. Spackman, 9 Dowl. 1060.) If two justices convict a man under a statute which gives one justice a power to convict singly, yet the notice of the application should be served on both justices. (R. v. Baldwin, 1 Gude's Prac. 222.) So it is not sufficient to serve the notice on one justice present at the sessions making the order, and on another justice of the same county not present. (Reg. v. Rattislaw, 5 Dowl. 539.)

Time of service.

The six days for the service of the notice must be reckoned exclusively of one day and inclusively of the rest. And this is the general rule of computation in matters of practice, independently of the rule of Court, Hil. 2 Will. IV. 8. (R. v. Goodenough and others, 2 Adol. & El. 463; Rex v. Justices of Cumberland, 4 N. & M. 378; post, "Time," Vol. VI.) A notice of motion for a certiorari "on the first day of next term, or so soon after as I can be heard," is irregular, if served on the first day of that term, though the party does not, in fact, move till after the expiration of six days: Denman, C. J. dubitante, (In the matter of Flounders, Esq. 4 B. & Adol. 865; 1 Nev. & M. 592, S. C.)

Objection to notice when may be taken.

It is not necessarily too late to object to the service of the notice after the writ has issued, and the Court or a judge may supersede the writ, although the consequence may be, that if it be quashed, it will be too late to sue out a fresh one, and it is competent for the parties in an appeal, to object to the notice to justices previous to obtaining a certiorari. (Rex v. Rattislaw, 5 Dowl. 539.) So the sufficiency of the notice is still open to objection, although the rule for certiorari has been enlarged by consent, and the justices have appeared to show cause. (Reg. v. How, 11 Ad. & Ell. 159.)

Affidavit of service of notice, &c.

In support of the motion there must be an affidavit of the service of the six days' notice, which should not be entitled in any cause. (Exp. Nohro, 1 B. & Crcs. 267.) There must also be an affidavit identifying the party applying for the writ with the party who gave the notice; and it must also appear, affirmatively, on affidavit, that the justices to whom notice was given were the justices who made the conviction or order. The Court will not infer the identity from the mere coincidence of names and descriptions in the order and notice, and affidavit of service, or from other affidavits. (Reg. v. Justices of Shrewsbury, 9 Dowl. 501; Reg. v. How, 11 Ad. & Ell. 159, S. C.) An affidavit that the notice of motion was served on three justices, (naming them,) and that they were present at the trial and hearing of the appeal, has been considered sufficient. (Reg. v. Justices of Wilts, 9 Dowl. 524.)

A recognizance must be entered into before a certiorari granted to the defendant,

Stat. 5 Geo. II. c. 19, sect. 1, empowers justices of the peace in sessions to amend judgments, convictions, or orders on appeals for defects in form. (See "Amendment," Vol. I. p. 146.)

And by sect. 2, reciting that "divers writs of certiorari have been procured to remove such judgments or orders into his majesty's Court of King's Bench at Westminster, in hopes thereby to discourage and weary out the parties concerned in such judgments or orders by great delays and expenses;" enacts, "that no certiorari shall be allowed to remove any such judgment or order, unless the party or parties prosecuting such certiorari, before the allowance thereof, shall enter into a recognizance with sufficient sureties before one or more justices of the peace of the county or place, or before the justices at their general quarter sessions or general sessions where such judgment or order shall have been given or made, or before any one of his majesty's justices of the said Court of King's Bench, in the sum of 50*l.*, with condition to prosecute the same at his or their own costs and charges with effect, without any wilful or affected delay, and to pay the party or parties in whose favour and for whose benefit such judgment or order was given or made, within one month after the said judgment or order shall be confirmed, their full costs and charges, to be taxed according to the course of the court where such judgments or orders shall be confirmed; and in case the party or parties prosecuting such certiorari shall not enter into such recognizance, or shall not perform the conditions aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for the said justices to proceed and make such further order or orders for the benefit of the party or parties for whom such judgment shall be given, in such manner as if no certiorari had been granted."

4. Mode of obtaining it.

otherwise certiorari of no effect.

Sect. 3. "The recognizance and recognizances to be taken as aforesaid shall be certified into the Court of King's Bench at Westminster, and there filed with the certiorari and order or judgment removed thereby; and if the said order or judgment shall be confirmed by the said court, the persons entitled to such costs for the recovery thereof, within ten days after demand made of the person or persons who ought to pay the said costs, upon oath made of the making such demand and refusal of payment thereof, shall have an attachment granted against him or them by the said court for such contempt, and the said recognizance so given, upon the allowing of such certiorari, shall not be discharged, until the costs shall be paid and the order so confirmed shall be complied with and obeyed."

Recognizance must be certified.

Costs.

This enactment applies to convictions, although it mentions only judgments and orders. (See Paley on Conv. 221.)

In what cases recognizance necessary.

It applies only to cases where there is an appeal to the sessions. A rule called upon the prosecutor of a certiorari, issued to remove an order of sessions, confirming, without appeal, an order of justices made pursuant to 55 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 2, for stopping up a footpath, to show cause why it should not be quashed, the recognizances required not having been entered into previous to the writ being issued, although they were entered into after the allowance: it was held that the statute did not apply to such a case. (Reg. v. Jones, 9 Dowl. P. C. 504; and see R. v. Dunn, 8 T. R. 218, n.) And in such a case the application must be to quash the allowance, and not the writ itself; and the court refused to mould the rule so as to quash the allowance. (Ib.)

It does not apply to a writ of certiorari sued out by the prosecutor. (R. v. Spencer, 9 Ad. & Ell. 485.)

The enactment is not complied with by the party and his sureties entering into a recognizance in 25*l.* each, but it must be in the entire sum of 50*l.* (R. v. Dunn, 8 T. R. 217.) The two sureties must be in addition to the party suing out the certiorari, who must join in the recognizance. (R. v. Boughey, 4 T. R. 281; sed vide Paley on Conv. 222.) Where a parish prosecutes the certiorari to remove an order of sessions, the recognizance must be entered into by some one inhabitant on behalf of the rest of the parish, with two sureties. (R. v. Abergele, 1 N. & P. 235.)

What recognizance sufficient.

The certiorari will not be allowed until bail is indorsed on the writ. (R. v. Bothill, 1 Salk. 149.)

Other matters as to.

If the writ be regularly issued, the court will not proceed upon it till it has been regularly returned. And the party suing out the writ has no right to call upon the magistrate to allow and return it, until he has entered into a proper recognizance, as the statute requires. (R. v. Dunn, 8 T. R. 219.)

If the order is sent down to the sessions to be restated, and new evidence is introduced, it is another order, and the recognizance will be discharged. (R. v. Hitcham, Burr. 501, 687.)

If a certiorari has been applied for in time, but the allowance of it is quashed for a defect in the recognizance, the Court, under circumstances, will send the writ down again to be properly allowed. (R. v. Abergele (Inhabts.), 5 Ad. & Ell. 795.)

V. Form and Requisites of Writ, and Delivery of.

Form and requisites of writ.

The writ must not materially vary in its description of the record which it is intended to remove. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 75.) If, therefore, it profess to remove an indictment only, it will not be effectual to remove the whole record after conviction. (Id.; R. v. Dixon, 2 Ld. Raym. 971.) And even more formal objections have sometimes been holden to be material. (Odell v. Moreton, Cro. Jac. 254; Noell v. Nelson, 1 Sid. 448; 1 Rol. 754; Hale, 214; Anon. 1 Salk. 145.) Thus if it describe the indictment to be taken before seven justices, when the proceeding itself mentions eight (Odell v. Moreton, Cro. Jac. 254; and see other instances, 1 Chit. C. L. 387.) A material variance in the names or additions will also prejudice, as if the wrong name be inserted: (Giggur's case, 1 Salk. 261; Mason v. Fox, Cro. Jac. 633; Anon. 3 Salk. 80; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 81; 1 Chit. C. L. 387:) but if the mistake be only in the spelling, and the sound remains unaltered, it will not be material. (Shelbery v. Bussard, Cro. Eliz. 172; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 81.) If more defendants be named than appear on the record, the variance will be fatal. (Anon. 1 Stra. 116; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 81.) But on motion to quash documents brought up by certiorari, the Court will not entertain the objection, that the documents appear by the return to have been misdescribed in the writ. (Reg. v. Fordham (Inhabts.), 11 Ad & Ell. 73.)

Where it is intended to remove the record after verdict, it must be expressly framed for that purpose, or it will be invalid. (Reg. v. Potter, 2 Ld. Raym. 938; 6 Mod. 17, S.C.; Reg. v. Dixon, 2 Ld. Raym. 971; 13 East, 417.) The defendant must have a day given him in the superior court when an indictment after verdict is removed. (Reg. v. Dixon, 2 Ld. Raym. 971; 6 Mod. 61, S.C.; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 81.)

Direction of.

The writ ought to be directed to the judge or magistrates of the inferior court, before whom the proceedings were originally taken. (Sir T. Buddolf v. Sir C. Clerk, 3 Keb. 13; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 38.) In some cases, however, it may be directed to the proper officer known to have the actual custody of the record. (Dyer, 163; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 38.) If the person who ought to certify the record, as a justice of the peace, &c., happen to die while it remains in his custody, the certiorari may be directed to his personal representatives, who must certify. (2 Keb. 750; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 39.) It may be directed to a justice of assize to certify a record of assize taken before his companion in his absence. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 39.) When the certiorari is intended to remove an indictment or recognizance, or other matter, from the sessions, it is directed either to the justices generally, or to some of them in particular, and not to the custos rotulorum; though it seems that it may be returned by him, especially if he style himself a justice of the peace. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 40.) And a certiorari to remove an order made by two justices, may be directed to the sessions, and by them returned to the superior jurisdiction. (R. v. Inhabitants of Warminster, 1 Stra. 470.) To remove an indictment from the cinque ports, the writ is directed to the "mayor and jurats;" and to remove one from an assize in a county palatine, to the "chancellor of such county," who sends for it to the justices of assize. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 41.) In a recent case, a rule to show cause why a certiorari should not be issued to remove an inquisition under a railway act, was held properly directed to the clerk of the company, although the inquisition was out of their custody. (R. v. Manchester, &c. Railway Co., 1 P. & D. 161.)

If by mistake it be directed to the wrong person, it has been holden that no other party can take any advantage of the error, if after the proceedings are duly returned by the parties to whom it was directed. (Daniel v. Phillips, 4 T R. 499; Bac. Ab. Certiorari.)

Signature of judge.

The writ must, when it removes any indictment, or when the defendant is in actual custody, be signed by one of the judges. (1 & 2 Ph. & M. c. 13, s. 7; 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45, s. 1.) But in other cases there is no necessity for the judge to sign the writ, but only the fiat by which it is ordered to issue. (R. v. White, 1 Salk. 150; 3 Salk. 80; 2 Hawk. c. 27, ss. 37, 40.)

If it be taken out in vacation and tested, as it may be, of the preceding term, the fiat must be signed some time before the essoin day of the subsequent term, or the whole will be irregular, and the court will award a procedendo. (R. v. White, 1 Salk. 150; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 37.) 5. Delivery of.

The writ is always indorsed at whose instance it was issued, and when in term, the words "by rule of court" are added. (5 & 6 Will. & M. c. 11, ss. 2, 4.) Indorsement at whose instance granted.

When the certiorari is to remove an indictment or recognizance, or other proceeding at the sessions, it should be delivered to the chairman in open court, though if it appear that it any how came to the knowledge of the justices, it must be obeyed by them. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 57; R. v. Battams, 1 East, 299.) In practice on indictments not at the quarter sessions, it is delivered to the clerk of the peace or clerk of assize. (1 Chit. C. L. 390.) Delivery of writ.

The 21 Jac. I. c. 8, s. 8, requires that writs of certiorari for the removal of an indictment for a riot, forcible entry, or assault and battery, at the quarter sessions, shall be delivered at the quarter sessions in open court.

If it be to remove a conviction or order made by magistrates out of sessions, it must be delivered to them individually.

A party indicted at sessions for obstructing a highway, obtained a certiorari, but without informing the prosecutor that he had done so, gave notice of trial at a subsequent sessions. The prosecutor attended with his witnesses, and on the last day of the sessions, before the case was called on, the defendant lodged his certiorari. The Court, under all the circumstances, quashed the certiorari, and ordered a procedendo. (R. v. Higgins, 5 Ad. & Ell. 554.)

The writ is of no effect, unless delivered before the time for its return is expired; and see further infra, as to the effect of the writ before delivery.

VI. Effect of the Writ.

The effect of the writ is to remove all proceedings of the nature described therein, which have taken place between the teste and return, although the proceedings originated after the teste. The inferior court or justices below are bound to obey the writ after production of it, and notice to them in fact of such production when sitting in their judicial capacity; and after that, all further proceedings before them on the matter are erroneous, and coram non judice. (R. v. Battams, 1 East, 298; Cross v. Smith, 1 Salk. 148; 2 Ld. Raym. 836, S. C.; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 57.) Removes all between teste and return. Subsequent proceedings void.

But it hath been adjudged, that if a certiorari for the removal of an indictment before justices of the peace be not delivered before the jury be sworn for the trial of it, the justices may proceed. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 62; R. v. North, 1 Salk. 144.) Except where jury sworn.

And the justices may set a fine to complete their judgment after a certiorari delivered. (R. v. Elwell, 2 Ld. Raym. 1515; 2 Stra. 794, S. C.) And after judgment.

It operates as a supersedeas only from the time of its being actually delivered, and not from the time of its being issued (R. v. Inhabitants of Seton, 7 T. R. 373); and it will altogether lose its effect if not delivered before its return. (Id.; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 59.) Or where not delivered before return.

But it cannot operate as a supersedeas until the defendant has complied with the directions of the statutes, ante, 563. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 59.) Or where forms not complied with.

It is however said, that if a supersedeas come out of a superior court to the justices, they ought to surcease, although the supersedeas be awarded against law; for they are not to dispute the command of a superior court, which is a warrant to them. (Cromp. 129.) Where awarded against law.

If an indictment be removed after issue joined, and afterwards remanded, the inferior courts may proceed to trial upon it in the same way as if the writ had never been awarded. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 61.) Where indictment remanded.

But if they go on after the due delivery of the writ, where such conduct is illegal, they may be punished by attachment for contempt of the superior jurisdiction. (Id. s. 62; 1 Salk. 148.) Attachment for proceeding.

A certiorari, when it so requires it, removes the record itself out of the inferior court; (post, 570;) and, therefore, if it remove the record against a Removes record itself.

6. Effect of the Writ.

principal, the accessary cannot there be tried. (2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 54; 1 C. M. & R. 18, note.)

Removes the original order of sessions, and not a subsequent one.

If an order of sessions be removed by certiorari, and the case be sent back to the sessions to be restated, and they make a new order, the certiorari does not operate to remove such new order. The party wishing to contest such new order must obtain a fresh certiorari. (R. v. Bloxham, 3 Nev. & M. 385; 1 Ad. & Ell. 586, S. C.)

When person of defendant removed.

If the defendant be convicted of a capital offence, the person of the defendant must be removed by habeas corpus, in order to be present in Court, if he will move in arrest of judgment. And herein the case of a conviction differs from that of a special verdict, where the presumption of innocence may be supposed to continue, and therefore the personal presence of the defendant in that case is not necessary at the argument of it. (R. v. Spragg, 2 Burr. 930; ante, 561.)

How far it supersedes a recognizance.

It hath been holden that a certiorari for the removal of a recognizance for the good behaviour, or an appearance at sessions, will supersede the obligation of it; but this would be highly inconvenient, and the contrary seems to be supported by the better authority. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 65.)

A certiorari removing an indictment from the Old Bailey to the Queen's Bench, will discharge a recognizance if a prisoner have been admitted to bail on a charge of perjury. (R. v. Richardson, 2 Leach, C. C. 560.) But it is otherwise if the prisoner be in actual custody. (Id.)

When a certiorari is granted in order that the trial may be had in another county, it becomes necessary that the defendant should enter into fresh recognizances, in order to secure his attendance to take his trial (See R. v. Hunt, 2 Chit. Rep. 135.) Where a defendant indicted at the quarter sessions for a conspiracy, had entered into sufficient recognizances to take his trial, it was held that the Court of Queen's Bench, on a removal by certiorari, might discharge them on motion, and compel him to enter into better securities. (R. v. Hooper, 1 Chit. Rep. 491.)

VII. Return to the Writ.

What to be returned.

The certiorari may be sometimes to remove and send up the record itself, and sometimes only the tenor or copy of the record, (as the words therein be,) and it must be obeyed accordingly or it will be bad. (2 Dalt. c. 195; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 76.) The return of a copy of the record will not do where the certiorari is to remove and send up the record. (Palmer v. Forsyth, 4 B. & Cres. 401; 6 D. & R. 497, S. C.)

But upon a certiorari to remove a conviction by a justice of the peace, a return that the record is returned to the sessions, and that a copy is annexed to the writ, if true, is sufficient; and justices ought in all cases to return convictions to the sessions, whether an appeal lies or not. (R. v. Eaton, 2 T. R. 285.)

And a return of the tenor of an indictment from London, is good by the Charter of London. (Anon. 1 Keb. 252.)

And whenever the purport of the writ is not to proceed upon the record to be removed, but only to try an issue of nul tiel record, it is sufficient to certify the tenor of the record, whatever the language of the writ may be. (Sir T. Biddolf v. Sir C. Clerk, 3 Keb. 13; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 71.)

If the certiorari be to remove a conviction, it is sufficient to return the conviction in due form, without returning also the examinations and affidavits taken in the proceedings. (Anon. Lofft. 348; Paley, Conv. 228.)

A conviction may also be returned in a more formal shape than that in which it was at first drawn up, and of which a copy had been delivered to the party convicted, provided the conviction returned be warranted by the facts. (R. v. Baker, 1 East, 186.) But a different rule prevails as to orders, (R. v. Cheshire Justices, 5 B. & Adol. 139,) and warrants of commitment, (Hutchinson v. Lowndes, 4 B. & Adol. 118,) and other proceedings.

A certiorari was obtained to bring up all orders of sessions made in the case, with all things touching the same. The sessions returned the orders, with the notice of grounds of appeal and other papers relating to the appeal, and it was moved to quash the order upon the return and on affidavits. It was held, that the return was irregular in setting out more than the order of sessions, and that the Court could not look to the other matters in the return and affidavits, and the return was therefore quashed. But as a new return, if properly made, would not support a motion to quash the order of sessions, the Court discharged the rule without quashing the return. (Reg. v. Abergele (Inhabitants), 8 Ad. & Ell. 394.)

7. Return to the Writ.

But in general if any thing be inserted in the return by way of explanation or otherwise, which is not commanded, it will not vitiate, but be rejected as surplusage. (Inter Inhabitants of Weston Rivers and St. Peter's, Marlborough, 2 Salk. 493; Bac. Abr. Certiorari, II.)

Who to make return.

The return should be made by the party to whom it is directed; a return by the deputy of that party, or any other person will not do. (Ashley's case, 2 Salk. 479; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 66; 1 Chit. C. L. 392.)

And although the custos rotulorum keep the records, yet must the justices to whom it is directed return the certiorari; and, therefore, if it be directed to the justices of the peace, and the clerk of the peace only return it, nothing is thereby removed. (Id. s. 71.)

If the certiorari be to remove an indictment or other matter from the sessions, it is returned by the chairman.

Upon a certiorari to remove an indictment of a riot, or forcible entry, or the like, the return must have these words, as also to hear and determine divers felonies, &c. according to the commission; for if the return mention only that they are justices of the peace without such words, the return is insufficient. (Dalt. c. 195.)

Form of return, and transmitting of.

The usual mode of making the return, when the certiorari is to remove an indictment, is to indorse on the back of the writ, "the execution of this writ appears in a certain schedule hereunto annexed,—The answer of J. P. Esquire, and the justices assigned to keep the peace in and for the county of ——," and then to write the schedule on a distinct piece of parchment, and the chairman of the sessions should seal it. (R. v. Dickenson, 1 Saund. 134.) The words "humbly certify," &c. are unnecessary and improper. (Carth. 223.)

The same mode may also be adopted in making the return of a conviction or order, or other proceeding, excepting that the convicting justices, instead of the chairman, should seal the schedule. But the return may be and frequently is made, in the case of a conviction or order, without a schedule.

Annex to the writ a record of the indictment and caption of, (if the writ be to remove an indictment,) or the conviction or order, or other matter on parchment, (if it be to remove them,) and transmit them, and the return and the recognizance, (if any,) to the Crown Office of the Court of Queen's Bench.

The schedule must be made on parchment. It may be quashed if made on paper. (1 Barnard, 113.)

On a certiorari to remove an indictment, if the words "the jurors of our lady the Queen upon their oath present," be omitted in the return, it will be valid. (Carth. 323.) It must be expressed in the caption of the indictment that the offence was presented by twelve jurors, otherwise it will be bad. (Faulkner's case, 1 Saund. 248, n.)

A refusal to return an indictment until payment of certain fees should be accompanied by a statement of the amount due, though fixed by act of parliament. (Newton v. Bayley, 4 Jur. 192.)

The return must be under the seal of the inferior Court, to whom it is directed; and if they have no proper seal, under any other seal they may think fit to employ. (Butcher's case, 2 Cro. Eliz. 821; 2 Hawk. c. 27, ss. 65, 70.)

Also if directed to justices of the peace out of sessions they should put their seals to the return. A return to a certiorari was sent back to the justices by the Court to be amended, because they did not put their seals to it, or describe themselves as justices of London. (R. v. Kenyon, 9 D. & R. 691; 6 B. & Cres. 640.)

And where a certiorari was directed to the justices of the peace, and also to the clerk of the peace, and the return was signed by the clerk of the peace,

7. Return to the Writ.

but was not sealed, the Court sent back the return to be amended. (Rex v. Macnamara, 1 Alcock & Napier, 61. (Irish.)

Quashing return.

If the return be defective the Court may quash it. See the case of R. v. Abergele, ante, 570, in which the Court quashed the return.

Amendment of.

But in general a defect, if not of a substantial kind, will be allowed to be amended by a side-bar rule. (R. v. Atkinson, 4 East, 175, n.; 1 Saund. 249, n. S. C.)

Enforcing return.

The return may be enforced by a side-bar rule, commanding a return after six days' notice; but if this side-bar rule be obtained without sufficient ground, the defendant may move to have that rule discharged. (R. v. Battams, 1 East, 299.)

After this side bar rule and notice, in general the inferior jurisdiction are bound to make return, even though it should appear that the writ was improperly granted, for it rests entirely with the Court of Queen's Bench to recall its own process. R. v. Battams, 1 East, 306; R. Hube, 5 T. R. 543; 13 East, 416, n.)

A clerk of the peace cannot refuse to transmit the records in his custody on account of the fees due to him, for he has no lien upon them to justify his detainer; (1 Leach, 201;) for his fees his remedy is by action; for his charges of bringing the defendant up, the defendant may be remanded. (Anon. 1 Stra. 308; White v. Haugh, 2 Stra. 1202.)

If the return be still withheld, an alias, then a pluries, or a causum nobis significes, will be awarded, and then an attachment. (Cromp. 116; Fitz. N. B. 245.)

False return.

If the person to whom a certiorari is directed do make a false return, yet the Court will not stay filing it on affidavit of its being false, except in public cases, as in cases of commissioners of sewers, or for not repairing highways, or for some such special causes; because the remedy for a false return is either an action on the case at the suit of the party grieved, or an information at the suit of the Queen. (Dalt. c. 195; see "Justices," Vol. III. p. 579.)

VIII. Quashing the Writ, &c.

Quashing the writ, &c.

If the writ appear to have been improperly directed or granted, it will be quashed, quia improvide emanavit, upon cause being shown to the jurisdiction from whence it was awarded. (R. v. Inhabitants of Seton, 7 T. R. 373; R. v. Sharrow, 2 T. R. 196, n.)

And if the return has been filed the Court will order the writ to be quashed after a return to a certiorari and the return taken off the file, and award a procedendo. (R. v. Wakefield, 1 Burr. 489; 2 Ken. 164, S. C.; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 63.)

And an order to quash the writ and have the return taken off the file might be obtained on motion previous to a motion for a procedendo. (4 Burr. 2456; R. v. Micklethwayte, id. 2522.)

If in consequence of an error in the return the record is not removed, they will either quash the writ and order a new one; (1 Salk. 147; 2 Stra. 1228; Hawk. b. 2, c. 27, s. 82; Williams, J., Certiorari, X.;) or they will allow the Court below to proceed, and take such order for the defendant's appearance before either tribunal, as the circumstances of the case may require. (2 Keb. 142; Hawk. b. 2, c. 27, s. 82; Williams, J., Certiorari, X.)

Or if the writ be issued too late for the trial to take place at the next holding of the Court into which the prosecution was removed, the Court will quash the writ, and order a procedendo (See 1 Chit. C. L. 381, note (c).)

If not returned at all the Court will grant a supersedeas.

If the party who obtained the certiorari did so for delay, and that can be established by his admission or otherwise, the Court will quash it. (Sanders v. Sheil, 3 Dowl. 90; and see R. v. Higgins, 5 A. & E. 554; ante, 569; where the writ was quashed where it was delivered purposely late.)

If the proceedings have been removed at the defendant's instance, and he has entered into a recognizance, and that recognizance has been forfeited, the Court will not in general hear any application to the writ. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 55.)

Affidavits in support of an application to quash a certiorari, bringing up an order of justices for stopping up a road, must be entitled in the names of the parties in the proceeding, and not merely "In the Queen's Bench." (Reg. v. Jones, 8 Dowl. 80.)

8. Quashing the Writ.

IX. Proceedings after Removal.

On the Removal of an Indictment.]—As soon as the writ is returned to the Crown Office, the prosecutor's attorney makes out a venire for the defendant to appear; upon which the solicitor gets him summoned by the sheriff, and upon the return of it, the defendant usually appears, when he is entitled to an imparlance to the following term: but if he does not then appear, the prosecutor's attorney, upon the production of the sheriff's return to the venire, makes out a distringas, upon which 40*s.* issues are levied on the defendant's effects; and if there is no appearance on the return of that, on the affidavit of the writ having issued and being returned as above, the Court will award an alias; and after that a pluries, &c., enlarging the issues on every writ until the defendant appears, when they will compel him to pay the costs of the writs of distringas out of the issues levied. But if the sheriff returns the venire non est inventus, then, upon the production of such return, the prosecutor's attorney sues out a capias for the sheriff to take the defendant into custody, which he will do; whereupon the defendant, to procure his enlargement, must enter an appearance, upon which he will be discharged by supersedeas. If the defendant be taken on a warrant, which a judge may grant on the return of the venire, the defendant must then put in bail before he is discharged. (Hand. Prac. 42, 43; 1 Chit. C. L. 396, 397.)

Compelling defendant's appearance after removal of an indictment.

If the bail in the recognizance are exceptionable, the prosecutor's attorney may compel the defendant to add sufficient bail, by taking out and serving on the defendant's attorney a judge's summons for a procedendo, unless better bail be put in. (Hand's Prac. 39; 1 Chit. Rep. 491.) But the Court or judge will not, after the defendant has been admitted to bail, increase such bail on an affidavit of aggravating facts. (R. v. Salter, 2 Chit. Rep. 109.) If he do not find sufficient sureties, then, upon the attendance of the summons, the judge will order the procedendo to issue, and by which the indictment and proceedings will be sent back to the court in which the prosecution was begun (Hand's Prac. 39); and if the indictment were removed after issue joined, the inferior court is to proceed to trial as if no certiorari had been issued. (Hawk. b. 2, c. 27, s. 61.)

Compelling better bail.

If the defendant at the time of removing a conviction by certiorari be under commitment, the Court, upon the return being filed, may bail him till the validity of the conviction be determined. (R. v. Reader, 1 Stra. 531.) But in a case of commitment under the Vagrant Act, 17 Geo. II. c. 5 (now repealed), the Court having refused a certiorari on the ground of an appeal depending at the sessions, rejected the defendant's application to be out on bail till the appeal should be decided. (2 T. R. 196; Paley on Conv. 230.)

Bailing defendant when under a commitment.

The prosecutor's attorney may compel the defendant to proceed to trial, according to the terms of his recognizance, by taking out and serving on the defendant's attorney a side-bar rule to estreat the recognizance, unless he appears and pleads within the term, and proceeds to trial at the sitting of nisi prius after the term, if in town, and in the country at the next assizes (Hand's Prac. 40); and unless the prosecutor, by obtaining and serving the usual rules, compels the defendant to proceed to trial, the recognizance will not be considered as forfeited (Hawk. b. 2, c. 27, s. 54); and if the cause be not tried on account of a defect of jurors, and the prosecutor will not pray a tales, the defendant is not liable to costs. (Stra. 937.)

Compelling defendant to proceed to trial.

In a case where the defendant being taken up on the 8th of June, upon an indictment for a libel, entered into a recognizance to appear and plead within the first eight days of Trinity term, and to try the cause at the sittings after that term; the defendant pleaded not guilty, but did not give notices of trial, or make up the record either for the sittings after Trinity or Michaelmas term,

9. Proceedings after Removal.

nor were the recognizances respited; the prosecutors gave notice of trial after Trinity and Michaelmas term, but the causes were not tried; the defendant was ready and willing to take his trial. On both these occasions the recognizances were estreated in Hilary term without any notice to the defendant, or any motion by the prosecutor; it was held that this estreat was regular. (R. v. Clark, 5 B. & Ald. 728.)

When the recognizance has been forfeited, the Court will not hear any motion to quash the indictment. (Hawk. b. 2, c. 27, s. 35.)

On removal of indictment for felony, sometimes defendant may plead by attorney.

On an indictment for felony, removed by certiorari, the Court of Queen's Bench, under special circumstances, will order that the defendant shall be at liberty to plead by attorney, and that he and the prosecutor shall be restrained from bringing error, on account of pleas so pleaded instead of being pleaded in person. (R. v. Penprase, 1 Nev. & M. 312; 4 B. & Adol. 573, S. C.) As to the rules to plead, see 6 East, 583.

When allowed to defendant as a pauper.

Where the defendant, at the period when the indictment is removed, was a prisoner in a debtor's prison, the Court will, under the circumstances, and on the usual affidavit, allow him to sue in formâ pauperis. (Ex parte Nicholson, 4 Jur. 506.)

Of amendments.

The Court above cannot alter or in any way amend the indictment, unless by virtue of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 15, ante, 147, because they have not the concurrence of the jurors by whom it was presented (1 Chit. C. L. 297); and, therefore, however long it may appear, they cannot strike out a count from the record. (2 Stra. 1026; Com. Dig. Amendment, 2, c. 1.) But they may make an alteration in the caption, for that is a mere history of the prior stages of the cause, and is therefore liable to be corrected. (4 East, 175; id. note b; 1 Saund. 249, note 1.)

Striking out count, &c.

All the subsequent process, after plea to the trial, is exactly the same as if the cause had originally been commenced in the court to which the certiorari has removed it. (Hand's Prac. 40, 43, 49; Hawk. b. 2, c. 27, s. 83.) If the proceedings be removed from the assizes, the place of trial will be the same, only on the civil instead of the criminal side of the hall, where they are holden. (5 T. R. 628.)

Two presentments before commissioners of sewers, the one as to I. Wall, and the other as to P. Wall, were removed by certiorari, and, on issues joined, were to be tried at the nisi prius side of the assizes. The defendant entered his two records, I. Wall first in the cause list, and P. Wall second in the cause list. After that, the prosecutor entered his two records, P. Wall third in the list, and I. Wall fourth: held, that the prosecutor had not the right of having the cases tried on his records, and that they should be tried in the order in which they were entered. (R. v. Leigh, 7 Car. & Pay. 813.)

After trial.

The proceedings from the trial to the defendant's coming up for judgment are the same as upon informations for misdemeanors (Hand's Prac. 43, 44), except that the notice of the motion for the judgment of the Court is given to the bail as well as to the defendant, and sometimes the prosecutor is entitled to costs, and as to which, see post, 575.

Proceedings may be conducted by another prosecutor.

It seems that after an indictment is removed by certiorari and abandoned by the original prosecutor, the proceedings may be continued by another party. (R. v. Wood, 3 B. & Adol. 657.) An indictment for a nuisance in keeping a common gaming-house was preferred by a private prosecutor, who, after removing it by certiorari, proceeded no further. Another party then caused a venire to be issued, and other steps taken for bringing the case to trial, though desired by the original prosecutor to forbear. On motion by the latter for a stay of proceedings (he alleging that the offence had been discontinued), the Court of Queen's Bench refused to interfere, the prosecution being for a public nuisance. (Id.)

After a removal of conviction or order.

On the Removal of a Conviction or Order, &c.]—With respect to what may be discussed on the hearing of the case, to quash the conviction or order, we have already seen that a certiorari will not be granted to remove a conviction or order, unless it be for some defect apparent on the face of it, and that if the justices have jurisdiction, the court or judge will not enter into any examination of the facts or reasons upon which the conviction or order is founded, unless in the case of an order of sessions made subject to a special case. (Ante, 555, 558.)

9. Proceedings after Removal.

Court cannot judge of evidence given in courts below.

In the case of R. v. Reason (6 T. R. 375), it was determined that if justices acquit a defendant against whom an information is laid before them for a penalty, the Court of Queen's Bench cannot reverse the judgment, though the justices state (on the return of a certiorari) evidence, which primâ facie is sufficient to convict, and no contradictory or explanatory evidence. And the Court said, that the evidence given was entirely and exclusively for the consideration of the justices below, who were placed in the situation of a jury; and as they had acquitted the defendant, this Court could not substitute themselves in the place of the justices acting as jurymen, and convict him; that they could not judge of the credit due to the witnesses whom they did not hear examined; that they could only look to the form of the conviction, and see that the party, if convicted, had been convicted by legal evidence; and they must consider on this return, that the magistrates had determined on the facts, and not on the law of the case as distinguished from the facts. (See the cases, ante, 558, 559.)

And touching the distinction between a conviction removed by certiorari and one brought before a Court upon an appeal; on an appeal, the whole case is gone into, and evidence is to be given to support the conviction; but when the conviction is removed by certiorari, the facts cannot be made the subject of inquiry (R. v. Jukes, 8 T. R. 542), at least for the purpose of questioning the conclusion at which the justices arrived.

The Court, on the legality of a conviction, cannot take cognizance of any fact contained in the certiorari by which the conviction is removed, for the Court cannot take notice of any fact which does not appear upon the face of the conviction itself. (R. v. Liston, 5 T. R. 338.)

except where no jurisdiction.

But it seems that on the question of jurisdiction to make a conviction or order, the Court may look into the facts and receive affidavits. Therefore, on a return to a certiorari for bringing up an order of magistrates, made in a matter over which an act of parliament had given them original and final jurisdiction as to the merits, affidavits are admissible to show that the charge made before the magistrates was one over which they had no jurisdiction; but when a sufficient charge, appearing on the face of the information to be within their jurisdiction, is brought before them, they act within their jurisdiction in commencing the inquiry, and affidavits are not admissible to show that they came to a wrong conclusion. (Reg. v. Bolton, 1 Ad. & Ell. N. S. 66; 4 P. & D. 679, S.C.) Nor, if the justices return the evidence, will the Court review their judgment thereupon. (Id.; and see R. v. Inhabitants of Abergele, 5 Ad. & Ell. 795.)

The test of jurisdiction under this rule is, whether or not the justices had power to enter upon the inquiry, not whether their conclusions, in the course of it, were true or not. (Id.)

Course to adopt when an order of sessions quashing a conviction for defect in form, is quashed on certiorari in Q. B.

In a case where the sessions on an appeal quashed a conviction on the 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 106, s. 4, for a defect in form, without hearing the merits, and their order was removed by certiorari into Queen's Bench, that Court, being of opinion that there was no defect in the form, quashed the order, and sent back the case to the sessions to enter continuances and hear the appeal on the merits. (R. v. Ridgway, 5 B. & Ald. 527; 1 D. & R. 132, S.C.; see also the case of R. v. Eaton, 1 T. R. 89, and ante, title "Appeal.")

Sending back record.

It is a general rule that if a record, removed by certiorari, be once filed in the Queen's Bench, it cannot be sent back or remanded; but that rule is not inflexible, and if there would be a failure of justice, as if the Court of Queen's Bench, on the removal of a conviction, would not have jurisdiction to imprison the defendant in the event of his not paying the penalty in which he was convicted, then the Court, on confirming the conviction, would award a procedendo, in order that the justices might enforce it by warrant of distress or otherwise. (R. v. Neville, 2 B. & Adol. 299; see 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 68.)

Costs, after Removal by.

Prosecutor to be paid in some cases his costs after removal of indictment.

After Removal of Indictments.]—By 5 & 6 Will. & M. c. 11, s. 3, if the "defendant prosecuting such writ of certiorari (see the other sections of the act, ante, 562,) be convicted of the offence for which he was indicted, that then the said Court of King's Bench shall give reasonable costs to the prosecutor, if he be the party grieved or injured, or be a justice of the peace, mayor, bailiff, constable, headborough, tithingman, churchwarden, or overseer of the poor, or other civil officer, who shall prosecute upon the account of any fact committed or done, that concerned him or them, as officer or officers to prosecute or present, which costs shall be taxed according to the course of the said Court, and that the prosecutor for the recovery of such costs shall, within ten days after demand made of the defendant, and refusal of payment upon oath, have an attachment granted against the defendant by the said Court for such his contempt; and that the said recognizance shall not be discharged till the costs so taxed shall be paid."

Statute a remedial one.

This statute is a remedial one. (See per Lord Ellenborough, C. J. in R. v. Taunton St. Mary, 3 M. & Selw. 465; and per Lord Kenyon, C. J. in R. v. Kettlewonth, 5 T. R. 33.)

What offences within the act.

The act extends to the costs of the prosecution of an offence, whether it be a nonfeasance or a malfeasance. (R. v. Inhabitants of Taunton, St. Mary, 3 M. & Sel. 471.)

Who a prosecutor within the act.

A merely nominal prosecutor is not within the act, and consequently not entitled to costs. (Reg. v. Inhabitants of Bernard Castle, 5 Jur. 799.) Therefore where the expenses of an indictment for a misdemeanor were defrayed by subscription, and the nominal prosecutors incurred no expense, they were held not within the act. (R. v. Cook, 1 Man. & Ry. 526.) So where an indictment for a libel on the governor of a parish workhouse was preferred by the direction of the select vestry of the parish, it was held that the libelled party was not a prosecutor as a party grieved within the act. (R. on prosecution of Brindley v. Dewhurst, 5 B. & Adol. 105; 2 Nev. & M. 253, S. C.) So in R. v. Edwards, (5 B. & Ad 407,) the indictment was for an assault on a watchman or constable within the borough of Derby. The prosecution had been carried on by certain paving and lighting commissioners, acting under a local act for that borough, and the Court were of opinion that the nominal prosecutor was not a party grieved within the meaning of the statute, nor were the commissioners public officers prosecuting as such.

His name need not be indorsed on indictment.

In R. v. Smith, (1 Burr. 54,) it was moved that before the recognizance should be discharged the prosecutor should have his costs. The objection was that no name of any person, as being the party grieved or injured, or a public civil officer, was indorsed upon the indictment. But by the Court, "It is enough, if it be proved that the prosecutor was such officer, and here it is proved by affidavit." And it was ruled that the prosecutor should have his costs before the recognizance should be discharged."

Who a party aggrieved within the act.

As to when the prosecutor is a party grieved within the meaning of the act, it has been held that persons dwelling near to a steam-engine, the smoke of which affected themselves, their furniture and dwelling-houses, and was very offensive and injurious, were parties grieved. (R. v. Dewsnap, 16 East, 194.) And Lord Ellenborough there observed, "that although a nuisance may be public, yet there may be a special grievance arising out of the common cause of injury, which presses more upon particular individuals than upon others not so immediately within the influence of it." So the prosecutor of an indictment for stopping up an ancient and common footway, which he had used for some years, and had since been obliged to take a more circuitous route, was held to be a party grieved within the act. (R. v. Williamson, 7 T. R. 32; and see R. v. Taunton St. Mary, 3 M. & Sel. 465.) But where the prosecutor of an indictment for obstructing a highway did not apply for the costs until after the defendant's recognizance had been discharged, and until two years after judgment, and it did not appear that he had ever used the highway before it was stopped, and whilst it was stopped declared he did not care about it, the Court held that he was not entitled to costs, although the prosecution was at his expense. The Court thought he was not a party grieved; that there ought to have been some special and peculiar injury accruing to him from the obstruction, besides that which affects all the subjects in common with him. (R. v. Incledon, 1 M. & Sel. 268. See also Miles v. Rose, 4 M. & Sel. 101.) Rated inhabitants of a parish, who were prevented by rioters from entering the vestry-room to attend a meeting called for the purpose of imposing a church rate, and who afterwards prosecuted the offenders, are parties grieved within the meaning of the above act. (R. v. Thompkins, 2 B & Adol. 287.)

10. Costs after Removal by.

In R. v. Cook, (1 Man. & Ryl. 526,) it was made a question on an indictment for a misdemeanor, whether the near relations of a person whose body has been disinterred for the purposes of dissection were parties grieved within the act, but the point does not seem to have been decided.

An indictment for a libel on a political dinner charged to have a tendency to produce a riot at that dinner, was removed by certiorari at the instance of the defendants; it was held that a person injured at a riot which took place at that dinner was not a person grieved within the act. (Reg. v. Caldecott, 1 Dowl. N. S. 556.)

Nor does the act apply to persons intended to be aggrieved, but only to those who have suffered actual injury. (R. v. Ingleton, 1 Wils. 139.) The defendant was indicted for attempting to set fire to the house of one Easton, in York, and the indictment also charged that the defendant solicited Mason, one of the prosecutors, to help to set fire to the house. Mason and one Glenton informed the mayor of York of this, who bound Mason and Glenton over to prosecute the defendant. The said defendant removed the indictment by certiorari into the Court of Queen's Bench, and was thereupon convicted and fined. On payment of the fine, it was moved that the recognizance should be discharged. Unto which it was objected that the defendant was obliged to pay the costs of the prosecutors. But by the Court—"This case is not within the act; for the act extends only to officers and persons really injured, which neither Glenton nor Mason are, for there was no damage done to the house, but only intended to be done, nor are either of them officers." And the recognizance was discharged.

Who a public officer within the act.

The costs thus given by the stat of Will. to persons acting in public capacities can only be claimed by them when they prosecute for some offence which actually comes within their own peculiar cognizance, and not a public or private grievance, with which they think fit to interfere.

Therefore a justice prosecuting a gaoler for an escape is not entitled to costs. (R. v. Sharpness, 2 T. R. 47.) The prosecutor, a justice of the peace, had indicted the defendant, who was the keeper of the gaol at St. Alban's, for suffering a prisoner to escape, who had been committed by him for felony; upon which indictment the defendant had been convicted. And it was contended that the prosecutor was entitled to costs under the 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 11, s. 3, as being a public officer prosecuting for the benefit of the public. Ashhurst, J. "It appears to me the defendant ought not to be charged with the costs; this is not one of those instances mentioned in the 3d section of the act, which only extends to those officers who prosecute or present ex officio, or where the prosecution is carried on by the party aggrieved. If a justice were to present a road, and the same were afterwards turned into an indictment, there the justice would be entitled to costs; or if a justice were to indict a constable or other inferior officer for disobeying his order, in such case also he would be entitled to his costs: but this is not a prosecution carried on by him as a magistrate, for any other person might have indicted the defendant; the offence in this case was such as concerned the general justice of the realm." Buller, J. "From a review of all the cases in a MS. note book, it appears that the prosecutor is not entitled to his costs; this book does not indeed include a case from Basingstoke, which came before this Court a few years ago, but there I understand the prosecution was carried on by the clerk of the peace, whose duty it was to draw up all presentments of constables in form of indictments; and it was there determined that the prosecutor was entitled to costs. But here I cannot say it was the duty of the prosecutor as a justice of the peace to prosecute this defendant; the case originally came before him in the character of a magistrate on the complaint of some other person, and if the justice chose to take the prosecution out of private hands and to conduct it himself, he cannot be said to prosecute as a magistrate, but like any other individual. The Court has always construed this act of parliament as strictly as possible; (a) there was one case indeed on this statute, (R. v. Goter, M. 16 Geo. III.,) the law of which I doubt, where it was held that a person who was injured and was really the prosecutrix, was not entitled to costs, because her name did not appear on the back of the indictment, although it was well known she was the real prosecutrix; but I believe that case has been since overruled. (See R. v. Smith, ante, 576) In another case, afterwards, the question was whether the prosecutor were entitled to the costs of a trial at bar; and it was determined that he was not, because the statute only extended to small offences. These cases show that the Court has always put a strict construction on this act."—Rule absolute.

In R. v. Kettleworth, (5 T. R. 33,) it was held that a justice of the peace, who indicted a road out of repair, was entitled to costs after a removal of the indictment by certiorari, if the defendant be convicted. "If the verdict had been for the defendant, (Lord Kenyon, C. J. said,) and it had appeared that the prosecution was vexatious, the attorney might have been compelled to disclose his real client."

So in R. v. Taunton St. Mary, (3 M. & Sel. 465, ante, 577,) it was held that a constable of a manor presenting such an indictment for the non-repair of a highway within the manor, was an officer within the act.

Where an indictment was preferred by the Metropolitan Police Commissioners for an assault upon a constable belonging to their force, it was held that they were officers within the act. (R. v. Waldegrave, 1 G. & D. 615.)

Conviction necessary.

The terms in the act "if the defendant prosecuting such writ of certiorari be convicted," mean convicted by a judgment. In a case, therefore, where the judgment was arrested, the Court held that the defendant not having been found guilty of any offence which the law recognizes as such, (and therefore not considered as guilty persons,) ought not to be mulcted with costs for having removed a bad indictment from an inferior jurisdiction into the Queen's Bench. (R. v. Turner and others, 15 East, 570.) And where a certiorari obtained by a defendant was quashed, the Court had no power to give the prosecutor his costs of attending sessions. (Reg. v. Higgins, 5 Ad. & Ell. 554.)

What costs allowed.

The master of the Crown Office, in taxing the costs, ought only to consider those which are subsequent to the certiorari. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 56; and see R. v. Passman, 2 Dowl. 529; 1 Ad. & Ell. 603, S. C.)

The costs of the counts only on which the defendant is convicted should be allowed. (Reg. v. Hawdon, 3 Per. & D. 44; 11 Ad. & Ell. 143, S. C.)

The costs of conveying a defendant to gaol, in execution of his sentence, are reasonable costs within the statute. (R. v. Gilbie, 5 M. & Sel. 520.) The defendant was indicted for a misdemeanor at the Northumberland quarter sessions, and removed the indictment by certiorari into the Queen's Bench, and was afterwards found guilty, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the gaol for that county, in execution of which sentence he was conveyed thither at the prosecutor's expense. This expense was allowed to the prosecutor by the master, on taxing the costs. A rule nisi having been obtained for the master to review his taxation, it was argued, on showing cause, that this allowance was warranted by stat. 5 & 6 Will. & M. c. 11, s. 3, which enacts, "that if the defendant prosecuting the certiorari be convicted of the offence for which he was indicted, the Court of King's Bench shall give reasonable costs to the prosecutor." And it was urged, that if the indictment had been left with the sessions, this expense would not have been incurred, because the defendant would have been on the spot; wherefore it was by the defendant's own act, who removed the indictment, that the costs were incurred and it is a part of the reasonable costs. The prosecutor, in discharge of his duty, had a right to see that the sentence of the Court was executed. In support of the rule it was urged, that the statute of Will. & M. did not contemplate costs such as the present, nor, indeed, any costs after judgment. And as to the defendant being the occasion of this expense, the sentence might as well have been to the prison of this Court as to the county gaol. The place, therefore, of imprisonment was the act of the Court. The recognizance of the defendant extends to the costs of the trial, and not of execution. The cases R. v. Cholsey, 2 Cowp. 726, and Q. v. Summers, 1 Salk. 55, were cited. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "Under the terms of the recognizance the defendant was bound to pay all reasonable costs. These costs, if not immediately occasioned by the certiorari, were certainly incurred in consequence of it. If the indictment had remained below, no such expense would have been incurred. The defendant's own act, therefore, may be said to have occasioned the expense. It is reasonable that the defendant should bear the expense for which no other fund is provided." Et per Bayley, J. "It is a part of the prosecution to carry it to its legal conclusion." Per Curiam. Rule discharged. (R. v. Gilbie, 5 M. & Sel. 520)

10. Costs after Removal by.

The costs of a special jury cannot be allowed. (R. v. Ld. Abingdon, 1 Esp. 229.)

An indictment removed into the Queen's Bench by certiorari by the defendant, and made a special jury cause by the prosecutor, came on to be tried and was immediately referred. The order of reference stated that if the arbitrator should be of opinion that the defendant was guilty, and the prosecutor entitled to costs, the defendant agreed to pay the costs. The arbitrator did so find. The Court of Queen's Bench held that the prosecutor could not recover the costs of the special jury, since the judge had not certified for those costs, (pursuant to 6 Geo. IV. c. 50, s. 34,) and the order of reference did not expressely give a power of doing so to the arbitrator; also that the general term "costs" in this order did not include those of the reference and award. (R. v. Moate, 3 B. & Adol. 237.)

The amount of the costs to be taxed is not limited by the recognizance, which is only a further security for them, and the Court will not discharge the recognizance till the taxed costs are paid to the prosecutor (R. v. Teal, 13 East, 4.)

If the Court, on the certificate of the Queen's coroner, have given to the prosecutor one-third of the fine, they will order that sum to be deducted from the amount of the taxation. (R. v. Osborne, 4 Burr. 2125.) But the payment of the fine does not discharge the recognizance for the costs. (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 53.)

Liability of one of several defendants for.

If an indictment against several defendants is removed by certiorari into the Queen's Bench without the consent of one, he cannot be compelled to pay the costs under the above act, although he may have appeared and pleaded to the indictment, and been tried on it. (R. v. Hassell, 5 Dowl. 531.)

Liability of sureties under recognizance.

The sureties are liable under their recognizance to pay the prosecutor his costs, although there is no undertaking to that effect in the recognizance, or direct provisions to that effect in the act. (Reg. v. Bezant, 7 Dowl. 680; and see Reg. v. Hawden, 1 Ad. & Ell. (N. S.) 464.)

If the defendant forfeit his recognizance under the statute, by not going to trial at the time specified, it will not be discharged on the application of the sureties until the costs of not proceeding to trial have been paid, notwithstanding the defendant was afterwards acquitted and taken in execution for the amount of the taxation. (R. v. Lyon, 3 Burr. 1461; R. v. Turner, 15 East, 572.)

In case of death of defendant.

If the defendant be found guilty, and die before the day in bank, his bail are liable to pay the costs. (R. v. Turner, 3 B. & C. 140; 4 D. & R. 816, S. C.)

Death of prosecutor.

The sum when duly ascertained by the master becomes a vested debt, and if the prosecutor die before it is paid, his personal representatives may recover it. (R. v. Chamberlayne, 1 T. R. 104; R. v. Turner, 15 East, 573.)

10. Costs after Removal by.

When defendant is entitled to costs.

Where the prosecutor of an indictment has removed it by certiorari, and there is no irregularity in the proceedings, the Court of Queen's Bench cannot, upon any representation of hardship imposed on the defendant, oblige the prosecutor to pay him his costs incurred below. (R. v. Passman, 1 Adol. & Ell. 603.)

In R. v. Tremearne, (5 B. & Cres. 761; 8 D. & R. 590, 684, S. C.,) where a true bill for perjury was found, and the judge at the assizes having refused to try it on account of manifest imperfections in the record, a new bill was preferred, whereupon the defendant was found guilty, but a new trial granted, and then the prosecutor, instead of taking down the old record, again preferred a new indictment for the same offence, and removed it into the Queen's Bench by certiorari, the Court refused to stay the proceedings upon that indictment until the prosecutor paid the costs of the former proceedings.

In Jones v. Davies, (1 B. & Cres. 143,) indeed, where a cause had been improperly removed by certiorari from the great sessions for Cardigan, it was held that the Court of Queen's Bench acquired a jurisdiction over the costs below by the certiorari, and that the master might tax them as he did in other cases. But that decision went on special grounds.

In R. v. Bartrum, (8 East, 269,) the defendant was indicted for perjury, and the indictment was removed from the sessions to the Queen's Bench by certiorari. The prosecutor gave notice of trial to the defendant, but on the day of trial withdrew the record without having countermanded the notice in due time. And it was held by the Court that he must pay the costs of the trial as in other cases. (And see R. v. Gilbie, 2 Chit. Rep. 159; R. v. Johnson, R. & M. C. C. 173; R. v. Watton, 4 C. & P. 229, S. P.)

Where a prosecutor, having removed an indictment by certiorari, gave notice of trial for the assizes and brought down the record, and withdrew it after it had been entered for trial, it was considered that the judge at the assizes could not order the prosecutor to pay the defendant the costs of the day; but that the motion must be made in the Court of Queen's Bench. (R. v. Watton, 4 C. & P. 229.)

Costs after removal of a conviction.

After removal of a Conviction, &c.]—By the 5 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 2, (ante, 566,) the condition of the recognizance (directed to be taken on a certiorari to remove judgments or orders of magistrates) is to pay the prosecutor his full costs in one month after confirmation of the order. And by section 3, a similar provision is made for the recovery of the costs as by the above statute of Will. & M. The enactment of sect. 3 is as follows:

Recognizances to be certified into the King's Bench.

Sect. 3. "That the recognizance and recognizances to be taken as aforesaid shall be certified into the Court of King's Bench at Westminster, and there filed with the certiorari and order, or judgment removed thereby; and if the said order or judgment shall be confirmed by the said Court, the persons entitled to such costs for the recovery thereof, within ten days after demand made of the person or persons who ought to pay the said costs, upon oath made of the making such demand and refusal of payment thereof, shall have an attachment granted against him or them by the said Court for such contempt, and the said recognizance so given upon the allowing of such certiorari shall not be discharged until the costs shall be paid, and the order so confirmed shall be complied with and obeyed."

Attachment for contempt.

When there is no recognizance taken on removing summary proceedings, there are no costs, for the Court has in that case no power to tax them by virtue of any of the statutes relating to criminal proceedings. (R. v. Jenkins, 4 Burr. 2126; 2 Id. 417.) And if the recognizance be as at common law, and not upon the statute, the Court will not order the recognizance to stand as a security for the prosecutor's costs. (1 Burr. 11; 2 Stra. 1165.) But, as we have already seen, (ante, 579,) if the defendant forfeit his recognizance under the statute, the recognizance will stand as a security to the prosecutor for his costs (if taxed) for the defendant's not going to trial pursuant to the condition, notwithstanding the defendant be afterwards acquitted, and the prosecutor takes him in execution for the amount. (3 Burr. 1463.)

XI. Forms.

In the Queen's Bench.

(1.) Affidavit by defendant for certiorari to remove an indictment from sessions, for not repairing a highway. (a)

A. B. of, &c. [gentleman,] maketh oath and saith, that at the last general quarter sessions of the peace holden in and for the county of S. a bill of indictment was preferred and found against the inhabitants of the parish of C. in the said county, for a nuisance in not repairing a certain common Queen's highway, leading from M. in the said county of S. towards and unto the town of B. in the county aforesaid, from the entrance into a lane called D. at a place called D. opposite to J. F.'s house, containing in length one quarter of a mile, and in breadth fifteen feet, extending from thence in a western direction as far as N. bridge, in which said indictment it is alleged that the inhabitants of the parish of C. aforesaid ought to repair and amend the same common Queen's highway, when and so often as it shall be necessary; and the deponent saith that the right or title to repair the said highway will come in question upon the trial of the said indictment as this deponent is advised and verily believes; and the determination of the said indictment may materially affect other parishes similarly circumstanced, by reason of the inclosures lately made in that part of the country, under and by virtue of an act of parliament passed in the year of her present Majesty's reign, intituled 'An Act,' &c.; and this deponent further saith, he is advised and believes that it will be proper to have the said indictment tried by a special jury, and absolutely necessary that the jury before whom the said indictment is tried should, previous to the trial thereof, view the said highway, which the defendants cannot have the benefit of at the sessions.

In the Queen's Bench.

(2.) Affidavit on which to apply to a judge for a certiorari to remove depositions, commitment and recognizance on a charge of a misdemeanor (unnatural practices), before indictment found at sessions, into the Queen's Bench. (b)

A. B. of the parish of , in the county of , and [six other deponents] and C. D. of the city of , attorney, and E. F. of , clerk to the said C. D. severally make oath and say, and first this deponent A. B. on his oath saith, that he, this deponent, on Saturday the twenty-first day of September, now last past, was taken up at his parsonage house at aforesaid, by one of the constables of the hundred of , in the said county, upon a warrant under the hands and seals of R. B. N. and S. F. P., Esquires, two of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county, which warrant is hereunto annexed, and is marked A., upon a charge made by W. H., late a servant boy of this deponent, for an assault and misdemeanor on the person of the said W. H., and that about five o'clock in the afternoon of the same day he was taken to , in the said county, before the said justices, to answer the said complaint, and was committed for want of bail to the common gaol at , in the said county, to take his trial at the ensuing quarter sessions of the peace for the said county, to be held at , on the fourteenth day of October instant, upon a warrant of commitment of the said justices for the said assault and misdemeanor. And this deponent further saith, that he hath used his best endeavours to obtain a copy of the said warrant of commitment to the said gaol, but without effect, and that he, this deponent, was on Monday the twenty-third day of September last past, admitted to bail upon the said charge by the Right Honourable the Earl of E., a justice of the peace for the said county, himself in three hundred pounds, and two sureties in two hundred pounds each, to appear at the next ensuing quarter sessions. And this deponent further saith, that he is informed and advised and verily believes that in the neighbourhood in which he this deponent resides, and also in that part of the said county where the next and any other quarter sessions for the said county will be held, great, unjust, and unfounded, but violent prejudices have been excited against him in relation to the said charge, and that the most untrue, unjust, but very injurious reports and representations relating to the same have been maliciously and very industriously circulated in and throughout the said county, asserting in direct terms the opinions of the persons making and circulating the said reports, that this deponent hath been and is guilty of committing an unnatural crime, and also unnatural attempts and practices. And further, that in the said neighbourhood as well as throughout the said county there unhappily exists, not only against this deponent but generally against all the clergy, unjust but strong prejudices, insomuch that very many of those persons in the said county who would probably constitute the grand jury at the said quarter sessions, would, in the judgment, belief, and expectation of this deponent, be improperly biased and prejudiced against this deponent as well in respect of his being a clergyman as in respect of the said reports, and also on account of the lamentable truth of several clergymen having of late years been convicted of offences of that nature, and on account thereof this deponent and his family and friends are informed and advised, expect and verily believe that no bill of indictment can be preferred to any jury of the said county against this deponent, and duly and fairly submitted to their candid and just consideration, unless they shall have received and duly heard and considered the charge and directions of one of the superior judges, in regard to their duty to observe impartiality, and avoid such prejudice. And this deponent further saith, that under the circumstances he is further informed and advised, and verily believes that he cannot be nor would be fairly tried by any jury at any quarter sessions or other sessions of the said county. And this deponent further saith, that he is advised and verily believes that being indicted for a misdemeanor, he will not be entitled to challenge any of the said jurors. And this deponent further saith, that he has lately had angry disputes with the said R. B. N. (one of the committing magistrates, and who occupies land in the said parish of ,) about his tithes, which disputes are not settled, and that when brought before the said R. B. N. on this charge, and being, as appeared to this deponent, treated with great harshness by the said R. B. N., he remonstrated with him on the impropriety of his acting in it, on account of these disputes. And this deponent further saith, that should this case be tried at the sessions, he would probably be on the bench of justices on that occasion. And this deponent further saith, that if the said trial of any indictment against him founded on the said charge should take place at the next or any subsequent sessions, he, this deponent, cannot expect nor could have a fair and impartial trial. And this deponent further saith, he is advised and believes that it will be proper and absolutely necessary that he should have the said indictment tried by a special jury at the assizes for the said county before one of the superior judges, whose weight and just influence would in all probability secure a fair trial; and also because it is essential that he, this deponent, should have the advice and assistance of Queen's counsel, or at least of counsel of greater experience than those who usually practise at the sessions. And this deponent further saith, that he is wholly innocent of the crime imputed to him by the said W. H. in his deposition, on which the charge is founded, and that he has never committed nor attempted to commit an unnatural crime with or upon the said W. H. or any other person whomsoever. And this deponent further saith, that the said W. H. came into his service at Michaelmas 1829, and that he turned him away early in March last for improper behaviour; and that he has charged this deponent with having committed acts of indecency towards him so long ago as the month of October 1829, during the greater part of which said month of October he, this deponent, was from home at Bognor and the Isle of Wight, and the said W. H. was at . And this deponent is informed and verily believes that the said charge and prosecution have originated and all proceedings in a foul conspiracy. And this deponent for the purposes of justice will disclose the parties thereto when duly required so to do. And this deponent further saith, that he is a clergyman, a prebendary of the cathedral church of , rector of the parish of , vicar of the parish of , in the said county of , and was domestic chaplain to the late bishop of for many years, and up to the time of his death; and that he is of the age of forty-five years, and has been such clergyman for twenty-two years and upwards, and that he hath a wife with whom he now and for seventeen years has lived in perfect happiness, and that he has eight children now living, all of whom reside constantly with this deponent and his said wife. And this deponent lastly saith, that as well for his own sake and for the sake of the clergy in general, and for the sake of his said wife and children, he is most anxious that the proceedings on the said charge should be removed into the Court of Queen's Bench, inasmuch as he is confident that no grand jury of any county, after hearing the charge of an enlightened judge, and cautioned against indulging prejudice, and to examine the witnesses brought before them in support of the said charge, will ever find any bill of indictment against him; and that thereby this deponent and his wife and family will avoid the anguish and disgrace even of a bill of indictment having been found a true bill, or of any pending prosecution. And this deponent, the said E. F., saith, that he attended at , on the said twenty-third day of September, with the bail before the magistrate who took the recognizances of bail, and then saw and read over the said warrant of commitment of the said A. B., and that was for an assault and misdemeanor on the person of the said W. H., and in the words and to the effect only of the warrant for apprehending the said A. B. hereunto annexed, and not for any more serious offence. And this deponent, the said C. D., for himself saith, that he and his father are the solicitors of the said A. B., and that they wrote to Messrs. E. and H., the clerks to the magistrates acting at , for a copy of the warrant of commitment, and that they received the two letters in reply hereunto annexed, marked B. and C. And this deponent further saith, that he applied through their clerk, Mr. R. W., to the committing magistrates, for a copy of the informations against the said A. B., and warrant of commitment, and was informed shortly afterwards by the said R. W. that copies of the informations could not be given, and that he had not the warrant of commitment. And these eight other deponents severally make oath and say, that they have known and been in habits of intimacy and friendship with the said A. B. for a great many years, and that during all such time the said A. B. has borne a most irreproachable and exemplary character in society for good conduct and morality. And these deponents believe that the said A. B. has constantly lived with his wife on terms of mutual affection and kindness, which is not usually the characteristic of a person addicted to the depraved propensities imputed to him. And these deponents severally further say, that they believe that although the said A. B. hath, from the smallness of his income and his large family, been long labouring under great pecuniary difficulties, yet that except as respects this particular false imputation, he has never before been charged with any such or similar crime. And these deponents severally further say, that the habits of the lower classes in that part of the country where the said A. B. resides, and the neighbourhood about it, are very loose and depraved, and on the commonest occasions they impute to each other even the capital charge. And these deponents severally further say, that they recollect a few years ago a case which was tried at assizes, where a foul charge was made against a highly respectable clergyman (lately deceased) by two persons, who it was clearly proved, as these deponents believe, made the threat to impute the offence for the purpose of extorting money, and that they were transported for life. And these deponents further severally say, that very lately a mob of the lowest order assembled at a town about seven miles distant from the residence of the said A. B., and carried about the streets the effigy of a gentleman of great respectability with a beastly and unqualified written charge of a similar offence attributed to the said A. B.

(b) This form was approved of by Mr. Baron Parke, who issued a certiorari to remove depositions and recognizance before indictment found. The defendant on the trial was honourably acquitted.

Before me,
J. D. N., a commissioner for taking affidavits in the said Court.

Challenge to Fight.

Offence of.

WE have already seen, (ante, 303,) that the attempt or incitement to commit felony is in itself a misdemeanor, and so is the sending a challenge to fight, or the giving language which tends to the same end, or the acts of posting of opprobrious expressions which have the tendency to a breach of the peace, and they are indictable as misdemeanors at common law. (3 Inst. 157; Com. Dig. Battle (B.); 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 3; R. v. Rice, 3 East, 581; R. v. Phillips, 6 East, 464.)

Mere words, which though they may produce a challenge, do not directly tend to that issue, as calling a man a liar, are not necessarily criminal; (R. v. Langley, 2 Ld. Raym. 1031; R. v. Phillips, 6 East, 471;) though it is probable they would be so, if it could be shown they were meant to provoke a challenge. And the same words, if written, might probably form the subject of an indictment or action for a libel.

Surety to keep the peace.

In the case of an information laid before a magistrate of a challenge given, he should forthwith issue his warrant to bring the parties before him, and require them to find sureties to keep the peace, and as to which, see "Surety of the Peace," Vol. V.

Criminal information for.

A challenge is one of those offences for which a criminal information will be granted by the Court of Queen's Bench. But this will not be granted where the party applying has first incited the proposal. (R. v. Hankey, 1 Burr. 316.) Nor if in the course of the transactions out of which the challenge arose, he has himself sent a challenge to a third person connected with the party against whom he moves. (Rex v. Larrieu, 7 Ad. & E. 277.) And this, although the prosecutor's challenge was sent into a foreign country, and did not show any intention to break the peace here. (Id.) The original letters need not be produced on the application, but copies of them will suffice, if sufficiently verified as correct. (R. v. Chappell, 1 Burr. 402.) An affidavit of the party applying for the information that B. had brought him a challenge from C., and that B. had refused to make an affidavit that C. sent him with it, is not evidence on which the Court will grant even a rule nisi for the information against C. for sending the challenge. (R. v. Willet, 6 T. R. 294; see "Information, Vol. III.)

Indictment for.

An indictment for this offence in most respects resembles that for sending a threatening letter. (See "Threats," Vol. VI.)

The venue may be either in the county where the challenge is concocted, or where it is received. (R. v. Williams, 2 Campb. 506.)

Punishment.

The punishment is fine and imprisonment, or both, as in other cases of misdemeanor. (R. v. Rice, 3 East, 514; see "Misdemeanor," Vol. V.)

The 9 Ann. c. 14, s. 8, so far as it relates to the forfeiture and punishment of persons assaulting and beating, or challenging or provoking to fight, any other person, on account of money won at play, is repealed by 9 Geo. IV. c. 31.

Duelling.

As to duelling, see "Homicide, Vol. III.

Commitment for sending a challenge.

[Commencement as usual, as ante, p. 9]: That the said C. D. on the day of A.D. at the parish of in the said county, wickedly, wilfully, and maliciously did compose, write, send and deliver, to one A. B. a certain letter and paper writing, containing a challenge to fight a duel with and against him the said C. D. And you the said keeper, &c. [as usual, as ante, p. 9, to the end.]

Commitment for provoking a man to send a challenge.

[Commencement as usual, as ante, p. 9]: That the said C. D. on the day of A. D. at the parish of in the said county, wickedly, wilfully, and maliciously did speak, declare, say and publish to and in the presence and hearing of one A. B., certain provoking, malicious and scandalous words, with intent to instigate, excite, and provoke the said A. B. to fight a duel with and against him the said C. D. And you the said keeper, &c. [as usual, as ante, p. 9, to the end.]

Charitable Trusts and Donations.

By stat. 52 Geo. III. c. 101, in cases of breach and trust, a petition may be presented to Lord Chancellor, who shall hear the same in a summary way, and make order therein.

52 Geo. 3, c. 102.

The stat. 52 Geo. III. c. 102, for registering and securing of charitable donations, after reciting that "charitable donations have been given for the benefit of poor and other persons in England and Wales to a very considerable amount, and many of the aforesaid donations appear to have been lost, and others, from the neglect of payment and the inattention of those persons who ought to superintend them, are in danger of being lost, or rendered very difficult to be preserved," enacts, "that a memorial or statement of the real and personal estate, and of the gross annual income, investment, and the general and particular objects of all and every charity and charities, and charitable donations, for the benefit of any poor or other persons in any place in England and Wales, which shall have been founded, established, made, benefited, increased or secured, together with the names of the respective founders of or benefactors thereto, where known, and also of the person or persons in whose custody, possession, or control, the deeds, wills, and other instruments whereby such charities or charitable donations shall have been founded, established, made, benefited, increased or secured, may be, and also of the names of the then trustee or trustees, feoffee or feoffees, possessor or possessors, of such real or personal estate, shall, from and after six calendar months after the passing of this act, be registered by such person or persons who shall then be the trustee or trustees, feoffee or feoffees, possessor or possessors thereof, or some or one of such persons, in manner and in the form contained in the schedule to this act annexed, in the office of the clerk of the peace of the county, or city or town being a county of itself, within which such poor or other person shall be; and such memorial or statement shall be signed by such person or persons causing the same to be registered and left in the said office of such clerk of the peace, who shall forthwith transmit a duplicate or copy of the same unto the Enrolment Office of the High Court of Chancery."

Deeds, &c. respecting charitable donations already founded to be registered.

The like of charitable donations hereafter founded.

Sect. 2. "Wherever any such charity or charitable donations shall be founded, established, made or benefited, increased or secured by any deed, will, or other instrument hereafter to be made or executed by any person or persons, that then a like memorial or statement, according to the directions hereinbefore contained, shall be registered, and left and transmitted as aforesaid, by such person or persons as are hereinbefore mentioned, within twelve months after the decease of such person or persons by whom any such will, deed or deeds, or other instrument shall have been made or executed."

Clerk of peace to provide books wherein registries to be made.

Sect. 3. "For the purpose of such registries of such memorials or statements, the clerk of the peace for the time being of each and every county, or city or town being a county of itself, or riding within England and Wales, shall, as there shall be occasion, provide proper books of parchment or vellum, wherein such registers shall be made and entered; and every such original memorial or statement, and every such book provided as aforesaid, shall be carefully kept and preserved for public use and inspection in the office to which it shall belong, together with a correct index, to be made from time to time by such clerk of the peace, of such charities and charitable donations, distinguishing each by the name of the original or first donor or founder thereof, where known, or the appellation or title most generally used for such charity or charitable donations."

Notice in London Gazette, if persons benefited be not wholly in one county.

Sect. 4. "In case the persons to be benefited by any such charity or charitable donations as aforesaid shall not be wholly within any one county, then and in such case such clerk of the peace of the county where any such charity or charitable donation shall be registered, shall forthwith notify in the London Gazette the name or title thereof, according to the appellation or title used in the index aforesaid, and the names of the several places wherein the objects of such charity or charitable donations shall be, and the particular or general objects thereof, and also of the name of the county wherein such memorial or statement shall have been registered." 52 Geo. 3, c. 102.

Sect. 5. "If any such charity or charitable donation shall not be duly memorialized, stated and registered according to the provisions of this act, it shall and may be lawful for any two persons or more, interested in such charity or charitable donations, to present a petition to the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper or Lords Commissioners for the custody of the great seal, or Master of the Rolls for the time being, or the Court of Exchequer, complaining thereof; and they are hereby required to hear such petition in a summary way, and upon affidavits, or such other evidence as shall be produced upon such hearing, to determine the same, and to make such order therein, and with respect to the costs of such application and proceedings, as to him or them shall seem fit, and which order shall be final and conclusive." If donations not registered, petition may be presented to Lord Chancellor, &c. complaining thereof.

Sect. 6. "No proceedings under the provisions hereinbefore mentioned shall extend or be construed to extend to decide any right or title as to the property that shall be so registered, or as to the persons who shall be entitled, or claim to be entitled, to the benefit thereof, or any interest therein." No proceedings to decide any right or title.

Sect. 7. "All and every clerk of the peace of the several counties and ridings in England and Wales, shall, as often as required, make searches concerning all memorials and statements directed by this act to be entered in his or their office as aforesaid, and shall also give copies of the same under his hand, if required by any person whatsoever, who shall tender or be willing to pay him the sum or sums hereinafter directed to be allowed to him for such copies of such memorials or statements as aforesaid." Clerk of peace to make searches, and give copies of registers.

Sect. 8. "Every such clerk of the peace shall be allowed for the registering every such memorial or statement as is by this act directed, the sum of four shillings and no more, in case the same do not exceed four hundred words; but if such memorial or statement shall exceed four hundred words, then after the rate and proportion of one shilling an hundred for all the words contained in such entry, and the like fees for the like number of words contained in every copy of any entry given out of the said register, and no more; and for every notification in the London Gazette, the costs of such notification, and the further sum of ten shillings for drawing and inserting the same, and transmitting the duplicate or copy hereinbefore mentioned unto the Enrolment Office of the High Court of Chancery, and no more." Allowance to clerk of peace, and to person inserting notification in Gazette.

Sect. 9. "Where any difficulty shall occur in making and preparing such memorial or statement as aforesaid, so as to render it necessary to employ any longer time than is allowed by the provisions of this act for registering such memorial or statement as hereinbefore is mentioned, it shall and may be lawful for the Court of Quarter Sessions for the county, or city or town being a county of itself, wherein such memorial or statement is intended to be registered, to allow, on application made to them, and on examination of the circumstances, such further time, not exceeding six calendar months, as to such court shall seem necessary to be given for the purpose of duly registering such memorial or statement as hereinbefore is mentioned." Time to be allowed to register memorial where difficulties occur.

Sect. 10. "It shall and may be lawful for the Court of Quarter Sessions of the county, or city or town being a county of itself, wherein such statement or memorial shall have been registered, to allow such reasonable costs and charges attending the preparing and registering, notifying and transmitting such memorial or statement, with reference to the income of the charity or charitable donation, to such person or persons causing the same to be registered, as such Court shall think fit; and it shall and may be lawful for such person or persons who shall have caused such memorial or statement to be registered, to deduct out of the income, funds, rents, and profits in his or their hands of such charity or charitable donation so by him or them memorialized and stated and registered, the sum and sums so allowed, and no more: provided always, that the said Court of Quarter Sessions shall not allow any sum whatever for and in respect of such costs and charges, unless it shall be stated to them upon the declaration in writing of the person or persons applying for such allowance, and signed by him or them, that such memorial Costs of preparing memorials to be allowed.

or statement is, to the best of his, her, or their knowledge and belief, true in every respect, and that it doth contain, to the best of his, her, or their knowledge and belief, a true and full account of the real and personal estate, annual gross income, investment, and the particular or general objects of the charity or charitable donation of which such memorial or statement shall have been registered, together with the names of the respective donors or benefactors thereto, where known, and also of the person or persons in whose custody, possession or control, the deeds, wills, and other instruments hereinbefore mentioned, shall at such time be, and also the names of the trustee or trustees, feoffee or feoffees, possessor or possessors of such real and personal estate: provided always, that none of the provisions hereinbefore contained shall be construed to extend to any charity or charitable donation not issuing out of or secured upon any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or directed by the founder or donor thereof to be secured thereon, or to be permanently invested in government or any public stocks or funds, nor to any charitable donation whatsoever, which by the direction of the donor thereof, or by the lawful rules of any charitable institution whatsoever, may be wholly or in part expended in and about the charitable purposes for which the same may have been given, at the discretion of the governors, directors, managers, or the trustee or trustees of such charitable institution at any time whatsoever."

Not to extend to donations not secured upon lands; nor to charitable institutions.

Not to extend to royal foundations, nor to certain institutions;

Sect. 11. "Nothing in this act shall be construed to extend to any hospital, school, or other charitable institution whatsoever, which shall have been founded, improved, or regulated by or under the authority of the king's most excellent majesty, or any of his royal predecessors, or of any special act of parliament thereunto particularly relating; nor to any charitable donation under the superintendence of any such hospital, school, or institution, nor to the governors of the corporation of the charity for the relief of poor widows and children of clergymen, nor to any friendly society, the rules whereof shall have been confirmed according to the provisions of the act or acts for the encouragement and relief of friendly societies; nor to either of the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge, nor to any college or hall thereto belonging, nor to any charitable bequest, devise, gift, or foundation whatsoever belonging thereto, or under the control, direction, superintendence, or management of the said Universities or either of them, or any college or hall therein respectively; nor to the Radcliffe infirmary within the University of Oxford; nor to the colleges of Westminster, Eton, or Winchester, or any of them; nor to any cathedral or collegiate church within England and Wales; nor to the Charter House; nor to the corporation of the Trinity House of Deptford Strond; nor to any funds applicable to charitable purposes for the benefit of any persons of the Jewish nation."

nor to charitable institutions of Quakers;

Sect. 12. "Nothing in this act contained shall extend to any charitable foundation or donation which shall have been or shall be given to and for the benefit of any person or persons of the society of people called Quakers, and which shall be under the superintendence and control of persons of that persuasion."

nor to charitable foundations, accounts of which are to be passed in Chancery, &c.

Sect. 13. "Nothing in this act contained shall extend to any charity or charitable donation or foundation, the accounts of the income and expenditure whereof shall have been directed to be annually passed in the High Court of Chancery, nor to any charity or charitable donation or foundation, the annual gross income whereof shall not exceed forty shillings, and of which the trustee or trustees, feoffee or feoffees, possessor or possessors, some or one of them, shall within six months after the passing of this act deposit in the hands of the minister of the parish wherein any of the objects of the charity, charitable donation, or foundation, shall be, a written memorial or statement in like form as in the schedule hereunto annexed is contained, and which by such minister shall be forthwith deposited in the parish chest."

Divers charities may be stated in memorial.

Sect. 14. "Where any body corporate, guild, or fraternity, shall be entrusted with the possession or distribution of divers charities or charitable donations or foundations, or of the rents and profits thereof, that in such cases all such charities, charitable donations and foundations, may be registered and stated in one and the same memorial."

Saving clause.

Sect. 15. "Saving always to the king's most excellent majesty, and to all other persons, such power of superintending and regulating charities and charitable establishments, and the property and funds thereof, as they respectively had before the making of this act." 52 Geo. 3, c. 102.

Cheats and False Pretences.

HEREIN of the offence of cheating:—

I. By the Common Law, 591.
II. By Statute 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 53..595
III. By other Statutes, 603.
IV. Forms, 603.

I. By the Common Law.

General doctrine as to what amounts to an offence at common law by a cheat.

Hawkins lays it down, that "cheats, which are punishable by the common law, may in general be described to be deceitful practices, in defrauding or endeavouring to defraud another of his known right, by means of some artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty; as by playing with false dice; or by causing an illiterate person to execute a deed to his prejudice, by reading it over to him in words different from those in which it was written; or by persuading a woman to execute writings to another, as her trustee, upon an intended marriage, which in truth contained no such thing, but only a warrant of attorney to confess a judgment; or by suppressing a will; and such like." (1 Hawk. c. 71, s. 1.) But this general doctrine would include a variety of injuries for which the party's only remedy would be by action, and not by indictment; and it is now, it seems, settled by the various decisions on the subject, that at common law no cheat or fraud (not amounting to felony) is an indictable offence, unless it affects or may affect the public, and is effected by some deceitful and illegal practice, against which common prudence could not have guarded. (See 2 East, P. C. c. 18, s. 2; 2 Russ. C. & M. 282, 286, 3rd ed.)

Therefore, where the defendant was indicted and convicted for selling beer short of the due and just measure, to wit, sixteen gallons as and for eighteen. Upon a motion in arrest of judgment, it was said by the Court, "This is only an inconvenience and injury to a private person, arising from that private person's own negligence and carelessness in not measuring the liquor upon receiving it, to see whether it held the just measure or not. Offences that are indictable must be such as affect the public, as if a man use false weights and measures, and sell by them to all or to any of his customers, or use them in the general course of his dealing; so if there be any conspiracy to cheat; for these are deceptions that common care and prudence are not sufficient to guard against. These are much more than private injuries; they are public offences. But in the present case it is a mere private imposition or deception. No false weights or measures are used; no conspiracy; only an imposition upon the person he was dealing with, in delivering him a less quantity instead of a greater; which the other carelessly accepted. It is only a non-performance of his contract; for which non-performance the other may bring his action. So the selling an unsound horse for a sound one is not indictable. The buyer should be more upon his guard: and the distinction which was laid down, as proper to be attended to in all cases of this kind, is this; that in such impositions or deceits where common prudence may guard persons against their suffering from them, the offence is not indictable; but where false weights and measures are used, or false tokens produced, or such methods taken to cheat and deceive, as people cannot by any ordinary care or prudence be guarded against, there it is an offence indictable." (R. v. Wheatley, 1 Bla. Rep. 273; 2 Burr. 1125, S. C.)

as selling a less quantity than pretended,

So, if without false weights a party sells to another a less quantity than he pretends to sell, it is no offence. (R. v. Young, 3 T. R. 104.)

or bartering bad wine for hats,

So where one person pretended to be a merchant, and the other a broker, and as such bartered bad wine for hats, it was considered that they were guilty of the offence of a conspiracy to cheat, but not of an offence of cheating. (R. v. Mackarty, 2 Ld. Raym. 1179, 1184; 3 Ld. Raym. 325; 2 Burr. 1129; 2 East, P. C. c. 18, s. 1, p. 824.)

or falsely warranting a horse, unless there be a conspiracy.

So falsely warranting an unsound horse to be sound, well knowing it to be otherwise, is no offence, unless there be a conspiracy to defraud, and then an indictment might be supported for a conspiracy. (R. v. Pywell, 1 Stark. 402; and see R. v. Codrington, 1 C. & P. 661, post.)

Nor procuring another to execute a deed to his prejudice.

Nor is it, it seems, an offence to cause an illiterate person to execute a deed to his prejudice, by reading it over to him in words different from those in which it is written, unless there be a conspiracy. (See 2 East, P. C. c. 18, s. 5, p. 823, explaining the case of R. v. Skirret, 1 Sid. 312; 1 Hawk. c. 71, s. 1, and R. v. Parris, 1 Sid. 431.)

Nor cheating at a race.

And though, in the case of Q. v. Orbell, it was held to be an indictable offence to get a person to lay money on a race, and to prevail with the party to run booty; yet the ground of the declaration appears to have been that the offence amounted to a conspiracy. (6 Mod. 42.)

Nor is a bare lie or false affirmation in a private transaction.

So the deceitful receiving of money from one man to the use of another, upon a false pretence of having a message and order to that purpose, is not an offence at common law in a private transaction, because it is accompanied with no manner of artful contrivance, but only depends on a bare naked lie; and it is said to be needless to provide severe laws for such mischiefs, against which common prudence and caution may be a sufficient security. (1 Hawk. c. 71, s. 2; 2 East's P. C. 818.)

1. By the Common Law.

So in a case where a party obtained money of another, by pretending to come by the command of a third person to demand a debt or the like in his name, showing no voucher or token for his authority; it was holden not indictable, for it was the party's own fault to trust him. And by the Court, "We are not to indict one man for making a fool of another: let him bring his action." (R. v. Jones, 2 Ld. Raym. 1013; 1 Salk. 379; 6 Mod. 105, S. C.; and see R. v. Bryan, 2 Strange, 866; R. v. Gibbs, 1 East, 185.)

And the same where a false token used.

And it seems the same doctrine will hold good, though the defendant made use of an apparent token, which in reality is, upon the very face of it, of no more credit than his own assertion. (2 East's P. C. c. 18, s. 2; 2 Russ. C. & M. 3rd ed. 283.) Therefore, where an indictment at common law charged the defendant with deceitfully intending, by divers crafty means and subtle devices, to obtain possession of certain lottery tickets, the property of A., pretending that he wanted to purchase them, and delivered to A. a fictitious order for the payment of money, purporting to be a draft upon a banker for the amount, which he knew he had no authority to draw, and would not be paid; by which he obtained the tickets, and defrauded the prosecutor of the value. It was objected in arrest of judgment, that the defendant was not charged with having used any false token to accomplish the deceit; for that the banker's check, drawn by the defendant himself, entitled him to no more credit than his bare assertion that the money would be paid. And the objection was held good, and the judgment arrested. (R. v. Lara, 6 T. R. 565; and see R. v. Flint, R. & R. 460.)

But in another case, on an indictment on the repealed stat. 30 Geo. II. c. 24, where it appeared that the prisoner had obtained property by giving a draft on his banker and pretending he had cash there to pay it, Bayley, J. (before whom the prisoner was tried) said that this point had been recently before the judges, and that they were all of opinion that it is an indictable offence fraudulently to obtain goods by giving in payment a check upon a banker with whom the party keeps no cash, and which he knows will not be paid. (R. v. Jackson, 3 Camp. 370.)

But frauds affecting the public are frauds against public justice.

On the other hand, all cheats and frauds affecting or which may affect the public, are in general offences at common law, if effected by some deceitful and illegal practice or token, and they be such against which common prudence could not have guarded, and this notwithstanding they arise out of a particular transaction or contract.

Therefore cheats and frauds against the public justice of this realm are offences at common law. (2 East's P. C. c. 18, s. 4.) As where a person, who being committed to gaol under an attachment for a contempt in a civil cause, counterfeited a pretended discharge, as from his creditor, to the sheriff and gaoler, under which he obtained his discharge; he was held guilty of an offence at common law, in thus effecting an interruption to public justice, although the attachment not being for non-payment of money, the order was in itself a mere nullity, and no warrant to the sheriff for the discharge. (R. v. Fawcett, 2 East's P. C. c. 19, ss. 7, 45; and see Omealey v. Newell, 8 East, 364; 1 Russ. C. & M. 275, 3rd ed.; and see, as to falsely personating bail, ante, title "Bail," p. 330.)

Falsely pretending to discharge soldiers.

A person falsely pretending that he had power to discharge soldiers, took money of a soldier to discharge him, and being indicted for the same, the Court held the indictment to be good. (Serlestead's case, 1 Latch. 202.)

Enlistment by an apprentice.

So obtaining the queen's bounty for enlisting as a soldier by an apprentice, reclaimable by his master, is an offence at common law. (R. v. Jones, Coventry Lent Assizes, 1777; 2 East's P. C. 822; 1 Leach, 174.)

Counterfeit pass.

So a person for a counterfeit pass was adjudged to the pillory, and fined. (Dalt. c. 32.)

So the offence will be complete, though the fraud or cheat arise out of a particular transaction or contract with the offender.

1. By the Common Law.

Thus, an indictment lies for wilfully, deceitfully, and maliciously supplying prisoners of war with unwholesome food, not fit to be eaten by man. (Treve's case, 2 East's P. C. 821.)

Selling unwholesome food.

So it has been held an indictable offence at common law for a baker to sell bread containing alum in a shape which renders it noxious, although he gave directions to his servants to mix it up in a manner that would have rendered it harmless. (R. v. Dixon, 4 Camp. 122; 3 M. & Sel. 11, S. C.)

Miller changing corn.

So on an indictment against the defendant, a miller, for changing corn, and returning bad corn instead of it, it was considered maintainable; for being a cheat in the way of trade, it is deemed an offence against the public. (R. v. Wood, 1 Sess. Ca. 217.) But in a later case, it was held not indictable for a miller receiving good barley to grind at his mill, to deliver a musty and unwholesome mixture of oat and barley meal, different from the produce of the barley: and Lord Ellenborough, C. J., there said, "The allegation that the quantity (of meal) delivered was musty and unwholesome, if it had alleged that the defendant delivered it as an article for the food of man, might possibly have sustained the indictment: but I cannot say that its being musty and unwholesome necessarily and ex vi termini imports that it was for the food of man, and it is not stated that it was to be used for the sustentation of man, only that it was a mixture of oat and barley meal. As to the other point, that this is not an indictable offence, because it respects a matter transacted in the course of trade, and where no tokens were exhibited by which the party acquired any greater degree of credit; if the case had been that this miller was owner of a soke mill, to which the inhabitants of the vicinage were bound to resort in order to get their corn ground, and that the miller, observing the confidence of this his situation, had made it a colour for practising a fraud, this might have presented a different aspect; but as it is, it seems no more than the case of a common tradesman, who is guilty of a fraud in a matter of trade or dealing." (R. v. Haynes, 4 M. & Sel. 214.)

False weights.

If a person sell by false weights, though only to one person, it is an indictable cheat; but it would be otherwise if he sold without false weights a less quantity than he pretended to sell, unless he used any artful method to cheat. (R. v. Young, 3 T. R. 104; and see R. v. Nicholson, cited in R. v. Wheatley, ante, 592; and R. v. Dunnage, 2 Burr. 1130.)

Using false dice.

Cheating by means of false dice, &c., is an offence at common law. (R. v. Leeser, Cro. Jac. 497; R. v. Maddox, 2 Roll. R. 107.) It is also now an offence by statute; see "Gaming," Vol. III. p. 311, 314.)

A minor going about pretending to be of age.

As there are frauds which may be relieved civilly, and not punished criminally (with the complaints whereof the courts of equity do generally abound); so there are other frauds, which in a special case may not be helped civilly, and yet shall be punished criminally: thus if a minor go about the town, and pretending to be of age, defraud many persons by taking credit for considerable quantities of goods, and then insist on his nonage; the persons injured cannot recover the value of their goods, but they may indict and punish him for a common cheat. (Barl. 100.)

False news.

Writers of false news are indictable for it as an offence at common law; and it would perhaps be held at the present day that the fabrication of false news, calculated to produce any public detriment, would be an offence. (See Stark. Libel, 546; 2 Russ. C. & M. 278.)

Form of indictment.

As regards the form of the indictment, where the fraud has been effected by false tokens, and the offence is so charged, the false tokens must be specified and set forth. It is not sufficient to allege generally that the cheat was effected by certain false tokens or false pretences. (2 East's P. C. c. 18, s. 13, p. 837.)

But it does not seem to be necessary to describe them more particularly than they were shown or described to the party at the time, and in consequence of which he was imposed upon; and it is also said not to be necessary to make any express allegation that the facts set forth show a false token. (2 East's P. C. c. 18, s. 13, p. 838.)

An objection appears to have been made to one of the counts of an indictment for a cheat at common law, that it charged the false pretence to have been made to one person, and the deceit to have been practised on a different person. (Lara's case, 2 Leach, 647.) But see R. v. Douglas, 1 Campb. 212, post, 601, where the pretence was made to a servant, but the money of the mistress obtained.

1. By the Common Law.

The offence is punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, like any other misdemeanor. (1 Hawk. c. 71, s. 3.)

Punishment.

II. By Statute 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 53.

Stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 53, after reciting that "a failure of justice frequently arises from the subtle distinction between larceny and fraud," enacts "that if any person shall by any false pretence obtain from any other person any chattel, money, or valuable security, with intent to cheat or defraud any person of the same, every such offender shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be transported beyond the seas for the term of seven years, or to suffer such other punishment, by fine or imprisonment, or by both, as the Court shall award: provided always that if, upon the trial of any person indicted for such misdemeanor, it shall be proved that he obtained the property in question in any such manner as to amount in law to larceny, he shall not by reason thereof be entitled to be acquitted of such misdemeanor, (a) and no such indictment shall be removable by certiorari; and no person tried for such misdemeanor shall be liable to be afterwards prosecuted for larceny upon the same facts." (See the general clauses affecting all the provisions of this act, post, "Larceny," Vol. III.)

Obtaining money, &c. by false pretences a misdemeanor.

Punishment.

No acquittal if offender found guilty of larceny.

No certiorari.

Not to be tried for a larceny if tried for the misdemeanor.

To the punishment of imprisonment may be added hard labour for the whole or any part of the term, also solitary confinement; (7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 4:) such confinement not exceeding one month at any one time, nor three months in any one year; 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 5. (See tit. "Larceny," post, Vol. III.)

Hard labour.

Solitary confinement.

Formerly where goods had been obtained from another by mere fraud the Court had no power of awarding restitution on conviction of the offender, as in cases of felony; (Parker v. Patrick, 5 T. R. 175; R. v. De Veaux, 2 Leach, 585;) though the obtaining goods by false pretences did not in general change the property in the goods. (Noble v. Adams, 7 Taunt. 59; Stevenson v. Hart, 4 Bingh. 476.) But this is now remedied by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 57, which see, tit. "Larceny," Vol. III.

Restitution of the goods obtained.

What a False Pretence within the Act.]—In general any false pretence of an existing fact, made with the fraudulent intent of obtaining from another any part of his property, is within the act.

What a false pretence within the act.

If a man be authorised to inspect and pay a number of journeymen, and to draw on the clerk of the masters for the amount of the sums earned, and he delivers in a false account, and draws on the clerk for the amount in such false account, he will be guilty under the statute; as he would never have obtained the credit unless he had delivered his fictitious estimate. (R. v. Witchell, 2 East, P. C. 830.)

In general.

So would a carrier, if he obtains money by pretending to have delivered goods and to have lost the receipt given him by the person to whom they were directed. (R. v. Airey, 2 East's Rep. 30; R. v. Coleman, 2 East's P. C. 672.)

So in the case of R. v. Count Villeneuve, 1778, cited in 3 T. R. 98, which was tried before Morton, C. J., of Chester, and Buller, J., at Chester; the defendant applied to Sir T. Brougton, telling him that he was instructed by the Duke de Lauzun to take some horses from Ireland to London, and that he had been detained so long by contrary winds that his money was spent. Sir T. Broughton was thereupon induced to advance some money to him, but it afterwards appearing that the whole story was a fiction, the defendant was tried for a cheat on the now repealed stat. 30 Geo. II. and convicted: the judgment was affirmed.

(a) Before this enactment, if it appeared the offence amounted to larceny, the defendant was acquitted, and very nice questions arise as to what amounts to larceny where false pretences are used (See R. v. Pear, 2 East's P. C. 689; R. v. Adams, R. & R. 225.)

2. By Statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29.

So if a person procuring a tradesman to sell him goods as for ready money, direct him to send his servant with them to his lodgings, and then deliver fabricated bills in payment, retaining the goods, though he cannot be prosecuted for felony in stealing them, he may be found guilty under the act of obtaining them by false pretences. (2 Leach, 614.)

Obtaining money from the county treasurer by a forged order, purporting to be signed by a magistrate, for payment of expenses of conveying vagrants, is an offence within the act. (R. v. Rushworth, R. & Ry. 317; 1 Stark. 396, S. C.)

So is obtaining money from the keeper of a post office, by assuming to be the person mentioned in a money order which the party presented for payment. (R. v. Story, R. & R. 81.)

Pretending a security to be valid.

A party pretending that his own bill, note, check, or other security is a good and valid one, may be a false pretence within the act, as if a party pretend that his own check is a valid security when it is drawn upon a banker with whom he never kept an account. (R. v. Parker, 7 C. & P. 825; R. v. Jackson, 3 Camp. 370.) So obtaining as a loan from the drawer of a bill accepted by the prisoner and negotiated by the drawer, part of the amount for the purpose of paying the bill under the false pretence that the prisoner was prepared with the residue of the amount, has been held a false pretence within the act, the prisoner being shown not to be so prepared and not intending so to apply the money. (Rex v. Crossley, 2 M. & Rob. 17.) But where the indictment stated that the prisoner contriving, &c. to cheat A. B., falsely pretended to A. B. that he was a captain in the East India Company's service, and that a certain promissory note which he then delivered to A. B., was a valuable security for 21*l.*, by means of which false pretences he fraudulently obtained from A. B. 8*l.* 15*s.*, whereas the prisoner was not a captain, &c., and the note was not a valuable security, &c.; it was held, as it did not appear but that the note was not the prisoner's own promissory note, or that he knew it to be worthless, there was no sufficient false pretence in that respect, and, as the two pretences were to be taken together, that the indictment was bad, and judgment given upon it was reversed in error. (R. v. Wickham, 2 Per. & D. 333; 10 Ad. & Ell. 39, S. C.) And obtaining credit in account from the party's own banker, by drawing a bill on a person on whom the party has no right to draw, and which has no chance of being paid, is not within the act, though the banker pays money for him in consequence thereof to an extent he would not otherwise have done. (R. v. Wavell, R. & M. C. C. 224.) As to uttering a forged instrument, see post, 598.)

The pretence must be of an existing fact.

But the pretence must be of some existing fact, made for the purpose of inducing the prosecutor to part with his property. Therefore, a pretence that the party would do an act he did not mean to do, as a pretence to pay for goods on delivery, is not a false pretence within the act, but merely a promise for future conduct. (R. v. Goodhall, R. & R. 461; R. v. Clifford, K. B. 1824.) And it seems that a false representation as to a future event is not within the act. (See R. v. Parker, 2 Mood. C. C. 1; 7 C. & P. 825, S. C.)

An indictment for false pretences against H. and B. charged that F. P. was possessed of a mare, and H. of a horse, and that H. and B. falsely pretended to F. P. that B. "was then and there possessed of a certain sum of money, to wit, the sum of 12*l.*," and that if F. P. would exchange his mare for H.'s horse, B. was willing and ready to purchase the horse of F. P. and give him 12*l.* for it, "whereas in truth and in fact the said B. was not then and there possessed of the said sum of 12*l.*," and was not then and there ready and willing to purchase the said horse: It was held, that the indictment was bad, as it did not aver that the defendants knew that B. was not possessed of 12*l.* (R. v. Henderson, 1 C. & Marsh. 328.)

So it does not lie for obtaining money by offering to tell a person who had lost some horses where they were, and then refusing to tell, without an averment and proof that the prisoner pretended he knew where they were, but that he did not know. (R. v. Douglas, Lincoln Summer Assizes, 1835, R. & M. C. C. 462, S. C.)

2. By Statute 7 & 8 Geo. 1, c. 29.

A mere breach of contract, though the promise was as to a fact existing at the time it was made, will not be a false pretence within the act. Where the prisoner sold to the prosecutor a reversionary interest which he had previously sold to another, and the prosecutor took a regular assignment of it with the usual covenant for title, Littledale, J., held, that he could not be convicted for obtaining money by false pretences; for if this were within the statute, every breach of warranty or false assertion at the time of a bargain might be treated as such, and the party be transported. (R. v. Codrington, 1 C. & P. 661.) And see as to how far cheating on a contract may be an offence at common law, ante, 592. A false warrantry of a horse would not be such offence, id. If the parties were guilty of a conspiracy then they might be indicted for that offence, id.

Mere breach of contract.

Where the indictment charged that the defendant, having in his possession a certain weight of twenty-eight pounds, falsely pretended to C. that a quantity of coals, which he delivered to C., weighed sixteen hundred weight, (meaning 1792 pounds weight), and were worth 1*l.*, and that the weight was fifty-six pounds, by means of which he obtained a sovereign from C. with intent to defraud him of part thereof, to wit, 10*s.*; whereas the coals did not weigh 1792 pounds, and were not worth 1*l.*, and whereas the weight was not fifty-six pounds, and whereas the coals were of the weight of 896 pounds only, and were not worth more than 10*s.*, and whereas the weight was twenty-eight pounds only; the judges held a conviction on the indictment wrong, on the ground that all the pretences, except that relating to the weight, were mere false affirmations, and that, as to the weight, there was no allegation to connect the sale of the coals with the use of the weight. (R. v. Reed, 7 C. & P. 848.)

An attorney who had appeared for a person who was fined 2*l.* on a summary conviction, called on the person's wife and told her that he had been with another person, who was fined 2*l.* for a like offence to Mr. B. and Mr. L., and that he had prevailed on Mr. B. and Mr. L., to take 1*l.* instead of 2*l.*, and that if she would give him 1*l.* he would go and do the same for her. She gave the attorney a sovereign, and afterwards paid him for his trouble. It was proved that the attorney never applied to either Mr. B. or Mr. L. respecting either of the fines, and that both were afterwards paid in full: it was held that the attorney was guilty of obtaining money by false pretences. (R. v. Asterley, 7 C. & P. 191.)

Obtaining money in character of an attorney.

There may be a sufficient false pretence within the act by the acts and conduct of the party, without any verbal representations of a false and fraudulent nature. As where a person at Oxford, who was not a member of the university, went for the purpose of fraud in a commoner's dress and obtained goods, this was held a sufficient false pretence though he said nothing false. (R. v. Bernard, 7 C. & P. 784. And see R. v. Wickham, ante, 596.)

No verbal representation necessary to constitute a false pretence.

So if a man assume the name of another to whom money is required to be paid by a genuine instrument, this is within the act. (R. v. Story, Russ. & Ry. 81.) The prisoner paid his addresses to the prosecutrix, and obtained a promise of marriage from her, which promise she afterwards refused to ratify. He then threatened her with an action, and by this means obtained money from her. During the whole of the transactions the prisoner had a wife. On an indictment against him for obtaining money under false pretences, the pretences laid were, first, that he was unmarried; secondly, that he was entitled to bring and maintain his action against her for a breach of promise of marriage; it was held, that the fact of the prisoner paying his addresses was sufficient evidence for the jury on which they might find the first pretence, that the prisoner was a single man and in a condition to marry; and that there was sufficient evidence on which to find the falseness of the other pretence, that he was entitled to maintain his action for breach of promise of marriage, and that such latter false pretence was a sufficient false pretence within the statute. (Reg. v. Copeland, 1 C. & Marsh. 516.) We have already seen that if a person obtain goods from another upon giving him in payment his check upon a banker, with whom in fact he has no account, this is a false pretence within the act.

The fact of uttering a counterfeit note as a genuine note is tantamount to a representation that it was so. And where a man obtained goods and money for a forged note of hand for ten shillings and sixpence, it was held a false pretence within the act. (R. v. Freeth, R. & R. 127.) In a more recent case, however, where the prisoner obtained goods by means of a forged order, Taunton, J., is reported to have held that he could not be indicted for obtaining them by false pretences, but should have been indicted for forgery. (R. v. Evans, 5 C. & P. 553.)

The pretence must be false,

The pretence must be false and wilfully so. Where the defendants were charged with obtaining money by colour and pretence of their being collectors of the property tax, and it appeared in evidence that they had in fact been appointed collectors by the commissioners, though in an informal manner: this was holden not to be a false pretence, within the meaning of the act. (R. v. Dobson, 7 East, 218.) Where the prisoner passed for money the note of a country bank which he knew had stopped payment, it appearing that one of the parties was solvent, Gaselee, J., held that he could not be convicted. (R. v. Spencer, 3 C. & P. 420.) See further as to the pretences being partially false, post, 600.

and for the purpose of defrauding prosecutor of his property;

The pretence must be for the purpose of obtaining the property of another, to cheat and defraud him of it. A pretence to a parish officer, as an excuse for not working, that the party has not clothes, when he really has, though it induce the officer to give him clothes, is not a pretence within the statute, the statement being rather a false excuse for not working, than a false pretence to obtain goods. (R. v. Wakeling, R. & R. 504.) A. owed B. a debt, of which B. could not get payment. C., a servant of B., went to A.'s wife and obtained two sacks of malt of her, saying that B. had bought them of A. C. knew this to be false, but took the malt to B. his master, to enable him to pay himself the debt. It was held, that if C. did not intend to defraud A., but merely to put it into his master's power to compel A. to pay him a just debt, C. ought not to be convicted of obtaining the malt by false pretences. (R. v. Williams, 7 C. & P. 354.) The intent may be implied sufficiently from the facts of the case.

and must be calculated to obtain the property.

The pretence must, it would seem, be such as is calculated to induce the party to whom it is made to part with his property, and whether it is so calculated is perhaps a question for a jury. But it need not be such against which common prudence might have guarded. (See per Denman, C. J., in R. v. Wickham, 10 Ad. & Ell. 34; 2 Russ. C. & M. 289, 3rd ed. And see R. v. Smith, post, 598.)

Where the defendants, falsely pretending that they had made a bet with A. B. that one of them should run ten miles within an hour, prevailed upon J. N. to join them in the bet, and obtained from him twenty guineas as his share in it; the judges held this to be within the statute, notwithstanding the pretence was probably one against which common prudence might have guarded. (R. v. Young, in error, 3 T. R. 98. And see R. v. Smith, post, 598.)

An indictment for false pretences charged in the first count that the defendant "unlawfully did falsely pretend to one J. L. that he, the said J. T. (the defendant), was sent by W. P. for an order to go to J. B. for a pair of shoes," by means of which false pretence he did obtain from J. B. a pair of shoes, of the goods and chattels of J. B., with intent to defraud J. L. of the price of the said shoes, to wit, nine shillings, of the monies of J. L. The second count charged that he falsely pretended to J. L. that W. P. had said that J. L. was to give him, the said J. T. (the defendant), an order to go to J. B. for a pair of shoes, by means of which false pretence he did obtain from J. B., in the name of J. L., a pair of shoes of the goods of J. B., with intent to defraud J. L. of the same. It was held, that both of these counts were bad in arrest of judgment, as neither of them charged a sufficient false pretence within the statute. (Reg. v. Fully, 9 Car. & P. 227.)

2. By Statute, 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29.

A defendant was charged in the first count of an indictment with having falsely pretended that he was Mr. H. who had cured Mrs. C. at the Oxford infirmary, and thereby obtaining one sovereign, with intent to defraud G. P. "of the same." The second count laid the intent to be to defraud G. P. "of the sum of 5*s.*" parcel of the value of the said last-mentioned piece of the current gold coin." It was proved that the defendant made the pretence and thereby induced the prosecutor to buy, at the price of 5*s.*, a bottle containing something which he said would cure the eye of the prosecutor's child. The prosecutor gave him a sovereign and received 15*s.* in change. It was further proved that the defendant was not Mr. H. It was held, that this was a false pretence within the act, and that the intent was properly laid in the second count. (Reg. v. Bloomfield, 1 C. & Marsh. 537.)

Laying a plan against defendant.

If a party obtain money by a false pretence, knowing it to be false at the time, it is no answer to show that the party from whom he obtained the money laid a plan to entrap him into the commission of the offence. (R. v. Ady, 7 C. & P. 140.)

Property must be obtained by means of the pretence.

Property must be obtained by the false Pretence.]—The property must be obtained by means of the false pretence charged. The prisoner was charged with obtaining a filly by the false pretence that he was a gentleman's servant, and had lived at Brecon, and had bought twenty horses in Brecon fair. It appeared that he bought the filly of the prosecutor for 11*l.*, making him this statement which was false, and also telling him that he would come down to the Cross Keys and pay him. The prosecutor stated that he parted with his filly because he expected the prisoner would come to the Cross Keys and pay him, and not because he believed that the prisoner was a gentleman's servant, &c. It was held, that if the prosecutor did not part with his filly by reason of the false pretence charged or any part of it, the prisoner must be acquitted. (R. v. Date, 7 C. & P. 352.)

And where the prisoner obtained money through the imprudence of the prosecutor and not by means of the false pretences used, it was held no offence. (R. v. George Smith, Hereford Spring Assizes, 1832, 2 Russ. C. & M. 312, 3rd ed.)

A person endeavouring by a counterfeit letter to defraud another of goods, and being apprehended on suspicion of such fraud before he got the goods into his possession, would not be guilty of an offence within the act. (R. v. Brian, 2 Sess. Ca. 27. See R. & R. 107, n.; R. v. Phillips, 6 East, 464.) But he might be indicted for the attempt to defraud. (See "Attempts," ante.)

Nature of the property obtained.

What Property is within the Act.]—The statute requires the property to be a chattel, money, or valuable security. The 5th section defines what shall be deemed a valuable security. See it, title "Larceny," Vol. III.

If a bill of exchange or the like be obtained, it must appear to be duly stamped. Where a prisoner by false pretence obtained a check on a banker on unstamped paper, payable to D. F. J., and not payable to bearer, this was held not a valuable security, as it would have been a breach of the law for the banker to pay it. (R. v. Yates, R. & M. 170.)

Where, to induce his bankers to pay his checks, a defendant drew a bill on a person on whom he had no right to draw, and which had no chance of being paid, in consequence of which the bankers paid money for him; it was holden not to be within the act, because he only obtained credit, and not any specific sum on the bill. (R. v. Wavell, R. & M. 224.)

The indictment for. Venue.

The Indictment for.]—As to the venue in general, see "Indictment," Vol. III. Before the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 12, it was decided the venue should be laid in the county where the money was obtained, and not where the false pretences were used. (R. v. Burdett, 4 Barn. & Ald. 179.) But by that statute it might be laid in either county.

Several defendants.

Several defendants may be included in the same indictment, if they were

2. By Statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29.

all jointly concerned in the false pretence used. (See Young and others v. Rex in error, 3 T. R. 98.) And in general, on an indictment against two, charging them with a joint offence, either may be found guilty. But they cannot be found guilty separately of separate parts of the charge; yet if they be found guilty separately upon a pardon or nolle prosequi, as to one who stands second upon the verdict, judgment may be given against the other. (2 Russ. C. & M. 309, 3rd ed., citing R. v. Hempstead, M. T. 1818, R. & R. 344, S. C.) In R. v. Martin, 8 Ad. & Ell. 481, a husband and wife were jointly convicted of the offence

Several charges.

So several charges of misdemeanor may be included in the same indictment. (Young v. Rex, in error, supra.)

Must state the false pretences.

It is necessary to set forth the false pretences employed by the defendant, as they will appear at the trial, in order that the Court may see what they are, and judge whether they are within the act. (R. v. Mason, 2 T. R. 581; R. v. Plestow, 1 Camp. 495; R. v. Fuller, 2 East's P. C. c. 18, s. 13, p. 837; R. v. Munox, 1 Sess. Ca. 201; 2 Stra. 1127.)

In R. v. Mason (2 T. R. 581), the defendant was indicted for obtaining money by false pretences; and on his trial at the sessions at Worcester he was convicted, and received sentence of transportation for seven years. The defendant brought a writ of error, and assigned for error, that it did not appear by the indictment what the particular and specific false pretences were, by which he obtained the money. Buller, J. "The question is not a new one: I remember a case when I was at the bar, and I argued it on the analogy to the case in Strange for obtaining a note by false tokens, which entirely governs this. That was a case on the stat. 33 Hen. VIII. c. 1, which makes it an offence to obtain money or goods by false tokens. The stat. 30 Geo. II. c. 24, only enlarges the description of the offence in the statute of Hen. VIII. Both statutes are made in pari materiâ, and whatever has been determined in the construction of one of them is a sound rule of construction for the other. The judgment was arrested in the case in Strange, because the indictment did not specify the false tokens; then, by the same reason, an indictment on stat. 30 Geo. II. c. 24, which speaks of false pretences, must state what the false pretences are, otherwise the indictment is bad; there is no distinction between the two cases, the same objection which held in the one must also prevail in the other. I am of opinion that the objection is fatal." Grose, J., of the same opinion; observing, "that this is a charge for a precise crime, and therefore it must be alleged." Judgment reversed, and the defendant ordered to be set at liberty.

But sufficient to state them in the terms in which they were made.

But the false pretences need not be described more particularly than they were shown or described to the party at the time, and in consequence of which he was imposed on; nor is it necessary to make any express allegation that the facts set forth show a false token or a false pretence. (R. v. Terry, Cro. Car. 564, 3 T. R. 102; 2 East's P. C. 837.)

And where an objection was taken that the pretence was not stated with sufficient certainty, inasmuch as a wager therein mentioned was stated only to have been made "with a colonel in the army then at Bath," without setting forth the colonel's name. But the objection was overruled, and Lord Kenyon, C. J., said that the charge was sufficiently certain to enable the defendants to know what they were called upon to answer for, and that perhaps the colonel's name, with whom the wager was stated to have been made, was not mentioned, in which case he could not have been described with greater accuracy. And further, that if such a wager had been actually depending, it was competent to the defendants to have proved it in their defence. (See R. v. Young, ante, 598.)

Or according to their effect.

It seems also that the very words used by the defendant need not be stated, and that it will suffice to state the effect of the pretence. (R. v. Scott, 2 Russ. C. & M. 307, 3rd ed., cited in R. v. Parker, ante, 596.)

Need not in express words allege that defendant did "falsely pretend."

Where the indictment alleged that the defendant unlawfully, knowingly, and designedly pretended certain things, "by means of which said false pretences" he obtained the money; and in the subsequent part of the indictment all the pretences were averred to be false; this averment was held sufficient, without averring that the defendant "did falsely pretend," &c. (R. v. Airey, 2 East's Rep. 30; 2 East's P. C. 831; Deacon's Dig. 233.)

2. By statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29.

So it seems sufficient to allege that the defendant did knowingly and designedly obtain the money or the goods by such and such pretences, (stating them,) and then to aver that those pretences were false. (Id.; R. v. Howarth, 3 Stark. 26.)

But the indictment must negative by special averment the truth of the pretences. It is not enough to charge that the defendant falsely pretended, &c. (setting forth the pretences) by means of which said false pretences he obtained the money, &c.; therefore for want of such averment in the indictment, the Court of Queen's Bench reversed the judgment (R. v. Perrott, 2 M. & Sel. 379.) As to when proof of part of the false pretences charged will suffice, see post, 602.

But must expressly aver that the pretences were false.

In some cases the indictment should allege that defendant knew the falsity of the pretence. A defendant was convicted on an indictment for obtaining money by offering to tell a person who had lost some horses where they were, and then refusing to tell, and that he could not tell. The conviction was held bad, as the indictment ought to have stated that prisoner pretended he knew where the horses were. (R. v. Douglas, Lincoln Summ. Assizes, 1835, ante, 597.)

And sometimes that defendant knew them to be so.

An indictment for false pretences against H. and B. charged that F. P. was possessed of a mare and H. of a horse, and that H. and B. falsely pretended to F. P. that B. "was then and there possessed of a certain sum of money, to wit, the sum of 12*l.*," and that if F. P. would exchange his mare for H.'s horse, B. was willing to purchase the horse of F. P., and give him 12*l.* for it; "whereas in truth and in fact the said B. was not then and there possessed of the said sum of 12*l.*," and was not then and there ready and willing to purchase the said horse; it was held that the indictment was bad, as it did not aver that the defendants knew that B. was not possessed of 12*l.* (Reg. v. Henderson, 1 Car. & M. 328.)

An indictment that defendant "unlawfully, knowingly, and designedly did "feloniously pretend," has been held to be bad. (R. v. Walker, 6 C. & P. 657, sed quære, and see R. v. Parradice, R. & R. 205, title "Fish," Vol. III. p. 54.)

"Feloniously" pretend, held bad

An indictment for a fraud at common law, charging the false pretence to have been made to one person, and the deceit to have been practised on a different person, was held bad. (R. v Lara, 2 Leach, 647; 2 East's P. C. 819, 824; 6 T. R. 565, S. C.) But see R. v. Douglas, 1 Camp. 212, where the pretence was made to a servant, but the money of the master was obtained.

Statement as to whom the pretence was made.

The intent to cheat should be stated in every material part of the indictment. An indictment for presenting a forged order to W. L. treasurer, &c. pretending it was genuine, and obtaining from W. L, under it, 4*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* after charging that the prisoner, with intent to cheat, &c. the treasurer presented the order, and that he knowingly, &c. pretended it was a genuine order, proceeded, "and so the jurors, &c. say, that the prisoner, on, &c. did obtain the said sum of, &c ;" but the intent to cheat and defraud W. L. was not stated in this part of the indictment, nor was the obtaining charged to have been effected knowingly and designedly: the indictment was held bad. (R. v. Rushworth, 1 Stark. 396; R. & R. 317, S. C.)

Must state an intent to defraud.

The property which the defendant obtained should be stated accurately. It may be described in the same manner as in an indictment for larceny, see "Larceny," Vol. III.

Statement of property.

The statement as to who was the owner of the property should be according to the fact, or a variance would be fatal. As to the statement of the ownership of property in particular instances of partners, counties, parishes, turnpike and other trustees, &c. see the enactments of the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, title "Indictment," Vol. III. And generally the indictment is not good unless in addition to the false pretences it contains the requisites of a count for larceny, and if it do not allege the money, &c. obtained to be the property of any person, it will not be sufficient, inasmuch as it could not in that state be pleaded as a bar to a subsequent indictment for larceny, which the offence is made by the proviso contained in the 53rd section. (Reg. v. Norton, 8 Car. & P. 196.) And this defect is not aided by verdict, but the indictment is bad on error. (Reg. v. Martin, 8 Ad. & Ell. 481.)

Certiorari.]—The statute (sect. 53) expressly takes away the right to a certiorari in all indictments for obtaining money by any false pretence. (Reg. v. Butcher, 9 Dowl. 135.) However, where counts are joined on this act with counts for a conspiracy at common law, to obtain goods by false pretences, the certiorari is not taken away. (R. v. Saunders, 5 D. & R. 611; and see R. v. Fowler, 1 Ad. & Ell. 836; and ante, "Certiorari," p. 555.)

Evidence.

The Evidence.]—The necessary evidence may, for the most part, be elicited from the foregoing observations and decisions.

If the false pretence be in writing, it may be proved by secondary evidence if the paper be lost before the trial. (R. v. Chadwick, 6 C. & P. 18.)

The false pretences must be proved as laid; for here it was alleged that the defendant said he had paid a sum of money into the Bank of England, and it was proved in evidence that he merely alleged "the money has been paid into the bank," the variance was holden fatal. (R. v. Plestow, 1 Camp. 494.) But a basket is sufficiently described in the proceedings, under the general term "parcel." (R. v. Douglas, 1 Campb. 212.) On an indictment for delivering in payment of a horse certain promissory notes, which the prisoner knew to be not good nor of any value, the notes purported to be of a country bank, which was supposed to have failed; it was held, that at all events it was necessary to prove that the notes were bad and of no value. (R. v. Flint, R. & R. C. C. 460. See R. v. Spencer, 3 C. & P. 420.)

If the indictment charge the defendant with having attempted to obtain money by means of a paper writing purporting to be an order for money, and the instrument cannot be considered as stated in the indictment to be such an order, it is bad. (R. v. Cartwright, R. & R. 106.)

But it is not necessary to prove the whole of the pretence charged; proof of part of the pretence, and that the money was obtained by that part, will suffice. (R. v. Hill, R. & R. 190; per Patteson, J. in R. v. Adey, 7 C. & P. 140; per Coleridge, J. in R. v. Dale, 7 C. & P. 352.) This, however, must be confined to cases where the part not proved is a separate and independent pretence; for if the false pretences are so connected together in the record that one cannot be separated from the other and the statement of one of those pretences is insufficient in point of law, no judgment can be given upon the other pretence. (R. v. Wickham, 10 A. & E. 34; ante, 596.)

Formerly, if the evidence proved not only an intent to cheat or defraud, but also established a pre-existing animus furandi, and a constructive taking, such as to constitute larceny, the misdemeanor being merged in the felony, the defendant was entitled to his acquittal. (R. v. Pear, 2 East, P. C. 689.) But now by stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 53, (ante, 595,) the defendant may be convicted, although it appear at the trial that the offence amounts to larceny, and not merely to obtaining money, &c. by false pretences. The safer course, therefore, to adopt, where it is doubtful whether the offence is larceny, or obtaining goods under a false pretence, is to indict for the misdemeanor; in which case, if the offence should turn out to be larceny, the prisoner may nevertheless be convicted by force of the statute. These two offences are sometimes difficult to be distinguished in cases where there has been a constructive taking; but the difficulties arising from this circumstance appear to be obviated by the statute. (Jervis, Arch. C. L. 9th edit. 299.)

III. By other Statutes.

There are also various other statutes besides the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, protecting the public and parties against the cheats and frauds of others, which will be found noticed under their proper titles in other parts of this work. By other statutes.

As to the offence of a bankrupt's obtaining goods under a false pretence of carrying on business in the ordinary course of trade, see ante, "Bankrupt," p. 364. Bankrupts.

As to fraudulent omissions by an insolvent in his schedule, see "Insolvent," Vol. III. Insolvents.

As to frauds and cheats by servants and others in trades, see "Servants," Vol. V. Servants.

As to giving false characters to servants, see "Servants," Vol. V.

As to apprentices fraudulently enlisting themselves, see "Military Law," Vol. V. p. 117.

As to frauds by the false personation of soldiers, see "Military Law," Vol. V. p. 139; and of sailors, see "Seamen," Vol. V.

As to the false personation of bail, see ante, "Bail," p. 330. Bail.

As to frauds by gaming, see "Gaming," Vol. III. p. 311, 314. Gaming.

As to false weights, see "Weights and Measures," Vol. VI. Weights.

As to the offence of telling fortunes, see "Witchcraft," Vol. VI. Fortune-telling.

There are several enactments respecting particular persons and things, which make the obtaining of property under a particular species of fraud a larceny, and which will be found considered, post, "Larceny," Vol. III. And amongst these are frauds of agents, servants, lodgers, manufacturers, and persons employed in public offices. Larceny.

By the 13 Eliz. c. 5, fraudulent conveyances, judgments, &c. are declared void, and the parties to them are made subject to a forfeiture of a year's value of the lands, &c. and to imprisonment for half a year. See 1 Chit. Stat. 385. Fraudulent conveyances.

And stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4, enacts, that fraudulent conveyances made to deceive purchasers shall be void, and that the parties thereto shall forfeit a year's value of the lands, &c., and be imprisoned for half a year.

1. Infants, how far liable.

I. How far liable for Crimes, &c.

Infant, who.

By an infant or minor, is meant any one who is under the age of twenty-one years. (1 Inst. 2.)

Committing a capital offence under seven.

Within seven years of age there can be no guilt whatsoever of any capital offence; the infant may be chastised by his parents or tutors, but cannot be capitally punished, because he cannot be guilty; and if he be indicted for such an offence as is in its nature capital, he must be acquitted. (1 Hale, 19, 20; 4 Bla. Com. 23.)

Under fourteen.

It has indeed been said, generally, that those who are under a natural disability of distinguishing between good and evil, as infants under the age of fourteen years, which is called the age of discretion, are not punishable by any criminal prosecution whatsoever. But this must be understood with some allowance; for if it appear by the circumstances that an infant under the age of discretion, and of the age of seven or upwards, could distinguish between good and evil, as if one of the age of nine or ten years kill another and hide the body, or make excuses, or hide himself, he may be convicted and condemned, and forfeit as much as if he were of full age. But in such case the judges will in prudence respite the execution in order to get a pardon; (see "Pardon," Vol. V.;) and it is said, that if an infant, apparently wanting discretion, be indicted and found guilty of felony, the justices themselves may dismiss him without a pardon. And in general it must be left to the discretion of the judge, upon the circumstances of the case, how far an infant, under that age, is capax doli, or hath knowledge to discern betwixt good and evil. (Hale's Sum. 43; 1 Hawk. c. 1, s. 8; 1 Hale, 18; 4 Bla. Com. 24; and see R. v. Wild, 1 Mood. C. C. 452.)

Respiting execution for a pardon.

In a modern case it was considered, that if a child, more than seven and under fourteen years of age, is indicted for felony, it should be left to the jury to say, whether the offence was committed by the prisoner; and if so, whether, at the time of the offence, the prisoner had a guilty knowledge that he or she was doing wrong. And the presumption of law is, that a child of that age has not such guilty knowledge, unless the contrary be proved by the evidence. (R. v. Owen, 4 C. & P. 236.)

The following is an important case as to the capability of an infant of ten years old to commit the crime of murder, and as to the expediency of visiting such an offender with capital punishment.

Case of murder by a boy ten years old.

At Bury Summer Assizes, 1748, (Fost. 70,) William York, a boy of ten years of age, was convicted before Lord Chief Justice Willes, for the murder of a girl of about five years of age, and received sentence of death. But the Chief Justice, out of regard to the tender years of the prisoner, respited execution till he should have an opportunity of taking the opinion of the rest of the judges, whether it were proper to execute him or not, upon the special circumstances of the case; which he reported to the judges as follows:—The boy and girl were parish children, but under the care of a parishioner, at whose house they were lodged and maintained. On the day the murder happened, the man of the house and his wife went out to their work early in the morning, and left the children in bed together. When they returned from work, the girl was missing; and the boy being asked what was become of her, answered, that he had helped her up, and put on her clothes, and that she was gone he knew not whither. Upon this, strict search was made in the ditches and pools of water near the house, from an apprehension that the child might have fallen into the water. During this search, the man, under whose care the children were, observed that a heap of dung near the house had been newly turned up. And, upon removing the upper part of the heap, he found the body of the child, about a foot's depth under the surface, cut and mangled in a most barbarous and horrid manner. Upon this discovery, the boy, who was the only person capable of committing the act that was left at home with the child, was charged with the fact, which he stiffly denied. When the coroner's jury met, the boy was again charged, but persisted still to deny the fact. At length, being closely interrogated, he fell to crying, and said he would tell the whole truth. He then said, that the child had been used to foul herself in bed; that she did so that morning; (which was not true, for the bed was searched, and found to be clean;) that thereupon he took her out of the bed, and carried her to the dung heap, and with a large knife, which he found about the house, cut her in the manner the body appeared to be mangled, and buried her in the dung heap; placing the dung and straw that was bloody under the body, and covering it up with what was clean; and having done so, he got water and washed himself as clean as he could. The boy was the next morning carried before a neighbouring justice, before whom he repeated his confession, with all the circumstances he had related to the coroner and his jury. The justice, very prudently, deferred proceeding to a commitment, till the boy should have an opportunity of recollecting himself. Accordingly, he warned him of the danger he was in, if he should be thought guilty of the fact he stood charged with, and admonished him not to wrong himself; and then ordered him into a room where none of the crowd that attended should have access to him. When the boy had been some hours in this room, where victuals and drink were provided for him, he was brought a second time before the justice, and then he repeated his former confession; upon which he was committed to gaol. On the trial, evidence was given of the declarations before mentioned to have been made before the coroner and his jury, and before the justice, and of many declarations to the same purpose, which the boy made to other people after he came to gaol, and even down to the day of his trial. For he constantly told the same story in substance, commonly adding that the devil put him upon committing the fact. Upon this evidence, with some other circumstances tending to corroborate the confession, he was convicted. Upon this report of the Chief Justice, the judges, having taken time to consider of it, unanimously agreed,—1st, That the declarations stated in the report were evidence proper to be left to the jury; 2nd, That supposing the boy to have been guilty of the fact, there were so many circumstances stated in the report, which were undoubtedly tokens of what Lord Chief Justice Hale somewhere (1 Hale, 630) called a mischievous discretion, that he was certainly a proper object for capital punishment, and ought to suffer: for it would be of very dangerous consequence to have it thought that children may commit such atrocious crimes with impunity. There are many crimes of the most heinous nature, such as in the present case the murder of young children, poisoning parents or masters, burning houses, and the like, which children are very capable of committing, and which they may in some circumstances be under strong temptations to commit; and therefore, though the taking away the life of a boy ten years old may savour of cruelty, yet, as the example of this boy's punishment may be a means of deterring other children from the like offences, and as the sparing this boy, merely on account of his age, will probably have a quite contrary tendency, in justice to the public, the law ought to take its course, unless there remaineth any doubt touching his guilt. In this general principle all the judges concurred. But two or three of them, out of great tenderness and caution, advised the Chief Justice to send another reprieve for the prisoner; suggesting that it might possibly appear, on further inquiry, that the boy had taken this matter upon himself, at the instigation of some person or other, who hoped by this artifice to screen the real offender from justice. Accordingly, the Chief Justice did grant one or two more reprieves; and desired the justice who took the boy's examination, and also some other persons, in whose prudence he could confide, to make the strictest inquiry they could into the affair, and make report to him. At length he, receiving no further light, determined to send no more reprieves, and to leave the prisoner to the justice of the law, at the expiration of the last; but before the expiration of that reprieve, execution was respited till further order, by warrant from one of the Secretaries of State. And at the Summer Assizes, 1757, he had the benefit of his majesty's pardon, upon condition of his entering immediately into the sea service. (And see 1 Hale, 26; R. v. Wild, 1 Mood. C. C. 452.)

1. Infants, how far liable.

An infant under fourteen is presumed by law unable to commit a rape, Committing a rape.

1. Infants, how far liable.

and therefore it seems cannot be guilty of it; and though in other felonies malitia supplet ætatem in some cases, yet it seems, as to this fact, the law presumes him impotent, as well as wanting discretion. (1 Hale, 630. And see R. v. Eldershaw, 3 C. & P. 396; R. v. Groombridge, 7 C. & P. 582.) Nor is any evidence admissible to show that in fact he had arrived at the full state of puberty, and could commit the offence. (Reg. v. Phillips, 8 C. & P. 736; Reg. v. Jordan, 9 C. & P. 118.) But he may be a principal in the second degree, if he aid and assist in the commission of this offence, as well as other felonies, and it appear that he had a mischievous discretion; for the excuse of impotency will not in such case apply. (1 Hale, 630.) And he may be convicted of an assault with intent to commit a rape; (R. v. Eldershaw, 3 C. & P. 396); or of an assault under the 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 11, Vol. V. p. 7. (R. v. Bromilow, 2 Mood. C. C. 122; 9 C. & P. 366, S. C.)

Forcible entry.

An infant may be guilty of forcible entry, in respect of personal actual violence. (1 Hawk. c. 24, s. 35.) And the justices may fine him therefore; but yet it shall be good discretion in the justices of the peace to forbear the imprisonment of such infant. (Dalt. c. 126.) Because it is said, that he shall not be subject to corporal punishment, by force of the general words of any statute wherein he is not expressly named. (1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 35.)

Other misdemeanors.

So, in regard to other misdemeanors attended with a notorious breach of the peace, such as riot, battery, or the like, an infant is liable as a person of full age. (1 Hale, 20, 21; 4 Bla. Com. 22.)

So he is liable for perjury or cheating. (3 Bac. Abr. Infancy (H).

An infant under twenty-one is not liable for not repairing a bridge or highway, or other such acts of omission (4 Bla. Com. 22; Co. Lit. 257.)

He may be convicted on a penal statute. (See 4 Bla. Com. 308; 2 B. & P. 93, 530; 8 T. R. 545.)

II. When competent Witnesses.

When competent witnesses.

A witness must not only have a competent share of reason, but also know the nature and binding obligation of an oath Children, therefore, who are not able to understand its moral obligation, cannot be examined. (Bul. N. P. 293.) At one time, indeed, their age was considered as the criterion of their competency; and it was a general rule, that none could be admitted under the age of nine years, very few under ten; (R. v. Travers, 2 Str. 700; 1 East's P. C. 442; 1 Hale, 302; 2 id. 278); which was in some measure denying them the protection of law against secret acts of violence. A more reasonable rule has been since adopted; and the admissibility of children is now regulated, not by their age, but by their apparent sense and understanding. And in Brazier's case, on an indictment for assaulting an infant of five years of age, with intent to ravish her, it was agreed by all the judges, that children of any age might be examined on oath, if capable of distinguishing between good and evil; (which must be taken to mean a belief in God, or in a future state of rewards and punishments); but they cannot be examined in any case without oath. (1 East's P C. 443-4; 1 Leach, 237; and see per Alderson, J., in R. v. Perkins, 2 Mood. C. C. 135.) This is now the established rule in all cases, criminal as well as civil, and whether the prisoner be tried for a capital offence, or for one of an inferior nature. (R. v. Travers, 2 Stra. 700.)

The child should, it seems, feel the binding obligation of an oath, from the general course of its religious education. The effect of the oath should arise from religious feelings of a permanent nature, and not merely from instructions confined to the nature of an oath recently communicated to it for the purposes of a trial. (R. v. Williams, 7 C. & P. 321; 2 Russ. C. & M. 3rd ed. 970.)

Whether the infant be a competent witness or not, is for the Court to decide. (1 Stark. Evid. 94.)

If a child is too young to be sworn, it follows, as a necessary consequence, that any account which it may have given to others ought not to be admitted. On an indictment, therefore, for a rape on a child five years old, where the child was not examined, but an account of what she had told her mother, about three weeks after the transaction, was given in evidence by the mother, and the jury convicted the prisoner, principally, as was supposed, on that evidence: the judges, on a case reserved for their opinion, thought the evidence clearly inadmissible, and the prisoner was accordingly pardoned. (R. v. Tucker, 1 Phill. Ev. 20; see R. v. Pike, 3 C. & P. 598.)

2. When competent Witnesses.

"Where the evidence of children is admitted, it is much to be wished," says Sir William Blackstone, "in order to render their evidence credible, that there should be some concurrent testimony of time, place, and circumstances, in order to make out the fact; and that the conviction should not be grounded singly on the unsupported accusation of an infant under years of discretion." "It seems, however," adds Mr. Phillipps, in noticing this opinion of the learned commentator, "impossible to lay down any general rule on this subject, applicable to all cases. A prisoner may be legally convicted on such evidence alone, and unsupported; and whether the account of the witness requires to be corroborated in any part, or to what extent, is a question exclusively for the jury, to be determined by them on a review of all the circumstances of the case, and especially of the manner in which the child has given his evidence. The evidence may be so circumstantial, so plain and clear, and so free from all mixture of partiality and ill-will, as to leave no reasonable doubt of the prisoner's guilt, although it stands unsupported by other witnesses."

Putting off trial, &c. till competent.

When the child has appeared not sufficiently to understand the nature and obligation of an oath, judges have often thought it necessary, for the purposes of justice, to put off the trial of the prisoner, directing that the child in the mean time should be properly instructed; (1 Phillipps's Ev. 19); which course, however, would not be allowed in the case of an adult witness. (R. v. Wade, R. & M. C. C. 86.) If the jury is sworn, and the prisoner is put upon his trial, before the incompetency of the witness is discovered, the proper course is, not to discharge the jury, but to direct an acquittal. (R. v. Wade, R. & M. C. C. 86.)

III. Stealing of.

Child stealing, a felony.

By stat. 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 21, "if any person shall maliciously, either by force or fraud, lead or take away, or decoy or entice away, or detain any child under the age of ten years, with intent to deprive the parent or parents, or any other person having the lawful care or charge of such child, of the possession of such child, or with intent to steal any article upon or about the person of such child, to whomsoever such article may belong; or if any person shall, with any such intent as aforesaid, receive or harbour any such child, knowing the same to have been, by force or fraud, led, taken, decoyed, enticed away or detained, as hereinbefore mentioned; every such offender, and every person counselling, aiding or abetting such offender, shall be guilty of felony, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable to be transported beyond the seas for the term of seven years, or to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction, for any term not exceeding two years, and, if a male, to be once, twice, or thrice publicly or privately whipped (if the Court shall so think fit), in addition to such imprisonment; provided always, that no person who shall have claimed to be the father of an illegitimate child, or to have any right to the possession of such child, shall be liable to be prosecuted by virtue thereof, on account of his getting possession of such child, or taking such child out of the possession of the mother, or any other person having the lawful charge thereof."

Punishment for.

Proviso as to persons claiming to have a right to the child, &c.

If the convict be already under sentence of transportation or imprisonment, this sentence may commence after the expiration of the former sentence. (7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 10.)

Abettors.

By sect. 31, every person who shall counsel, aid, or abet the commission of any misdemeanor punishable under this act, shall be liable to be proceeded against and punished as a principal offender."

F. the son* [or daughter] of the said J. F. then and there feloniously, maliciously and by fraud did decoy and entice away, with intent, &c. [as in the first count to the end.] [Add another count merely stating the detention, or such other counts as the difficulties in the evidence may suggest.]

Second count.

IV. Carnally abusing Children.

As to the offence of rape, which is the carnal knowledge of a woman or child against the will of the party, see post, "Rape," Vol. V.

As to the offence of an assault with intent to commit a rape, or abuse a child under ten years, or commit any other felony, see ante, 293.

As to attempts to commit offences in general, see ante, "Attempt."

Carnally abusing a girl under ten years; a girl between ten and twelve years.

By stat. 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 17, "if any person shall unlawfully and carnally know and abuse any girl under the age of ten years, every such offender shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall suffer death as a felon; and if any person shall unlawfully and carnally know and abuse any girl being above the age of ten years and under the age of twelve years, every such offender shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction, for such term as the Court shall award."

Punishment.

But the punishment of death is abolished by the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 56, s. 3, which, after reciting the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, ss. 16 and 17, enacts, "that from and after the commencement of this act (1st Oct. 1841), if any person shall be convicted of any of the said offences hereinbefore last specified, such person shall not be subject to any sentence, judgment, or punishment of death, but shall, instead of the sentence or judgment in and by the said act hereinbefore last recited, ordered to be given or awarded against persons convicted of the said last-mentioned offences, or any of them respectively, be liable to be transported beyond the seas for the term of his natural life."

Abettors.

As to persons aiding or abetting the commission of this offence, see ante, 609.

By the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 56, s. 6, this offence is not triable at any general or quarter sessions.

4. Carnally abusing, &c.

Observations and decisions as to the offence.

A boy under the age of fourteen, and therefore incompetent to commit a rape, cannot be convicted of this offence, and evidence is not admissible to prove that he has arrived at the full age of puberty. (R. v. Jordan, 9 C. & P. 118.) But he may be convicted of an assault under the 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 11, Vol. V. p. 7. (R. v. Bromilow, 2 Mood. C. C. 122; 9 C. & P. 366, S. C.)

On an indictment for the offence of carnally abusing a child under ten years of age, the child must be proved by clear evidence to be under that age. Where the offence was committed on the 5th February, 1832, and the child's father proved that on his return home after an absence of a few days on the 9th February, 1822, he found the child had been born, and was told by the grandmother that she had been born the day before, and the register of baptism showed that the child had been baptized on the 9th February, 1822; this evidence was holden not sufficient to prove the age of the child. (R. v. Wedge, 5 C. & P. 298.) So evidence by the child herself, that she was ten years old on a particular day, her mother being ill at home, and her father being unable to state the precise time of her birth, has been held insufficient. (R. v. Day, 9 C. & P. 722.)

As to the admissibility of the child as a witness in general, see ante, 608. The child may be a witness if she appear sufficiently to understand the nature and moral obligation of an oath. (Id.)

The indictment should, it seems, conclude "contrary to the form of the statute." (1 East's P. C. 448; 2 Russ. C. & M. 694, 3d ed.) The word "ravished" need not be inserted. (Id.)

This offence of carnally knowing and abusing a child under ten years old is not a felony which includes an assault within the 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 11, (Vol. V. p. 7,) even though it be stated in the indictment for the felony that the prisoner made an assault on the child. (Reg. v. Banks, 8 Car. & P. 574.) Nor can a party be convicted of an assault under that enactment for carnally knowing and abusing a child between the age of ten and twelve years where the child consented. (R. v. Martin, 2 Mood. C. C. 123; 9 C. & P. 213, S. C.)

Where an indictment in the first count charged the prisoner with having assaulted E. R., an infant above the age of ten and under the age of twelve years, with intent to carnally know and abuse her; and in the second count, charged that the prisoner unlawfully did put and place the private parts of him against the private parts of the said E. R., and did thereby then and there unlawfully attempt and endeavour to carnally know and abuse the said E. R.; it was held that the second count was bad, because it did not aver that the said E. R. was between the ages of ten and twelve, and that the word "said" did not help it, as it did not incorporate the description of E. R. contained in the first count, but that if the second count had contained the words, "the said E. R. then and there being above the age of ten years and under the age of twelve years," it would have been sufficient. (Reg. v. Martin, 9 C. & P. 215; see Rex v. Cheere, 3 B. & C. 902; 7 D. & R. 461, S. C.)

Commitment for carnally abusing a girl under ten years.

[Commencement as usual, ante, p. 9.] on the day of , A. D. , at the parish of , in the said county, feloniously did assault one C. D. a girl then under the age of ten years, to wit, of the age of [nine] years, and her the said C. D. then and there feloniously did unlawfully and carnally know and abuse, against the form of the statute in that case made and provided. And you the said keeper, &c. [as usual to the end.]

The like of a girl between ten and twelve years.

Same as preceding form, omitting "feloniously," and stating the girl as "a girl then above the age of ten years, and under the age of twelve years, to wit, of the age of [ten] years."

4. Carnally abusing, &c.

Indictment for carnally abusing a girl under ten years.

V. Murder of.

Child murder.

The offence of murder in general will be found fully discussed under title "Homicide," Vol. III.

What amounts to.

In order to constitute the offence of child-murder it must be clearly established that the child was born alive. It must appear to have been alive after the whole body of the child was brought into the world. It is not sufficient that the child respire in the progress of the birth. (R. v. Poulton, 5 Car. & P. 329.) There must be an independent animation in the child, a complete separation from the mother. (R. v. Enoch, 5 C. & P. 539; R. v. Wright, 9 id. 754; R. v. Sellis, 7 id. 850.) But it seems that if a child be wholly produced and then killed, it will be the offence of murder, though the umbilical cord be not severed. (R. v. Sellis, 7 C. & P. 850; R. v. Crutchley, id. 814; R. v. Reeves, 9 id. 25.) There is no occasion for the child to have breathed after it was born, if born alive. (R. v. Brain, 6 C. & P. 349.) (a)

(a) The following observations upon the subject of infanticide are collected in Mr. J. Jervis's valuable work on Coroners, 127, 8.

The first question which naturally presents itself is, whether the child was born alive. As a test of this, it was formerly usual to immerse the lungs in water, it being supposed that if they floated, the child must have respired. But this test is now quite exploded, for it is obvious, that if the child make but one gasp and instantly die, the lungs will swim in water as readily as if the child had breathed longer, and it is not uncommon for an infant to breath as soon as its mouth is protruded from its mother, although it may die before its body be born. (Hunt. 17.) Air may also be passed into the lungs by inflation or be generated by putrefaction, and both will produce the same effect.

This question is, however, less difficult in cases of immature birth. Under the fifth month no fœtus can be born alive; from the fifth to the seventh it may come into the world alive, but cannot maintain existence; but at the seventh it may be reared. As the period of gestation may be pretty accurately ascertained from the appearance of the fœtus in these cases, the doubt is easily resolved. (See For. Med. 312; Prac. Med. 112; 3 Par. 100.)

The next question is, the cause of the death. Now the child may die in the womb,—during the labour by pressure —or by strangulation from the umbilical cord. (Elem. of Mid. 180.) In which latter cases the body presents appearances which to a common observer would seem to be the marks of a violent death. Upon this subject Dr. Hunter says,— "When a child's head or face is swollen, and is very red or black, the vulgar, because hanged people look so, conclude it was strangled, nothing is more common in natural births."—p. 13.

But the child, though safely delivered, may still die without any criminal act of the mother. Children may be born so weak, that if left to themselves, after breathing or sobbing, they would die; or

5. Murder of.

By the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 14, infra, if on the trial of the indictment for the murder of a child the proof fails, the defendant may nevertheless be convicted of the concealment of the birth, if there be evidence to meet it, and as to which see infra. But no person but the mother can be so convicted. (R. v. Wright, 9 C. & P. 754.) And where the indictment is bad for not describing the child properly, the defendant cannot be convicted on that indictment for the concealment. (Reg. v. Hicks, 2 M. & Rob. 302.)

When prisoner may be convicted of concealing the birth.

It has been considered that the enactment extends to a trial on the coroner's inquest, as well as upon a bill found by the grand jury. (R. v. Cole, 2 Leach, 1095; 3 Camp. 371; R. v. Maynard, R. & R. 240; 1 Russ. C. & M. 574, 3d ed. by Greaves.)

Abortion.

Indictment for the murder of a child by smothering.

—— to wit. THE jurors for our Lady the Queen upon their oath present, that A. W., late of the parish of , in the county of , single woman, on the day of , in the year of the reign of our Lady the now Queen, being big with a [female] child, afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, at the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, the said [female] child from her body did bring forth alive, and that the said A. W. not having the fear of God before her eyes, but being moved and seduced by the instigation of the devil, afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, with force and arms, at the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, in and upon the said child, in the peace of God and our said Lady the Queen then and there being, feloniously, wilfully, and of her malice aforethought, did make an assault; and that the said A. W. with both her hands, the said child in a certain linen cloth of the value of twopence, feloniously, wilfully, and of her malice aforethought, did put, place, fold, and wrap up, by means of which such said putting, placing, folding, and wrapping up of the said child in the said linen cloth by her the said A. W. as aforesaid, the said child was then and there choked, suffocated, and smothered; of which said choking, suffocation, and smothering, the said female bastard child then and there died. And so, &c. [Conclude as usual in indictments for murder by suffocation, see "Homicide," Vol. III.] And the jurors, &c. [state the delivery and assault as in first count.] And that the said A. W., with both her hands, the said child into a certain privy there situate, wherein was a great quantity of human excrements and other filth, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of her malice aforethought, did cast and throw, by reason of which said casting and throwing of the said child into the said privy by her the said A. W. as aforesaid the said child in the said privy with the excrements and filth aforesaid was then and there choked and suffocated, of which said choking and suffocation the said child then and there died. And so, &c. [Conclude as in first count.]

Second count, for throwing a child into a privy, whereby it was smothered.

VI. Concealment of Birth of.

Concealment of birth of.

The murder of bastard children by the mother was considered as a crime so difficult to be proved, that the stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 17, was passed, which made the concealment of the death of a bastard child an undeniable evidence of murder in the mother, except she could prove by one witness at least that it was actually born dead. But this law, which was accounted to savour strongly of severity, and always construed most favourably for the unfortunate object of accusation, was repealed, together with an Irish act upon the same subject, by stat. 43 Geo. III. c. 58, s. 3, (called Lord Ellenborough's Act.) (4 Bla. Com. 198; 1 Russ. C. & M. 3d ed. 572.) The latter act did not make the concealment an offence for which an indictment would lie. (R. v. Parkinson, 1 Russ. C. & M. 571.)

Made a misdemeanor.

This latter act, except as to its repeal of the former, is repealed by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, and the 14th section of which act enacts, "That if any woman shall be delivered of a child, and shall, by secretly burying or otherwise disposing of the dead body of the said child, endeavour to conceal the birth thereof, every such offender shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being even a strong child may be suffocated by being left upon its face either in the pool made by the natural discharges or upon wet clothes. (Hunt. 18.) These and a variety of other causes may contribute to the death of new-born infants, particularly where the mother is delivered in secret by herself, and being exhausted, frequently faints and becomes insensible.

---

6. Concealment of Birth of.

Punishment.

On trial of indictment for murder, she may be found guilty of the misdemeanor.

convicted thereof shall be liable to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction, for any term not exceeding two years; and it shall not be necessary to prove whether the child died before, at, or after its birth: provided always, that if any woman tried for the murder of her child shall be acquitted thereof, it shall be lawful for the jury, by whose verdict she shall be acquitted, to find, in case it shall so appear in evidence, that she was delivered of a child, and that she did, by secret burying or otherwise disposing of the dead body of such child, endeavour to conceal the birth thereof, and thereupon the Court may pass such sentence as if she had been convicted upon an indictment for the concealment of the birth."

Abettors.

As to persons aiding and abetting the commission of this offence, see the 31st sect. ante, 609.

Not triable at sessions.

The offence is not triable at any quarter sessions, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1.

Observations and decisions as to the offence.

The above provision is in effect nearly the same as that of the 43 Geo. III. c. 58, s. 3, except that the woman may now be indicted for the concealment as a specific misdemeanor, whereas under the 43 Geo. III. she could be only found guilty of this offence after a trial on an indictment or inquisition for murder; and also that by this act hard labour may be imposed. Also by this new act, the offence is extended to the concealment of the birth of any child, whether a bastard or not. The words "disposing of the dead body" are new, and they seem very much narrower than those of the 43 Geo. III. (Russ. C. & M. 3d ed. 571, note by Greaves.)

The stat. 43 Geo. III. c. 58, s. 3 and 4, was held to extend to all cases of concealment of the birth, whether the child be born alive or otherwise, and although the birth was probably known to an accomplice. (R. v. Cornwall, R. & R. 336.) The same law would apply to the 9 Geo. IV.

Under the 21 Jac. I. it was held that if the mother called for help, or had previously confessed her pregnancy, (R. v. Peat, 1 East's P. C. 229,) these circumstances would probably negative the concealment. So if the woman made provision for the birth of her child, this also, it was held under the same act, might be deemed a circumstance indicative of her intention not to conceal it. (Id.) So under the 43 Geo. III. it appears to have been considered that if the woman made her pregnancy known to persons not implicated with her in the concealment, it would be an answer to the charge of concealment. (R. v. Mary Southern, 1 Burn's J. 24th ed. 335.) (a) And in a case

(a) In this case the prisoner was indicted for the wilful murder of her female bastard child. It appeared in evidence, that in the course of the night she was delivered of the child, which at four o'clock in the morning she took and threw into the privy. It also appeared that she had provided a cap and some trifling articles of child-bed linen. No marks of violence appeared on the body of the child; and the surgeon, who examined the prisoner soon after her delivery, added, that from the state of the afterbirth, and from the appearance of the child, he was of opinion that even if the child had been born alive, it could only have lived for a very short period. It was contended for the prisoner, that the statute of 43 Geo. III. c. 58, did not apply to the case of a still-born bastard child; and that from the construction which had been put on the former stat. of 21 James I. c. 27, (the defects of which it was the object of the stat. 43 Geo. III. c. 58, to remedy, and within the provisions of which the present case would not fall,) that even if it did not sufficiently appear that the child was born dead, the circumstances of the prisoner having made provision for the birth would take the case out of the statute. But Bayley, J., said, he should rule that the stat. 43 Geo. III. c. 58, extended to all cases, whether it was proved that the child was still-born, or left the matter in doubt; and that he was of opinion in this case there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury of a concealment of the birth. His lordship added, that if the prisoner had avowed her pregnancy while she was in that state, or had, to the knowledge of any other persons, made preparation for her confinement, these circumstances would undoubtedly have been evidence to have satisfied a jury that the putting away the child was not for the purpose of concealing the birth, but that they would only have been matters of evidence, and would not have withdrawn the question of concealment from the consideration of the jury. The jury found the prisoner guilty of the concealment, and she was sentenced to be imprisoned two months in the house of correction.

under the 9 Geo. IV. the prisoner was delivered of a child whose dead body was found at the prisoner's father's house in a bed among the feathers. There was no evidence to show who placed it there, but it being proved that the prisoner had sent for a surgeon at the time of her confinement, and had prepared child's clothes, Parke, J. directed an acquittal on the charge of endeavouring to conceal the birth (R v. Higley, 4 C. & P. 366) But in a more recent case it was considered that the fact of the woman sending for a person at the beginning of her labour, and her previously allowing her pregnancy to be known to other persons, was only evidence for the consideration of the jury that she did not intend concealment, and not a bar to the prosecution, and that she might notwithstanding be convicted of the concealment. (R v. Douglas, 1 Mood. C. C. 480; 7 C. & P. 644, 8 C.)

6. Concealment of Birth of.

The woman must have done some act of disposal of the body after the death of the child. The denial of the birth is not of itself sufficient evidence of such act. (Reg. v. Turner, 8 C. & P. 755; R. v. Nash, 1 Russ. C. & M 3rd edit 574.)

The woman must have completely disposed of the body of the child; a prisoner found with the body still in her possession, though about to dispose of it, cannot be convicted (R. v. Snell, 2 M & Rob 44.) And hiding the body in a place from which a further removal is contemplated, has been held not sufficient to warrant a conviction. (R. v Ash, 2 M. & Rob 294; R. v. Bell, id.; R. v. Watkins, 1 Russ. C. & M. 3rd edit. 573, 574.) But according to a more recent case, it is not essential that the dead body should either be put in some place intended for its final deposit, or be buried or destroyed; (Reg. v. Goldthorpe, 1 Car. & M. 335,) and in that case it was held, that putting the body between a bed and a mattrass was sufficient to complete the offence.

The indictment must show the mode of disposing of the body. (Reg. v. Hounsell, 2 M. & Rob. 292.)

Commitment on 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 14, for concealing the birth of a child.

[Commencement as usual, as ante, p. 9,] that the said C. D. on the day of at the parish of in the county of being then and there delivered of a certain child, did, by secretly burying the same, [according to the fact,] unlawfully endeavour to conceal the birth thereof, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and you the said keeper, &c. [as usual to the end.]

Indictment for like offence.

—— to wit. THE jurors for our Lady the Queen upon their oath present, that A. B. late of the parish of in the county of gentleman, on the day of in the year of the reign of our Lady the now Queen Victoria, at the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, being then and there pregnant with child, was then and there delivered of the said child alive, and which said child then and there instantly died, and that the said A. B being so delivered of the said child as aforesaid did then and there unlawfully endeavour to conceal the birth of the same by then and there secretly burying [as the case may be, and state the mode of disposing,] the dead body of the said child, against the form of the statute in that case made and provided, and against the peace of our Lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

Second count.

And the jurors aforesaid, on their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said A. B. on the day and year aforesaid, at the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, being then and there pregnant with child, was then and there delivered of the said last-mentioned child, which said last-mentioned child was, at the time the said A. B. was so delivered of him as last aforesaid, dead: and the said A. B. being so delivered of the said last-mentioned child as aforesaid, did then and there unlawfully endeavour to conceal the birth of the same, that is to say, by secretly burying [according to the fact] the dead body of the said last-mentioned child, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our said Lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

VII. Other Matters relating to.

What offices an infant cannot fill.

An infant cannot be appointed to an office of public and pecuniary trust; therefore he cannot be appointed to the office of clerk of a Court of Requests. (Claridge v. Evelyn, 5 B. & Ald. 81.)

But the office of clerk of the peace being merely ministerial, may be held by an infant. (Crosbie v. Hurley, 1 Alcock & N. 431.)

It seems, however, he cannot be a bailiff or sheriff's officer. (Cuxon v. Winter, 2 M. & Ry. 313.)

He cannot exercise the office of burgess. (R. v. White, 2 Selw. N. P. 1068, n.)

Cannot be an M.P. or voter.

He cannot be a member of parliament. (7 & 8 Will. IV. c. 25, s. 8.)

Nor can he vote in the election of one. (Id.)

Juror.

An infant before twenty-one years of age shall not be sworn on an inquest. (7 & 8 Will. III. c. 32, s. 4; 1 Inst. 172.)

Dower, marriage, and choosing guardian.

A woman at nine years of age may have dower; at twelve may consent to marriage; and at fourteen is of age of discretion, and may choose a guardian. (1 Inst. 78.)

Age of allegiance.

A man is of age at twelve years to take the oath of allegiance in the torn or leet. (Id.)

May be executor.

He may be appointed executor at any age, even a child in ventre sa mere may be so appointed. (1 Will. Executors, 128.) But if appointed sole executor he cannot act till of the age of twenty-one years. (38 Geo. III. c. 87.)

When an administrator.

If the next of kin be an infant, administration must be granted to another person during his minority. (1 Will. Executors, 295.)

Cannot make a will.

By the recent statute, 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 7, no will made by any person (after the 1st January, 1838,) under the age of twenty-one years, shall be valid. As to wills made before that date, the common law seems not to have determined precisely at what age one may make a testament of a personal estate; it was generally allowed that it might be made at the age of eighteen, and some said under, for the common law will not prohibit the spiritual Court in such cases. (1 Inst, 89; 1 Hale, 17.) The age of discretion is fourteen; and therefore it would seem that an infant of that age, or above it, might before the above act make a will of personal estate.

Cannot make a deed, or alien his lands or goods, &c.

At twenty-one, and not before, persons may bind themselves by any deed, and alien lands, goods and chattels; (1 Inst. 171;) or release a debt. (Id. 264.)

Nor enter into recognizance.

Upon which ground infants may not enter into recognizance to keep the peace, or to be of good behaviour, but their sureties only. It has been held, however, that infancy is no ground for discharging a forfeited recognizance to appear at the assizes to prosecute a felony. (Ex parte Williams, 13 Price, 673.)

When liable on a contract.

The general rule is, that the contract of an infant, however fair and conducive to his interest it may really be, is not binding on him, unless it be for the supply of necessaries to him, suitable to his degree, estate, and condition; or unless after the age of twenty-one he confirm it by some writing signed by him; which term "necessaries" does not simply mean his necessary meat, drink, apparel, physic, and such like; and teaching or instruction; it includes all such things as are useful and suitable to his state and condition in life, and not merely such as are requisite for his bare subsistence. (Peters v. Fleming, 6 Mee. & W. 42.)

It is a question for the jury whether the articles are such as a reasonable person of the age and situation of the infant would require for real use. (Id.)

But the question is subject to the control of the judge; and a jury having found that certain things were necessaries, contrary to the opinion expressed by the judge at the trial, the Court considered the verdict as perverse, and granted a new trial. (Harris v. Fane, 1 Scott. N. R. 287; 1 M. & Gr. 550, S. C.)

There is no inflexible rule of law making it incumbent on a tradesman to institute inquiries as to the situation and resources of an infant before he gives him credit for necessaries. (Brayshaw v. Eaton, 7 Scott, 183; 5 Bing. N. C. 331, S. C.)

7. Other Matters relating to.

Although an infant may be liable on his contract for necessaries, yet if he enter into an obligation or other writing, with a penalty for the payment of any of these, that obligation shall not bind him. (1 Inst. 172.) Nor will he be liable on a bill of exchange or promissory note, though the consideration for it be necessaries. (Williams v. Harrison, Carth. 160; Holt, Rep. 359, S. C.; Williamson v. Watts, 1 Camp. 552.) Nor will he be liable on an account stated; for he is not competent to state an account. (Trueman v. Hurst, 1 T. R. 40; and Bartlett v. Emery, ib. 40, n. (a).)

As to how far infants may be bound out and are liable under contracts of apprenticeship, see the law fully treated of, ante, "Apprentice."

Liability of father for articles supplied.

The moral obligation which a father is under to provide for his child, imposes on him no liability to pay the debts incurred by that child; and he is not so liable, unless he has given the child authority to incur them, or has contracted to pay them. (Mortimer v. Wright, 6 Mee. & W. 482; Rolfe v. Abbott, 6 C. & P. 286; Urmston v. Newcomen, 4 Ad. & Ell. 899; Clements v. Williams, 8 C. & P. 58; Seaborne v. Maddy, 9 C. & P. 497.) It is mainly a question for a jury to decide on, whether the father authorised the supply of the articles, or the incurring of the subject-matter of the claim. (See Law v. Wilkins, 6 Ad. & Ell. 718; 1 Nev. & P. 697, S. C.)

Obligation under poor laws.

As to a parent's obligation to maintain his children, and vice versâ, so far as is required under the poor laws, see "Poor Law," Vol. IV.

Things of necessity bind him.

Things of necessity shall bind him, as a presentation to a benefice; for otherwise the lapse shall incur against him. (1 Inst. 172.)

Trust estates.

And infants seised of estates in trust, or by way of mortgage, may make conveyances thereof, as the Courts of Chancery or Exchequer shall direct. (7 Anne, c. 19; 4 Geo. III. c. 16.)

Surrender of leases.

And they may surrender leases in the Courts of Chancery or Exchequer, in order to renew the same. (29 Geo. II. c. 31.)

May purchase.

Also an infant hath, without consent of any other, capacity to purchase, for it is intended for his benefit; and at his full age he may either agree thereunto and perfect it, or without any cause to be alleged, waive or disagree to the purchase; and so may his heirs after him, if he agree not thereunto after his full age. (1 Inst. 2.)

Must appear by guardian, &c.

An infant cannot answer but by guardian; but he may sue either by his next friend or by guardian; (Anon. 3 Salk. 196;) otherwise it will be error in fact. (Castledine v. Mundy, 1 Nev. & M. 635; 4 B. & Adol. 90, S. C.)

Custody of.

Where a person supposed to be improperly in custody is brought up on habeas corpus, the Court, if there appear no ground for restraint, will order that such person be at liberty to go where he pleases, and will if necessary give him the protection of an officer in going. But if the party be a legitimate child, too young to exercise a discretion, the legal custody is that of the father, and if the mother has possessed herself of the child adversely to him, and he claims it, the Court will oblige her to deliver it up.

Nor will this rule be departed from on the ground that the father has formed an adulterous connection, which still continues, if it appear that he has never brought the adultress to his house, or into contact with his children, and does not intend to do so.

It seems that the child would not be given into the father's custody, if it appeared that in his hands it would be exposed to cruelty or gross corruption. (Rex v. Greenhill, 4 Adol. & Ell. 624; 6 Nev & M. 244, S. C.)

A father claiming from his wife the custody of their legitimate child on habeas corpus, the Court, on a representation by the wife of his profligacy and cruelty, referred it to a barrister to determine as to the proper custody of the child, the wife (who was in contempt for disobeying the writ) and the husband consenting to abide by such determination. (Rex v. Dobbyn, 4 Ad. & Ell. 641, n.)

the father's instance; it was ordered, that the child should remain with the mother; the father's access to be regulated by the master. (Rex v. Wilson, 4 Ad. & Ell. 645, n.)

2 & 3 Vict. c. 54.

By the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, passed to amend the laws relating to the custody of infants, sect. 1, it is enacted, that judges in equity may make an order on petition for the access of mothers to their infant children, and if such children be within the age of seven years, for the delivery of them to their custody until attaining such age. And by sect. 3, such orders may be enforced by process of contempt. Provided, by sect. 4, that a mother against whom adultery has been established shall not be entitled to the benefit of the act.

It has been held that the vice-chancellor has jurisdiction to make orders under this act, although the lord chancellor and master of the rolls are alone mentioned in it. (In re Taylor, 10 Sim. 291.)

Appointment of guardians over, by parents, &c.

By stat. 12 Car. II. c. 24, s. 8, any person having a child or children under twenty-one years of age, and not married, may, by deed or will attested by two witnesses, dispose of the custody and tuition of such child or children, until they shall be of the age of twenty one, or for a lesser time; and this, whether such parent be within or above the age of twenty-one.

In a recent case it has been decided that the mother of an illegitimate child has no power to appoint a guardian for it under this statute; and that therefore the Court of Q. B. will not on habeas corpus order an illegitimate child to be delivered up by a person to whose care it had been committed by the mother, into the custody of a person who was appointed guardian and devisee in trust for its benefit, by the will of the mother. (Ex parte Glover, 4 Dowl. P. C. 291; 1 Har. & Woll. 508, S. C.)

Mother no right to custody after such appointment.

A father having, by will, appointed a guardian of his children, the mother has no right to their custody, though the Court, exercising a discretion with respect to the infant's health, may leave them under her care. Also, the Court will not interfere as to the religious education of an infant upon any supposed pecuniary advantages to be derived from a change of faith, against the injunctions of the father. Chimney Sweepers & Chimneys.

3 & 4 Vict. c. 85.

By the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 85, intituled "An Act for the Regulation of Chimney Sweepers and Chimneys," after reciting that "An act was passed in the fifth year of the reign of his late majesty, intituled 'An Act for the better Regulation of Chimney Sweepers and their Apprentices and for the safer Construction of Chimneys and Flues,' to continue in force until the first day of January in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty, and from thence until the end of the then next session of parliament;" it is enacted, "That the said act shall continue and remain in full force until the first day of July in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-two."

Continuance of 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 35, until 1st July, 1842

Penalty for compelling or allowing children to climb chimneys.

Sect. 2. "That from and after the first day of July, in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-two, any person who shall compel or knowingly allow any child or young person under the age of twenty-one years to ascend or descend a chimney, or enter a flue, for the purpose of sweeping, cleaning, or coring the same, or for extinguishing fire therein, shall be liable to a penalty not more than ten pounds, or less than five pounds."

No child under sixteen years to be apprenticed to a chimney sweeper.

Sect. 3. "That from and after the passing of this act it shall not be lawful to apprentice to any person using the trade or business of a chimney sweeper any child under the age of sixteen years, and that every indenture of such apprenticeship which may be entered into after such date shall be null and void."

Children apprenticed between 1st July, 1841, and 1st

Sect. 4. "That upon the application of any child apprenticed to any person using the trade or business of a chimney sweeper, at any time after the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and forty-one, and previously to the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and forty-two, to any justice of the peace having jurisdiction where the master or mistress of such child shall reside, it shall be lawful for such justice to summon such master or mistress to appear, at a reasonable time, to be named in the summons, not being sooner than seven days from the time of granting the summons, before any two justices having jurisdiction as aforesaid; and upon proof made upon oath, to the satisfaction of the justices by whom the case shall be heard, that such apprentice is desirous of being discharged from his or her apprenticeship, it shall be lawful for such justices forthwith to discharge such apprentice by warrant under their hands and seals, for which warrant no fees shall be paid; and no writ of certiorari or other process shall issue to remove any proceedings under this enactment into any of her Majesty's superior Courts of record in England or Ireland, or into the Court of Session in Scotland."

3 & 4 Vict. c. 85.

July, 1842, may apply to be discharged.

Certiorari taken away.

Sect 5. "That from and after the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and forty-two, all existing indentures of apprenticeship to the trade or business of a chimney sweeper of any child who shall then be under the age of sixteen years shall be null and void."

Indentures of children under sixteen years to cease after 1st July, 1842.

Sect. 6. "And whereas it is expedient, for the better security from accidents by fire or otherwise, the improved construction of chimneys and flues provided by the said act be continued; be it enacted, that all withs and partitions between any chimney or flue which at any time after the passing of this act shall be built or rebuilt, shall be of brick or stone, and at least equal to half a brick in thickness; and every breast-back and with or partition of any chimney or flue hereafter to be built or rebuilt shall be built of sound materials, and the joints of the work well filled in with good mortar or cement, and rendered or stuccoed within; and also that every chimney or flue hereafter to be built or rebuilt in any wall, or of greater length than four feet out of the wall, not being a circular chimney or flue twelve inches in diameter, shall be in every section of the same not less than fourteen inches by nine inches; and no chimney or flue shall be constructed with any angle therein which shall be less obtuse than an angle of one hundred and twenty degrees, except as is hereinafter excepted; and every salient or projecting angle in any chimney or flue shall be rounded off four inches at the least, upon pain of forfeiture, by every master builder or other master workman who shall make or cause to be made such chimney or flue, of any sum of not less than ten pounds nor exceeding fifty pounds: provided nevertheless, that notwithstanding this act chimneys or flues may be built at angles with each other of ninety degrees and more, such chimneys or flues having therein proper doors or openings not less than six inches square."

Regulating construction of chimneys.

Penalty.

Sect. 7. "That all convictions for penalties for any offence against this act may be had before two or more justices of the peace acting for the county, riding, city, borough, division, or place where the offence shall happen, or before the sheriff or stewart of any county or stewartry in Scotland; and such penalties, and the costs and charges attending the recovery thereof, shall be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender or person liable or ordered to pay the same respectively, by warrant under the hands and seals of two or more of the said justices, or under the hand of any such sheriff or stewart, rendering the overplus of such distress and sale (if any) to the party or parties, after deducting the charge of making the same, which warrant such justices or sheriffs or stewarts are hereby empowered and required to grant, upon conviction of the offender by confession, or oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses; and the penalties, costs, and charges, when so levied, shall be paid, the one half to the informer, and the other half to the overseers or managers of the poor of the parish, township, or place where the offender shall dwell and inhabit, to be by such overseers or managers applied in aid of the rate or assessment raised for the relief of the poor of such parish, township, or place, and in Scotland, in parishes where there shall be no assessment for the relief of the poor, as the said managers shall direct, or to her Majesty in case there shall be no such overseer or manager." (See post, "Distress by Justices' Warrant," Vol. II.)

Before whom convictions may be had.

Penalties and costs to be levied by distress.

And one half to be paid to the informer and the other to the poor of the parish, &c.

3 & 4 Vict. c. 85.

In default of payment of penalty the parties convicted to be sent to prison.

Sect. 8. "That the justices of the peace or sheriffs or stewarts by whom any person shall be convicted and adjudged to pay any sum of money for any offence against this act may adjudge that such person shall pay the same, together with costs, either immediately or within such period as the said justices shall think fit; and that in default of payment at the time appointed such person shall be imprisoned in the common gaol or house of correction (with or without hard labour), as to the said justices or sheriffs or stewarts shall seem meet, for any time not exceeding two calendar months; the commitment to be determinable upon payment of the amount of the penalty and costs."

Inhabitants not incompetent witnesses by reason of paying rates.

Sect. 9. "That no inhabitant of any parish, township, or place shall be deemed an incompetent witness in any suit, action, information, complaint, appeal, prosecution, or proceeding to be had, made, prosecuted, or carried on under the authority of this act, for any offence committed within such parish, township, or place, by reason of such person being rated or assessed to, or liable to be rated or assessed to, or being otherwise interested in, the rates or assessments of any such parish, township, or place."

Distress not to be deemed unlawful for want of form.

Sect. 10. "That where any distress shall be made for any sum or sums of money to be levied by virtue of this act, the distress itself shall not be deemed unlawful, nor the party or parties making the same be deemed a trespasser or trespassers, on account of any default or want of form in any proceedings relating thereto, nor shall the party or parties distraining be deemed a trespasser or trespassers from the beginning on account of any irregularity which shall be afterwards done by the party or parties distraining, but the person or persons aggrieved by such irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action on the case, to be brought in some of the courts of record at Westminster or Dublin, or by action raised or complaint preferred in the Court of Session in Scotland: provided always, that no plaintiff or plaintiffs shall recover in any action for any such irregularity, trespass, or wrongful proceeding if tender of sufficient amends for any such special damage shall be made by or on behalf of the party or parties who shall have committed or caused to have been committed any such irregularity or wrongful proceeding before such action or complaint brought; and in case no such tender shall have been made it shall be lawful for the defendant or defendants in any such action, by leave of the Court where such action shall depend, at any time before issue joined, to pay into Court such sum of money as he or they shall see fit, whereupon such proceedings or orders and judgments shall be had, made, and given in and by such Court as in other actions where the defendant is allowed to pay money into Court."

Tender of amends.

Appeal.

Sect 11. "That any person who shall think himself or herself aggrieved by any conviction by any justice or justices of the peace under this act may appeal to the next Court of general or quarter sessions of the peace which shall be holden, not less than twelve days after the day of such conviction, for the county, stewartry, riding, city, borough, division, or place wherein the cause of complaint shall have arisen; provided that such person shall give to the complainant a notice in writing of such appeal, and of the cause and matter thereof, within three days after such conviction, and seven clear days at the least before such session, and shall also either remain in custody until the session, or enter into a recognizance, with two sufficient sureties, before a justice of the peace, conditioned personally to appear at the said session of the peace, and to try such appeal, and to abide the judgment of the Court thereupon, and to pay such costs as shall be by the Court awarded; and upon such notice being given, and such recognizance being entered into, the justice before whom the same shall be entered into shall liberate such person, if in custody, and the Court at such session shall hear and determine the matter of the appeal, and shall make such order therein, with or without costs to either party, as to the Court shall seem meet, and in case of the dismissal of the appeal or affirmance of the conviction shall order and adjudge the offender to be punished according to the conviction, and to pay such costs as shall be awarded, and shall, if necessary, issue process for enforcing such judgment; and all judgments, determinations, and proceedings of such justices not appealed from as aforesaid, and of such sheriff or stewart, or quarter sessions, shall be final, and not subject to review by any process of law or court whatever, any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding." (See ante, title "Appeal.") 3 & 4 Vict. c. 85.

Sect. 12. "That no conviction or adjudication made on appeal therefrom shall be quashed for want of form, or be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any of her Majesty's superior Courts of record; and no warrant of commitment shall be held void by reason of any defect therein, provided it be therein alleged that the party has been convicted, and there be a good and valid conviction to sustain the same." (As to enactments of this nature, see post, "Conviction," ante, "Certiorari.") Conviction not to be quashed for want of form or removed by certiorari.

Discharge of an apprentice under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 85, s. 4, who was bound after the 1st July, 1841, and before the 1st July, 1842.

—— to wit. WHEREAS A.B. of , in the county aforesaid, a child of the age of twelve years, on the day of , applied to me J. P., Esquire, one of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county, and informed me that he the said A. B., after the 1st day of July, 1841, and previously to the 1st day of July, 1842, to wit, on the day of , was apprenticed to C. D., of aforesaid, then and there and now using the trade or business of a chimney sweeper, whereupon I the said J. P. having jurisdiction where the said C. D. resides, issued my summons to the said C. D. to appear before me and W. O., Esquire, another of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county having jurisdiction as aforesaid, at a reasonable time named in such summons, the same not being sooner than seven days from the time of granting such summons; and whereas the said C. D. hath appeared this day before us the said justices in pursuance of the said summons, and the said A. B being now examined by us in the presence of the said C. D. hath deposed upon oath to the satisfaction of us the said justices, that the said A. B. is desirous of being discharged from his said apprenticeship, we the said justices do therefore by these presents discharge the said A. B. of and from his said apprenticeship to the said C. D., anything contained in the indenture of apprenticeship made between them or otherwise howsoever to the contrary notwithstanding. Given under our hands and seals this day of , in the year of our Lord 1844.

I. The Church or Chapel itself, and general Matters relating to.

Definition of word church.

THE ancient Saxon word is cyrce, the Danish kircke, the Belgic kerçke, the Cimbric kirkia or kurk; probably from the Greek word κυριακὴ, belonging to the Lord, or κυρίου οἰκία, the Lord's House; so that we have lost the ancient pronunciation of the word (except in the northern parts of England and Scotland) by softening the letters c or ch, as we have done in many cases; which letters the ancient Greeks and Romans always pronounced hard, as the letter k.

What a parish chapel.

A parochial chapel has the parochial rights of christening and burying; and differeth in nothing from a church but in the want of a rectory and endowment. (Degge, pt. 1, c. 12.)

When a perpetual curacy.

If it has parochial rights, as clerk, wardens, &c.; rights of divine service, as baptism, sepulture, &c.; and the inhabitants have a right to them there and not elsewhere, and the curate has small tithes and surplice fees, and an augmentation, it is a perpetual curacy, and the curate is not removable at pleasure.

What a chapel of ease.

A chapel merely of ease is that which was not allowed a font at its institution, and is used only for the ease of the parishioners in prayers and preaching, (sacraments and burials being received and performed at the mother church,) and commonly where the curate is removable at the pleasure of the parochial minister. (1 Burn's Eccl. L. 299.) It is merely ad libitum, and has no parochial rights; therefore, on the union of the two parishes, one is frequently deemed the parish church, and the other a parochial chapel, but not a chapel of ease. (Attorney-General v. Breton, 2 Ves. sen. 425, 427.)

Whether a chapel be a parochial chapel or chapel of ease, is matter of spiritual conusance. (See 1 Burn's Eccl. L. 300.)

Every new church built by the commissioners appointed for building churches by 58 Geo. III. c. 45, and intended as the parish church of any division of a parish, intended to be a separate parish, is a chapel of ease during the existing incumbency of the original parish church, and shall be served by a curate nominated by such incumbent, licensed by the bishop, and paid by the commissioners. (58 Geo. III. c. 45, s. 18; 59 Geo. III. c. 134, s. 12. See also 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106; Steers' P. L. by Clive, 64.)

What a free chapel.

Free chapels were places of religious worship exempt from all ordinary jurisdiction, except that the incumbents were generally instituted by the bishop, and inducted by the archdeacon of the place. Most of these chapels were built upon the manors or ancient demesnes of the crown, whilst in the king's hands, for the use of himself and retinue, when he came to reside there. When the crown parted with these estates, the chapels went with them, and retained their first freedom. Where this does not appear to have been their origin, such are thought to have been built and privileged by grants from the crown. (Tanner's Notit. Monast. Pref. 28; Steers' P. L. by Clive, 62.)

1. The Church and General Matters as to.

Private chapels are such as noblemen and others have at their own charge built in or near their houses for them and their families to perform religious duties in. The chaplains are provided by the owners with honorable pensions. They should be consecrated by the bishop. (Degge, pt. 1, c. 12.) The repair of them is cast upon the owners, notwithstanding it be annexed to the church. (2 Inst. 489.)

Private chapels.

It is said that no person can erect a church without the leave and consent of the bishop. (Gibs. 189.) Nor can any person erect a new public chapel forming part of the ecclesiastical establishment of the Church of England, whether as a chapel or otherwise, without the concurrent consent of the incumbent, patron, and bishop, and without a provision for the indemnity or compensation of the future incumbent, perhaps in all cases, and certainly if his pecuniary rights and interests are affected. (Bliss v. Woods, 3 Hag. 509; Ken. Par. Ant. 585.)

Who may erect a church or chapel.

The law takes no notice of churches or chapels as such till they are consecrated by the bishop; (3 Inst. 203, 204; Gibs. 190;) except in cases of extreme necessity, as if a church were destroyed by fire, in which case the service might be performed in another place, even in the open air, before the consecrated altar table. (Inst. J. c. ii. 18.) In a recent case, a marriage had on the site or ruins of an old church, which was unroofed and in part pulled down for the purpose of repair, was held valid, the publication of banns having been made in an adjoining parish church. (Stallwood v. Fredger, 2 Phil. E. C. 292.) As to the form and mode of consecration and dedication of churches and chapels, see 1 Burn's E. L. 323 to 342, by Tyrwhitt.

Consecration necessary.

After a new church is erected, it cannot be consecrated without a competent endowment. By the civil law, the endowment must be made even before the building be begun. (1 Burn's E. L. 324, by Tyrwhitt.)

Endowment of.

At the consecration of a chapel there was often some fixed endowment, as of lands or tithes, or voluntary contributions given to it, for its more easy dependence on the mother church. (Degge, pt. 1, c. 12.)

By stat. 17 Car. II. c. 3, in cities and towns corporate, the bishop (with the consent of the mayor, aldermen, and justices of the peace, and of the patron,) may unite two churches or chapels; and make order, with the like consent, that the patrons present by turns, having regard to the value of the livings united; and the incumbents thereof shall be graduates.

Uniting of churches.

Sect. 2. Notwithstanding any such union be made by virtue hereof, each of the parishes so united shall continue distinct as to all rates, taxes, parochial rates, charges, and duties, and all other privileges, &c. whatsoever, other than such as are before specified; and churchwardens shall be elected for each parish, as they were before such union made.

The number of churches was augmented from time to time, chiefly by the piety of individuals, till the practice of bequeathing their property to pious uses was encouraged by the priests to such an alarming extent, that the statutes of mortmain were passed to prevent the continuance of the evil.

Increase of.

Statutes of mortmain.

In the late reign, however, several acts of parliament were passed, authorising the gift, by deed or will, of land to the extent of five acres, or other property, not exceeding 500*l.* towards erecting, rebuilding, or providing any church or chapel, where the liturgy and rites of the united church of England and Ireland are observed, or any house of residence, &c. &c. (See 43 Geo. III. c. 108; 51 Geo. III. c. 115; 52 Geo. III. c. 161.)

Additional churches.

And a considerable addition has since been made under the powers of the 58 Geo. III. c. 45; 59 Geo. III. c. 134; and 3 Geo. IV. c. 72, through the agency of commissioners appointed to examine into the state of parishes, and to ascertain the means of church accommodation. (Steers' P. L. by Clive, 19.)

1. The Church and General Matters as to.

The 5 Geo. IV. c. 103, and the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38, amended, explained, and extended by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 107, gave power to persons willing to build churches by subscription, or partly by subscription, and partly by rates, to do so without the concurrence of the commissioners, if the consent of the bishop, and that of the incumbent and patron, where necessary, were procured. (See also 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 61; 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 75; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 49; and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 60; Steers' P. L. 20.)

Clauses are commonly inserted in the several acts of parliament for making provision for the rectors of new churches, which clauses give certain powers to justices of the peace in relation to the assessments to be made for that purpose. And in the case of borrowing money for rebuilding clergymen's houses, by the 17 Geo. III. c. 53, s. 1, (called Mr. Gilbert's act, explained and amended by stat. 21 Geo. III. c. 66,) the estimates are to be sworn to before a justice of the peace or master in chancery; and see stat. 5 Geo. IV. c. 89.

But these enactments more immediately belonging to the ecclesiastical law, and not relating in any way to the office and duties of a justice of peace or parish officer, it has not been considered expedient to insert them in this work. (See Burn's E. L. tit. Churches; Steers' P. L. by Clive, tit. Church. Some of the enactments as to pews will be found, post, 629; as to church repairs and church rates, post, 654.)

Freehold in churches.

The soil and freehold of the church and churchyard belongs solely to the parson or incumbent for public purposes, and not for his own emolument. (Per Bayley, J. Bryan v. Whistler, 8 B. & Cres. 293; 2 M. & R. 330, S. C.) And he alone has the right of making any disposition of or bringing any action for an injury with respect thereto. (See Bac. Abr. Churchwardens, B.; 1 Curteis, 260.) The fee simple of the glebe is in abeyance. (1 Fost. 341.)

Way through.

But although the church and churchyard be the parson's and be[illegible]secrated, yet a man may prescribe to have a way through either. (2 Rolle's Abr. 295.)

Action for injuring.

If the walls, windows, or doors, or any part of the freehold of the church or churchyard be injured by any person, the incumbent of the rectory, or his tenant if they be let, may have his action for the damages. (Wats. c. 39.)

II. Chancel, Aisle.

Chancel.

Chancel (cancellus) seemeth properly to be so called a cancellis, from the lattice work partition betwixt the quire and the body of the church, so framed as to separate the one from the other but not to intercept the sight. (1 Burn's E. L. 342.)

The freehold of it is in the parson, and is parcel of his glebe. (Brownl. & Goldsb. R. 45.)

By the rubric before the common prayer it is ordained that the chancels shall remain as they have done in times past, that is to say, distinguishable from the body of the church in manner aforesaid. (Gibs. 199.)

A grant of any part of the chancel of a church by a lay impropriator to his heirs and assigns is not valid in law, and therefore such grantee, or those claiming under him, cannot support trespass for pulling down his or their pews there erected. (See Clifford v. Wicks, 1 B. & Ald. 498.)

The rector cannot alienate any part of the chancel or church without the consent of the ordinary, and it is inconsistent with the duty of either to grant it. (See Steers' P. L. by Clive, 21.)

Aisle.

Ile is said to proceed from the French word aile (ala), a wing, for that the Norman churches were built in the form of a cross, with a nave and two wings. (Burn's E. L. 342.) Bingham derives it from ναος, or navis, and says it was originally a square building between the narthea and the sanctuary, or the chancel. (Bingh. vol. 1, p. 292.)

An ile which hath from time immemorial belonged to a particular house, and which may be established by repairs done by the owners of that house, is part of his frank tenement, and the ordinary cannot dispose of it or intermeddle in it, and this because the law presumes in such a case that the ile was erected by his ancestors, or those whose estate he hath, and is thereupon particularly appropriated to their house. But merely sitting in or using the pew would be no evidence of the right. (Gibs. 197; 12 Coke, 105; Cro. Jac. 366; 1 Burn's E. L. 343.) Residence in the parish is not necessary to the right. (Gibs. 197.) The title cannot be maintained upon mere prescription, or upon any new grant by a faculty from the ordinary to a man and his heirs, but the ile must always be supposed to be held in respect of the house, and will always go with the house to him that inhabits it. (Hussey v. Leighton, 12 Co. 106; Crook v. Sampson, 2 Keb. 92.) 2. Chancel and Isle.

If a person has good title to the ile, if the ordinary places another person in it with the proprietor, the latter may sue the ordinary in an action on the case: and if he be impleaded in the spiritual court for the same, a prohibition will lie. So if any private person sits in it, or obstructs the owner's right, or buries his dead there, he may sue him in a similar form of action. (Wats. c. 39.)

As to pews and seats in the chancel or ile, see post, 630. Pews and seats in.

III. The Churchyard, and herein of Burials.

A churchyard is a place belonging to the church, and where dead bodies are buried. Churchyard.

The soil and freehold in it is in the parson, and he may sue for any injury to his right thereto. See ante, 624. Freehold in.

A person may prescribe to have a way through it. (2 Roll. Abr. 265.) But no one can make a private door into it without the consent of the parson, and a faculty also from the bishop for the same. (1 Burn's E. L. 349.) The right of way if a private one is maintainable in the ecclesiastical court. (2 Roll. Ab. 287; 1 Ventr. 208.) Path or way through.

Under the 59 Geo. III. c. 134, s. 59, the commissioners for building new churches have the power of stopping up unnecessary paths in churchyards, provided the same be done with the consent of two justices, and on giving notice in the manner and form prescribed by the 55 Geo. III. c. 68. The notice prescribed by that act states, that the order will be lodged at the next quarter sessions, and will then be confirmed and inrolled, unless upon an appeal against the same to be then made, it be otherwise determined. The 59 Geo. III. c. 134, contains no other enactment relating to an appeal, and it has therefore been held, that although it appeared to be the intention of the legislature to give an appeal against the order of the commissioners, they had not carried that intention into effect, and that an appeal would not lie. (Reg. v. Stock, 3 Nev. & Per. 420; 8 Ad. & Ell. 405, S. C.)

By stat. 13 Edw. I. st. 2, c. 6, no fairs or markets shall be kept in churchyards. Fairs in.

If trees in the churchyard be cut down, or the grass thereon eaten by a stranger, the incumbent may bring his action (Bro. Abr. Trespass, 210); and so may his lessee if the churchyard be let (Rol. Abr. 337); the soil and freehold being in the incumbent. As between the rector and vicar, it seems that the right to trees belongs to him who is bound to repair. (2 Rol. Abr. 337; Gibs. 207.) Trees and herbage in.

By the 35 Edw. I. stat. 2, the parson cannot cut them down but when the chancel wants repairing, and by that statute they shall not be converted to any other use except the body of the church doth need like repairs, in which case the rectors of poor parishes of their charity shall do well to relieve the parishioners with bestowing upon them the same trees, but the statute does not command, but only commends this gift to be made. It would seem however from what fell from Lord Hardwicke in Stracy v. Frances, 2 Atk. 217, that a rector may cut down timber for the repairs of the parsonage house, and for the repairs of old pews belonging to the rectory, as well as for repairs of the chancel, though not for any common purpose; also that he is entitled to botes for the repairing barns and outhouses belonging to the parsonage.

3. Churchyard. Burials.

An injunction may be granted to prevent the improper cutting of trees in the churchyard. (See Stracey v. Frances, supra; Hoskins v. Featherstone, 2 Bro. C. C. 552.) A prohibition also lies. (See Gibs. 208; 11 Coke, 49.)

Fences and walls of.

By Canon 85, the churchwardens or questmen shall take care that the churchyards be well and sufficiently repaired, fenced, and maintained with walls, rails, or pales, as have been in each place accustomed, at their charge unto whom by law the same appertaineth. (1 Curt. 621.)

Liability to repair.

The parishioners are bound to repair the fence of the churchyard at their own charge. (Lind. 253; 2 Inst. 489.) And Lord Coke says, "that the parishioners ought to repair the inclosure of the churchyard, because the bodies of the more common sort are buried there, and for the preservation of the burials of those that were, or should have been while they lived, the temples of the Holy Ghost." (2 Inst. 489.) And if the churchyard be not decently inclosed, the church (which is God's house) cannot decently be kept, and therefore this the parishioners ought to do by custom known and approved; and the conuzance thereof belonged to the ecclesiastical court. (Id.)

By prescription the vicar may be liable to repair the fence. In R. v. Reynell, Clerk, (6 East, 315,) a vicar was indicted for a misdemeanor, in not repairing the fence of a churchyard, which he had been immemorially bound to repair, by means whereof cattle broke in and injured the tombstones, church porch, &c. to the nuisance of the parishioners; contrary to the evidence there was a verdict for defendant, and the Court of Queen's Bench refused to grant a rule nisi for a new trial on the ground of the verdict being against evidence, because it is a general rule not to give a new trial when there has been a verdict of acquittal, and therefore left the prosecutors to indict again for any continuing want of repair. No doubt was intimated of an indictment lying.

It has been said, that if the owners of lands adjoining to the churchyard have used time out of mind to repair so much of the fence thereof as adjoineth to their ground, such custom is a good custom, and the churchwardens may have an action against them at the common law for the same. (Gibs. 194.) But this is erroneous. The doctrine laid down in 2 Rol. Abr. 287, merely is, that if a prescription, or custom ratione tenuræ to repair, be pleaded in the ecclesiastical court, a prohibition shall go, and proceedings be had at common law, not that an action lies; and Godolphin is to the same effect; and 2 Ayloffe's Parergon Juris Canonicæ, 174; and see Gibs. Cod. 217. It seems that no action lies, but an indictment will, if any damage has been occasioned to tomb stones, and by cattle getting in. (R. v. Reynell, 6 East, 315.)

By the 59 Geo. III. c. 134, s. 39, the Commissioners for the building of additional churches may, if they think fit, alter, repair, pull down and rebuild, or order or direct to be altered, &c., the walls or fences of any existing churchyard or burial ground of any parish or chapelry, and fence of any additional or new burial ground to be provided for by this act, and also stop up and discontinue, or alter or order to be stopped up, &c., any entrance to any churchyard or burial ground, and the footways and passages over the same, as to them may appear useless and unnecessary, or as they shall think fit to alter, provided the same be done with the consent of two justices of the peace, and on notice being given as prescribed by 55 Geo. III. c. 68; 59 Geo. III. c. 134, s. 39.

Enlarging of, &c.

The 56 Geo. III. c. 141, enables ecclesiastical corporate bodies under certain circumstances to alienate lands for enlarging cemeteries or churchyards. (And see 58 Geo. III. c. 45, s. 33; 1 & 2 Vict. c. 107, s. 9.)

By the 59 Geo. III. c. 134, s. 36, all parishes, or extra-parochial places required by the commissioners, shall furnish lands for enlarging existing or making additional churchyards, or burial grounds, as the commissioners shall deem necessary; and the commissioners shall give notice to the churchwardens, to be left at their abodes, of the intention to enlarge the existing or set out new burial grounds, and of the extent of ground required for such purpose, and for a proper approach thereto, and of the place in which the same is required to be provided; and the churchwardens shall within fourteen days call a meeting of the vestry, or persons possessing the powers of vestry, for taking all necessary measures for providing the same: and in case the parish or place cannot provide the same without purchase, the vestry, or persons possessing the powers of vestry, are required forthwith to proceed to treat for ground according to such notice, but shall not conclude any bargain without the commissioners' approbation.

3. Churchyard. Burials.

The 3 Geo. IV. c. 72, s. 26, empowers the commissioners therein mentioned to authorise any parish, chapelry, township, or extra-parochial place, to procure and buy additional burial grounds, and empowers churchwardens to complete the purchases.

The 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 38, s. 17, enacts, that after five years from the conveyance of any lands, &c., as a site for any church or chapel, or any church or chapelyard under that act, they shall be absolutely vested in the persons to whom they are conveyed, provided that if recovered in ejectment, they tender the value found by the jury and costs within two months after the judgment.

Right to burial in.

The churchyard is the common burial place for all parishioners, (Comp. Incumb. 381,) who have a common law right to be buried in it, without paying anything for breaking the soil; (1 Burn, Eccl. Law, 258; Andrews v. Cawthorne, Willes, 536;) and a mandamus lies to compel the clergyman to inter the body of a parishioner if he should refuse; (R. v. Coleridge, 2 B. & Ald. 806; 1 Chit. Rep. 588, S. C.;) and, it would seem, a criminal information might be granted against him. (R. v. Taylor, Willes, 538.) And by canon 68, no minister shall refuse or delay to bury any corpse that is brought to the church or churchyard, convenient warning being given him thereof, in such manner and form as is prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer.

Parishioners.

Non-parishioners.

With respect also to non-parishioners, it would seem from what fell from Lord Denman, C.J. in the recent case of R. v. Stewart, (4 P. & D. 849; 12 A. & E. 773, S. C.,) that every person dying in this country, and not within certain exclusions laid down by the ecclesiastical law, has a right to a christian burial, and to be buried in the churchyard of the parish in which he dies.

Who excluded from.

As to who are excluded from christian burial, it is to be observed that the rubric, confirmed by the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 4, forbids the use of the customary office in the burial of any that die unbaptized, which was thought to have made church baptism necessary. But it has been held that a minister of the established church cannot refuse to bury the child of a dissenter; (Kemp v. Wickes, 3 Phil. 264;) nor the body of any person who was baptized with water, and in the name of the Holy Trinity, though never baptized otherwise than by a layman. (Escott v. Martin, 6 Jurist, 765.) (a)

Persons who have laid violent hands on themselves, having capacity to govern themselves, and therefore not lunatics or persons of insane mind, are excluded from christian burial. (1 Burn, E. L. 261.) Attainted felons, and traitors who die before execution, are not excluded. (Id.) As to the burial of a felo de se, see "Felo de Se," post, Vol. III.

In a particular part of churchyard.

The clergyman cannot be compelled to bury the corpse of any person, even though the corpse of a parishioner, in any particular vault, or other particular part of the churchyard; and the court have refused to grant a mandamus to compel him to do so. (Ex parte Blackmore, 1 B. & Adol. 122.) He has a

(a) Although the rubric of the Common Prayer Book prior to 1603, in that part relating to private baptism, directed that those present should call upon God for his grace, and say the Lord's prayer if the time would suffer, and then one of them should name the child, using water and calling upon the name of the Trinity; and the rubrics of 1603 and 1661 contained the following direction: "Of them that are to be baptized in private houses in the time of necessitie by the minister of the parish, or any other lawful minister that can be procured."—"First, let the lawful minister and them that be present call upon God for his grace, &c.;" yet this latter direction is not to be looked upon as an alteration of the rule then subsisting as to the validity of lay baptism, but only as directory—not as substitutionary, but cumulative. The validity of lay baptism was therefore unaffected thereby. (Escott v. Martin, 6 Jur. 765.) A clergyman refusing to perform the office for the interment of the dead over the body of a parishioner so baptized, due notice of the death having been given him, was suspended for three months. (Martin v. Escott, 2 Curt. 692.)

3. Churchyard. Burials

right to exercise a discretion on that subject. (Id.) The mode of burial is a question purely of ecclesiastical cognizance. (2 B. & Ald. 806.) A custom that every parishioner has a right to bury his dead relations in the churchyard as near their ancestors as possible, is bad. (Fryer v Johnson, 2 Wils. 28.)

Vault in church.

It seems a rector cannot grant a vault in the church, but only leave to bury there in each particular instance. (Bryan v. Whistler, 8 B. & C. 288; 2 Man. & R. 318, S. C.) Where a rector granted to A. B., by parol, leave to make a vault in the parish church and to bury a certain corpse there, and that he should have the exclusive use of the vault; and afterwards, without the leave of A. B, opened the vault and buried another person there; it was held, that no action could be maintained against him for so doing; for that, if the rector had power to grant the exclusive use of a vault, he could not by parol do it. (Id.)

The 58 Geo. III. c. 45, provides, that no burials are to be permitted in any church or chapel erected under the act, or in the adjacent cemetery at a less distance than twenty feet from the external walls, except in vaults wholly arched with brick or stone under any church or chapel, and to which the only access shall be by steps on the outside of the external walls, under the penalty of 50*l.* upon conviction before two justices of the peace, one half to the informer, the other to the poor of the parish.

Who bound to bury.

The common law casts on some one the duty of carrying to the grave decently the dead body of any person without the means of private burial, and such duty is, it seems, cast upon the householder, in whose house the dead body lies. (See R. v. Stewart, 4 P. & D. 349; 12 A. & E. 773, S. C.) It would seem, therefore, however, that where a pauper dies in any parish house, poor house, or union house, that circumstance casts on the parish or union, as the case may be, the duty of burying the body, not by virtue of the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, but on the principles of the common law. (Id.) But overseers are not bound either by common law, or that statute, to bury a pauper settled in their parish, who dies in the parish, but not in any parish house. It must be observed, that under the 22 Geo III. c. 83, s. 38, (Gilbert's Act,) the expenses of the burial of any poor person, found in a parish to which he did not belong, are to be paid by the guardians of the place where he was settled, after being allowed and certified by a justice. As to the burial of dead bodies cast on shore, see ante, "Bodies."

The burial service.

The burial must take place in the manner and form as is prescribed in the Common Prayer Book. (Can. 68.)

Meeting the corpse.

By the rubric, "the priests and clerks meeting the corpse at the entrance of the churchyard, and going before it either into the church or towards the grave, shall say as is there appointed."

Entering the church.

It would seem that the minister may, in his discretion, prevent the corpse being carried into the church, and there may be good reason for this in cases of infection. (Steers' P. L. by Clive, 57.)

Mode of burial.

In general, in the absence of any positive law to the contrary, the mode of burying the dead is a matter of ecclesiastical cognizance. In a recent case, the Court of Queen's Bench refused a mandamus to compel a burial in an iron coffin. (R. v. Coleridge, supra.) The use of iron in the structure of coffins is not, however, unlawful; but they are not to be admitted into the churchyard on the same terms of pecuniary payment as coffins of ordinary wood. (Gilbert v. Buzzard, 3 Phil. 335.)

Iron coffins.

Ringing the bell.

By the 67th canon, after the death of a party there shall be rung no more but one short peal, and one before the burial, and one after it.

The corpse must not be exhumed.

The corpse, when once buried in the churchyard, cannot legally be taken up to be deposited in another place without a license from the ordinary; (Gibs. 454;) except, indeed, in cases of violent or supposed violent death, in which the coroner may sometimes have it taken up for the purpose of holding an inquest. (See "Coroner," post, Vol. II.) As to the stealing of dead bodies, see ante, "Bodies."

Burial fees.

If there be an accustomed fee, and that be denied, still the clergyman must bury the body of a parishioner in the churchyard when required so to do. (1 Burn, Eccl. Law, 268; Andrews v. Cawthorne, Willes, 536, recognized by Sir W. Scott in Gilbert v. Buzzard, 2 Hagg. 355.)

As regards the amount of the burial fee, it is said that the accustomed fee to the parson for breaking the soil in the churchyard is for the most part 3*s.* 4*d.*, and for the opening of the floor of the chancel 6*s.* 8*d.* (Degge, 146.) A libel for subtraction of burial fees was rejected, the fees not being ancient customary fees, nor having been settled and fixed by the vestrymen of the parish (Marylebone) under the local statute 51 Geo. III. c. 151, s. 49, and it was held, that as the vestrymen had not exercised the power given them by the 49th section of the act, to settle and fix a rate of fees for the new burial-ground of the parish (being the fees in question), there were no fees legally existing, although the 50th section of the act declares that the vestrymen shall not be enabled to reduce the rate of fees for the new burial-ground below that for burials in the (then) present cemeteries of the parish. (Spry v. Marylebone, 2 Curt. 5.) Where application is made to the rector for leave to bury in the church, the person giving the license may insist on his own price. (1 Salk. 334; Steers' P. L. by Clive, 58.)

3. Churchyard. Burials.

Burial fees.

As to the party entitled to the burial fee, it belongs in general to the minister of the parish in which the body is buried. It is said that it belongs to the minister of the parish in which the party deceased heard divine service and received sacrament, wheresoever the corpse be buried. (Gibs. 452.) It has been held that the vicar is not entitled either by the common or canon law to demand a fee for burying in the churchyard, although such a fee may be due by special custom. (Cawthorne v. Andrews, Willes, 536.) A custom that on the death of a person within one parish and burial within the chancel of another parish, the same fees shall be paid to the parson and churchwardens of the parish in which the death took place, as are payable for burials in that parish, is contrary to reason and void. (Topsall v. Ferrers, Hob. 175; and see 1 Salk. 332.) By custom about London, the churchwardens take the money for burying in the church or churchyard, and the parson has nothing but for burial in the chancel. (Anon. 2 Show. 184.) And by custom the fees may be claimed by the parson and churchwardens in equal moieties. (Littlewood v. Williams, 1 Marsh. 389; 6 Taunt. 276, S. C.)

If there be any dispute as to what is the accustomed fee, or to whom it is payable, that is triable in the common law courts. (Dean and Chapter of Exeter's case, 1 Salk. 334; Spry v. Emperor, 6 M. & W. 639.)

By the 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 86, relating to the registration of births, deaths, &c., it is provided by the 49th sect., "that nothing herein contained shall affect the registration of baptisms or burials as now by law established, or the right of any officiating minister to receive the fees now usually paid for the performance or registration of any baptism, burial, or marriage." (See "Registers," Vol. V.)

IV. Seats and Pews in.

Parishioners a right to in general.

By the general law and of common right all the seats and pews in a parish church are the common property of the parish, they are for the use in common of the parishioners, who are all entitled to be seated orderly and conveniently without payment, so as best to provide for the accommodation of all. (Blake v. Usborne, 3 Hagg. 733; Fuller v. Lane, 2 Addams, 125; Walter v. Sumner, 1 Hagg. Rep. 317; Wats. c. 39; Pettman v. Bridger, 1 Phill. 323; Hawkins v. Compeigne, 3 Phill. 11; Hawkins v. Coleman, 3 Phill. 16.)

Non-parishioners.

Non-parishioners, whether extra-parochial or residing in another parish, have no such rights: and directly an occupier of a pew ceases to be a parishioner, his right to the pew, how valid soever during his continuance in the parish, at once ceases and determines. (Fuller v. Lane, 2 Addams, 425; Byerley v. Windus, 5 B. & C. 19; 7 D. & R. 564, S. C.; 1 Gibs. Cod. 197.)

Free seats.

By the 43 Geo. III. c. 108, s. 5, in every parochial church or chapel hereafter erected, ample provision shall be made for decent and suitable accommodation of all persons soever entitled to resort thither, whose circumstances may render them unable to pay for the same.

The acts 58 Geo. III. c. 45, 59 Geo. III. c. 134, 3 Geo. IV. c. 72, and 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 38, relating to the building and promoting the building of additional churches in populous parishes, have several provisions relating to pews and free seats in such churches. (See 1 Burn's Ec. Law, tit. "Church.")

4. Seats and Pews in.

Distribution of seats.

Although parishioners have the right to be seated orderly and conveniently, they are not at liberty to choose and take what seats they like, the distribution of seats among them rests in the ordinary or bishop, who may place and displace whomsoever he pleaseth, and which authority he in general exercises by the churchwardens. (See Wats. c. 39; 2 Roll. Ab. 288; Reynolds v. Monkton, 2 M. & Rob. 384; Pettman v. Bridger, 1 Phill. 316, 323; Groves v. Rector of Hornsey, 1 Hagg. 394.) By custom the churchwardens may have the ordering of the seats, to the exclusion of the ordinary, which custom prevails in London. (Wats. c. 39; and see Presgrave v. Churchwardens of Shrewsbury, 1 Salk. 167; 2 Rol. Rep. 24; Gibs. 198.)

This authority of the churchwardens must be exercised justly and discreetly by them, or they may be corrected by the ordinary. (Willie v. Mott, 1 Hagg. Rep. 33; 3 Phill. 516, n.) They should place the parishioners according to their rank and station; (Pettman v. Bridger, 1 Phill. 323;) but in doing this care should be taken not to accommodate the higher classes beyond their real wants to the exclusion of their poorer neighbours, who are equally entitled to accommodation with the rest, though they are not entitled to equal accommodation supposing the seats not to be all equally convenient. (Fuller v. Lane, 2 Add. Rep. 425.)

Where a local statute enacted that the vestrymen of the parish should set out and appropriate such a number of seats for the gratuitous accommodation of the poor of the said parish for the time being, and also of such other pews or seats for the use of the parishioners of the said parish as the said vestrymen should think necessary, proper and convenient, it was held that the enactment was imperative upon the vestrymen, and empowered them to set out and appropriate the pews (other than those for the poor) without restriction, and not subject to the superintendence of the ordinary. (Spry v. Flood, 2 Curt. 356.)

Seats in chancel.

The parson or rector impropriate is in general entitled to the chief seat in the chancel, (Hall v. Ellis, Noy, 133; Johns. 264,) unless by prescription it is in another. (Spry v. Flood, 2 Curt. 356.) In some places where the parson repairs the chancel, the vicar by prescription claims a right of a seat for his family there. (Johns. 242, 243.) It is a groundless notion with impropriators, that they have the same right in the great chancel that a nobleman hath in a lesser. (1 Burn, E. L. 864.) The ordinary may grant permission to other parishioners to have pews in the chancel. (Per Bayley, J., in Clifford v. Wick, 1 B. & Ald. 498; and see Morgan v. Curtis, 3 M. & Ry. 389.)

Where a party has an exclusive right to a pew or seat.

The right of the parishioners to the common use of seats and pews may be excluded, as also the right of the ordinary or churchwardens to dispose of them where an individual has acquired an exclusive right to a seat, or a priority in a seat or to a pew by faculty, or by prescription, which presupposes a faculty to have existed time out of mind, the faculty itself being lost. (See Rol. Abr. 288; Gibs. 221; Wyllie v. Mott, 1 Hagg. Rep. 39; Carleton v. Hutton, Noy, 78.) It is plain that by the general law there is no such thing as property in a pew or seat. (See Hawkins v. Compeigne, 3 Phil. 16.)

By faculty.

A faculty cannot, it seems, be granted for a seat or pew to A. and his heirs absolutely, or to a person in respect of a particular estate, for the seat or pew does not belong to the person, but to the house. (Brabin v. Tradem, Poph. R. 140; Langley v. Chute, T. Raym. 246; 2 Roll. Ab. 287; Gibs. 221.)

According to one case, a faculty is not good if it goes to the extent of allowing a nonparishioner a pew or seat in the church. (Fuller v. Lane, 2 Add. Rep. 426.) But this, according to another case, is incorrect (See Lousley v. Hayward, 1 Y. & J. 583.) The former decision, however, seems the most satisfactory one, and more particularly if the pew be in the body of the church.

There may, it seems, be a faculty for exchanging seats in a church which are annexed to particular houses. (See per Lord Kenyon, 1 T. Rep. 431.)

At the present day, ordinaries are bound not to issue faculties appropriating pews to individuals unless under special circumstances. (See Woollocombe v. Ouldridge, 3 Add. Rep. 1.) 4. Seats and Pews in.

On the expiration of a faculty, limited to a certain period, the right of the parishioners to the pews, the subject of such faculty, revives. (Blake v. Usborne, 3 Hagg. Rep. 733.)

The exclusive right to a seat or pew by prescription is founded on the supposition that the right was acquired at some distant period out of memory by a faculty, and that the faculty itself has been lost, and the right claimed must be such as could have been granted by a faculty. The right to the seat or pew cannot be claimed by prescription as appendant or belonging to land; but it must be laid as belonging to a house, in respect to the inhabitancy thereof. (1 Wood's Inst. b. 1, c. 7.) Nor can it be claimed by length of possession only, without claiming it as appurtenant to a messuage. (Stocks v. Booth, 1 T. R. 428; Mainwaring v. Giles, 5 B. & Ald. 356; Woollocombe v. Ouldridge, 3 Add. Rep. 6.) It would seem that the prescription act, 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71, does not apply to a right to a seat or pew. By prescription.

As to what is sufficient evidence of the prescriptive right, it seems that the strongest proof of it is the building and repairing and using the seat or pew time out of mind; and such proof seems absolutely necessary to support the right against the ordinary, against whom a consideration must be shown. (See per Lord Stowell, in Walter v. Gunner, 1 Hagg. 322; Pettman v. Bridger, 1 Phil. E. C. 325; Woollocombe v. Ouldridge, 3 Add. 6; Gibs. 221; 2 Roll. Ab. 228; Rogers v. Brooks, 1 T. R. 431, n.) What might be the effect of very long occupancy where no repairs have been necessary, seems undecided. (Pettman v. Bridger, supra.) Where the prescription is interrupted, the jury are not bound to presume a faculty from long undisturbed possession. (Morgan v. Curtis, 3 M. & Ry. 389.)

As against a wrong doer, less evidence of the right is required; and it has been held, that proof of possession for thirty-six years, where the pew was claimed as appurtenant to a house, was sufficient. (Rogers v. Brooks, 1 T. R. 431 (n)). The church in that case had been rebuilt above thirty years before, and the plaintiff had been put into possession by the clergyman and parish officers, and had locked up the pew. So in another case, uninterrupted possession of a pew in the chancel of the church for thirty years was held presumptive evidence of a prescriptive right to the pew in an action against a wrong doer. (Griffith v. Mathews, 5 T. R 296) But where it appeared that the seat itself had been made thirty-five years ago for the accommodation of the plaintiff, and to put an end to a dispute between two families, this proof was holden to rebut the presumption which would otherwise arise from so long a possession. (Id.; and see Walter v. Sumner, 1 Hagg Rep. 322.) An old entry in a vestry book, signed by the churchwardens, stating that a pew had been repaired by A. in consideration of his using it, is evidence for a person claiming the pew under A. (Price v. Littlewood, 3 Camp. 288.)

The seats cannot be sold nor let without a special act of parliament. (Wyllie v. Mott, 1 Hagg. Rep. 29; see Blake v. Usborne, 3 Hagg. 726.) And where a parishioner has a pew allotted to him, he cannot, on his ceasing to be a parishioner, let the pew with, and thus annex it to his house; but it reverts to the disposal of the ordinary. (See Wyllie v. Mott, supra.) And persons having pews appurtenant to their houses cannot let them to non-resident persons, and thus by contract defeat the general right of the parish. (Walter v. Gunner, 1 Hagg. Rep. 317, 319.) But if a faculty be annexed to a messuage, it may be transferred with the messuage to another person. (Stocks v. Booth, 1 T. R. 431.) Selling or letting out, &c., pews.

No gift of a pew is good without a faculty. (Tattersall v. Knight, 1 Phil. R. 237.)

Where a local statute enacted that it should and might be lawful to and for the said vestrymen, if they should think proper, to let the pews, &c., or any of them (save and except the pews or seats to be appropriated for the gratuitous accommodation of the poor of the said parish for the time being as aforesaid), to such persons only who should be inhabitant householders within the

4. Seats and Pews in.

said parish, it was held that the vestrymen were empowered to let all the pews save those for the poor, and consequently to remove the rector from one of two pews of which he had been in possession from the time of his induction, and to let it to another inhabitant householder. (Spry v. Flood, 2 Curt. 356.)

Apportionment of right to a pew.

The right to sit in a pew may be apportioned; and therefore, where by a faculty reciting, "that A. had applied to have a pew appropriated to him in the parish church in respect of his dwelling-house," a pew was granted to him and his family for ever, and the owners and occupiers of the said dwelling-house; and the dwelling-house was afterwards divided in two, it was held, that the occupier of one of the two (constituting a very small part of the original messuage) had some right to the pew, and in virtue thereof might maintain an action against a wrong doer. (Harris v. Drewe, 2 B. & Adol. 164.)

Building and repairing by parish.

Generally the seats in churches are to be built and repaired, as the church is to be, at the general charge of the parishioners, unless any particular person be chargeable to do the same by faculty or prescription, which presupposes a faculty time out of mind, the faculty itself being lost. (Degge, p. 1, c. 12.)

Erecting pew without license.

If any persons of their own heads shall presume to build any seat in the church without license of the ordinary, or consent of the minister and churchwardens, or in any inconvenient place, or too high, it may be pulled down by order of the bishop or his archdeacon, or by the churchwardens, by the consent of the parson.

Though more pews and galleries be necessary, churchwardens cannot erect them of their own head; the ordinary must be consulted. But if the incumbent, churchwardens and parishioners unanimously agree that more pews are necessary, and that they shall be fixed in such a place, there is no necessity for consulting the ordinary. (Johns. 163; Palsgrave v. Churchwardens of Shrewsbury, 1 Salk. 167; 1 Burn's E. L. 360; and see Tattersall v. Knight, 1 Phil. Rep. 232.)

Pulling down pews.

Pews already erected cannot be pulled down without the consent of the minister and churchwardens, unless after cause shown by a faculty or license from the ordinary. (Jarratt v. Steele, 3 Phil. 170.)

Therefore if any one presume to cut or pull down any seat annexed to the church, the parson may sue in trespass against the wrong doer, though he formerly set it up, if he do it without the parson's consent or order from the ordinary; but if the seat be set loose, he that built it may remove it at his pleasure. (Degge, p. 1, c. 12; 1 Burn's E. L. 364, 365.)

If any seats annexed to a church be pulled down, the property of the materials is in the parson, and he may make use of them, if they were placed in the church by any one of his own head without legal authority; but for the seats erected by parishioners by good authority, it seemeth that the property in the materials, upon removal, is in the parishioners. (Degge, P. C. c. 12; 1 Burn's E. L. 364.)

A chapel-warden of a parochial chapelry has not, by virtue of his office, any authority to enter the chapel and remove pews without the consent of the perpetual curate. (Jones v. Ellis, 2 Y. & J. 265.) And the perpetual curate of an augmented parochial chapelry has a sufficient possession whereon to maintain trespass for breaking and entering the chapel and destroying the pews, even against the chapel-warden. (Id.)

Trifling alterations in a pew may, it seems, be made without a faculty or license from the ordinary, unless a private right is infringed thereby. (Patham v. Templar, 3 Phil. 527.)

If seats annexed to the church be pulled down, the property of the materials is in the parson, and he may make use of them if they were placed in the church by any one of his own head without legal authority; but for the seats erected by the parishioners, by good authority, it seems that the property of the materials upon removal is in the parishioners. (Degge, pt. 1, c. 12.)

Remedies for disturbance of seats and pews.

As we have already seen, ante, 630, the distribution of seats amongst the parishioners rests with the ordinary or bishop, who may by himself or the churchwardens place and displace whomsoever he pleaseth, unless in the case of a party having an exclusive right to the seat. And they may remove persons intruding on seats or pews not appropriated to them. (Reynolds v. Monkston, 2 M. & Rob. 384.) 4. Seats and Pews in.

Trespass will not lie by an individual for entering a pew in the body of the church because he has not exclusive possession, the possession of the church being in the parson. (Stocks v. Booth, 1 T. R. 430; 2 Rol. Rep. 139.) But an action on the case lies for the disturbance of his right. (Noy, 78; Burton v. Bateman, 1 Sid. 88; Mainwaring v. Giles, 5 B. & Ald. 361.) And if the pew be in the chancel, and the freehold be in an individual, then trespass might lie. (See id.) So trespass will lie for any injury done to any personal property of the party in possession of the pew.

In all cases of a faculty and prescriptions for seats the matter is solely determinable at the common law; in other cases the Ecclesiastical Court has exclusive jurisdiction. (Degge, pt. 1, c. 12; Wats. c. 393; Witcher v. Chesham, 1 Wils. 17.) But for a disturbance of a seat a party may sue in the Spiritual Court, where the faculty or prescription is not denied; or the defendant, if he will, may admit the faculty or prescription to be tried there. (See Jacob v. Dallow, 2 Salk. 551; 2 Ld. Raym. 755, S. C.; 1 B. & Ald. 498.)

A possessory title in a pew is sufficient against a mere intruder. (Spry v. Flood, 2 Curt. 356.) But a person who has permission from the churchwardens to sit in a pew temporarily, and in order, by keeping possession for the future tenant, to carry into effect the conditions of a sale of a house, with which the pew had, for above a century, been held under an expired faculty, has no possession on which he can bring a suit for perturbation against a mere intruder, such permission by the churchwardens being illegal, as confirming the sale of the pew. (Blake v. Usborne, 3 Hagg. 726.)

In a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court for perturbation of a seat, if it appear that the churchwardens have acted properly in displacing the plaintiff, the Court will dismiss them; but will not proceed to confirm the possession of the person seated by them, as it does not form part of the question before the Court, and may be injurious to the parish by taking the pew more out of the power of the churchwardens. (Wyllie v. Mott, 1 Hagg. Rep. 41.)

The Ecclesiastical Court will admonish a wrong-doer not to disturb a person in possession of a pew, although he has no well founded title to it. (Cross v. Salter, 3 T. R. 639.)

As to making or creating a noise or disturbance in a church, and the right to put out the party making it, see post, 660; ante, 274.

V. Goods and Ornaments of, and Monuments in a Church.

With respect to what goods and ornaments should be provided in a church, see 1 Burn's E. L. 368; and as to the power and duty of churchwardens in providing and taking care of them, see post, "Churchwardens;" as to whom they belong to, see post, "Churchwardens." Goods and ornaments.

They generally belong to the parishioners, and not to the incumbent; and if they be taken away or broken, the churchwardens may bring an action. (Wats. c. 39.)

By the laws of England the goods belonging to a church may be aliened by the churchwardens, with the consent of the parish. (Wats. c. 39.)

A person may give or dedicate goods to God's service in such a church, and deliver them into the custody of the churchwardens, and thereby the property is immediately changed. (Degge, pt. 1, c. 12.)

And if a person erect a pew in a church, or hang up a bell in the steeple, they thereby become church goods, though they are not expressly given to the church, and he may not afterwards remove them; if he does, the churchwardens may sue him. (1 Burn's E. L. 377; Inter Starky and The Churchwardens of Watlington, 2 Salk. 547.)

In a parish church an organ cannot legally be erected without a faculty, Organ, &c.

5. Goods, Ornaments and Monuments.

nor will a faculty be granted without a decree with intimation, in order that any of the parishioners may object, on which objection the court, considering all the circumstances of the case, is to decide. (Pearce v. Rector of Clapham, 3 Hagg. Rep. 13.)

In cathedrals, organs may be deemed necessary, and the ordinary may compel their erection by the dean and chapter. In parish churches it is otherwise, and it might be proper to discourage them in small or poor parishes. (Jay v. Webber, id. 8; Churchwardens of St. John's, Margate, v. Parishioners, &c. of same, 1 Hagg. 198.) See Randall v. Collins, 2 Lee's Ec. Ca. 217, where the application for the grant of a faculty to erect an organ in a parish church was refused.

The ordinary is to judge whether the circumstances of the parish offer an objection to the erection of an organ; the parish alone is to decide on any expenses to be incurred. (Jay v. Webber, 3 Hagg. R. 8.)

A faculty directing the performance upon and repairs of an organ in a parish church to be paid out of the parish rates, would be legally objectionable, for the ordinary can only bind the parish to expense for articles absolutely necessary. (Id.)

Even if the vestry is unanimous, a clause binding the parish to defray out of the rates future expenses for an article not necessary, ought not to be inserted. (Id.)

It is no sufficient objection to the issuing of a decree, with intimation to lead a faculty for erecting an organ in a parish church, that there is no provision for the future repairs, nor for the permanent salary of an organist. (Pearce v. Rector, &c. of Clapham, 3 Hagg. R. 10.)

In Butterworth and Barker v. Walker and Waterhouse, (3 Burr. 1689,) it seems to have been the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench that the consent of the parish is not necessary to the ordinary's ordering an organ (provided by subscription) to be erected in a church; and in this case a prohibition was denied.

In the case of The Churchwardens of St. John's, Margate, v. The Parishioners, Vicar, &c. of the same, (1 Hagg. 198,) Lord Stowell declared that the law respecting church ornaments is now generally understood and settled. It was there said that the consent of the parishioners is not indispensably necessary, unless to charge the parish with any expense for the support of the ornament after it has been put up. But if there be no charge incurred, the approbation of the majority of the parishioners is not necessary, nor the disapprobation binding on the ordinary. He then decreed a faculty for accepting and erecting an organ offered to the church of St. John's, Margate, without a clause against future expenses being charged to the parish, which was rich and populous.

A faculty confirming the erection of an organ binds the parish to nothing prospectively. (Jay v. Webber, 3 Hagg. R. 9.)

Organist. As to when the office of organist is not an annual one, see R. v. St. George, 2 Nev. & M. 505; 5 B. & Adol. 571, S. C.

Playing the organ. It may be here added, that the minister who has the right of directing the service may direct when the organ shall be played or not, and when children shall and shall not chaunt, though the organist is paid and the children managed by the churchwardens. (Hutchins v. Denzilow, 3 Phil. 90.)

Superstitious pictures, &c. If any superstitious pictures or images are in a window of a church or aisle, it is not lawful for any to break them without license of the ordinary; and in Prickett's case, Wray, C. J., bound the offender to good behaviour. (Francis v. Ley, Cro. Jac. 366.)

Monuments. It is lawful to build or erect tombs, sepulchres, or monuments for the deceased in church, chancel, common chapel, or churchyard, provided it be done in a convenient manner; (3 Inst. 102;) and by license of the ordinary, or consent of the parson and churchwardens. (Degge, p. 1, c. 12; 1 Stra, 576, 1000; 3 Burr. 1691; Wood's Inst. 94.) And a custom for the churchwardens of a parish to set up monuments, &c. in a church without consent of rector or ordinary, is illegal. (Becwith v. Harding, 1 B. & Ald. 508.)

Monuments may be set up in the aisles, belonging to particular persons, without such license or consent. (Wats. c. 39.)

5. Goods, Ornaments and Monuments.

But then, as in all other cases, they must be set up in a convenient and proper manner, so as not to obstruct divine service in any way. (See 3 Inst. 202.)

The ordinary must be allowed the proper judge of that conveniency; and if a monument be erected in an inconvenient or improper manner, he may decree and compel a removal or defacement, without any danger of an action at law. (See Gibs. 453, 454; Hopper v. Davis, 1 Lee's Ec. Ca. 648; Wilson v. M'Muth, 3 Phil. 92.)

It seems that even the rector cannot grant a vault in the church, but only leave to bury there in each particular instance. (Bryan v. Whistler, 8 B. & Cres. 288; 2 Man. & R. 318, S.C.; ante, 628.)

And the lay rector is not entitled as of right to make a vault or affix tablets in the chancel without leave of the ordinary, nor is he entitled to a faculty for such purposes, without laying before the ordinary such particulars as will afford the vicar and parishioners an opportunity of judging of it, and satisfy the ordinary that such vaults or tablets will not interrupt the parishioners in the use and enjoyment of the chancel: nor has the vicar an absolute veto, though he may show cause against the grant of a faculty. Semble, that the consent of the lay rector must precede the leave of the ordinary for the construction of a vault or the erection of tablets in the chancel. (Rich v. Bushnell, Clerk, 4 Hagg. Rep. 164.)

There is not at common law a right to erect even a flat gravestone, for mere protection of the grave, in a churchyard, without legal authority of the ordinary, except a custom that the churchwardens shall give leave for that purpose be shown to obtain. (Bardin v. Calcott, 1 Hagg. Rep. 14—20.)

Repair of monuments.

Monuments once erected may be repaired; for this is of public consequence, when their importance in tracing family descents, &c. is considered. It may be proper to apply to the churchwardens, as the agents of the ordinary, for leave to do so, but they are bound to grant it as far as their authority extends; and if they do not, they will be liable to the censure of the Ecclesiastical Court. If parties are not at liberty to repair, the object of obtaining liberty to erect would be defeated: it is rather the duty of churchwardens to encourage parishioners to provide that monuments may be put in repair, than to obstruct others in doing it; for decency and propriety require that they should not remain in a state of ruin and decay. (Id.)

Defacing, &c.

The defacing of monuments is punishable by the common law. (Year Book, 9 Edw. IV. 14, Lady Wiche's case.) And so it was agreed by the whole court; M. 10 Jac., in the Common Pleas, between Corven and Pym, (1 Burn's E. L. 379): and for the defacing thereof, they that build or erect the same may sue at law during their lives, (as the Lady Wiche had in the case of the 9 Edw. IV); and after their deceases, the heirs of the deceased may bring the action. (See Cro. Jac. 367.)

And in a recent case it was held, that though the freehold of the churchyard is in the parson, trespass lies by the erector of a tombstone against a person who wrongfully removes it from the churchyard, and erases the inscription. (Spooner v. Brewster, 3 Bingh. 136.)

So gravestones, windingsheets, coats of arms, pennons, or other ensigns of honour, hanged up, laid or placed in memory of the dead, the property remains in the executors, and they may have actions against such as break, deface, or carry them away. (3 Inst. 110; Co. Litt. 18 b; and see Hitchcock v. Wolford, 5 Scott, 792.)

It has been said that the churchwardens may sue for defacing a monument. (Godb. 279; 1 Burn's E. L. 373.)

If monuments be put up without the ordinary's consent, he may remove them. (Palmer v. Bishop of Exeter, 1 Stra. 576.)

VI. Repairs of Church.

And herein, as to

1. Who is to Repair.
2. Who may compel Repairs.

---

1. Who to Repair.

Who to repair.

Bishops.

Formerly the bishops had the whole tithes of the diocese, a fourth part of which in every parish was to be applied to the repairs of the church, but upon a release of this interest to the rectors, they were consequently acquitted of the repairs of the churches. (Degge, pt. 1, c. 12.)

Rectors.

And by the canon law the repair of the church belongeth to him who receiveth this fourth part; that is, to the rector, and not to the parishioners. (1 Salk. 164.)

Inhabitants.

But custom (that is the common law) transferreth the burden of reparation, at least of the nave of the church, upon the parishioners, and likewise sometimes of the chancel, as particularly in the city of London in many churches there, and this custom the parishioners may be compelled to observe where such custom is. (Lindw. 53; Bishop of Ely v. Gibbons, 4 Hagg. 156.)

It seems, however, if a church fall down, the parishioners are not bound to repair it. (Read's Church Service, Anon. 1 Ventr. 367.)

Who to repair chancel

But generally the parson is bound to repair the chancel; not because the freehold is in him, for so is the freehold of the church, but by the custom of England, which hath allotted the repairs of the chancel to the parson, and the repairs of the church to the parishioners. (1 Burn's E. L. 350.)

By custom, however, the parishioners or the owner of an estate may be liable to repair the chancel. (Gibs. 199; Leger v. Dean and Chapter of Chichester, 4 Hagg. 162; 3 Phil. 90.)

Where there is both rector and vicar in the same church, and no custom or order to the contrary, they shall contribute in proportion to their benefice. (Lindw. 253.)

And as rectors or spiritual persons, so also impropriators are bound of common right to repair the church. (Gibs. 199; Anon. 3 Keb. 829.)

The sequestrator of a rectory is bound to repair the chancel. (Bishop of Ely v. Gibbons, 1 Consist. 312; and see 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 54.)

And an impropriator of a rectory or parsonage, though bound to repair the chancel, is also bound to contribute to the reparation of the church, in case he hath lands in the parish which are not parcel of the rectory. (Davie's case, Gibs. 197, 221-3.)

Generally, however, the repairing of the chancel is a discharge from contributing to the repairs of the church. (Gibs. 199, 200.)

Church spire.

In Viscount Maynard v. Brand, (3 Phil. 501), a monition was issued against churchwardens to repair and reinstate in its original form the spire of a church, which had been destroyed by lightning.

Foundation.

It is said, that the patron of a church, as in right of the founder, may prescribe that, in respect of the foundation, he and his tenants have been freed from the charge of repairing the church. (Degge, pt. 1, c. 12.)

Repairing a chapel of ease, when a discharge.

If there be a chapel of ease within a parish, and some part of the parish have used time out of mind, alone, without others of the parishioners, to repair the chapel of ease, and there to hear service, and to marry, and all other things, but only they bury at the mother church; yet they shall not be discharged of the reparation of the mother church, but ought to contribute thereto, for the chapel was ordained only for their ease. (2 Roll's Abr. 289, l. 50; Parish of Aston v. Castle Birmidge Chapel, Hob. 66; 3 Mod. 284.)

So, in the like case, if the inhabitants who have used to repair the chapel prescribe that they have time out of mind used to repair the chapel, and by reason thereof have been discharged of the reparation of the mother church; yet this shall not discharge them of the reparation of the mother church, for that is not any direct prescription to be discharged thereof, but is by reason thereof a prescription for the reparation of the chapel. (2 Roll's Abr. 290.)

6. Repairs of Church.

If the chapel be three miles distant from the mother church, and the inhabitants who have used to come to the chapel, have used always to repair the chapel, and there marry and bury, and have never within sixty years been charged to the repair of the mother church; yet this is not any cause to have a prohibition, but they ought to show in the spiritual court their exemption, if they have any, upon the endowment. (2 Roll's Abr. 290, l. 10; sed vid. Ball v. Cross, 1 Salk. 165.)

But if the inhabitants of a chapelry prescribe to be discharged time out of mind of the reparation of the mother church, a prohibition lieth upon this surmise. (2 Roll. Abr. 290, l. 22; Parish of Aston v. Castle Birmidge Chapel, Hob. 67; Brown v. Palfry, 2 Levinz, 102.)

If there be a parish church and chapel of ease within the same parish, and the chapel of ease hath time out of mind had all spiritual rights except sepulture, and this hath been used to be done at the parish church, and therefore they who have used to go to the chapel of ease have used time out of mind to repair a part of the wall of the churchyard of the parish church, and in consideration thereof, and because that they who are of the chapel of ease have used time out of mind to repair the chapel of ease at their own costs, they have been time out of mind discharged of the reparation of the parish church; this is a good description; and therefore if they be sued in the spiritual court to repair the parish church a prohibition lieth. (2 Roll. Abr. 290, l. 30; see 1 Burn's E. L. 353-4.)

If two churches be united, the repairs of the several churches shall be made as they were before the union. (Degge, pt. 1, c. 12; ante, 623.)

Churches united, how to be repaired.

2. Who may compel Repairs and how compellable.

By Canon 86, every dean, dean and chapter, archdeacon and others, which have authority to hold ecclesiastical visitations by composition, law or prescription, shall survey the churches of his or their jurisdiction once in every three years, in his own person, or cause the same to be done.

Who may compel repairs.

And by the said Canon they were required from time to time to certify the high commissioners for causes ecclesiastical every year, of such defects in any the said churches, as he or they should find to remain unrepaired, and the names and surnames of the parties faulty therein. Upon which certificate the high commissioners were desired by the said Canon ex officio mero, to send for such parties and compel them to obey the just and lawful decrees of the ecclesiastical ordinaries making such certificates.

But by the 16 Car. I. c. 11, the high commission court was abolished; so that the cognizance thereof now resteth solely upon the ecclesiastical judge, who has undoubted cognizance of neglect of repair of the church, churchyard, &c. (3 Bla. Com. 92; 5 Rep 66.)

By Canon 85, the churchwardens or questmen shall take care and provide that the churches be well and sufficiently repaired, and so from time to time kept and maintained, that the windows be well glazed, and that the floors be kept paved, plain and even.

Churchwardens' duty thereon.

And although churchwardens are not generally charged with the repairs of the chancel, yet they are charged with the supervisal thereof, to see that it be not permitted to dilapidate or fall into decay: and when any such dilapidations shall happen, if no care be taken to repair the same, they are to make presentment thereof at the next visitation. (1 Burn's E. L. 357.)

The cognizance of the repairs of the church and churchyard belong to the spiritual court; (3 Bla. Com. 92; 5 Rep. 66;) and the parishioners may be compelled by that court to repair the body of the church, and they might be excommunicated until it is repaired, except those who are willing to contribute. (Read's Church Service; Rogers v. Davenant, 1 Mod. 194, 236.)

Proceedings to compel repairs.

6. Repairs of Church.

Mandamus.

As the cognizance of the repairs of the church and churchyard thus belong to the spiritual court, the Court of Queen's Bench will not grant a mandamus to churchwardens to make a church rate. (R. v. Churchwardens of St. Peter's, Thetford, 5 T. R. 364; R. v. Wilson, 5 D. & Ry. 602, S. P.)

But it lies to the churchwardens to assemble a meeting to inquire whether it be fit to make a rate. (R. v. Churchwardens, &c. St. Margaret's, Westminster, 4 M. & Sel. 250; post, 639.) And the churchwardens may be sued and censured, or perhaps indicted, if they improperly neglect or refuse to call a meeting to make the rate.

And a mandamus lies to make church rates under the act for building new churches, noticed post, 654. (R. v. Churchwardens of St. Mary, Lambeth, 3 B. & Adol. 651, post, 655.)

VII. Church Rates.

Church rates.

This subject will be treated of under the following division, viz.

1. Who may make them, and the Steps preliminary to the making, 638.
2. Who and what to be Assessed, and the Manner of making and levying the Assessments, 642.
3. Form of the Rate, 649.
4. Mode of levying it, 649.
5. Appeal against it, 653.
6. Church Rates under Acts for building New Churches, 654.

1. Who may make, and steps preliminary to making.

Parishioners are bound to repair body of church.

The obligation by which the parishioners, that is, the actual residents within, or the occupiers of lands and tenements in, every parish, are bound to repair the body of the parish church whenever necessary, and to provide all things essential to the performance of divine service therein, is an obligation imposed on them by the common law of the land. (Per Tindal, C. J., in the case of Veley v. Burder, in error, 12 Ad. & Ell. 301.) Such being the law, it follows, as a necessary consequence, that the repair of the fabric of the church is a duty which the parishioners are compellable to perform; not a mere voluntary act, which they may perform, or decline, at their own discretion; that the law is imperative upon them absolutely, that they do repair the church: not binding on them in a qualified limited manner only, that they may repair or not, as they think fit. (Ibid.)

Who may make rate.

The mode of carrying the law into effect, and that the usual and ordinary mode, which is free from all possible exception, is this, viz. that the churchwardens, whose duty it is to raise the money for the repair of the church, and to make the repairs, should convene the parishioners together by due notice, and that the majority of those who are so assembled should make an order for a rate, which will bind the whole parish. (Ibid. p. 303.)

Notice for such vestry, how to be made.

By the 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 45, s. 2, all proclamations and notices heretofore made or given in churches or chapels during or after divine service shall be reduced into writing, and copies thereof, either in writing or in print, or partly in writing and partly in print, shall previously to the commencement of divine service on the several days on which such notices have heretofore been made or given in the church or chapel of any parish or place, or at the door of any church or chapel, be affixed on or near to the doors of all the churches and chapels within such parish or place; and by sect. 3, no notice of holding a vestry shall be affixed on the principal door of such church or chapel unless the same shall previously have been signed by a churchwarden of such church or chapel, or by the rector, vicar or curate of such parish, or by an overseer of the poor of such parish; but that every such notice so signed shall be affixed on or near to the principal door of such church.

7. Church Rates.

Notice to specify the place, hour, and special purpose, three days before vestry meeting.

This notice under Sturges Bourne's Act, (which however does not apply to the city of London, the borough of Southwark, nor to any vestry held by virtue of any special act, or of any ancient and special usage or custom,) must, in addition to the notification of the holding of a vestry, likewise specify the place and hour at which the same is to be held, and the special purpose thereof, three days at the least before the day to be appointed for holding such vestry. (See 58 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 1; post, tit. Vestries, Vol. VI. p. 330)

At a vestry meeting certain plans were produced for improving the parish church, and were referred to a committee. At a subsequent vestry their report, recommending an enlargement, was received and adopted, and a resolution passed for borrowing money on the parish rates under the statutes 58 Geo. III. c. 45, and 59 Geo. III. c. 134, to carry the plans into execution. The notice of holding the latter vestry, published in pursuance of stat. 58 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 1, stated the purpose of it to be to receive a report from the church committee, and to adopt such measures as may appear necessary for carrying that report into execution. This was held a sufficient notice of the intention to propose borrowing money on the church rates for the purpose of executing the plans. (Blunt v. Harwood, 8 Ad. & Ell. 610, and see Butt v. Fellows, 6 Jur. 19.)

Who may be compelled to levy a rate.

Where an act of parliament directs a body, created by the act, to levy church rates as often as required, the Court will compel them by mandamus to levy the rate, and will not confine the writ to ordering the body to assemble for the purpose of determining whether they will levy the rate or not. And this, although the act contains a clause reserving all ecclesiastical jurisdiction, if it appear, from the rest of the act, that the temporal Court was intended to have at least concurrent jurisdiction. (Reg. v. St. Margaret's, Leicester (Select Vestry), 8 Ad. & E. 889.) But such a body is not compellable to make a church rate upon demand, while the churchwardens refused to state the necessary amount, or to furnish any estimate of it, or to give to the vestry any information whereby they might ascertain it. (Reg. v. St. Margaret, Leicester (Select Vestry), 10 Ad. & E. 730.)

But, in general, a mandamus does not lie to churchwardens to compel them to make a church rate. (Rex v. The Churchwardens of St. Peter's, Thetford, 5 T. R. 364; Rex v. Wilson, 9 B. & C. 859.) Though the court has granted a mandamus to assemble for the purpose of considering a rate. (Rex v. The Churchwardens of St. Margaret, 4 M. & Sel. 250.)

Notice having been given of a meeting in vestry for the purpose of granting a church rate, and that, if a poll should be demanded, the meeting would be immediately adjourned to the town hall; the meeting being held and the poll demanded, the chairman immediately adjourned the meeting to the town hall, where the poll was taken. It was held, that the proceeding was regular, no business having been interrupted by it, and the adjournment being part of the original appointment. The town hall was not an improper place to take the poll, by reason of its being private property, no person having been prevented from voting on that account. The time for taking the poll being limited to eleven hours, such time was sufficient, if due diligence had been used, 785 persons being the greatest number proved to have voted on any occasion. (Baker v. Wood, 1 Curt. 507.)

Chairman of.

The minister of the parish, if present, has a right to preside at the meeting; though he is not an essential part of the vestry. (See authorities cited, post, tit. "Vestries," Vol. VI. p. 331.) As to the power of the chairman at the meeting, see post, Vol. VI. p. 335.

Voting at, qualification for.

For the necessary qualification to give inhabitants a right of voting, see tit. "Vestries," Vol. VI. p. 331, et seq.

7. Church Rates.

By custom there may be select vestries of a certain number of persons or delegates chosen by vestry, elected yearly to make rates, and manage the concerns of the parish for that year: and such custom is a good custom. (Read's Church Service; Gibs. 246; Str. 428; and see Golding v. Fenn, 7 B. & Cres. 765; Still v. Palfrey, 2 Curt. 902; and further as to select vestries, "Vestries," Vol. VI.)

As to vestries under the acts for building, &c. new churches, see post, 654.

Proceedings at vestry.

At the time and place of meeting, the minister and churchwardens ought to attend; and when the parishioners are assembled, the minister in such case is the proper party to preside. Owing, however, to the differences which have of late years occasionally occurred in vestries, called for the purpose of imposing a church rate, it becomes a very important question to consider what the present state of the law upon the subject is.

From the elaborate judgment of Tindal, C. J., in Veley v. Burder, 12 Ad. & Ell. 300, the law on several points will be found clearly laid down, and which may be thus briefly stated.

Only one point to be deliberated and determined on at vestry.

By the Common Law of the land, the repair of the fabric of the church is a duty which the parishioners are compellable to perform: not a mere voluntary act: where, therefore, it so happens that the fabric of the church stands in need of repair, the only question upon which the parishioners, when convened together to make a rate, can by law deliberate and determine is, how and in what manner the common law obligation, so binding them, may be best and most effectually, and at the same time most conveniently and fairly, between themselves, performed and carried into effect. (Ibid. p. 302.) (a)

Rate by majority present, good.

No one disputes the validity of a rate imposed by the majority of the parishioners for the repairs of the church at a meeting duly convened, and the payment of each man's proportion thereof might be enforced by a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court. (Ibid. p. 305.)

So a rate by churchwardens, if no other parishioners present.

So a rate imposed by the churchwardens alone where a meeting of the parishioners has been duly convened in vestry for the purpose of making such a rate, but where none of the parishioners have thought fit to attend and express an opinion: for in this state of circumstances the churchwardens, who may be assumed to be parishioners themselves, do in effect constitute the majority, or more properly speaking the whole of the parishioners who are assembled. (Ibid. p. 305.)

After refusal by majority present, churchwardens cannot by themselves afterwards and not at parish meeting, make a rate.

But the churchwardens of a parish, after a rate for the necessary repairs of the parish church has been proposed by them to the parishioners at a vestry meeting duly convened for that purpose, and has been refused by a majority of the parishioners there assembled, cannot, of their own sole authority, at a subsequent time, by themselves, and not at any parish meeting, impose a valid rate on the parishioners. (Ibid. p. 300.) (c)

Whether a rate be valid, if made by churchwardens themselves at same vestry where majority present have refused.

The main question, however, whether any effectual course can be taken to compel a refractory parish to make a rate, is still left in an unsettled state. It is now in the course of judicial investigation. It will suffice briefly to allude to it as follows:

"With respect to the case of Gaudern v. Selby, (d) observes Tindal, C. J.,

(a) The true principle which governs this subject is, that the parish ought not to be involved in expenditure without its privity, and that the parish ought to have the opportunity of seeing that the burthen is fairly laid. (Per Sir J. Nicholl, in Clutton v. Cherry, 2 Phillimore, 384. See Regina v. Thomas, 6 Jurist, 1122.)

(c) It was also held (Ibid.) that under such circumstances a prohibition from a Court of Common Law could be issued to stay proceedings taken by the churchwardens in the Ecclesiastical Court to enforce payment of such rate: as the rate itself was illegal and void.

(d) Gaudern v. Selby (Arches Court, Hil. T. 1799, from Dr. Arnold's notes, cited in Dr. Nicholl's pamphlet on Church Rates, 1837, p. 35), which was an appeal from the Consistory Court of Peterborough, and in which case Sir William Wynne, in the course of his judgment, thus broadly and unhesitain his judgment in Veley v. Burder, 12 Ad. & Ell. p. 308, "one observation that arises is, that the church rate in that case was made by the churchwardens at the same vestry meeting, which had been duly summoned, and at which it had been refused by the majority of the parishioners there present: a fact which forms a most important distinction between that and the present case. The churchwarden in that case required a rate at a larger sum, and a majority of the parishioners present refused it for that sum, though they were willing to grant it for a smaller: and the churchwarden nevertheless made the rate, against the consent of the majority, for the larger sum. We do not enter into the discussion, whether a rate so made by the churchwardens at the parish meeting where the parishioners were then met, would have been valid or not: or how far such case may be analogous to that of the members of a corporation aggregate, who being assembled together for the purpose of choosing an officer of the corporation, the majority protest against, and refuse altogether to proceed to, any election: in which case they have been held to throw away their votes, and the minority, who have performed their duty by voting, have been held to represent the whole number. It is obvious, indeed, that there is a wide and substantial difference between the churchwardens alone, or the churchwardens and minority together, making a rate at the meeting of the parishioners where the refusal takes place, and the churchwardens possessing the power of rating the parish by themselves at any future time however distant."

The latter of these points having been decided against the churchwardens by the Exchequer Chamber, it was resolved to try the validity of the former description of rate. This case, then, under the name of Veley and another v. Gosling (see 6 Jur. 739), came, in the first instance, before the Consistory Court, the question being as to the admissibility of the libel in a suit for subtraction of church rates, in the parish of Braintree, Essex; the facts of which were as follows:—"A decree issued from this Court, founded on an affidavit setting forth that the church was out of repair; that rates had been for several years refused: the libel also setting forth the prohibition which had emanated in the former case from the Court of Queen's Bench. That decree called upon the churchwardens and parishioners to show cause why a monition should not be granted to the churchwardens to take the proper steps to put the church into repair, and to call a vestry for a certain day for the purpose of making a rate, and directing the parishioners to attend and make such a rate. The churchwardens (only) appeared, and declared their readiness to submit themselves to the lawful commands of the Court. A monition then issued to the churchwardens and parishioners to the effect of the decree: the vestry met on the 15th June last; the rate was proposed: an amendment, refusing the rate, was moved; and, on a show of hands, the vicar, who was in the chair, declared the amendment carried: no poll was demanded. The churchwardens, with several others, then signed the present rate, which was not put again to the meeting. The question was, whether a rate so made is legal and valid? The learned judge having, at considerable length, taken a review of the law upon the subject, and being of opinion that the rate was not supported by any authority, and that the supposed analogy between this proceeding and elections corporate or parliamentary did not apply, consequently decided the rate to be invalid, and rejected the libel."

The above judgment of the Consistory Court, however, has been subsequently reversed by the Court of Arches. (See 7 Jurist, 286.) And the case, it would appear, is now before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, so that pending their lordships' decision, the question whether the church-tingly states the law:—"The law is, in that case (viz. that being called together to make an assessment, the parishioners refuse to make it), that if the parishioners will not make a rate, the churchwarden has a right to make it himself: he cannot without calling upon them: but if he calls, and they refuse, saying, they think that the repairs were not necessary, not denying that they were done, he has a power to make a rate himself, and the law will justify him." (And see 1 Curt. Ecc. Rep. p. 394, S. C.)

wardens and the minority together (a) may make a rate at the meeting of the parishioners, notwithstanding the refusal by the majority present, must be still considered a question undecided.

Rate may be made for pulling down or enlarging church.

If a church be so much out of repair that it is necessary to pull it down, or if it be so small that it needs to be enlarged, the consent of the ordinary to do what is needful having first been obtained, at a meeting duly convened, a rate may be made for new building or enlarging, as there shall be occasion. (Blackett v. Blizard, 9 B. & C. 850.)

If the major part of the parishioners of a parish where there are four bells, agree that there shall be made a fifth bell, and this is made accordingly, and they make a rate for paying for the same, this shall bind the lesser part of the parishioners, although they agree not to it; for otherwise any obstinate person may hinder any thing intended to be done for the ornament of the church. (2 Roll. Abr. 291.) Bells, however, are not mere ornaments, for they are as necessary as the steeple itself. (Woodward v. Makepeace, 1 Salk. 164.)

If a rate be illegally imposed by a commission from the bishop, which he has no authority to direct, (Gibs. 196; 1 Bac. Abr. 373,) or otherwise, without the parishioners' consent, yet if it be afterwards assented to and confirmed by the major part of the parishioners, that will make it good. (Wats. c. 39.)

License from ordinary.

To erect or add any thing new in the church, as a new gallery where there was none before, it seems that a license from the ordinary as well as the consent of the major part of the parishioners is necessary. (Groves v. Rector, &c. of Hornsey, 1 Hagg. 188.)

Rate to be made.

After the churchwardens and parishioners have agreed as to what sum is fit for the repairs, they are to make an equal rate for collecting it.

Confirmation by ordinary.

The proper practice, after the rate has been made, is to apply to the ordinary to confirm the rate. (Per Sir J. Nicholl, in Lee v. Calcraft, 3 Phil. Ec. Ca. 648.)

It seems, however, that such confirmation is not essential to the validity of the rate; and the circumstance of its not being so confirmed is no obstacle to its being sued upon in the Ecclesiastical Court. (Knight v. Gloyne, 3 Add. Ec. Ca. 53.)

2. Who and what to be assessed, and Mode of laying Assessment.

Mode of laying the assessment in general.

An order and direction set down by Dr. King, Dr. Lewin, Dr. Lyndsey, Dr. Hoane, Dr. Sweite, Dr. Steward, and others, doctors of the civil law, to the number of thirteen in all, assembled together in the common dining hall of Doctors' Commons in London, touching a course to be observed by the assessors in their taxation for the repairs of the church and walls of the churchyard of Wrotham, in Kent; and to be applied generally upon occasion of the like reparations to all places in England whatsoever:—

1. Every inhabitant dwelling within the parish is to be charged according to his ability, whether in land or living within the same parish, or for his goods there; that is to say, for the best of them but not for both.

2. Every farmer dwelling out of the parish, and having lands and living

---

(a) "The churchwardens and the minority." It will be seen, that it was in this form that the case of Veley and another v. Gosling, came before the Consistory Court and Court of Arches. But it is submitted, that should the Privy Council confirm Sir H. Jenner's decision in the Arches Court, it would likewise in effect decide, that it would be an equally valid rate, in the case of the opposing majority to consist of the whole body of parishioners present, and the two churchwardens alone were to form the minority—for in such case "the only question on which the meeting can deliberate and determine is," to use Tindal, C. J.'s words, "How and in what manner the common law obligation, so binding them, may be best and most effectually, and at the same time most conveniently and fairly between themselves, performed and carried into effect?" And if so, the churchwardens would be the majority, since they in fact would be the only parties performing their duty by voting in answer to such question, and consequently would rightly be deemed as representing the whole number: and the opposing party, as having thrown away their votes.

within the said parish, in his own occupation, is to be charged to the value of the same lands or living, or else to the value of the stock thereupon; even for the best, but not for both. 7. Church Rates.

3. Every farmer dwelling out of the parish, and having lands and living within the parish, in the occupation of any farmer or farmers, is not to be charged; but the farmer or farmers thereof are to be charged in particularity, every one according to the value of the land which he occupieth, or according to the stock thereupon; even for the best, but not for both.

4. Every inhabitant and farmer occupying arable land within the parish, and feeding his cattle out of the parish is to be charged for the arable lands within the parish, although his cattle be fed out of the parish.

5. Every farmer of any mill within the parish, is to be charged for that mill; and the owner thereof (if he be an inhabitant) is to be charged for his liability in the same parish besides the mill.

6. Every owner of lands, tenements, copyholds, or other hereditaments, inhabiting within the parish, is to be taxed according to his wealth in regard of a parishioner, although he occupy none of them himself; and his farmer or farmers also are to be taxed for occupying only.

7. The assessors are not to tax themselves, but to leave the taxation of them to the residue of the parish. (God. Append. 10, 11.)

The party to be assessed may be collected from the foregoing seven rules. Parties not liable to the repairs for which the rate is made must not be assessed, and as to who such parties are, see ante, 636. Who to be assessed.

In Jeffery's case, (5 Rep. 67,) it was solemnly adjudged that the rates for the repair of the church shall be laid upon every occupier of lands in the parish, although such occupier live in another parish; and such person may come to the vestries of the parishioners, and vote in making a rate; but he shall not be charged towards the ornaments of the church, as for bells, repair of seats, bread and wine, clerks' wages, visitation charges, and the like, by reason of such lands; for that the personal estates of the inhabitants are chargeable with every thing that doth not relate to the fabric of the church, or repairs of the fences of the churchyard, or such other things as concern the freehold. (And see Paget v. Crumpton, Cro. El. 657, 659; 2 Roll. 289, 1, 20; Lndw. 255; and see Lord Tenterden's judgment in R. v. Adlard, 4 B. & Cres. 778, post, "Constable.") Non-residents, &c.

The law requires that all property should be rated. (Chesterton and another v. Farlar, 1 Curt. 361.) Houses and lands, and all property of that description, are primâ facie liable to church-rate. (Smith, &c. v. Keats, 4 Hagg 279.) And it has been recently said to be consonant to reason as well as to law that the rate to be paid by the occupiers in the parish should be made according to the value of their several occupations. (Gathercole, &c. v. Wade, May 27, 1839, cited in Phillimore's Burn's Ecc. Law, 9th ed. Vol. I. p. 381.) To be according to value of occupations.

No man should be charged to repair of the church in respect of land which he has in another parish. (5 Rep. 67; 2 Roll. Abr. 289, l. 30.)

Nor in respect of a lighthouse. (Rebow v. Bickerton, Bunbury, 81.) Lighthouse.

Where lands are in farm, not the lessor, but the tenant, shall be rated and pay. (Gibs. 221; 4 Mod. 148.) Lands leased.

It is said that the patron of a church as in right of the founder may prescribe that in respect of the foundation he and his tenants have been freed from the charge of repairing the church. (Degge, P. L. c. 12.) Patron, &c.

The rectory, or vicarage which is derived out of it, are not chargeable to the repair of the body of the church, steeple, public chapels or ornaments; being at the whole charge of repairing the chancel. (Degge, P. L. c. 12.) But an impropriator of a rectory or parsonage, though bound to repair the chancel, must contribute to the reparation of the church in case he hath lands in the parish, which are not parcel of the rectory. (Gibs. 197.) Rector, &c.

The inhabitants of a precinct wherein is a chapel, though it is a parochial chapel, and though they do repair that chapel, are nevertheless of common right contributory to the repairs of the mother church. If they have seats at the mother church, to go thither when they please, or receive sacraments, or Inhabitants of chapelry, how far exempt.

sacramentals, or marry, christen, or bury at it, there can be no pretence for a discharge. Nor can any thing support that plea, but that they have time out of mind been discharged, (which also is doubted whether it be of itself a full discharge; or that in consideration thereof they have paid so much to the repair of the church, or the wall of the churchyard, or the keeping of a bell, or the like compositions, (which are clearly a discharge). (Gibs. 197; 1 Burn's E. L. 9th ed. by Phillimore, p. 383.)

An inhabitant of the parish of W. was libelled for non-payment of rates imposed for the repair of the parish church, and of certain chapels built within the parish, under stats. 58 Geo. III. c. 45; 59 Geo. III. c. 134; and 3 Geo. IV. c. 72. He declared in prohibition, alleging that the rate was improperly levied on a part of the parish only, excluding the township of H. To this it was pleaded, that the chapels were built in aid of the parish church; that there has immemorially been a chapel in H., at which the inhabitants of H. have received all divine rites and services; that the costs of repairing the chapel have been immemorially defrayed by the inhabitants of H., and no others; that from time, &c. no rate for repairing the parish church has been laid on any person in H.; and that the inhabitants of H. have from time, &c. been exempt from contributing to the repairs of the parish church. The plea concluded with a traverse of the allegation of liability of the four townships to contribute to the repair of the parish church, and the plaintiff joined issue thereon. A verdict having been given for the defendants, it was held on motion for judgment non obstante veredicto, that the Court must, after verdict, intend the chapel to have been coeval with the church, although that fact was not pleaded; and that the chapel and church being coeval, and the inhabitants having always been exempt from the church-rate, no rate for repairing the church could now be imposed upon them. (Craven v. Sanderson, 7 Ad. & Ell. 880; 2 Nev. & P. 641.)

Houses rateable as well as land.

Houses and property of that description as well as lands are chargeable, and in some places houses only, as in cities and large towns where there are only houses and no lands to be charged. (Hetl. 130; 2 Lutw. 1019; Smith v. Keats, 4 Hagg. 275.)

If a parish plead a custom for it to be laid only for lands, and not for houses; or to be laid only for arable lands, and to be excused for their pastures; or to be laid only for their sheepwalks and not for the rest; the custom cannot be good, for by the law all lands and houses are to be equally rated; and their paying for some part can be no good cause for the discharge of the rest. (Hetl. 130; Latch. 203.)

Persons living out of the parish and having lands within the parish, as we have already seen, should be rated for the same in respect of real charges but not of personal charges. (Lindw. 255, ante, 643.)

Where tithes held rateable.

Where a local act empowered the trustees, therein named, to raise a sum of money for rebuilding a parish church, and to make a rate for defraying the principal and interest of the sum borrowed on the "houses, warehouses, shops, buildings, lands, tenements and hereditaments rated or rateable to the poor:" it was held, that tithes were rateable under these words. (Rex v. Buckinghamshire (Justices), 1 Nev. & P. 503; 6 Ad. & Ell. 988.)

Pew owner.

A rate made by chapelwardens, and assessed on pew-owners, in respect of their personal property in the pews of the chapel, is bad, for there cannot be a permanent property in the pews. (Hawkins v. Compeigne, 3 Phil. Rep. 11.)

Hall of a company.

The hall of a company being rated to the repairs of a church, the Spiritual Court in case of non-payment may proceed against the master and wardens of such company. (T. Jones, 187.)

Stall of a market.

If a petty chapman take a standing, for rent to be paid by him, in the waste of the manor within the market, for two or three hours every market day, to sell his commodities, the market being holden there one day every week, but he inhabiteth in another parish, he may not be rated to the reparation of the church for this standing. (2 Roll. Abr. 289.)

Greenwich Hospital.

The governor of Greenwich Hospital, founded in 1694, and part of an ancient royal demesne, to which an unconsecrated chapel, chaplains and a burial ground are attached, but the officers of which occasionally bury, christen, and

7. Church Rates.

marry, have pews at and resort to the parish church, and vote at the vestry, is liable to be assessed to church rate for premises in his beneficial occupation as governor, having never been so before, but no valid ground of exemption being shown to found a prescription. (Smith and Moxe v. Keats, 4 Hagg. 275.)

Property in actual possession of the crown.

Where property is in the Queen's own occupation directly or indirectly, there can be no doubt, I think, that it is exempt from church rate, honoris gratiâ. (Per Dr. Lushington, ibid. p. 476.)

Places of public worship.

Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 30, exempts from poor and church rates all churches, chapels, and other places of public worship. (See the enactment, "Poor," Vol. IV.)

Rectory, how far exempted.

The rectory, or vicarage which is derived out of it, are not chargeable to the repair of the body of the church, steeple, public chapels, or ornaments, being at the whole charge of repairing the chancel. (Weekes v. Oxenden, Freem. R. 301; 17 Vin. 577.)

Though aliter with an impropriator of a rectory or parsonage, in case he hath lands in the parish which are not parcel of the rectory. (Serjeant Davies' case, Degge, part 1, c. 12.)

But where the London Missionary Society occupied a house under a lease for religious and charitable purposes. The treasurer attended at the house one day in the week to superintend the society's affairs, but no person ever slept there. The treasurer received no remuneration for his services, and neither did he, nor any other person connected with the society, derive any profit from the occupation of the premises: it was held, that the treasurer was properly assessed to a church-rate, under an act extinguishing tithes in the parish, and authorising a yearly church-rate to be made, in order to raise money for the purpose of compensation to the parson in lieu of tithes, and for the repairs of the church, upon all inhabitants and occupiers, because beneficial occupation was not material in this case. (Reg. v. Wilson, 4 Per. & D. 130.)

Liability of stock in trade to be rated.

The liability of stock in trade to be rated was admitted by the Delegates in the case of The Parish of Great Canford and Poole. The rate was ultimately overthrown, because the Delegates were of opinion that if stock in trade was taxable to the church, so must shipping be, and this had been omitted, although in fact it was liable to poor rates. The Delegates advised a new rate to be made, including both shipping and stock. (See Miller v. Bloomfield, 1 Add. 409; and 2 Add. 30.)

Rule of assessment and equality.

A taxation by the pound rate is the most equitable mode of assessing it, and not according to the quantity of land, &c. (See Lindw. 255; Wood's Inst. b. 1, c. 7.)

Poor rates, how far a criterion for church-rate.

A poor rate assessed on the same principle over the whole parish, though affording a fairer criterion than the queen's taxes, is but adminicular evidence of the equality or inequality of a church rate. A valuation by competent judges, and founded on the rent a tenant would pay for the premises, is the proper test. (Lambert, &c., v. Weall, 4 Hagg. 96.) So Sir W. Wynne—"I think, from what is said of the rule here, that the church rate made according to the poor rate is just and prudent; but it is true also, that decisions applying to poor rates at common law are not binding in cases of church rate. The poor rates are a great, heavy, and constant charge: church rates are not so; they are seldom heavy, and there is no reason to be so precise respecting them." (1 Burn, Ecc. L. 9th ed. 378 a.)

The property and parishioners should be equally rated. (Hetl. 130, and Latch. 203.)

Tenant should be rated.

The tenant should be rated, and not the landlord. (Jeffrey's case, 5 Rep. 66; Gibs. 197.) But where a person was wrongly assessed for a small portion of the rate as landlord (erroneously under a local statute), the Court allowed the libel to be reformed, holding that the rate was not bad in toto. (Hawes v. Pellatt, 2 Curt. 476.) But where the occupiers are assessed, it is unimportant by whom the payment is made. (Varty v. Nunn, 2 Curt. 898.)

7. Church Rates.

Several vills, &c.

If a parish consists of several vills, and there is a custom to levy the rate in certain proportions, they must pursue it, whether reasonable or not. (Burton v. Wileday, Andrews, 32.)

A custom in the parish to pay the church rate by divisions is good; and an allegation in an action for a false return to a mandamus, of a custom of payment by the chapelwardens of A. to the churchwardens of B. may be supported by evidence of a custom of payment to officers acting only for the township of B. not co-extensive with the parish of B., but who have always been described as the churchwardens of B., for being merely a name of description, it is sufficient, though it be not their legal name. (Stead v. Heaton, 4 T. R. 669.)

Lessees of market.

The lessees of a market are to be assessed according to the real produce of the tolls, and not according to the rent only. (Sewell v. Twyford, 2 Lee's Ecc. Ca. 150.)

Assessors not to tax themselves.

The assessors are not to tax themselves, but to leave the taxation of them to the residue of the parish. (Godb. App. 10, 11.)

Time of assessment.

The rate should be made before the expense is incurred, because the propriety and extent of the repairs should be determined before they are undertaken.

Retrospective rate bad.

And it is a general rule with respect to parish rates, founded on obvious principles of policy and justice, that they are not to be made retrospectively. The payers being a fluctuating body, nothing, generally speaking, is more just or more likely to conduce to economy, than to hold that they who create a charge shall themselves bear it. (Per Curiam, in R. v. Churchwardens of Dursley, 6 Nev. & M. 339; 5 A. & E. 10, S. C.; and R. v. Chapelwardens of Haworth, 12 East, 556, infra; Chesterton v. Farlar, 1 Curt. 354; 7 Ad. & Ell. 713.)

A rate, therefore, to reimburse churchwardens such sums as they have expended, or may hereafter expend, is bad on the face of it, as in part retrospective.

A church-rate was regular on the face of it, but appeared (by affidavit) to have been voted by the parishioners in vestry for the purpose of meeting past disbursements: it was held that the rate was not therefore bad, whatever objection might be raised to a retrospective application of the money on passing the churchwardens' accounts. (R. v. Sillifant, 4 Ad. & Ell. 354.) But in answer to a libel for subtraction of church-rate, it is competent to a party to plead that the rate was intended to be retrospective, although the rate was not on the face of it retrospective. (Chesterton v. Farlar, 1 Curt. 354.)

A declaration in prohibition stated that the plaintiff having been libelled in the Spiritual Court for non-payment of a church-rate, had pleaded in his defensive allegation, that the rate, though good on the face of it, was asked for and intended to be applied to the payment of antecedent debts, and that the Court had admitted to proof a responsive allegation, which alleged that the churchwardens of a prior year had necessarily incurred debts, in consequence of the parish refusing to make a rate, and that the retrospective rate subsequently became necessary, in order to discharge the said debts: it was held, that, whether the rate, being good in form, was or was not vitiated by any design to apply it retrospectively, and whether the rate, under the circumstances, was or was not bad, it being retrospective, the suit itself was a matter of ecclesiastical cognizance, and the objection to the rate was such as the Ecclesiastical Court was able to give effect to, if valid; and that it was to be presumed that it would correctly administer the law; and that therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to prohibition. (Griffin v. Ellis, 3 Per. & D. 398; 11 Ad. & Ell. 743, S. C.; and see Reg. v The Privy Council, 3 N. & P. 15.)

R. v. Chapelwardens of the Township of Haworth, 12 East, 556. Motion for a mandamus to these defendants, to make a rate upon the inhabitants of their township for levying 50*l.*, being one-fifth part of a church-rate charged upon the parish at large, for reimbursing the churchwardens of the town of Bradford such sums as they had expended, or might hereafter expend, on the parish church of Bradford, and to pay the said 50*l.* when raised to those churchwardens. The relators' affidavit stated that the parish of Bradford consisted of fifteen townships, of which Haworth is one, and that there is an immemorial custom in the parish, that each of the townships should contribute to the church-rates in certain proportions stated, of which the proportion of Haworth was one-fifth; that at a vestry held in the parish church on the 4th of April last, after regular notice, it was ordered that the churchwardens of Bradford should collect the rate in question of 250*l.* for reimbursing themselves such sums as they had expended, or might hereafter expend, on the parish church of Bradford, and then stated a demand and refusal of the proportion of the rate payable by the defendants. In answer, it was objected, first, That any custom for fixing on a part of a parish a certain proportion of a church-rate, which ought to be equally distributed on all the parishioners, was bad upon the face of it, as making that certain and invariable which, in its very nature, was variable and fluctuating, unequal and unjust. This question, it was said, was not decided in Stead v. Heaton, 4 T. R. 669, which turned on another point as to the evidence of the custom. Lord Ellenborough, C. J., "We shall not decide this question upon affidavits, but shall for this purpose assume the custom to be good; the point, however, did not pass without consideration in Stead v. Heaton." Secondly, that no rate could be made to reimburse churchwardens, for they were not bound, nor ought they to lay out money till they had collected it in hand; non constat, that it is to reimburse them what they have expended within the same year. And Dawson v. Wilkinson, Andr. 11, and Cas. temp. Hardw. 381; and Tawney's case, 2 Ld. Raym. 1009, were cited as negativing the power of churchwardens to make a rate to reimburse themselves or former churchwardens. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The regular way is for the churchwardens to raise the money beforehand, by a rate made in the regular form for the repairs of the church, in order that the money may be paid by the existing inhabitants at the time, on whom the burden ought properly to fall. It will, indeed, sometimes happen, that more may be required to be expended at the time than the actual sum collected will cover, but still it is admitted that the inconvenience has been gotten rid of in such cases by an evasion, for the rate has been made in the common form, and when the churchwardens have collected the money, they have repaid themselves what they had disbursed for the parish. But we cannot now grant the mandamus to make a rate in the common form, for the demand made upon the defendants was to make a rate in the form in which the rule is drawn up, to reimburse the churchwardens of Bradford for money which they had expended, as well as for what they might expend, and the refusal of the defendants to make such a rate applies to the form of the demand, and we cannot now qualify their refusal; at present it appears that the rate prayed for in this form would be bad, and therefore we cannot enforce it by mandamus." (And see Lord Maynard v. Brand, 3 Phil. E. C. 501.)

7. Church Rates.

The regular course is to raise the rate before repairs are commenced.

Even a court of equity will not decree a church rate to be made to reimburse a former churchwarden moneys laid out while in office, though in pursuance of an order of vestry. (Lanchester v. Thompson and others, 5 Madd. 64.)

Court of equity cannot order a rate to reimburse

Indeed if the churchwardens defer to make or collect their rate until they are out of their office, they are deprived of all legal authority of doing either; but they may present the persons in arrear at the Easter visitation when they go out of their office, and the judge will cause justice to be done therein, or their successors may prosecute for the same. (1 Bac. Abr. 376, tit. Churchwardens, et seq.)

Churchwardens without remedy.

And the fact of the repairs being authorised by a vestry meeting does not absolve churchwardens from the consequences of neglecting to make a prospective rate to charge the expense; and although where the parishioners who attended such vestry signed the resolutions for the repairs, it was held, that would not make them individually liable, as they merely acted in their character of vestrymen, without any intention to render themselves personally liable or separately from the rest of the parishioners. (Lanchester v. Tricker, 1 Bing. 201; 8 Moore, 20, S. C.)

Vestry cannot legalize such a rate and churchwardens liable for consequences.

And although one who attended and signed afterwards, directed the mode

7 Church Rates.

in which certain parts of the repairs should be effected, this was held not sufficient to imply a contract by him (Lanchester v. Frewer, 9 Moore, 688, 2 Bing. 361, S C)

The 58 Geo III. c 45, and 59 Geo III. c 134, empowers churchwardens to borrow monies and raise rates for the building, &c. of new churches. (See the enactments, post, 654, 655.)

Not more than necessary should be raised

If the rate is made only for the repairs of a church, it is illegal to raise more than is wanted for that purpose (Brettel v Wilmot, 2 Lee's Ecc. Ca. 548.)

It seems that the Ecclesiastical Court cannot decide on the quantum of a rate, and therefore that parishioners, who do not contumaciously refuse to make a rate, but grant one not manifestly collusive, are not liable to be articled for refusing a sufficient rate. (Greenwood v. Greaves, Clay and others, 4 Hagg 77)

Therefore, in a case of emergency, it would be a good answer to any proceeding in the Ecclesiastical Court against a churchwarden for not repairing, for him to say that he had no funds, and that there had not been time to make a rate (Northwaite v. Bennett, 2 Crom & M 316)

Trifling omissions.

The rate is not invalid by reason of omissions of an inconsiderable amount; it is a question of degree, and in the present case, where the rateable property was 8622*l*, and property was omitted amounting to 200*l*., the Court pronounced for the rate, but without costs. (White v Beard, 2 Curt 486)

Rate should not be excessive

An allegation in a suit for subtraction of church-rate having been admitted, pleading that the rate in question of ninepence in the pound was excessive; an allegation in reply stating that upon a sixpenny rate being proposed by the churchwardens for absolute necessaries, an increased rate of ninepence in the pound was moved and carried for the purpose of repairing the church bells, upon a calculation made at the time, was admitted as a sufficient explanation of such increased rate: and it was held that a church-rate made upon the same assessment as the poor rate is a valid assessment. (Smith v. Dixon, 2 Curt. 268.)

A church rate made avowedly larger than was necessary for the current year, for the purpose of enabling the churchwardens to liquidate a debt incurred in former years, is excessive, and therefore illegal (Farlar v. Chesterton, 2 E T. Moore, 330)

Rate valid without faculty.

A church-rate for defraying the expense of the consecration of a church rebuilt under the statute 59 Geo. 3, c. 134, s. 40, valid, although no faculty had been granted. (Warner v Gater, 2 Curt. 315)

Minister's salary should not be included in rate.

That the salary of the minister is among the items of the rate is fatal to its validity, but the minister must be paid. Semble, he may bring a suit for ecclesiastical dues against the parishioners (Still v Palfrey, 2 Curt. 902.)

Under two local acts of parliament, the power of making church-rates was vested in certain church trustees. A rate was made in June, 1835, but not signed till November. It did not appear that the persons who made the rate were the same with those who signed it, and there was no evidence that the signers of the rate were church trustees it was held that the rate was good upon the face of it. (R v Douglas, 1 Jur 983)

Setting aside or disputing rate.

The ecclesiastical court has not, upon an original proceeding by an individual rate payer, power to set aside a rate on the ground of inequality in the assessment, the remedy for the party unequally assessed is to enter a caveat against the confirmation by the ordinary, or to refuse the payment of the rate. (Walney v. Lambert, 4 Hag 84, and see Greenwood v. Greaves, 4 Hag. 77)

3 Form of Assessment.

Form of the assessment.

The form of the church rate may be thus —

We, the churchwardens and other parishioners of the parish of , in the county of , and diocese of , whose names are hereunto subscribed, do hereby this day of , in the year , at our vestry meeting for that purpose assembled, rate and tax all and every the inhabitants and parishioners of the parish aforesaid, hereunder mentioned, for and towards the repairs of the church of the said parish for this present year, the several sums following, viz.. 7. Church Rates.

C. D.	0	3	0
E. F.	0	2	6

A. B., C. D. } Churchwardens.

E. F., G. H., I. K., &c. } Parishioners.

In strictness where a rate is required for the repairs of the fabric and another for the repairs of the ornaments of the church, two distinct rates should be made; by the practice, however, now in vogue, only one rate is made for all purposes, which is certainly a more easy and convenient proceeding, and may be sanctioned. (Shaw's P. L. 92.) Separate rates for ornaments.

In some of the earlier authorities it is contended that a separate rate must be made for the ornaments of the church, and that it is purely a personal charge, not referable to the land occupied, (2 Roll. Abr. 291), and that therefore persons having lands in the parish, but residing out of it, are not liable to contribute towards the ornaments of the church; (Lindw. 255; Gibs. 196;) but Sir Simon Degge says that the foreigner who holds lands in the parish is as much obliged to pay towards the bells, seats, and ornaments, as to the repairs of the church. (Steer's P. L. by Clive, p. 421.)

A church-rate being passed by a resolution of the vestry, it is no objection to such rate that the heading was subsequently inserted. (White v. Beard, 2 Curt. 486.) Heading subsequently made.

The parishioners in vestry assembled having passed a resolution that a rate should be made, the fact of the rate itself not being then made, but drawn up subsequently by the churchwardens alone, will not vitiate the rate. (Scale v. Veley, 5 Jur. 1017.) Confirmation of rate.

See the decisions and observations as to form of a poor rate, title "Poor," Vol. IV.

4. Mode of Levying the Rate.

If any of the parishioners refuse to pay their rates, being demanded by the churchwardens, they may be sued for and recovered in the ecclesiastical courts, and not elsewhere, (Degge, p. 1, c. 12,) unless the amount to be recovered does not exceed 10*l.*, in which case they are now, by the statutes presently mentioned, recoverable by summary proceedings before justices, post, 650. For the cognizance of rates made for the reparation of churches and church-yards belongs to the spiritual courts. (Gibs. 195; 5 Rep. 66.) As regards tithes, Easter offerings, other offerings, obligations or compositions not exceeding 10*l.* per annum, they are recoverable summarily before two justices, under 7 & 8 Will. III. c. 6; 7 Geo. IV. c. 15; and 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 74.; see "Tithes," Vol. VI. By suit in ecclesiastical Court.

If a suit be instituted in the ecclesiastical court for a church rate, and a custom pleaded of a certain sum or of something done in lieu of the rate, and that plea is admitted, they may proceed to try that custom in the same manner as a modus; but if the custom be denied, it will be a proper ground for a prohibition for defect of trial in the ecclesiastical court, for the trying of the custom is the province of the common law. (Dun v. Coates, 1 Atk. 289.)

So if the bounds of the parish come into dispute in the ecclesiastical court, that is, if the party assessed aver that the land for which he is assessed lies in another parish and not in the parish where it is assessed; if the party be contentious, he may have a prohibition, and try it at common law. (Degge, p. 1, c. 12)

In questions of subtraction of church rate, the Court having jurisdiction on the subject matter, is bound, unless stopped by a prohibition, to proceed to the trial of a select vestry by which the rate was made. (Goodall v. Whitmore, 2 Hagg. Rep. 372.)

7. Church Rates.

In a suit for subtraction of church rate, the Court will not, at the prayer of the defendant, issue a monition for the production of parish books, which are not shown to apply immediately to the question at issue, and on the merits, the rate being pronounced for, the defendants condemned in costs. (Goodall v. Whitmore, 2 Hagg. Rep. 369.)

Costs, though in the discretion of the Court, are in its legal discretion guided by former precedents, and are almost universally decreed in suits for church rates, where the rate is pronounced to be subtracted. (Goodall v. Whitmore, 2 Hagg. Rep. 375.)

By proceedings before justices.

Stat. 53 Geo. III. c. 127, s. 7, for the more easily and speedily recovering church rates or chapel rates of limited amount, enacts, that "if any one duly rated to a church rate or chapel rate, the validity whereof has not been questioned in any ecclesiastical court, shall refuse or neglect to pay the same sum at which he is so rated, it shall and may be lawful for any one justice of the peace of the same county, riding, city, liberty or town corporate, where the church or chapel is situated, in respect whereof such rate shall have been made, upon the complaint (a) of any churchwarden or churchwardens, chapelwarden or chapelwardens, who ought to receive and collect the same, by warrant (a) under the hand and seal of such justice, to convene before any two or more such justices of the peace any person so refusing or neglecting to pay such rate, and to examine upon oath (which oath the said justices are hereby empowered to administer) into the merits of the said complaint, and by order (a) under their hands and seals to direct the payment of what is due and payable in respect to such rate, so as the sum ordered and directed to be paid as aforesaid do not exceed 10*l.* over and above the reasonable costs and charges, to be ascertained by such justices; and upon refusal or neglect of such party to pay according to such order, it shall and may be lawful for any one of such justices, by warrant (b) under his hand and seal, to levy the money thereby ordered to be paid, together with the amount of such costs and charges, by distress and sale of the goods of such offender, his executors or administrators, rendering only the overplus to him or her, the necessary charges of distraining being thereout first deducted and allowed by the said justices; [see stat. 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 12, infra;] and any person finding him or herself aggrieved by any judgment given by two or more such justices, may appeal to the next general quarter sessions to be held for the county, riding, city, liberty or town corporate wherein the church or chapel is situated, in respect whereof such rate shall have been made, and the justices of the peace there present, or the major part of them, shall proceed finally to hear and determine the matter, and to reverse the said judgment if they shall see cause; and if the justices then present, or the major part of them, shall find cause to affirm the judgment given by the first two or more justices, the same shall be decreed by order of sessions, with costs, against the appellant, to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the said party appellant: provided always, that in case any such appeal be made as aforesaid, no warrant of distress shall be granted until after such appeal be determined: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall extend to alter or interfere with the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts to hear and determine causes touching the validity of any church rate or chapel rate, or from proceeding to enforce the payment of any such rate, if the same shall exceed the sum of 10*l.* from the party proceeding against: provided likewise, that if the validity of such rate, or the liability of the person from whom it is demanded to pay the same, be disputed, and the party disputing the same give notice thereof to the justices, the justices shall forbear giving judgment thereupon, and the person or person demanding the same may then proceed to the recovery of their demand, according to due course of law, as heretofore used and accustomed: provided likewise, that nothing herein contained shall affect any regulations that may have been made by authority of parliament, respecting the church rates or chapel rates of any particular parishes or districts."

Appeal.

In case of appeal distress not to issue.

Saving of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, if rate exceed 10*l.*

7. Church Rates.

Distress may be made in any district, &c. in same county, &c.

Backing warrant of distress to other counties.

And by 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 12, the goods and chattels of any person neglecting to pay any sum legally assessed on him for any churches for seven days after demand made, may be distrained, not only within the district, parish, township or hamlet, in which it is made, but also within any other district, parish, &c. within the same county, riding, division or jurisdiction; and if sufficient distress cannot be found within such county, &c. then, on oath thereof made before any one or more justice or justices of the peace for any other county, &c. in which any of the goods or chattels of such person shall be found, (which oath such justice or justices shall administer and certify by indorsing his or their name or names on the warrant granted to make such distress,) such goods, &c. shall be liable to such distress and sale in such other county, &c. and may under such warrant and certificate be distrained and sold, as if found within the district, parish, &c. in or for which the rate was due.

Costs of distress.

By the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 17, the provisions of the 57 Geo. III. c. 93, regulating the costs of distresses for rent, &c. are extended to distresses for church rates, &c. By that act of Geo. IV. it is enacted, that "all the rules, regulations, clauses, provisions, penalties, matters and things in the said act contained, shall extend and be construed to extend, and shall be applied and put in execution, so far as the same are applicable and capable of being put in execution, with respect to any distress or levy which shall be made for any land tax, assessed taxes, poor rates, church rates, tithes, highway rates, sewer rates, or any other rates, taxes, impositions or assessments whatever, in all cases where the sum demanded and due for or in respect of such taxes, rates, tithes, assessments or impositions shall not exceed the sum of 20*l.*, and in all cases where the whole of the several sums sought to be levied by distresses taken for different purposes at the same time shall not exceed the sum of 20*l*; and that such costs and charges, and no other, shall be taken and payable as the costs and charges of the levy and disposition of such distresses; and that all such proceedings shall and may be had and taken against any and every person transgressing the regulations of the said act in the levying or distraining for any such taxes, rates, impositions or assessments, and all such persons shall be liable to and shall incur such and the like penalties, as by the said act are directed, required and imposed with respect to persons making any distress for rent contrary to the directions of the said act; and that in any order or judgment of any justices before whom any complaint shall be preferred in consequence of this act, such order shall be expressed to be made upon a complaint for the breach of the said recited act as amended by this act; and that the said recited act and this act shall be taken and construed together as one act, to all intents and purposes whatsoever."

Observations and decisions as to proceedings before justices.

Before the passing of 53 Geo. III. c. 127, s. 7, considerable delay and expense were incurred in the recovery of church rates. That act, as we have seen, ante, 650, provides a summary remedy, by application to justices of peace in cases of withholding church rates not exceeding 10*l.* where the party does not dispute the obligation to pay them, but does not invest justices with the power which belongs exclusively to the Ecclesiastical Court, viz. the power of deciding on the validity of the rate or the liability of the person to pay it. The justice cannot issue his warrant unless it be made affirmatively to appear before him that the amount does not exceed 10*l*, and that no question is made on the rate in the Ecclesiastical Court. If neither of these preliminary exceptions have place, the party may give notice to the two justices before whom he is summoned to appear, that he disputes the validity of the rate or his liability to pay it, though no proceeding is actually commenced in the Ecclesiastical Court: and any expression by him, manifesting that he disputes the rate bonâ fide, will be a sufficient notice to make a cesser of the proceedings before the justices. (R. v. The Chapelwardens of Milnrow, 5 M. & Sel. 248.)

But a mere statement to the justices by the party complained of, that he disputes the rate, and that he has entered a caveat in the Ecclesiastical Court against its being allowed, does not deprive the justices of jurisdiction; they must still hear and examine to ascertain whether the rate is bonâ fide disputed. (R. v. Wrottesley, 1 B. & Adol. 648; R. v. Sillifant, 4 Ad. & Ell. 354.)

7. Church Rates.

Notwithstanding this enactment the ecclesiastical courts have jurisdiction to enforce the payment of a church rate under 10*l.* where the validity of the rate is questioned by the party rated. (Boddenham v. Ricketts, 4 Ad. & Ell. 433.) But where neither the validity of the rate nor the liability of the party has been questioned, the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Court in such cases is taken away. (Richards v. Dyke, 2 Gale & D. 493.) And, therefore, where a party not having been summoned before justices was libelled in the Consistory Court for church rates, and appeared thereto, and objected to the jurisdiction of the Court, that the suit was brought for church rates under 10*l.*, the validity of which had not been disputed or denied by him, but the Court proceeded to hold jurisdiction in the suit, the Court of Queen's Bench granted a prohibition. (Ib.) It seems, however, that it is still competent to institute a suit in that Court for payment of a sum under 10*l.* due upon a church rate, because, until the defendant has appeared in such a suit, there may be no means of knowing whether the validity or liability is in dispute or not. Therefore, where a significavit, as recited in the return to a writ of habeas corpus, stated that the prisoner had been pronounced guilty of contumacy for non-payment of a sum of 2*l.* 5*s.* to certain churchwardens, with their costs of suit, pursuant to a motion duly issued in a certain cause of subtraction of church rate, the proceedings wherein were carried on in pain of the contumacy of the prisoner, who, though duly cited with the usual intimation, had not appeared; an objection, that the cause was not sufficiently described, for want of an averment that the validity of the rate or the liability of the party was in dispute, was overruled. (In re v. Baines, 1 Cr. & Ph. 31.) The jurisdiction of the justices is not ousted by the fact of a suit having been commenced for the rate in the Consistorial Court by the churchwardens, where the suit had been abandoned before the complaint was made. (Reg. v. St. Clements (Inhabitants), 12 Ad. & Ell. 177.)

The justices may act upon the complaint of one churchwarden, though in a parish having ten. (Reg. v. Fenton, 1 Ad. & Ell., N. S., 480.) And churchwardens de facto, though not de jure, may proceed for the recovery of church rates by complaint to a justice of the peace, under the above statute. (Reg. v. St. Clements (Inhabitants), 3 Per. & D. 481; 12 Ad. & Ell. 177.) It seems also that the complaint may be made and proceeded upon by one churchwarden against another if he refuses to pay the rate. (See Skingley v. Surridge, 11 M. & Wels. 503.)

Where a constable, having a warrant of distress under 53 Geo. III. c. 127, s. 7, broke the outer door of and entered plaintiff's dwelling-house, it was held, that although he thereby exceeded his authority, yet as it was not shown that he acted with any other intention than that of executing the authority delegated to him by the warrant, no action could be maintained after the expiration of three calendar months after the fact committed. (Theobald v. Crichmore, 1 B. & Ald. 227; and see s. 12 of the act.)

A party appealing against an order of justices for payment of a church rate, under the above statute, need not give notice of appeal to the justices making the order; it is sufficient to give it to the churchwardens. And if such notice to the justices were necessary, service of it upon one of the justices would suffice. (Rex v. Staffordshire (Justices), 4 Ad. & Ell. 842.)

By a local act, a church rate was to be levied on the landlords, tenants, occupiers or enjoyers of houses and land, and a form of a warrant was given in a schedule, and no distress was to issue before demand of payment by the collector, and proved before the justice required to issue the warrant. A warrant of distress was issued, containing merely the name of the individual, his place of abode, and the sum at which he was rated. No demand of the rate appeared to have been made, nor was there any statement in the warrant. It was held, that the warrant was not bad by reason of its not stating the character in which the individual was rated; and on the trial of an indictment in which the validity of the warrant was raised, that an allegation on the warrant of a demand, and proof of that fact were not necessary, as it must be presumed that they are established to the satisfaction of the magistrate who issued the warrant. (Rex v. Douglas, 1 Jur. 783.)

7. Church Rates.

Proceedings against Quakers refusing to pay.

Also a Quaker refusing to pay church rates may be sued, as other parishioners, in the Ecclesiastical Court; or he may be proceeded against before the justices of the peace, in the same manner as for his tithes. (See "Tithes," Vol. VI.)

53 Geo. 3, c. 127. 7 & 8 W. 3, c. 34.

And by stat. 53 Geo. III. c. 127, s. 6, reciting, that "by stat. 7 & 8 Will. III. it is enacted, where any Quaker shall refuse to pay for or compound for his great or small tithes, or to pay any church rates, two or more of his majesty's justices of the peace are authorised to hear and determine the same, not exceeding the value of 10*l.*: and that by a statute made and passed in the first year of King George the First the said act is extended to other objects; and that it is become expedient to enlarge the said sum;" it is enacted, that "from and after the passing of this act, all the provisions of the said acts of King William and King George shall be deemed and taken to extend to any value not exceeding 50*l.*: provided always nevertheless, that from and after the passing of this act, one justice of the peace shall be competent to receive the original complaint, and to summon the parties to appear before two or more justices of the peace, as in the said act is set forth."

5 & 6 W. 4, c. 74.

And by the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 74, no proceedings are to be taken against Quakers in respect of a church rate under 50*l*, except under the stat. 7 & 8 Will. III. c. 34, and the 53 Geo. III. c. 127. (See this statute of 5 & 6 Will. IV. fully noticed under title "Tithes," Vol. VI.)

---

5. Appeal, &c. against Rate.

Appeal against the rates.

If any person find himself aggrieved by the inequality of the assessment, his appeal must be to the ecclesiastical judge. (Degge, 172; see Lambert v. Weal, 4 Hagg. Ec. Ca. 96.) Unless the amount of assessment does not exceed the sum of 10*l.*, in which case he may appeal to the quarter sessions by stat. 53 Geo. III. c. 127, s. 7. (Ante, 650.)

And in such case, if he will be relieved, he must show that he is illegally or unequally taxed in respect of the quantity of his land, as being rated for more than he has, or that the land which he hath is over-rated, or that the rate was needless, or that some lands in the parish are omitted in the rate. (1 Wood's Inst. b. 1, c. 7; see Lee v. Chalcraft, 3 Phil. Rep. 639.)

The Ecclesiastical Court has not, upon an original proceeding by an individual rate payer, power to set aside a rate on the ground of inequality in the assessment; the remedy for the party unequally assessed is to enter a caveat against the confirmation by the ordinary, or to refuse the payment of the rate. (Watney v. Lambert, 4 Hagg. 84; and see Greenwood v. Greaves, id. 77.)

Unless the rate be wholly a nullity and void, its legality cannot be disputed in an action for levying it under a distress authorised by a magistrate's warrant.

Proceedings under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 93, for rates under 5*l.*

By the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 93, in cases of subtraction of church rates for an amount not exceeding 5*l.* the ecclesiastical judge may discharge the party in contempt, without the consent of the other parties to the suit, where he has suffered imprisonment for six months, on payment of the sum for which he may have been cited with costs. And it seems that by this costs in the Ecclesiastical Court only are intended. (Baker v. Thorogood, 2 Curt. 632.)

In case of marsh lands, &c.

By the 17 Geo. II. c. 37, where there shall be any dispute in what parish or place improved wastes and drained and improved marsh lands lie and ought to be rated, the occupiers of such lands or houses built thereon, tithes arising therefrom, mines therein and saleable underwoods, shall be rated to this and all other parish rates within such parish or place as lies nearest to such lands; and if on application to the officers of such parish or place to have them rated as aforesaid any dispute shall arise, the justices of the peace at the next sessions after such application made, and after notice given to the officers of the several parishes and places adjoining to such lands, and to all others interested therein, may hear and determine the same on the appeal of any person interested, and may cause the same to be equally assessed, whose determination therein shall be final. But this shall not determine the boundaries of any parish or place other than for the purpose of rating such lands to the parochial rates as aforesaid.

Exciting people to resist the payment of church rates.

An attempt to excite resistance to the payment of church rates, or to render odious those who collect them, is illegal. (Bond v. Douglas, 7 C. & P. 626.)

6. Church Rates under Acts for Building New Churches.

The power of churchwardens with regard to church rates has been extended by the Church Building Acts; in some instances they have express authority of themselves to make a rate without a faculty, and the Court will interfere by mandamus whenever the right of the lender to have his money is apparent. (See 58 Geo. III. c. 45, s. 59, and 59 Geo. III. c. 134, ss. 14 and 40; Regina v. Brancaster, 7 Ad. & Ell. 458; R. v. St. Michael's, Pembroke, 5 Ad. & Ell. 603; Warner v. Gates, 2 Curt. 315.)

Sums expended in purchasing sites, or advanced to parishes by commissioners, to be charged upon and paid out of church rates.

All money expended in purchasing sites, and advanced by commissioners to any parish under the act, or paid by commissioners in cases of neglect to provide sites, and all sums expended or advanced under the act in carrying the purposes thereof into execution, shall be charged on the church rates, and the churchwardens are required and empowered to make sufficient rates for repaying such expenses and advances, within the periods or at the times specified by the commissioners. (58 Geo. III. c. 45, s. 56.)

In what cases rates may be raised by justices in extra-parochial places for purposes of act.

Where money shall have been expended in purchasing sites, or advanced by commissioners under the act for extra parochial places in which no church rate shall be made, any justice on the requisition of the commissioners shall appoint two or more persons to make and levy rates for making all payments and repayments as may be required under the act, who shall have the same powers as churchwardens; and all such rates shall be deemed church rates, and all laws relative to church rates shall be applicable thereto. (Id. s. 57.)

Churchwardens may borrow money on credit of rates.

Power is given to churchwardens in parishes with consent of the vestry, and persons appointed in extra parochial places with consent of the majority of persons who would be entitled to vote in a vestry, with notice given in the church or chapel therein or nearest thereto, to borrow money on the rates, and to raise by rates money sufficient to pay the interest and one twentieth of the principal, until the whole money borrowed shall be repaid. (Id. s. 58.)

And also money for enlarging existing churches, &c.

Fund for payment.

Power is given to churchwardens with consent of vestry and of the bishop and incumbent to borrow and raise on the rates money necessary for or towards defraying the expense of enlarging or extending the accommodation in any then existing church or chapel, and to make rates for payment of the interest, and providing a fund of not less than the interest for repayment of the principal, or repaying the principal in such other manner as shall be agreed on. Provided that one-half of the additional accommodation shall be allotted to uninclosed or free seats. (Id. s. 59.)

No application to be made for building, &c. by means of rates without consent of majority of inhabitants paying poor rates; or, where a select vestry, without the consent of a certain portion thereof.

No application to build or enlarge any church or chapel, wholly or in part, by means of rates, shall be made unless the major part of the inhabitants and occupiers assessed to the poor, in vestry assembled, shall consent thereto, or, where the parish shall be under the care of a select vestry or body, with the consent of four-fifths thereof, such consents to be certified to some justice by an overseer of the poor; nor unless two-thirds in value of the proprietors of lands within such parish, whether for estates of freehold or copyhold, or by virtue of leases for terms of not less than fifteen years absolute or determinable upon a life or lives, shall have consented thereto, such consents to be given by writing under the hands of all persons and corporations sole, and of the president or head member of corporations aggregate, and of the husbands, guardians, committees, trustees, attornies or agents of femes covert, minors, insane persons and persons out of the kingdom, and of the major part of the trustees for any charitable or other purpose. (58 Geo. III. c. 45, s. 60.) See further the 59 Geo. III. c. 135, s. 24, infra.

7. Church Rates.

Churchwardens of parish where church, &c. built may raise rates for the purpose.

Power is given to churchwardens of any parish or place in which any church or chapel shall be built, on such application as aforesaid (s. 60), to make rates for raising the sum or portion of the sum proposed to be defrayed by rates, or to borrow any such sums on the credit of such rates; and in every such case to make rates for payment of the interest of any monies advanced for building any church or chapel on credit of the rate, and for providing a fund of not less than the amount of the interest for repayment of the principal, or for repaying such principal in such manner as shall be agreed upon. (Id. s. 61.)

59 Geo. 3, c. 134. Churchwardens, &c. empowered to levy rates.

By 59 Geo. III. c. 134, s. 23, any church or chapel warden of any parish or division, or consolidated or district chapelry, in which rates shall be made under said act or this act, may recover such rates by all such ways and means as church rates may be recovered by, as fully as if they were hereby specially given; provided that church or chapel wardens appointed under said act or this act shall not in virtue of such office be deemed overseers of the poor.

No application to build or enlarge church, &c. made if certain number of parishioners dissent.

Districts to be separate parishes for all ecclesiastical purposes.

Sect. 24, after reciting so much of sect. 60 of 58 Geo. III. c. 45, as requires the consent of two-thirds in value of the proprietors, enacts, that such recited provision shall be repealed: and that no application to build or enlarge any church or chapel wholly or in part shall be made, nor shall any church or chapel be built, rebuilt, or enlarged, or any purchase made of any new or additional burial ground, by means of rates on any parish where one-third in value (to be ascertained by an average of the poor's rate for the preceding three years) of the proprietors of tenements in such parish, whether for estates of freehold or copyhold, or for terms of years absolute, whereof fifteen years shall be unexpired or determinable on a life or lives, shall dissent therefrom; such dissent to be entered in the book containing the proceedings of the vestry, and to be signified, in case of any future vestry, within two months after the resolution; and in case of any such resolution already passed, within two months from passing this act, under the hands of such proprietors as aforesaid, and of the president, head or chief member of any corporations aggregate, and of the husbands, guardians, committees, trustees, attornies, or agents of any femes covert, minors, persons insane, or absent from the kingdom, and the major part of the trustees of any charitable institution, or of any part of them authorised to act in the trusts. (See R. v. Churchwardens of St. Mary, Lambeth, 3 B. & Adol. 651; R. v. Churchwardens of Dursley, 6 Nev. & M. 333; 5 A. & E. 50, S. C. post, 656, 657.)

A church rate may be made by the churchwardens of a parish divided under the Church Building Acts, for that division of the parish only; and churchwardens chosen by the inhabitants of that division are legal churchwardens for the purposes of church rate. (Varty v. Nunn, 5 Jur. 1138; 2 Curt. 898.)

Rate not exceeding 1s. in pound in any one year, or 5s. in the whole, may be raised for building or enlarging church or chapel without such proportion of consents of proprietors, &c. as is required by 58 Geo. 3, c. 45, s. 60.

Proviso as to dissent in case of a larger rate.

Order to raise rate imperative.

By sect. 25, it shall be lawful for the inhabitants of any parish assembled at any vestry, or the major part of the inhabitants so assembled, of which notice shall have been given on two successive Sundays preceding, or for two-third parts of such of the persons exercising the powers of vestry as shall be assembled at any meeting of which notice shall have been given as notices for assembling such persons are given, to order and direct the making and raising of any rate not exceeding one shilling in the pound in any one year, or five shillings in the pound in the whole, upon the annual value of the property in the parish, for the purpose of building or enlarging any church or chapel, either wholly or in part, by means of rates, without any further, or other, or greater number of consents of any number of inhabitants, or proprietors or occupiers, or other persons; provided that no larger rate than aforesaid shall be directed to be raised in relation to any application to build or enlarge any church or chapel, either wholly or in part, by means of rates, if any such proportion of dissents, as in sect. 24 is specified, are signified as there directed; and every such direction shall be imperative upon the church or chapel wardens, who shall forthwith make and raise the rate so ordered; and every such rate shall be made, raised, levied, and accounted for in like manner and with all such powers and under such penalties as are in law applicable to church rate.

58 Geo. 3, c. 45. Rates may be laid on any parish, for rebuilding or enlarging the church.

When any parish shall be desirous of increasing the accommodation in the parish church, and it shall be expedient to take down the existing church and to rebuild it on the same or a more convenient site, it shall be lawful for the churchwardens, with the consent of the vestry, or persons possessing the powers of vestry, and of the ordinary, patron, incumbent, and lay impropriator, if any, to take down such existing church, and to rebuild it on same, or a new site, and the churchwardens may borrow on credit of the church rates, or any rates made under said act, or this act, money necessary for defraying all or any part of the expense of taking down and rebuilding such church, and make rates for paying the interest of the money so borrowed, and for providing a fund not less than the amount of the interest for repaying the principal, or for repaying such principal at such times and in such manner and proportions as shall be agreed upon by the lenders: provided that no church shall be so taken down and rebuilt by means of rates, if such proportions of dissents as in sect. 25 specified are signified in writing as thereby directed; and such church, when consecrated, shall be the parish church for celebrating divine offices and solemnizing marriages: provided that one half of the additional accommodation obtained by rebuilding such church shall be set apart for free and open sittings, and that persons enjoying pews or sittings in the church, held in virtue of any faculty or prescription, shall have pews or sittings as near as may be in the same situation, and of like dimensions, allotted to them in the said new church, and that all tombstones, monuments, and monumental inscriptions in the old church, shall be carefully preserved by the churchwardens, and shall be set up by them at the charge of the parish in the new church, as near as circumstances will admit, in the situations from whence they were removed in the old church. (58 Geo. III. c. 45, s. 40.)

Money may be borrowed upon rates, &c.

No church taken down, &c. if dissent signified as herein mentioned.

Proviso for free and open sittings, and for situation and dimensions of new pews, and for tombstone, &c.

Where A. lent to the churchwardens of B., under the above clause, 1000*l.* at 5 per cent., and agreed not to call in the principal for twenty years: it was held that the act was compulsory on the churchwardens to raise annually a sum equal to the amount of the interest, as a fund for the repayment of the principal, although A. could not compel the repayment of the principal until the expiration of the twenty years. (R. v. St. Michael's, Pembroke (Churchwardens), 1 Nev. & Per. 69; 5 Ad. & Ell. 603, S. C.)

Repairs of district churches to be made by rates upon the district.

The repairs of district churches or chapels shall be made by the districts to which they belong, by rates to be raised within the districts in like manner as repairs of churches by parishes, and such district shall be deemed a separate parish for that purpose; and the repairs of chapels not made district churches shall be made by the parish in or for which the chapels shall be built. (Id. s. 70.)

District to remain liable for repairs of parish church for 20 years.

Districts shall be made subject to the repair of the original parish church for twenty years after the district church shall be consecrated, after which the parish church shall be repaired by the remainder of the parish, and each district shall afterwards make separate rates for such repairs, as if separate parishes. (Id. s. 71.)

Under this section the inhabitants of the district are liable for twenty years to the incidental expenses, in the same manner as to the repairs of the mother church. (Chesterton v. Farlar, 1 Curt. 356.)

59 Geo. 3, c. 134. Churchwardens, with consent of vestry, &c. may raise money upon credit of rates for repair of churches, &c.

It shall be lawful for the churchwardens of any parish, with the consent of the vestry, bishop, and incumbent, to borrow and raise on credit of the church rates, or any rate made under said act or this act, money necessary for defraying the expense of repairing any churches or chapels, and where such money shall have been borrowed, to raise by rate a sum sufficient from time to time to pay the interest of the money so borrowed, and not less than ten per cent. of the principal, out of the produce of such rates, until the whole money borrowed shall be repaid. (59 Geo. III. c. 134, s. 14.)

This enactment has to a certain extent modified the general rule noticed ante, 646, as to the illegality of retrospective rates, but it only authorises the borrowing of money upon the credit of the church rates for future expenses only, and not for such as have been already incurred. (R. v. Churchwardens of Dursley, 6 Nev. & M. 333; 5 Ad. & Ell. 10, S. C.)

7. Church Rates.

And when money is borrowed by churchwardens under this statute, the instalments of not less than £10 per cent. of the principal sum borrowed ought to be annual payments. (Id.)

A mandamus may be obtained to compel churchwardens to make a church-rate for the repayment of a loan obtained by the inhabitants of the parish from the commissioners for building new churches, conformably to the above enactments of 58 Geo. III. c. 45, ss. 14 & 60, and 59 Geo. III. c. 134, s. 21, for the making of such a rate is not a matter of ecclesiastical cognizance. (R. v. Churchwardens of St. Mary, Lambeth, 3 B. & Adol. 651.)

As to the notice of the vestry called to carry into effect the provisions of this clause, see Blunt v. Harwood, ante, 639; and S. C. 1 Curt. 648.

3 Geo 4, c. 72. Chapels belonging to parishes, with or without districts assigned, to be repaired by the parishioners at large, in the same manner as the church of the parish.

All chapels acquired and appropriated, or built or enlarged and improved under said acts, or under any local acts wherein no provision is made relating thereto, in aid of the churches of the parishes or places in which they shall be situated (whether or not any districts of such parishes shall have been assigned to such chapels for ecclesiastical purposes), shall be repaired by the parishes or places at large to which such chapel shall belong, and rates shall be raised for that purpose in like manner as for the repair of the churches of such parishes or places, and all the laws in force for making and raising rates for the repair of churches shall be applied for making and raising rates for the repair of such chapels. (3 Geo. IV. c. 72, s. 20; see Craven v. Sanderson, 7 Ad. & Ell. 880.)

58 Geo. 3, c. 45. District to remain liable to repairs of parish church for 20 years.

Parishes may, &c.

It shall be lawful for the commissioners, in any case in which any division of a parish previously divided under the acts should be again divided, and on which any church or chapel shall be built or acquired, and appropriated for the use of such new division, by any instrument under the seal of the commissioners, to declare that all liability to repair the church or chapel of the division from which such new division shall be made, shall cease from the period specified in such instrument; and after such period the new division shall be liable only to repair the church or chapel built therein, and to repair the church of the original parish for the then residue of the twenty years, under 58 Geo. III. c. 45, st. 71, s. 21.

59 Geo. 3, c. 134. Appointment by commissioners of select vestry for management of new churches.

Such vestry to appoint church or chapel wardens.

In every district, parish, or division of a parish, or district chapelry, in which any church or chapel shall be built, acquired, or appropriated under said act or this act, in which there shall not be a distinct vestry, a select vestry of so many persons as the commissioners shall direct shall be appointed by the commissioners, with the advice of the bishop, out of the substantial inhabitants, for the care and management of the church or chapel, and all matters relating thereto, and such select vestry shall annually elect the church or chapel warden on the part of the parish or chapelry, and shall elect new members of such vestry as vacancies shall arise by death, resignation, or ceasing to inhabit the parish, and proper pews shall be provided for the use of the church or chapel wardens. (59 Geo. III. c. 134, s. 30.)

A select vestry appointed pursuant to this provision of the act has no power to raise a rate for the repair of the district church. (Cockburn v. Harvey, 2 B. & Adol. 797.)

What a sufficient vestry meeting.

The commissioners for building and enlarging churches having, pursuant to the 58 Geo. III. c. 45, and 59 Geo. III. c. 134, s. 30, appointed twenty-six persons to be a select vestry for the care and management of a church and all matters relating thereto; it was held, that in order to constitute a good assembly of the select vestry so appointed, there must be present a majority of the number (viz. fourteen) named in the appointment; and therefore that a rate for the repair of the church, made at a meeting where there was not such a majority, was illegal, and that payment of such a rate could not be enforced in the Ecclesiastical Court. (Blacket v. Blizard, 9 B & Cres. 851.)

In cases of division of parish, vestrymen resident in district left to original parish church, to

Where any parish or place shall be divided into separate parishes for ecclesiastical purposes, or into separate districts or chapelries in which select vestries shall be appointed by the commissioners, all members of the select vestry of the original parish who shall reside in the district or division of the original church or chapel, shall continue to act as the vestry of such district or division in all matters relating to such church or chapel, and the repairs thereof, or to any other ecclesiastical matters or things, or in the distribution of any proportion of any bequest, gifts, or charities which may under this act be assigned to any such district or division: provided that no member of any select vestry shall, after such division, act in any manner relating to any church or chapel, or any other ecclesiastical matters or things, except such as relate to the division in which he shall reside; and if by reason of such division a sufficient number of such members of select vestry shall not remain resident in the division within which the original church or chapel shall be situate, according to the proportion fixed by the commissioners (regard being had to the population of such division, and its relative population to that of the whole parish or place), all such deficiencies shall be filled up as vacancies have before been filled up therein: provided that no person shall vote in supplying such deficiencies unless resident within the division for which the members are to be chosen; provided that the persons chosen shall not thereby be members of the vestry for any other purposes than such as relate to the division for which they shall be chosen, or for the distribution of any charitable gifts therein; provided that all the members of the select vestry of any such parish or place resident in any other divisions thereof shall be members of such vestries as shall be appointed under the acts for the divisions in which they shall reside. (3 Geo. IV. c. 72, s. 10.)

VIII. Church Dues.

Christening fee.

A christening fee is not due to a parson who does not christen a child, although he be the parson of the parish. (1 Lee's Ec. Ca. 341, 396.) The 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 36, s. 49, the act for the registration of baptisms and burials, provides that nothing therein contained shall affect the officiating minister's right to receive the fees now usually paid for the performance or registration of baptism. (See "Register," Vol. V.)

Marriage fee.

A fee is not due to a parson who does not perform the ceremony of marriage, though the parties married be his parishioners. (Id. 397.)

Burial fee.

As to burial fees, see ante, 628, 629.

Easter offerings and tithes.

As to Easter offerings and tithes, see "Easter Offerings," Vol. II.; "Tithes," Vol. VI.

By the 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 38, s. 14 (being one of the acts for the building of new churches), all fees, dues, offerings, and emoluments, as heretofore payable, &c., are to be payable, &c., in respect of the new churches.

IX. Profanation of, and Offences relative to Churches.

As to the offence of breaking into and stealing in churches, see "Sacrilege," Vol. V.

As to the burning of, see ante, "Burning."

As to riotously pulling down a church, see "Riot," Vol. V.

As to disturbing dissenting congregations, see "Dissenters," Vol. II.

As to not going to church, holding fairs, places of entertainment, travelling, taking and exercising ordinary callings, killing game, and serving process, &c., on a Sunday, and other profanations of that day, see "Lord's Day," Vol. III.

1. Arresting a Clergyman performing Divine Service or in going or returning.

Arresting clergyman.

By stat. 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 23, "if any person shall arrest any clergyman upon any civil process while he shall be performing divine service, or shall with the knowledge of such person be going to perform the same, or returning from the performance thereof, every such offender shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall suffer by fine or imprisonment, or by both, as the court shall award." 9. Profanation of, &c.

The act applies to week days as well as Sundays and holidays. (Wats. c. 34.) The arrest, though it may be punished, is still good in law, unless on a Sunday, so that if a rescous be made, and thereby any person shall be killed, the killing is murder. (Wats. c. 34.) In a modern case, however, the Court of Common Pleas discharged a clergyman arrested on his way to the altar, but refused to give him the costs of the application, it not appearing that the arrest was with the concurrence of the plaintiff or his attorney. (Goddard v. Harris, 7 Bing. 320; 5 M. & P. 122, S.C.)

2. Holding Fairs, Plays, &c. in.

Fairs used in former times to be kept in church-yards, and even in churches, till the indecency and scandal was so great as to want a reformation (Burn's E. L. 340); and accordingly, by 13 Edw. I. st. 2, c. 6, no fairs nor markets shall be kept in church-yards. Fairs in.

By canon 88, plays are not suffered in churches, chapels, or church-yards, nor feasts, &c., or any other profane purposes, nor musters. Plays, &c.

3. Quarrelling or Brawling, &c., in.

By stat. 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 4, s. 1, "if any person shall by words only quarrel, chide, or brawl in any church or church-yard, the ordinary (on proof of two witnesses) may suspend every layman, being an offender, ab ingressu ecclesiæ, and every clergyman from the ministration of his office so long as he shall think meet." Brawling in churches.

By the 27 Geo. III. c. 44, the suit must be brought within eight calendar months from the committing of the offence.

Brawling was not, it seems, made an offence by this statute, but was previously cognizable by the Spiritual Courts, which still have jurisdiction independently of the statute. (See Exp. Williams, 6 D. & R. 373; 4 B. & Cres. 313, S.C.; Hutchins v. Denziloe, 1 Consist. 181; Taylor v. Thorley, 1 Curt. 482.) The act was not intended to abridge the ecclesiastical jurisdiction. (See Jenkins v. Barrett, 1 Hagg. 15.)

The act extends to cathedral churches and their yards. (Dethick's case, 1 Leon. 248.)

The offence may be committed by expostulations and remonstrances uttered to a clergyman about to ascend the pulpit for the purpose of preaching. (Clinton v. Hatchard, 1 Add. 96.)

Provocation is no defence to a suit for brawling. (Huet v. Dash, 2 Lee's Ec. Ca. 514; Jarman v. Bagster, 3 Hagg. 356; Jenkins v. Barrett, 1 Hagg. Rep. 15; and see Frances v. Ley, Cro. Jac. 367; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 63, s. 28.) But where irritating expressions were used by the promoter, the Court would not condemn the defendant in the whole costs. (Williams v. Hall, 1 Curt. 517.)

The Court will consider time and place in cases of chiding, quarrelling, and brawling; that may be "chiding" or "brawling" in the church, which would not be so in the vestry. The vestry is a place for parish business, and the Court would not interfere further than might be necessary for the preservation of due order and decorum. (1 Hagg. Rep. 184, 185.)

In a vestry meeting for civil purposes, as a full latitude of discussion must be allowed, mere coarse expressions do not constitute "brawling:" but on proof of an act of "smiting" the Court is bound, whatever may be the origin of the dispute, to proceed to award punishment under the statutes. (Hoile v. Scales, 2 Hagg. R. 566.)

Brawling and smiting at a vestry, attended only by five persons, and held in a room situate within the church-yard, are, ratione loci, offences within the statute, though of a very slight ecclesiastical character. In such a case, where the promoter, a private individual, was proceeding vindictively, and had in the articles exaggerated the smiting, and suppressed his own brawling expressions, which provoked the smiting, the Court directed the matter to stand over for private arrangement; but that failing, on a subsequent day pronounced the brawling and smiting proved, decreed the defendant to be suspended ab ingressu ecclesiæ for a week for brawling, and to be imprisoned twenty-four hours for smiting, and ultimately condemned him in costs. (Lee v. Matthews, 3 Hagg. R. 169.)

9. Profanation of, &c.

Any person may institute the suit. (Huet v. Dash, 2 Lee's Ec. Ca. 514.)

The proof must not admit of a doubt. (Scales v. Hoiles, 3 Hagg. R. 371.)

The proceedings must be supported by two witnesses on the specific charge, or they will be dismissed. (Hutchins v. Denziloe, 1 Hagg. R. 181.)

The statute leaves nothing to the discretion of the judge but the duration of suspension ab ingressu ecclesiæ.

Six weeks is the common term of suspension for this offence. (Huet v. Dash, 2 Lee's Ec. Ca. 514.) Suspension of a parishioner ab ingressu ecclesiæ prescribed by the above act, 5 & 6 Edw. VI. was limited to a month only under certain circumstances; (Clinton v. Hatchard, 1 Add. Rep. 96;) and in another case, (Canning v. Sawkins, 2 Phil. Rep. 293,) for brawling in a church, it was limited to three weeks, with notification in the church of such suspension in the latter case, and costs in both. In Cox v. Goodday, 2 Hagg. 138, a clergyman was suspended for a fortnight for words spoken during divine service by way of admonition of a passionate tenor, though expressed without any tone of passion. And in North v. Dickson, 1 Hagg. Rep. 730, the defendant was suspended for a fortnight and condemned in costs. On proof of violent conduct and great personal abuse at a vestry, held in a room within the church, the Court suspended the defendant ab ingressu ecclesiæ for fourteen days, but under the circumstances condemned him only in 35*l.*, nomine expensarum. (Jarman v. Wise, 3 Hagg. Rep. 360.)

On debating the admissibility of articles in a suit for brawling, the question is whether they contain a substantive charge of brawling and riot in a sacred place: the Court cannot listen to a suggestion that the articles do not truly detail the circumstances. (Jarman v. Bagster, 3 Hagg. Rep. 356.)

This being a criminal proceeding, the office of the judge wrongly promoted, by misnomer of the judge in a copy of the articles for this offence, is fatal. (Williams v. Bott, 1 Hagg. Rep. 1.) And it seems the articles should be in his name as vicar general and official principal, for the vicarial jurisdiction of their offices seems in some degree concurrent. The omission, however, of the latter description is fatal. (Thorpe v. Mansell, 1 Hagg. Rep. 4.)

The particular words of brawling must be set forth in the articles. (Jenkins v. Barrett, 1 Hagg. Rep. 14.)

As to turning the offender out of the church, see Williams v. Glennister, 4 D. & Ry. 217; 2 B. & Cres. 699, S. C.; Buston v. Henson, 10 M. & W. 105; ante, 274.

4. Assaults, &c. in.

Affrays in.

Affrays in a church or church-yard have been always looked upon as heinous offences. (See 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 23, ante, "Affray.")

Assaulting clergymen.

Beating clerks in orders was punishable under the Articuli Cleri, 9 Edw. II. s. 1, c. 3, but so much of that act relating thereto is repealed by 9 Geo. IV. c. 31. The 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 4, s. 3, so far as the same relates to striking, or drawing any weapon with intent to strike, in churches, &c. is repealed by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, except so far as it is punishable under ecclesiastical censures.

Assaults, &c. in churches.

The enactment of 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 4, s. 2, which is still in force, is, "if any shall smite or lay any violent hands on another in any church or church-yard, he shall be deemed ipso facto excommunicate, and be excluded from the fellowship and company of Christ's congregation."

Lay any violent Hands.]—But churchwardens, or perhaps private persons, who whip boys for playing in the church, or pull off the hats of those who obstinately refuse to take them off themselves, or gently lay their hands on those who disturb the performance of any part of divine service, and turn them out of the church, are not within the meaning of the statute. (1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 29.) 9. Profanation of, &c.

A threatening posture is not a smiting within the act. (Jenkins v. Barrett, 1 Hagg. Rep. 15.)

It is no excuse for the striking that the defendant was first assaulted. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 63, s. 28; ante, 659.)

Shall be deemed ipso facto excommunicate.]—And he shall not excuse himself by showing that the other assaulted him. (1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 28.)

Ipso facto]—Nevertheless in this and other like cases, there ought either to be a precedent conviction at law, which must be transmitted to the bishop; or else the excommunication must be declared in the Spiritual Court upon a proper proof of the offence there; for it is implied in every penal law that no one shall incur the penalty thereof till he be found guilty upon a lawful trial. (1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 27.)

As to excommunication, vide stat. 53 Geo. III. c. 127, s. 1, 2, 3, which abolishes excommunication in all cases except in definitive sentences, or interlocutory decrees having force of definitive sentences, and pronounced as spiritual censures for offences of ecclesiastical cognizance; and enacts that persons excommunicated shall in no case incur any civil penalty or disability; and see also 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 93, an act for enforcing the process upon contempts in the ecclesiastical courts.

I. Nature of Office, &c., and necessity for, and who may be elected.

CHURCHWARDENS are the guardians or keepers of the church, and representatives of the body of the church. (1 Bla. Com. 394.) Nature of office.

How far they are overseers, post, 669, 670, and tit. "Poor," Vol. IV. pp. 10, 21.

Where a return to a mandamus stated an immemorial custom in the parish Custom to have no

churchwarden bad.

to have no churchwardens, and that the duties appertaining by law to the office of churchwardens had been from time out of mind discharged by the overseers of the poor, it was held that, inasmuch as overseers of the poor had not existed time out of mind, and as there were necessary duties appertaining to churchwardens, and there must have been some persons bound by law to discharge those duties, the custom set out in the return was bad. (R. v. Wix, 2 B. & Adol. 197.)

Duties in general.

Their duties were originally confined to the care of the ecclesiastical property of the parish, over which they exercised discretionary power for specific purposes. (1 Hagg. 173.)

They are to a certain degree the guardians of the moral character and public decency of their respective parishes. (Griffiths v. Read, 1 Hagg. Rep. 208; St. Thomas's Hospital v. Treherne, 1 Phil. Ec. Ca. 129.)

Number of, and who may be elected.

In general the number of churchwardens is two. (2 Stra. 1246.) And although it has been said that the parishioners may choose and trust whom they think fit, without limitation (Morgan v. Archdeacon of Cardigan, 1 Salk. 166), yet this doctrine must not be taken to be correct in its largest sense; for although it is the duty of the ordinary not to make slight objections, he is bound to take care that an election in his opinion void in itself should have no legal effect; and this is a duty which he owes to the parish and to the general law of the country. (Anthony v. Seger, 1 Hagg. Old Series, 10; Steers' P. L. 83.)

By custom there may be but one churchwarden. (See R. v. Catesby, 4 D. & R. 434; 2 B. & Cres. 817, S. C.; Woodcock v. Gibson, 4 B. & C. 463.)

If a parish return an alien, or a papist, or a Jew, or a child of ten years of age, or a person convicted of felony (none of whom are qualified for the office), "I conceive the ordinary would be bound to reject." (Per Sir W. Scott, 1 Hagg. 10.)

But poverty is no disqualification; and therefore, where to a mandamus to swear in a churchwarden, the return was that he was pauper lactarius et servus minus habilis (a poor dairyman and unqualified for the office), the Court held the return insufficient, and a peremptory mandamus issued; for it is at the peril of the parishioners who elect him, if he misconduct himself. The ecclesiastical judge cannot control the election. (1 Salk. 166; R. v. Simpson, 1 Stra. 609.)

As to non-residents, see post, 663.

Churchwardens a body corporate.

Churchwardens, when they have made the declaration required by the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 62, s. 9, post, 677, and sworn in, are so far incorporated by law as to sue for the goods of the church, and to bring an action of trespass for them; and also to purchase goods for the use of the parish. They may take money or goods by gift or legacy for the benefit of the church. (Att.-Gen. v. Ruper, 2 P. Wms. 125); but they are not a corporation in such sort as to purchase lands, or take by grant, except in London by custom; (Gibs. Cod. 241; 1 Bla. Com. 394; 2 Saund. 47 c.); or under the provisions of the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, post, 669 And where certain churchwardens and overseers contracted for themselves and their successors, churchwardens and overseers, and provided that nothing in the contract should be construed to extend to any personal covenant, or in anywise to affect them in their private capacity: it was held that, although the churchwardens and overseers might be a corporation, yet having no common seal of office, they could not bind their successors; that the contract therefore constituted a personal covenant, and that the proviso being repugnant to it, was void. (Furnival v. Coombs, 7 Jur. 399.)

Power of attorney by

Churchwardens and overseers, having no corporate seal, have no power to execute a power of attorney, authorizing a party to continue to receive the dividends of stock, notwithstanding fluctuations in the number and identity of the members of the corporation. (Ex parte Annesley, 2 Y. & C. 350.)

II. Who are Exempt from Serving it.

Peers, clergymen,

All peers of the realm, by reason of their dignity; so all clergymen, by reason of their order; and also all parliament men, by reason of their privilege, are exempted from the office of churchwardens. (Gibs. 215.)

2. Who exempt.

A counsellor or attorney ought not to be chosen churchwarden; and if he be, he may have a prohibition by reason of his attendance on the courts at Westminster (2 Rol. Abr. 272; Montgomery v. Bean, 2 Scho. & Lef. 136; 9 Ves. 257; Willes, 426; Bac. Ab. Prohibition): or clerks in court. (1 Rol. Rep. 368.)

and members of parliament.

Counsellors or attorneys.

Apothecaries who have served seven years shall be exempted from the office of churchwarden. (6 & 7 Will. III. c. 4.)

Apothecaries and surgeons.

Freemen of the Corporation of Surgeons in London are exempted from being churchwardens. (18 Geo. II. c. 15.)

Dissenting teachers or preachers in holy orders, or pretended holy orders, being duly qualified, are exempted from the office of churchwardens. (1 Will. III. sess. 1, c. 18; 52 Geo. III. c. 155, s. 9.)

Dissenting ministers.

Other dissenters, and Roman Catholics, scrupling to take upon them the office, may execute the same by a sufficient deputy, to be approved of in like manner as other churchwardens. (1 Will. III. sess. 1, c. 18; 31 Geo. III. c. 32, s. 7; 52 Geo. III. c. 155.)

Other dissenters to execute by deputy.

A Quaker would not be compelled to undertake the office. (Adey v. Theobald, 1 Curt. 447.)

Quakers.

Every Roman Catholic minister on taking the oath, and conforming to the regulations therein specified, shall be exempted from the office of churchwarden. (31 Geo. III. c. 32, s. 8.)

Roman Catholic ministers.

By the 10 & 11 Will. III. c. 23, s. 2, all persons who prosecuted felons to conviction were exempted from the office of churchwardens in the parish where the offence was committed But the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, having repealed this provision of the statute of William, this is no longer an exemption.

Persons having convicted a felon not exempt.

No serjeant, corporal, or drummer of the militia, nor any private man, from the time of his enrolment until his discharge, shall be liable to serve as a peace or parish officer. (42 Geo. III. c. 90, s. 174)

Militia.

By stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 58, s. 11, and 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 51, s. 12, no commissioner or officer of, or person employed by, the excise or customs, shall be compelled to serve in any parochial office.

Excise and custom officers.

No persons living out of the parish can be chosen churchwarden, although they occupy lands within it. (Gibs. 215; 1 Hagg. 10; 18 Geo. II c. 15; 6 & 7 Will. III. c. 4.)

Non-residents.

But persons, although not personally resident in a parish, if partners of a house of trade situate within it, are not exempted from serving the office. (Stevenson v. Langston, 1 Hagg. Rep. 379; see Brook v. Owen, 3 Phil. Ec. Ca. 517, n.; R. v. Poynder, 1 B. & Cres. 178; 2 D. & R. 258, S. C.; R. v. Hall, 1 B. & Cres. 123; 2 D. & R. 241, S. C.; R. v. Pinney, 2 B. & Cres. 322; 3 D. & R. 578, S. C.; title "Poor," Vol. IV.)

If any one having privilege be chosen, a writ may go to the Ecclesiastical Court, though he be not sworn. (Palm. 392.)

Mode of taking advantage of privilege.

III. Who to elect Churchwardens.

Churchwardens are sometimes appointed by the minister, and sometimes by the parishioners, sometimes by both together, or by a select vestry or a particular number of parishioners (Hard. 379; 1 Mod. 181), according as the custom of the place directs. (1 Bla. Com. 394; 2 Atk. 650; Hubbard v. Penrice, 2 Stra. 1246; 1 Ventr. 167; 2 Roll. 234, l. 15; Cro. Jac. 532.) Where it was the custom for the old churchwardens to choose one of the new, and they could not agree, the custom is avoided by this disagreement, and the election must be according to the canon. (Catten v. Barwick, Stra. 145.)

Who to elect.

In most of the parishes in London the parishioners choose both churchwardens by custom; yet in all the new erected parishes, under 9 Anne, c. 22, the canon shall take place (unless the particular act in virtue of which any church was erected shall have specially provided that the parishioners shall

3. Who to elect. choose both), inasmuch as no custom can be pleaded in such new parishes. (Gibs. 215; Co. Litt. 113.)

Where there is no such custom, the election must then be according to the directions of the canons of the church; and canons 89, 90, direct, that all churchwardens or questmen in every parish shall be chosen by the joint consent of the minister and parishioners, if it may be; but if they cannot agree upon such choice, then the minister is to choose one and the parishioners another, and without such joint or several choice none shall take upon themselves to be churchwardens. (Gibs. 241; Catten v. Barwick, 1 Stra. 145; Hubbard v. Penrice, 2 Stra. 1246; sed vide Bac. Abr. Churchwardens, A.)

In some cases the lord of the manor prescribeth for the appointment of churchwardens. (God. 158; 2 Inst. 653; 1 H. Bla. 28.)

A curate is included under the word parson. (Hubbard v. Penrice, 2 Stra. 1246.)

If the parson or vicar, who has by custom a right to choose one churchwarden, be under sentence of deprivation, the right of choosing both churchwardens results to the parishioners. (Carth. 118.)

The parson cannot intermeddle in the choice of that churchwarden which it is the right of the parishioners by custom to elect. (Stoughton v. Reynolds, 2 Stra. 1045.)

Nor can the archdeacon, or any others who by virtue of their offices are to receive the declarations of and admit churchwardens, control the election; such offices are purely ministerial. (Bac. Abr. Churchwardens, A.) The spiritual court cannot generally control or examine into the election. (Morgan v. Archdeacon of Cardigan, 1 Salk. 166; 1 Ld. Raym. 138, S. C.; post, 667.)

Nor can the patron, unless it can be shown that the parishioners have no right to elect churchwardens, and that the churchwardens of the particular parish are exempt from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. (The Governors of St. Thomas's Hospital, 1 Lee's Ec. Ca. 126.)

Although the parishioners neglect ever so long to choose churchwardens, yet the ordinary hath no power of appointing them. (Stutter v. Freston, 1 Stra. 52.)

Choice by select vestry, &c.

By custom churchwardens may be chosen by a select vestry, or by a particular number of the parishioners. (See Evelin's case, Jones, 439; Cro. Car. 551, S. C.; Hard. 378; 1 Mod. 181; Com. Dig. Eglise, F. 1, and see Golding v. Fenn, 7 B. & Cres. 765.)

Appointment, &c. of, under acts for building new churches.

By 58 Geo. III. c. 45, s. 73, intituled "An Act for Building and promoting the Building of additional Churches in populous Parishes," it is enacted, "that two fit and proper persons shall be appointed to act as churchwardens for every church or chapel built or appropriated under the provisions of this act, at the usual period of appointing parish officers in every year, and shall be chosen, one by the incumbent of the church or chapel for the time being, and the other by the inhabitant householders entitled to vote in the election of churchwardens residing in the district to which the church or chapel shall belong, and of any extra-parochial place by such inhabitant householders as would be entitled to vote in the election of churchwardens if such extra-parochial place had been a parish; and the two persons, when so elected churchwardens, shall appear and be admitted and sworn according to law, and shall collect and receive the rents of the seats and pews, and pay the stipends or salaries appointed by the commissioners to be paid to the minister and clerk of and belonging to the church or chapel for the time being, and also shall do, perform, and execute all lawful acts, matters, and things necessary and requisite for and concerning the repairs, management, good order, and decency of behaviour to be kept and observed in the church or chapel by the congregation thereof; and the persons so to be appointed or chosen churchwardens shall continue in their said office until others shall be chosen in like manner in their stead; and all the persons so chosen churchwardens are hereby authorized and empowered, in case of non-payment of the rents of the seats and pews of the church or chapel for which they shall be appointed, to enter upon and sell the same, or else to sue for and recover the same by action or actions, for such rents, in the names of 'the churchwardens of the church or chapel of [describing the same],' as the case shall or may require, without specifying the christian or surnames of such churchwardens; and no such action shall abate by reason of the death or removal or going out of office of any such churchwarden."

3. Who to elect.

By sect. 74 the churchwardens of every parish in which any additional chapel shall be built or provided under any of the provisions of this act, without making any division thereof into separate parishes or district parishes, shall be and are hereby authorised and required to execute and do all such things as the churchwardens to be appointed under the provisions of this act are authorised and required to do.

Churchwardens to act in parishes where additional chapels shall be built.

Although by stat. 59 Geo. III. c. 134, s. 30, "In every district, parish, or division of any parish or district, chapelry or consolidated chapelry, in which any church or chapel shall be built, acquired or appropriated under the provisions of the said recited act or this act, in which there shall not be a distinct vestry belonging to such district or division, a select vestry, consisting of so many persons as shall be directed by the commissioners in that behalf, shall be appointed by the commissioners, with the advice of the bishop of the diocese, out of the substantial inhabitants of the district or division, or district chapelry or consolidated chapelry, for the care and management of the concerns of the church or chapel, and all matters and things relating thereto; and such select vestry shall annually elect or appoint the churchwarden or chapelwarden to be named on the part of the parish or chapelry, and shall elect new members of such vestry, as vacancies may arise by death, resignation, or ceasing to inhabit the parish; and proper pews shall be assigned and provided in every such church and chapel for the use of the church or chapelwardens thereof"

Appointment by commissioners of select vestry for management of new churches.

Such vestry to appoint church or chapel wardens.

The 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 38, s. 16, enacts, that two fit persons are to be appointed as churchwardens for every church or chapel built or appropriated under the provisions of that act, one by the incumbent and the other by the renters of pews, and these duties are specified by the act.

Appointment of churchwardens under stat. 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38.

And in cases of new parishes formed according to sect. 23 of the above statute, the appointment of churchwardens for such parishes must be in the mode pointed out in sect. 25.

The like for new parishes formed under that act.

At an election of churchwardens in open vestry, a poll of the parishioners was demanded, under Sturges Bourne's Act, 58 Geo. III. c. 69:—It was held, that this was a legal demand, and meant a poll of such parishioners as were entitled to vote, and not of all the parishioners. Upon the poll being demanded, it was resolved that it should be confined to the persons who were present at the show of hands which had already been made, and not to be extended to the other parishioners who were entitled to vote; but it was held, that this, though illegal, could only render the election void, in case persons entitled to vote were prevented from voting; and that not being shown, the election with locked doors was held a valid election, though if any had been excluded the Court would not have considered their probable number with reference to the effect which their votes might have had on the result of the election. (Reg. v. St. Mary's, Lambeth, 8 Ad. & Ell. 356.)

One of two candidates for the office of churchwarden was elected at a vestry and subscribed the declaration of office, but the election was alleged to have been so improperly conducted that the proceedings were void. To give the parties impugning the election an opportunity of trying its validity, the Court (considering a primâ facie case to be presented) granted a mandamus calling on the rector and churchwardens to convene a vestry for electing a churchwarden for the remainder of the year. At an election in vestry where the right of voting is regulated by the 58 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 3, it is no objection to the proceedings that the chairman directed a poll without first taking a show of hands, although a show of hands was demanded, and the poll was not demanded, but was objected to. (Rex v. The Rector and Churchwardens of Birmingham, 7 Ad. & Ell. 254.)

See also similar enactments in the stat. 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 38, s. 16, respecting the appointment of churchwardens for churches or chapels built by pri-

3. Who to elect. vate individuals under the provisions of that act, but the election is to be by the incumbent and the pew renters.

IV. Time and Mode of Election, and Duration of Office.

Time of election. They are to be chosen every Easter week. (Can. 90.)

Returning officer. The churchwardens whose office is about to expire are properly the returning officers at the election of their successors. (Anthony v. Seger, 1 Hagg. Old Series, 9.)

Mode of summoning meeting. As to the mode of summoning the meeting and mode of proceeding at vestries in general, see ante, 638, and "Vestries," Vol. VI.

The election. In the election of churchwardens by the parishioners, the majority of those who meet at the vestry, upon a written notice given for that purpose, will bind the parish. (St. Saviour's, Southwark, case, Lane's Rep. 21.)

The election is by show of hands or by poll. (See Faulkner v. Elger, 4 B. & Cres. 449; 6 D. & R. 517, S. C.) And the fact of the election having been always by show of hands, is no evidence to exclude the granting of a poll when properly demanded. (Campbell v. Maund, 5 Ad. & Ell. 865.)

If after a show of hands a poll is demanded, it destroys the previous voting by a show of hands, and every thing anterior is not of the substance of the election, nor to be so received; and consequently where one of three candidates had many hands held up in his favour but afterwards did not poll any votes, he could not be taken as elected, upon one of the persons returned being afterwards found ineligible. (Anthony v. Seger, 1 Hagg. Old Series, 9.)

Every rated inhabitant, whether previously present at the vestry or not, has a right to come in and vote; and the closing of the vestry doors during the poll, so as to exclude voters, is illegal. (Reg. v. St. Mary's, Lambeth, 3 N. & P. 416; 8 Ad. & Ell. 356, S. C.)

If there be a custom to conclude a poll for the election of churchwardens at a certain time, that being a reasonable time, the voters must tender their votes within it. (R. v. Commissary of the Bishop of Winchester, 7 East, 573.)

The right of adjourning the poll or business in progress at a meeting is vested in the voters, and not in the chairman, unless perhaps there be a custom to the contrary. (See Stoughton v. Reynolds, 2 Stra. 1045; R. v. Archdeacon of Chester, 3 Nev. & Man. 413; 1 Ad. & Ell. 342, S. C.)

Where a meeting for the election of churchwardens takes place in the parish church, and that in case a poll should be demanded the meeting would be immediately adjourned to the town hall, the chairman may, upon a poll being demanded, adjourn the meeting to the town hall, although a majority of the voters present object to such adjournment. (R. v. Archdeacon of Chester, supra.)

An attempt to disturb the election may be punishable in the Ecclesiastical Court, see ante, 659.

Declaration to be taken after election. After the election of the churchwardens they had formerly, before the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 62, to take an oath to execute the office truly and faithfully; (see Gibs. 243; Ward, 364;) and they should not have executed their office till they were sworn. (Gibs. 243; Shaw's P. L. 70.) But they might execute it: and the fact of their not having taken the oath did not invalidate their acts. (Anon. 1 Ventr. 267; R. v. Corfe Mullen, 1 B. & Adol. 219.) This oath was administered by the archdeacon or ordinary of the diocese, and if he refused, a mandamus would lie to compel him. (Com. Dig. Mandamus, (A.); Bac. Abr. Churchwardens, (A).) No fee could be demanded for swearing the churchwardens or taking their presentments. (Goslin v. Ellison, 1 Salk. 330.) By the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 62, s. 9, a declaration is substituted for an oath; (see title "Oaths," Vol. V. p. 261;) but the obligation of the churchwardens to make and liability for not making such declaration is the same as it was with respect to the taking the oath before that act.

Refusing to take office. A churchwarden duly elected may be directed by the Spiritual Court to take the declaration of office before the proper ordinary or officer; (Cooper v. Allnut, 3 Phil. Rep. 166;) and if he refuse to take his office and declaration he may be excommunicated for the refusal, and no prohibition will lie. (Gibs. 216, 243, 961; Rogers v. Davenant, 1 Mod. 194.)

4. Time of Election.

Where person first elected pays a fine and is excused.

Where the person first elected churchwarden had on payment of a fine been excused, a person elected in his place at the same vestry meeting is bound to serve unless some exemption be shown. (Birnie v. Weller, 3 Hagg. 474.)

Double return.

Should there be a contest as to the right of making the election, and two sets of churchwardens are chosen, the ordinary or other officer is, it seems, bound to swear them all; and a mandamus lies to compel him to do so, in order that both parties may be capable to try the right. (See Williams v. Vaughan, 1 Bla. Rep. 28; 2 Roll. Abr. 287; R. v. Harris, 3 Burr. 1420.)

Mandamus to elect.

If the persons who ought to choose churchwardens neglect to do so, the Ecclesiastical Court has no jurisdiction to interfere; but those who ought to elect may be compelled to do so by mandamus. (R. v. Wix, 2 B. & Adol. 197; Stutter v. Preston, Stra. 52; R. v. Churchwardens of Birmingham, 7 Ad. & Ell. 254, ante, 665.)

Mandamus to admit and swear in.

The Court, in a case before the above stat. of 5 & 6 Will. IV. granted a rule absolute in the first instance for a mandamus to the archdeacon to swear in a party as churchwarden on an affidavit of due election, demand and refusal, and of notice to the archdeacon of the application to the Court, the ground of refusal not appearing by the affidavit in support of the rule. (Exp. Winfield, 3 Adol. & Ell. 614.)

And in another case the Court granted a mandamus by rule absolute in the first instance to compel the official to administer the oath or declaration to a party claiming to have been elected as chapel warden of a chapel (under a local act conferring upon the officer elected the power of a churchwarden for the purposes of the chapel), though other parties claim to have been elected. (Exp. Duffield, 3 Adol. & Ell. 617.)

Also in another case a rule nisi having been obtained for a mandamus to an archdeacon and surrogate to swear in certain persons as churchwardens and sidesman of a parish, it appeared by affidavit that the parties were colourably elected, but that the validity of the election was disputed, that there was an usage in the archdeaconry to swear in the parties elected on a certain day subsequent to the election appointed annually by the archdeacon, and that the surrogate being applied to immediately after the election to swear in the parties, had said that they must wait till the day appointed, but that he would not disobey a mandamus from this Court: Held, that this was a refusal, and that the usage, if a good one, should be returned to the mandamus, and the Court made the rule absolute without entering into the question of the validity of the election. (R. v. Archdeacon of Middlesex, 3 Adol. & Ell. 615; and see Exp. Lowe, 1 Dowl. P. C. 15.)

In the case of R. v. Williams, 3 Man. & R. 402; 8 B. & Cres. 681, S. C.; to a mandamus to admit A. B. into the office of churchwarden, reciting that he had been duly elected, a return that A. B. was not duly elected was held good. (See also Anthony v. Lege, 1 Hagg. 10.)

Validity of election, &c. how tried.

The courts of common law are the proper ones for deciding the validity of the custom of choosing churchwardens, like of all other customs of the realm, and not the spiritual courts. (Evelin's case, Cro. Car. 552; Bac. Abr. Churchwardens, (A.); 1 Salk. 160.) So also the common law is to determine the legality of the votes given on the election. (R. v. Dr. Harris, Burr. 1420.) When two churchwardens are sworn in, the right is to be settled in an action. (Williams v. Vaughan, 1 Bla. Rep. 38.) But the customary right to elect churchwardens as well as the fact of election has been frequently tried on a feigned issue. (Golding v. Fenn, 7 B. & C. 765.)

The Spiritual Court, however, may become the means of trying the validity of the election by a return of "not elected," "not duly elected," or any other return that answers the writ and affords an opportunity of trying the right in an action for a false return. (R. v. Rice, 1 Ld. Raym. 138; 3 Salk. 90, S. C.; R. v. Simpson, 1 Stra. 609; 2 Ld. Raym. 1379, S. C.; R. v. Harwood, id. 1405; R. v. Mayor, &c. of Ripon, 2 Salk. 433; 1 Ld. Raym. 563, S. C.; R. v. Churchwardens of Taunton St. James, Cowp. 413.)

4. Time of Election.

A quo warranto will not be granted, as the office does not concern the rights or prerogatives of the crown. (R. v. Daubeney, 2 Stra. 1196; R. v. Shepherd, 4 T. R. 381.)

Duration of office.

With respect to the time they are to continue in office, by canon 89 they are not to continue longer than one year except they be chosen again, but by canon 188, the office of churchwardens is to continue till the new churchwardens be sworn. (Nolan's P. L. 4th ed. 44.)

It seems that they may be removed for misconduct by those who appointed them, and others chosen in their stead, before the expiration of the year. (1 Blu. Com. 394; Com. Dig. Eglise, 1.)

Acts of, admitted and sworn in, though not duly elected, valid.

Where parties are unduly elected churchwardens, but are admitted, and sworn in, and act, they may convene a vestry for laying a church-rate; and a rate laid at such a vestry is valid. (Reg. v. St. Clement's (Inhabs.), 12 Ad. & E. 177.)

V. Their Interest and Power over things of the Church, &c. Contracts and Actions by.

Interest and power of churchwardens over things of the church, and contracts by.

The churchwardens, when chosen, are a corporation entrusted with the care and management of the goods belonging to the church, which they are to order for the best advantage of the parishioners; they are likewise enabled to take goods for the benefit of the church, but cannot dispose of them without the consent of the parishioners. (Bac. Abr. Churchwardens, (B.))

But churchwardens have nothing but to the use of the parish, and the corporation consists of both, and one only cannot release or give away the goods of the church; (Starkey v. Berton, Cro. Jac. 234; Yelv. 173, S. C.;) nor can both churchwardens without the consent of the parishioners. (1 Roll. Abr. 393; 1 Ventr. 189.) Such consent should be given in vestry, and the license of the ordinary, it is said, is necessary. (Prid. Direct. 78.) They have not officially the custody of the title-deeds of the advowson, though kept in a chest in the church, as they are not the goods of the church. (Gardiner v. Parker, 4 T. R. 351.)

Although, however, the goods belong to the parishioners, the churchwardens are the corporation in whom they are vested, and, consequently, if they improperly dispose of them, the parishioners cannot sue thereupon either to recover them or otherwise, but they must wait till new churchwardens are chosen, who have a right to call their predecessors to account before the ordinary, and commence suit against them for any damage done to the parish by their violation of the trust reposed in them. (Prid. Direct. 78.)

In the case of Jackson v. Adams, (2 Bing. N. C. 402,) it was held, that the property of the bell ropes of a parish church was in the churchwardens, and consequently that it was not actionable to say of a churchwarden that he stole the bell ropes of his own parish.

Contracts by.

It has been laid down as a general rule, that an agreement by parish officers in the course of their official duties, which is beneficial to the parish, is binding on it and succeeding churchwardens. (See 2 P. Wms. 266; 1 Powell on Contr. 114; 1 Com. Contr. 396)

It has been held a party cannot recover against several overseers of a parish for money lent to one of them in his capacity of overseer, unless the rest have expressly promised repayment. (3 Stark. Rep. 65.)

A churchwarden has no authority to pledge the credit of his co-churchwardens for the repairs of the church. If he orders such repairs without the knowledge of the other churchwarden, he is liable individually. (Northwaite v. Bennett, 2 C. & M. 316; see Furnival v. Coombs, ante, 662.)

Freehold.

Churchwardens have no right to or interest in the freehold and inheritance of the church, which belongs solely to the parson or incumbent. (Bac. Abr. Churchwardens, (B.))

Burial fee.

Therefore they cannot grant a license for burying in the church. (Frances v. Ley, Cro. Jac. 366.) Though by custom they may have a fee for burying in the church itself. (Anon. Ventr. 271; Andrews v. Simons, 3 Keb. 504.)

We have already seen what power and interest the churchwardens have with respect to the seats in the church, (ante, pp. 631, 632.) If any of them be taken or injured, the churchwardens may sue. (Bac. Abr. Churchwardens, (B.))

5. Their Interest, &c.

Seats in church.

Churchwardens themselves or any others cannot take down arms in windows, or deface gravestones or monuments erected in the church or churchyard, and if they do, an action lies by the heirs or executors of the parties for whom they were erected. (Roll. Abr. 625; and see ante, p. 635.)

Ornaments, &c.

A custom for the churchwardens of a parish to set up monuments, &c. in a church, without the consent of the rector or ordinary, is illegal. (Beckwith v. Harding, 1 B. & Ald. 508.)

Purchasing land, leases by, &c.

Churchwardens cannot, in general, purchase land for the use of the church or parish, except in London by custom. (Jones, 439; Gibs. 215; Mar. 22, 67.) If land be given to the parish for the use of the church, it must not be to the churchwardens and their successors, but it should be to feoffees in trust to the use intended, which must from time to time be renewed as the trustees die away. (Gibs. 215.) As to whether churchwardens and overseers have power to mortgage lands devised to the parish for the repair of the church, to reimburse the rector the sums expended by him in such repairs at the request of the inhabitants, see Wrench v. Lord, 4 Scott, 381.

By the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 9 to 17, various powers are given to churchwardens and overseers to purchase and sue for, &c. lands for the use of the poor, with the consent of the inhabitants. (See "Poor," Vol. IV.; 5 B. & Cres. 433; 2 D. & R. 708, S. C.; Doe d. Jackson v. Hiley, 10 B. & Cres. 885.) And the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 69, does not transfer the legal estate in parish property thus vested in the churchwardens and overseers to the guardians. (Doe v. Webster, 12 Ad. & Ell. 442.) It was held, that in order to constitute the body intended by the act of Geo. III. there must be two overseers, and a churchwarden or churchwardens, and that where there were two overseers appointed, one of whom was afterwards appointed by custom sole churchwarden, the act did not vest the parish property in them. (Woodcock v. Gibson, 4 B. & Cres. 462; 6 D. & R. 524.)

The churchwardens and overseers are not, by this act, made a complete body corporate, but are only empowered "to accept, take and hold in the nature of a body corporate;" and therefore it is not necessary that the acceptance of a demise of lands by them should be an instrument under a common seal; (Smith v. Adkins, 8 M. & W. 236;) and it is competent for any one of the churchwardens or overseers, without the consent of the majority, to authorise a distress for rent in arrear. (Gouldsworth v. Knights, 12 Law J. Rep. (N. S.), Exch. 282; 11 M & Wels. 337, S. C.)

By the 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 59, churchwardens, with the consent of the treasury, may enclose crown lands not exceeding 50 acres, but persons renting such lands are not to gain a settlement.

They cannot make a lease of lands given to feoffees for the use of the parishioners; (12 Hen. VII. 29 a; 13 Hen. VII 10 a;) nor maintain trespass or other action for entry upon, or taking the profits of such land. (12 Hen. VII. 29 a.)

Before the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, leases by the churchwardens of parish property passed no legal interest, and the churchwardens and overseers may, after the statute, treat such lessees as tenants from year to year only, and recover the premises on giving notice to quit. (Doe v. Terry, 4 Ad. & Ell. 271; Doe v. Cockell, 4 Ad. & Ell. 478; Gouldsworth v. Knights, Law J. Rep. (N. S.), Exch. 282.) Since the statute, a lease of parish land granted by the churchwardens alone is invalid. (Phillips v. Pearce, 5 B. & Cres. 483; 8 D. & Ry. 43, S. C.)

Churchwardens, where additional chapel built.

Churchwardens of every parish in which any additional chapel shall be built or provided under the act, without making any division thereof into separate parishes or district parishes, shall do all such things as churchwardens to be appointed under the act are authorised and required to do. (58 Geo. III. c. 45, s. 74; and see 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 38, s. 25.)

Actions by.

The churchwardens have such a special property in the organ, bells, parish books, bible, chalice, surplice, &c. and other goods belonging to the church, that for the taking away, or for any damage done any of these, they may bring an action at law, laying the damage to them or the parishioners; (Wats. c. 29;) and therefore the parson cannot sue for them in the spiritual court. (Bac. Abr. Churchwardens, (B.)) So they may indict the offender. (Id.)

5. Their Interest, &c. in things of Church, &c.

They cannot sue at law for a legacy, or a thing never in their possession. (Com. Dig. Eglise, (F. 3.))

They may bring their action against their predecessors for money remaining in their hands; and they are not bound to make all the present or the late churchwardens plaintiffs or defendants. (Astle v. Thomas, 2 B. & Cres. 271; 3 D. & Ry. 492, S. C.; Turner v. Baynes, 2 H. Bla. 559.)

They cannot bring actions as such after the expiration of their office; (Stra. 852; Bac. Abr. tit. Churchwardens;) but their successors must do it; (Wats. c. 39 (u);) and if any of the goods of the church be detained or not delivered by the predecessors, the successors may bring an action against him also, laying the damage to the parishioners; (Gibs. 216;) but if the action be commenced within the year, they may proceed in it after the year. (Id. F. N. B. 91 k; 2 P. Wms. 126; Dent v. Prudence, 2 Stra. 852.)

A suit in the Court of Chancery by the churchwardens of a parish, to restrain a person from pulling down the churchyard wall, is maintainable; and the churchwardens, notwithstanding their office has ceased, may file a supplemental bill for the purpose of stating facts occurred since the filing of the original bill, and may join their successors as co-plaintiffs with them in the supplemental suit. (Marriott v. Turpley, 9 Sim. 279.)

When an obligation is made to churchwardens and their successors, and they die, their executors shall bring the action, and not their successors. (Vin. Abr. Churchwardens, (D.))

The 58 Geo. III. c. 45, s. 73, and 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 38, s. 26, relating to the building of additional churches, empowers churchwardens to sue for and recover pew rents.

In actions brought under the 59 Geo. III. c.12, s .9, the churchwardens and overseers should sue in their own names, describing themselves as churchwardens and overseers of the parish for which they act. (Doe v. Roe, 1 T. & G. 1084.) All actions must be brought in the joint names, and a release or discharge improperly given by one is void. One cannot act for the rest except in presentments, for he may know of an offence of which the others are ignorant. If the damage for which the action is brought were done in their own time they may lay the damage either in damnum parochianorum or in damnum ipsorum, but if in the time of their predecessors then it should be in damnum parochianorum. (Hadman v. Ringwood, Cro. Eliz. 179; Att.-Gen. v. Ruper, 2 P. Wms. 125; 6 Bac. Abr. 565.)

VI. Duties of, in general.

Repairs. Rates. Pews. Poor.

We have already noticed several important duties of churchwardens relating to the repair of churches, the assessing and collecting of church rates, and the disposition of pews, &c.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, every churchwarden is an overseer of the poor, though every overseer of the poor is not a churchwarden. The duties and liabilities of churchwardens as such overseers will be found fully considered, post, "Poor," Vol. IV. under 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 17, 18. (Phillips v. Pearce, 5 B. & Cres. 433; 8 D. & R. 43, S. C.; Woodcock v. Gibson, 4 B. & Cres. 462; 6 D. & R. 524, S. C.)

The 55 Geo. III. c. 137, s. 6, prohibits churchwardens, overseers, and persons having the management of the poor, from being concerned in contracts, &c. for the supplying for their own profit, goods, &c. for the use of the poor or workhouse, &c. under the heavy penalty of 100*l.* unless a certificate of two justices be obtained, &c. (See "Poor," Vol. IV.)

As to contracts by the churchwardens and overseers for lodging or employing of the poor, see 45 Geo. III. c. 54, s. 1, 2, "Poor," Vol. IV.

By 9 Geo. III. c. 37, churchwardens for paying the poor otherwise than in lawful money are to forfeit to the poor not less than 10*s.* nor more than 20*s.* (See post, "Coin.")

6. Duties of, in general.

As constables are in civil affairs, so the churchwardens are the officers of a parish in ecclesiastical matters. In modern times, however, they are relieved from many of their somewhat invidious duties, viz. enforcing attendance upon services of religion, presenting absentees from the church to ecclesiastical censures, and excluding the excommunicated from entering the sacred edifice. They are, however, bound to keep due decorum in the time of divine service, they may exercise a reasonable discretion in directing where the congregation shall sit, and may remove a person from one seat to another, provided no unnecessary force be used, and the removal can be effected without public scandal or the disturbance of divine service. (Reynolds v. Monkton, 2 Moo. & R. 384; and see Burton v. Henson, 10 M. & W. 105.)

Are ecclesiastical officers, duties of, as such.

Churchwardens are required by the canons to see that curates are duly licensed by the bishop; and that strangers, unless duly qualified, shall not preach in the church. They are also to present the minister for non-residence, or for irregular and incontinent living, or any other excess or irregularity calculated to bring disgrace upon their sacred office. (Steers' P. L. 90; see Bennett v. Bonaker, 2 Hagg. 25.)

Duty respecting curates and ministers.

If a minister introduces any irregularity into the service, the churchwardens have no authority to interfere; but they may and ought to repress all indecent interruption of the service by others, and they desert their duty if they do not. And if a case could be imagined in which even a preacher himself were guilty of any act grossly offensive, either from natural infirmity or from disorderly habits, it seems that the churchwardens, and even private persons, may interfere to preserve the decorum of public worship; but that is a case of instant and overbearing necessity that supersedes all ordinary rules. In cases which fall short of such a singular pressure, and can await the remedy of a proper legal complaint, and a private and decent application to the minister himself fails in preventing repetition of the irregularity, the churchwardens may complain to the ordinary. (Hutchins v. Denziloe, 1 Hagg. 174; Burton v. Henson, 10 M. & W. 106.)

Churchwardens have the care of a benefice during its vacancy. Having first taken out a sequestration from the spiritual court, they are to manage all the profits and expenses of the benefice for him that shall next succeed; plough and sow his glebe; take in the crop; collect tithes; thrash out and sell corn; repair houses and fences, and the like. And they shall take care that during the vacancy the church shall be duly served by a curate approved by the bishop, whom they are to pay out of the profits of the benefice. And if the successor thinks himself aggrieved by them, he may appeal to the ecclesiastical judge. (Par. L. 99; Com. Par. Off. 90.)

Vacancy.

The death or avoidance of the spiritual person who was the incumbent of the church of any parish or place, in which any separated parish or district church or chapel shall be consecrated, at the time of consecration shall be notified by the bishop under his hand and seal to the spiritual person then serving the church or chapel, and the churchwardens of the parish or place; and such notification shall be preserved with, and copies thereof entered in the books of registers of marriages, births and burials, of the church of the parish or place, and in the books of registers to be provided for entering the publication of bans and the solemnization of marriages, and the baptisms and burials in such chapel, and such entries shall be authenticated by the churchwardens, and shall be sufficient evidence of the period of commencement of such service under this act of the publication of bans and solemnization of marriages and baptisms, and performance of burials, in any such chapel, or any cemetery thereof. (58 Geo. III. c. 45, s. 29.)

Death, &c. of incumbent.

They are officers to inspect the morals and behaviour of the parishioners. (The Governors of St. Thomas's Hospital v. Trehorne, 1 Phil. Ec. Ca. 129; Griffiths v. Read, 1 Hagg. 208.)

Morals of inhabitants.

They (or the constable) shall levy the penalties for persons exercising their worldly callings on the Lord's Day. (29 Car. II. c. 7.)

Trading on Sunday.

6. Duties of, in general.

They shall suffer no plays, feasts, banquets, suppers, church-ales, drinkings, temporal courts or leets, lay juries, musters, or any profane usage, to be kept in the church or church-yard. (Can. 88.)

Profanation of the church.

And Sir William Scott, in the case of Cox v. Goodday (2 Hag. Rep. 141,) said, "the duty of maintaining order and decorum in the church lies immediately upon the churchwardens; and if they are not present, or being present do not repress any indecency, they desert their proper duty."

They may justify the taking off the hat of a person who has it on in the church, if he refuse to remove it on request. (Hall v. Plauner, 1 Lev. 197.)

And where a parish clerk having been dismissed from his office by the rector through irregularity, and another appointed, the former entered the church before divine service had commenced, and took possession of the clerk's seat: it was held that the churchwardens were justified in removing him from the clerk's desk, and also out of the church, if they had reasonable grounds for believing that he would offer interruption during the celebration of divine service. (Burton v. Henson, 10 M. & W. 105.)

Loitering in churchyard.

They shall not suffer any idle persons to abide either in the churchyard or church-porch during the time of divine service or preaching; but shall cause them to come in or to depart. (Can. 19.)

Sports on Sunday.

They (or the constable) shall levy the penalty of 3*s.* 4*d.* for using unlawful pastimes on the Lord's Day. (1 Car. c. 1.)

Church way.

They are to see that the church ways be well kept and repaired. And the right to a church way may be claimed and maintained by a libel in the spiritual court. (2 Roll. Abr. 287.)

Ornaments of church.

They shall take care to have in the church a large Bible, a book of Common Prayer, book of Homilies, a font of stone, a decent communion table, with proper coverings, the Ten Commandments set up at the east end, and other chosen sentences upon the walls, reading desk, and pulpit, and chest for alms; all at the charge of the parish. (Can. 80 to 84; and see Governors of St. Thomas's Hospital v. Trehorne, Lee's Ec. Ca. 120.)

Key of church.

The minister has, in the first instance, the right to the possession of the key of the church, and the churchwardens have only the custody of the church under him; and if he refuses access to the church on fitting occasions, complaint must be made to higher authorities. (Lee v. Mathews, 3 Hagg. R. 173.)

Bells.

They ought to keep the keys of the belfry, and to take care that the bells be not rung without good cause, to be allowed by the minister and themselves. (Can. 88.) The property of the bell ropes of a parish church is in the churchwardens. (Jackson v. Adams, 2 Bing. N. C. 402.)

Registers.

Churchwardens or chapelwardens of every parish or chapelry are from time to time to furnish register books, adapted to the forms given by the act, at the expense of the parish or chapelry, whenever required by the rector, vicar, curate, or officiating minister to provide the same. And such books are to be of paper, unless required to be of parchment, by such churchwardens or chapelwardens respectively. (Stat. 52 Geo. III. c. 146, s. 2. See the act in full, "Parish Registers," Vol. V.)

Iron chest.

They are to provide and securely keep, at the expense of the parish or chapelry, a dry well-painted iron chest for the keeping such register-books, either at the rector's, &c. house, or in the church. (Sect. 5.)

Copies of registers, &c.

They are to make fair copies, if required so to do by the rector, &c. of all the entries in the register book annually, at the expiration of two months after the end of each year, and to attest the verification of the same by the rector, &c. (Sect. 6.)

They are to transmit such annual copies to the register of the diocese, by the post, on or before the 1st of June in every year. (Sect. 7.)

In case of neglect or refusal of the officiating minister to verify copies of the register books, they are to certify the default to the registrar of the diocese. (Sect. 9. See these enactments in full, "Registers," Vol. V.)

And such register, being carefully preserved, is good evidence; and the falsifying of it is punishable at the common law. (Gibs. 229. See "Evidence," Vol. II. p. 45.)

They shall at the charge of the parish, with the advice and direction of the minister, provide bread and wine against the communion. (Can. 20.) 6 Duties of, in general.

They (or the overseers) shall levy the penalty of 5*l.* for an incumbent not reading the common prayer once a month. (13 & 14 Car. II. c. 4, s. 7; and see further, ante, 671, as to their proceeding against the clergyman for improper conduct.) Communion. Incumbent not reading prayers.

Alms collected in chapels as well as in parish churches during the reading of the offertory are, by the direction of the rubric, at the disposal of the incumbent of the parish and the churchwardens thereof, and not of the minister or proprietors of the chapel. (Moysey v. Hillcoat, 2 Hagg. R. 56.) Alms.

They shall not suffer any strangers to preach but such as shall appear qualified on showing their licence; and they shall see that such preachers register and subscribe their names in a book to be kept for that purpose, with the day when they preached, and the bishop's name who granted the license. (Can. 50, 52.) Strange preachers.

Persons who murder themselves, or die excommunicated, are denied Christian burial; and therefore the churchwardens are not to suffer them to be buried in the church or church-yard, without special license from the bishop; (Degge, 183;) but now a felo de se may be buried in the church-yard, though he is still denied Christian burial. (See the 4 Geo. IV. c. 52, s. 2, "Homicide," Vol. III.; and see ante, 627.) Persons denied Christian burial.

The churchwardens, together with the minister, are to sign certificates for the out-pensioners of Greenwich Hospital residing within their parish, with respect to the identity of their persons, in order to the receiving of their pensions. (10 Geo. IV. c. 26.) Greenwich Hospital.

They (or the overseers) shall pay to the high constables the general county rate out of their money collected for the poor. (12 Geo. II. c. 29, s. 2; and see 57 Geo. III. c. 91, s. 5; post, "County Rate," Vol. II.) County rate.

They shall receive the penalty for servants carelessly firing houses; (6 Anne, c. 31; see ante, 511;) and (id. s. 1) pay rewards to turncocks and engine keepers. (See also 7 Anne, c. 17, s. 2.) Servants firing houses.

They are, on notice from a justice of the peace, to prosecute pawnbrokers offending against the 39 & 40 Geo III. c 99, at the expense of the parish. (Id. s. 28; "Pawnbrokers," Vol. V.) Pawnbrokers.

They are to prosecute disorderly houses. (See "Disorderly House," Vol. II.) Disorderly houses.

They are to preserve and deliver over the population accounts to their successors; (1 Geo. IV. c. 94, s. 9;) and as to their other accounts, see post, 674. Population accounts.

They are to make out lists of persons qualified to serve on juries, and to fix them on church doors, and keep them for inspection. (6 Geo. IV. c. 50, s. 8, 9; "Jurors," Vol. III.) Juries.

As to their duty as sequestrators, see Steer's Parish Law, 2nd ed., 110. Sequestrators.

There are numerous other instances in which churchwardens are appointed by statute to receive certain penalties, &c., and to act in other matters, but it is not necessary to state them here. Other duties.

VII. Of Presentments by.

At the Easter visitation, when the churchwardens go out of office, and before their successors are sworn in, they must make their presentments of all things amiss within their parish. (4 Burn's E. L. 25.) Presentments by.

Churchwardens by their declaration are to present or certify to the bishop, or his officer, all things presentable by the ecclesiastical laws, which relate to the church, minister, and parishioners.

The articles delivered to them for their direction are for the most part founded on the book of canons made in the year 1603, and the rubrics of the Common Prayer. Book of articles.

They may present as often as they please, but shall not be obliged above When to present.

7. Presentment by.

once a year where it hath so been used, and not above twice any where; except it be at the bishop's visitation. (Can. 116, 117.)

Fees on.

For the presentments of any church or chapel for one year the register shall have only 4*d*. (Can. 116.)

Presentment, by whom.

The minister may present where the churchwardens neglect. (Can. 113.) But such presentment ought to be upon oath. (Grove v. Elliott, 2 Vent. 42.)

One churchwarden may present without the others, ante, 670.

VIII. Their Accounts.

Their accounts.

We have already seen, in various parts of our considerations on matters relating to the church and churchwardens, what disbursements and receipts may be made and given by churchwardens.

When to account.

At the end of the year, or within a month after at most, they shall before the minister and parishioners (at a vestry) give up a just account of such money as they have received, and also what they have particularly bestowed in reparations and otherwise for the use of the church; and shall deliver up to the parishioners the money and parish goods in their hands, to be delivered over by them to the next churchwardens by bill indented. (Can. 89.)

Accounting to a select vestry.

If the custom of the parish is for a certain number of persons to have the government thereof, and the account is given up to them, the custom is a good custom, and the account given to them a good account. (Gibs. 242.)

Vouchers.

Mr. Barlow says, that for disbursements of any sum not above 40*s*. their own oath is held sufficient proof; but for all sums above, receipts must be produced. But it may be more satisfactory if receipts be produced for all. (Barl. 105.)

Inspection.

The churchwardens are bound, under the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, in common with overseers, to permit an inspection of the poor accounts; and upon the party stating some special reason for which he wishes to see them, a mandamus to compel them to allow such inspection will be granted; and it is no answer to such an application to the Court, that this statute, relating to the accounts of the poor, imposes a penalty for improperly refusing such inspection. (R. v. Clear, 4 B. & Cres. 899; 7 D. & Ry. 393, S. C.)

The 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 2, provides that the churchwardens shall allow any inhabitant to inspect the rate, and copies to be taken; but this enactment does not apply to the churchwardens inter se. (Wethered v. Callcott, 5 Scott, N. R. 409; and see title "Poor," Vol. IV.)

Production of.

The ecclesiastical courts may compel the production of accounts, but cannot dispute the validity of them when produced; for the ordinary is not to take the account, he can only give a judgment quod computent. (Wainwright v. Bagshaw, 2 Stra. 974.)

Allowance of the account.

The allowance of the account may be by entering it in the church book of accounts, and having it signed by those in the vestry who allow the accounts. (Barl. 105.)

Account allowed final.

When they have faithfully accounted, and their account is allowed by the minister and major part of the parishioners present, it shall not afterwards be in the power of any to make them account again; unless some fraud in their accounts be afterwards discovered. (1 Wood's Inst. b 1, c. 7.)

Reimbursement of.

If their receipts fall short of their disbursements, the succeeding churchwardens may pay them the balance, and place it to their account. (1 Roll. Abr. 121; Can. 89, 109, &c.) And the Court of Chancery will, on application, make an order for the purpose. (2 Eq. Abr. 203; Prec. Ch. 43; but see 4 Vin. 529, 8vo.)

In general, however, preceding churchwardens cannot be reimbursed a rate. (Ante, 648.) If the churchwardens and parishioners make an assessment, and the churchwardens lay out the whole money, and before the whole is collected their time is expired and new churchwardens are chosen, the former churchwardens, by having presented such parishioners as refused to pay before the determination of their time, may still proceed against them, otherwise the new churchwardens must collect such arrears and reimburse their predecessors. (Bac. Ac. tit. Churchwardens, E. 79.)

BRARY.

8. Their Accounts.

How compelled to account, &c.

If they refuse to account, they may be presented at the next visitation by the new churchwardens; or any of the parish that are interested may, by process, call them to account before the ordinary; or the succeeding churchwardens may have a writ of account at common law. (1 Roll. Abr. 121.) But after they have passed their accounts at the vestry the Ecclesiastical Court cannot proceed against them to account upon oath. (Snowden v. Herring, Bunb. 289.)

Churchwardens de facto may maintain an action against a former churchwarden for money received by him for the use of the parish, though the validity of the election of the plaintiffs to the office be doubtful, and though they be not the immediate successors of the defendant; for the defendant, who was a wrong-doer in withholding the money, shall not be permitted to deny their right to bring the action, and churchwardens being a corporation for the purpose of taking care of the goods of the church, the right to sue for money withholden from the parish passed from one set to the other; it being perfectly immaterial whether the immediate or any other successors of the defendant brought an action which was not founded in privity between them. (Turner v. Barnes, 2 H. Bla. 559.)

And where in the parish of B. consisting of the township of B. and several hamlets, two churchwardens were appointed by the township and two by the rest of the parish, who made separate rates for their own divisions respectively; it was held, that the acting churchwardens for the township might maintain assumpsit against their predecessors for a balance remaining in their hands, without joining the other churchwardens as plaintiffs or defendants, and without proving that their appointment was strictly legal. (Astle v. Thomas, 2 B. & Cres. 271; 3 D. & R. 492, S. C.)

By 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 11, in all actions to be brought in the courts at Westminster or at the assizes for money misspent by churchwardens, the evidence of the parishioners, other than such as receive alms, shall be taken and admitted. (See the act, infra.)

Ordinary not to take account, but only to give judgment that churchwarden do account.

In the case of Leman v. Goulty and another, 3 T. R. 3, it was determined, that although the Spiritual Court may compel the churchwardens to deliver in their accounts, they cannot decide on the propriety of the charges made therein: and when they had delivered in their accounts, they had done every thing which that Court had the power of enforcing, and there was an end of their jurisdiction, it was functus officio; and if they take any steps afterwards, it is an excess of jurisdiction, for which a prohibition will be granted even after sentence. (And see Wainwright v. Bagshaw, 2 Stra. 974; Adams v. Rush, id. 1133.)

IX. Their Punishment for Misbehaviour, &c.

Misbehaviour of, &c.

If churchwardens misbehave themselves, it seems the parishioners may remove them. (13 Co. 70; Com. Dig. Eglise, f. l.)

For breach of duty they may be sued in the Ecclesiastical Court, as if they take the bells out of the church. (Welcome v. Lake, 1 Sid. 281.)

Committing waste.

If they neglect their duty by wasting the goods of the church, the new churchwardens may call them to an account before the bishop, or bring their action at common law. (Read's Church Service.)

At a vestry meeting, called by notice signed by the churchwardens, for the purpose of making a church rate for the repair of the church, a resolution was moved and seconded: "That this vestry, considering church rates at all times bad in principle and particularly unjust in practice, and quite uncalled for at the present time, resolved to adjourn all further consideration of the subject for which it has been called till this day twelve months;" which resolution was carried: It was held, that one of the churchwardens, in having voted in favour of the resolution and against the rate proposed of twopence in the pound, was not guilty of any ecclesiastical offence, it not being averred that, in consequence of the refusal of the rate, the church was still out of repair. (Cooper v. Wickham, 2 Curt. 303.)

9. Punishment for Misbehaviour, &c.

Parishioners made witnesses against them.

By the 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 11, s. 12, reciting, that many churchwardens and overseers, and other persons entrusted to receive collections for the poor, and other public monies relating to the churches and parishes whereunto they belong, do often misspend the same, to the prejudice of such parishes, and of the poor and other inhabitants thereof; and the parishioners, who are the only persons sometimes who can make proof thereof, have not been allowed to be witnesses against them; it is enacted, that in all actions to be brought in any court at Westminster, or at the assizes for the recovery thereof, the evidence of the parishioners, other than such as receive alms, shall be taken and admitted.

Not answerable for indiscretion.

But churchwardens are not answerable for indiscretion, but for deceit only, if they lay out more money than is needful. (1 Wood's Inst. b. 1. c. 7.)

Criminal proceedings against churchwardens for not repairing or keeping in proper order the parish church, and for neglecting and disobeying the lawful orders and directions of the archdeacon, the church being still out of repair, and the archdeacon having ordered the same to be repaired, cannot be sustained; there being no proof that the churchwardens had personally neglected their duty, or that they had wilfully disobeyed the order of the archdeacon.

In order to justify criminal proceedings against churchwardens for neglecting to repair their parish church, it must be shown that they have been guilty of a personal and wilful neglect. (Millar v. Palmer, 1 Curt. 553.)

Disobeying orders.

For their punishment for disobeying orders of justices when acting as overseers of the poor, or parish officers, see Penalty on Overseers for Neglect of their Duty, "Poor," Vol. IV.

Extortion.

An indictment lies against them for extortion and corruption in their office. (R. v. Eyres, 1 Sid. 307; see "Extortion," Vol. II.; "Office," Vol. V.)

Embezzlement.

As to embezzlement by, see "Larceny," Vol. III.

X. Their Indemnity and Protection of.

May plead the general issue.

By stats. 7 Jac. I. c. 5; 21 Jac. I. c. 12; if any action be brought against any churchwardens, or persons called sworn men, executing the office of churchwarden, for any thing done by virtue of their office, they may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence; and if a verdict is given for them, or the plaintiff shall be nonsuit, or discontinue, in every such case the judge before whom the said matter shall be tried shall allow to the defendant his double costs. But by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, s. 3, they are no longer entitled to such double costs, but only to a full indemnity against costs.

As to what cases were considered within this provision of the act, see Kerchaval's case, Cro. Car. 285; Atkins v. Banwell, 3 East, 92; Blanchard v. Bramble, 3 M. & Sel. 131; Harper v. Carr, 2 B. & C. 621; Norman v. Danger, 3 Y. & Jer. 203; and post, "Constable."

Where a churchwarden is sued for taking a distress for a poor rate under a warrant of magistrates, he is entitled to the protection given to magistrates and other officers by stat. 24 Geo. II. c. 41. (Harper v. Carr, 7 T. R. 270; Nutting v. Jackson, Bull. N. P. 24; and see cases, post, "Constable.")

And, therefore, if such an action be brought against him alone, without making the magistrates defendants also, he is entitled to a verdict on proving the warrant of the magistrates. (Id.)

XI. Sidesmen.

Sidesmen.

In large parishes there are officers called sidesmen (anciently synodsmen, otherwise called questmen), to assist the churchwardens in their inquiries and presentment of offenders. They shall be chosen yearly in Easter week by the minister and parishioners, if they can agree; if not, by the bishop. (Can. 90.)

Formerly they were sworn in like churchwardens, but now by the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 62, s. 9, a declaration is to be made in lieu of the oath, and no sidesman shall in future be compelled to take any oath on quitting office. See "Oaths," Vol. V. p. 261. 11. Sidesmen.

Clergymen.

It would not be within the object or compass of this work to notice all the laws particularly affecting clergymen, those only which concern the magistrate, parish officer, or crown lawyer, will be noticed; for the rest the reader is referred to Burn's Ecclesiastical Law by Phillimore, tit. Privileges and Restraints on the Clergy, Residence, Public Worship, &c.

Estate in church.

As to what estate he has in the church and churchyard, see ante, 624.

Dilapidations.

The incumbent is bound to keep the parsonage house and chancel in good and substantial repair, restoring and rebuilding when necessary, according to the original form, without addition or modern improvement: but he is not bound to supply or maintain any thing in the nature of ornament, such as painting, (unless that be necessary to preserve exposed timber from decay,) and white-washing and papering: and in an action for dilapidations against the executors of a deceased rector by the successor, the damages are to be calculated upon this principle. (Wise v. Metcalfe, 10 B. & Cres. 299; see 2 Bing. N. S. 627.)

An action for dilapidation will lie by one incumbent against another on an exchange of livings, though neither party at the time contemplated making any claim on that account, and therefore made no agreement on the subject. (Downes v. Craig, 9 M. & W. 166.)

Neglect to cultivate the glebe land in a husbandlike manner is not a dilapidation for which an incumbent is liable. (Bird v. Relph, 4 B. & Adol. 826; 1 Nev. & M. 415, S. C.)

If the present incumbent has repaired with timber which grew on the glebe, the executors of the late incumbent are entitled to be allowed for the value of such timber, out of the estimate of dilapidations due from them. (Percival v. Cooke, 2 Car. & P. 460.)

The 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, post, 680, consolidates and amends the laws relating to clergymen holding farms, and for enforcing residence on their benefices, and for the support of stipendiary curates in England.

It has been held that a demise by a parson of his benefice, made subsequent to the 57 Geo. III. c. 99, for securing an annuity, is void, it being in substance a charging of the benefice, within the meaning of the 13 Eliz. c. 20, which, as far as it relates to chargings of benefices, is now in force, having been revived by the 57 Geo. III. c. 99. (Shaw v. Pritchard and others, 10 B. & Cres. 241; and see Flight v. Salter, 1 B. & Adol. 673; Moore v. Ramsden, 7 Ad. & Ell. 898; 3 N. & M. 180, S. C.; Kirlew v. Butts, 2 B. & Ad. 736; Britton v. Wait, 3 id. 915; Saltmarsh v. Hewitt, 1 Ad. & Ell. 812; Alchin v. Hopkins, 1 Bingh. N. C. 99.) Charging benefices.

A clergyman might be suspended ab officio et beneficio for non-residence. (2 Lee's Ec. Ca. 567.)

The curate's stipend is now regulated by the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, ss. 83—92. Where differences arise between a rector and his curate respecting the latter's stipend, appointed to him under the provisions of this act, the bishop alone has jurisdiction to decide it (s. 83), and if the curate brings an action for his stipend against his rector, the provisions of that statute, ss. 83 and 109 of the act, are pleadable in bar of such action. (West v. Turner, 3 Ad. & Ell. 614.) Curate's stipend.

By the stamp act, 55 Geo. III. c. 184, sch. 1, "all bonds, contracts, mortgages, conveyances, deeds, and instruments whatever, exempted from stamp duty by the act of the 17th year of his majesty's reign, c. 53, or any other act or acts of parliament now in force for promoting the residence of the parochial clergy, by making provision for building, repairing, or purchasing houses and other buildings for the use of their benefices," are exempted from stamp duty. And see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 72, as to repeal of stamp duties on donations and presentations. Stamp duties.

Clergymen are in general liable to all public charges imposed by act of parliament, when they are not expressly excepted. (See 1 Hawk. c. 76, s. 15; and see "Highways," Vol. III.) Liability to public charges.

By stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, clergymen are liable to the poor rates for their glebe and tithe. (See "Poor," Vol. IV.) Liable to the poor.

As to their exemption from the tax duty on horses, see title "Taxes," Vol. VI. pp. 145, 148. Exemption from tax on horses.

It seems that clergymen are compellable to take parish apprentices, or at least are chargeable towards putting them out, ante, p. 222. Apprentices.

To the intent that clergymen may the better discharge their duty in celebration of divine service, and not be entangled with temporal business, if any of them be chosen to any temporal office, as bailiff, constable, &c. he may have his writ to be discharged. (1 Inst. 96.) Need not serve in temporal offices,

Nor can they be compelled to serve as sheriff, or overseer of the poor. (Degge, 120.)

Ecclesiastical persons have this privilege, that they ought not in person to serve in war. (2 Inst. 4.) nor in war,

They are not bound to appear at the torn, or view of frankpledge. 52 Hen. III. c. 10; 9 Edw. II. c. 3. (Id.) nor appear at the torn,

They are exempted from serving as jurors. (6 Geo. IV. c. 50, s. 2, "Jurors," Vol. III.) nor be jurors,

By 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 28, clergymen and dissenting ministers cannot be electors, councillors, or aldermen of any borough. nor members, &c. of municipal corporations.

By 41 Geo. III. c. 73, they cannot be members of parliament. nor members of parliament.

We have seen that by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 23, it is a misdemeanor to arrest a clergyman on civil process while performing, or about to perform, or returning from performing divine service, ante, 658. Privilege from arrest.

As to the privilege of clergymen in not answering confidential communications, see "Evidence," Vol. II. p. 427. Privilege in not answering questions.

Beating clerks in orders was punishable under the Articuli Cleri, 9 Edw. II. st. 1, c. 3, but so much of that "as relates to laying violent hands on a clerk," is now repealed by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31. But a person laying violent hands Assaulting.

on a clergyman, may, it seems, be punished in the ecclesiastical courts under the 13 Edw. I. st. 4.

Felonies by.

The 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 26, repeals so much of the 25 Edw. II. c. 6, (vulgo, st. 8,) as relates to clerks convicted of treasons or felonies, and to the arraignment of clerks; and by 6 Geo. IV. c. 25, s. 3, it is enacted, "that clerks in holy orders being convicted of felony, shall stand and be under the same pains and dangers for the same, and shall be used and ordered to all intents and purposes, as other persons not being in holy orders.

Jurisdiction of church.

By the 15 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 6, clergymen shall not answer before his majesty's justices for things done touching the jurisdiction of the church; and by 18 Edw. III. st. 3, c. 6, temporal justices shall not inquire of process awarded by the ecclesiastical jurisdiction, as on wills, &c.

Incontinency.

By the 1 Hen. VII. c. 4, the incontinency of a clergyman may be punished with imprisonment by the ordinary. By the 27 Geo. III. c. 44, s. 2, the suit must be commenced within eight months (see Free v. Burgoyne, 5 B. & Ald. 400.) Upon the proof against him of repeated and habitual acts of incontinency, coupled with neglect of duty and other conduct affording just scandal and offence to his parishioners, the ecclesiastical court is bound to proceed to deprivation. (Burgoyne v. Free, 2 Hagg. R. 456.)

Immoral conduct.

So clergymen may be punished by admonition, suspension, degradation, or deprivation (Sanders v. Danson, 1 Add. 299), for any loose or immoral conduct. (6 Rep. 136; Rowland v. Jones, 2 Lee, 191, 565; 2 Hagg. 264; 1 N. & P. 62.)

Irregularity in preaching, &c., and other neglect of duty.

So clergymen are punishable for any irregularity in the discharge of duty, and preaching doctrines contrary to the articles. (Bishop v. Stow, 1 Hagg. 424; Argar v. Holdsworth, 2 Lee, E. C. 515.)

The Court is bound to admit articles by a churchwarden against an incumbent, for frequent irregularities in the performance of divine service and of parochial duties, and also for his violating the church-yard; nor (the suit being commenced in April, 1828, and the alleged offences being laid from September, 1824, till January, 1827,) is the lapse of time any bar. (Bennett v. Bonaker, clerk, 2 Hagg. R. 25.)

It seems doubtful whether an action can now be maintained against a clergyman for refusing to solemnize a marriage between two persons in pursuance of a license directed to him. (Davis v. Black, 1 Gale & D. 432.) See also "Marriage," Vol. V.

As to his duties in respect of burials see ante, 628.

To constitute in a clergyman criminal neglect of duty, requiring censure and correction, there must be neglect without just cause; but unless such cause be shown, the law will infer its absence. (Bennett v. Bonaker, 3 Hagg. R. 39.)

The incumbent has a right, without license, to perform divine service in any consecrated building within the parish. Semble, therefore a license to the rector from the ordinary to perform divine service in a chapel tends to show that the chapel was not consecrated (Moysey v. Hillcoat, 2 Hagg. R. 46.)

Fees.

Primâ facie, all parochial duties are committed to, and imposed upon the parish incumbent, and all fees and emoluments arising therefrom belong to him, and such rights can only be granted to a chapel or its officiating minister by composition with the patron, incumbent, and ordinary; quære, whether or not also with a compensation to future incumbents. (Id. 48.) As to his fees on burials, see ante, 628.

Prohibited from farming.

The 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 28, enacts, that no spiritual person licensed to perform the duties of any ecclesiastical office whatever shall take to farm for occupation by himself any lands exceeding eighty acres in the whole, for the purpose of cultivation, without permission in writing by the bishop, specially given for that purpose under his hand, every permission to specify the number of years, not exceeding seven. And every spiritual person so offending is to forfeit forty shillings an acre for each year of such occupation and cultivation.

Trading.

By sect. 29 no spiritual person as above is to trade or deal for gain or profit in any goods, &c., unless such trading or dealing shall be carried on by more than six partners, or unless such trading or dealing shall have devolved on him by devise, bequest, inheritance, settlement, marriage, bankruptcy, or insolvency, but in no case is he to act as director or managing partner, or to carry on such trade in person. Trading.

The previous statute, the 57 Geo. III. c. 99, and which is repealed by the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, was held to exclude a clergyman from being a shareholder in a joint stock banking company, (Hall v. Franklin, 3 M. & W. 259), and to remedy this decision the above clause was passed.

Sect. 30 contains certain exceptions in the cases of spiritual persons engaged in education, or in cases of articles bonâ fide bought to be consumed in the family, though in part sold at an advanced price, or in cases of books sold by means of a bookseller or publisher, or being director, partner, or shareholder in any benefit, or fire, or life assurance society, or buying and selling articles necessary for his glebe or demesne lands, or selling the produce of his mines. But no spiritual person is to buy or sell in any market, fair, or place of public sale. Exceptions there from.

By sect. 31 spiritual persons trading or dealing contrary to the act may be cited by the bishop before a competent judge, and the penalty is, for the first offence, suspension for a period not exceeding one year; for the second offence—suspension for such period as the judge shall think fit; and for the third offence—deprivation. Penalty and punishment for.

For other matters as to, see "Church," "Churchwardens," "Common Prayer."

Clergy, Benefit of.

THE benefit of clergy is now abolished by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 6, and by the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 22, as to peers. Some account of its origin and effect may, however, as well be noticed.

Origin of.]—Anciently princes and states, converted to Christianity, in favour of the clergy, and for their encouragement in their offices and employments, and that they might not be so much entangled in suits, did grant to the clergy very bountiful privileges and exemptions; and particularly an exemption of their persons from criminal proceedings, in some capital cases, before secular judges, which was the true original of the benefit of clergy. (2 Hale, 323.) Origin of.

The clergy increasing in wealth, power, honour, number and interest, afterwards set up for themselves, and that which they obtained by the favour of princes and states at first, they now began to claim as a right, and a right of the highest nature, namely, by the law of God; and by their canons and constitutions endeavoured, and in some places obtained, vast extensions of these exemptions, both with regard to the persons concerned, to wit, not only to persons in holy orders, but also to all that had any kind of subordinate ministration relative to the church; and likewise in respect of the causes, exempting as far as they could all causes of clergymen, as well civil as criminal, from the jurisdiction of the secular power, and wholly subordinating them immediately and only to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction, which they supposed to be lodged first in the pope by divine right and investiture from Christ, and from the pope shed abroad into all subordinate and ecclesiastical jurisdiction. (2 Hale, 324.)

And by this means they endeavoured, and in some kingdoms and for some ages obtained, that there was a double supreme power in every kingdom; the one ecclesiastical, absolute and independent upon any but the pope, over ecclesiastical men and causes; and the other secular, of the king or civil magistrate.

But this claim of exemption, although it obtained much in this kingdom, yet grew so burdensome that it was from time to time qualified and abridged

by the civil power, sometimes by acts of parliament taking it away in some cases, sometimes by the interpretation and construction of the judges, and sometimes by the contrary usage of the kingdom; for ecclesiastical canons never bound in England farther than they were received, and so had not their authority from their own strength and obligation, but from the usages and customs of the kingdom that admitted them, and only so far forth as they were so admitted. (2 Hale, 325)

And therefore if they were indicted in cases criminal, but not capital, nor wherein they were to lose life or limb, there the privilege of clergy was not allowed; and therefore not in indictments of trespass or petit larceny. (2 Hale, 325).

Also it was not allowed them in high treason.

But at the common law, in all cases of felony or petit treason, clergy was allowable, excepting two, lying in wait, and burning of houses, which were looked upon as hostile acts, and the authors of them therefore not entitled to the common privileges of subjects. (2 Hale, 330.)

Who might demand it.

Who might demand it.]—By a favourable interpretation of the statutes relating to the benefit of clergy, not only those actually admitted into some inferior order of the clergy, but also those who were never qualified to be admitted into orders, (which was formerly tried by putting them to read a verse,) were taken to have a right to this privilege as much as persons in holy orders. (2 Hawk. c. 33, s. 5.)

But by the common law a woman could not have the benefit of clergy; but by the statute of 3 Will. III. c. 9, a woman convicted or outlawed for any felony for which a man might have his clergy, shall, upon praying the benefit of that statute, be subject only to such punishment as a man would be in the like case.

Lord Hale says, a person convicted of heresy, a Jew, or a Turk, should not have their clergy; but a person excommunicate should have his clergy. (2 Hale, 373.)

But by stat. 5 Anne, c. 6, which abolished the ceremony of reading, the wall of partition (as Sir Michael Foster expresses it) between subject and subject, under one and the same degree of guilt, was taken away; and from this period the measure of punishment was governed by the degrees of real guilt, and not by the function or abilities of the offender. (Fost.)

By stat. 4 Hen. VII. c. 13, every person (not being within orders) who had once been admitted to his clergy, should not be admitted to the same a second time.

And by the same statute, if he was convicted of murder, he should be marked, (unless he was a peer, 2 Hale, 376,) with an M on the brawn of the left thumb; and if for any other felony with a T.

But he should not be ousted of his clergy, by the bare mark in his hand, or by a parol averment, without the record testifying it, or a transcript thereof, (according to the following statutes.) (2 Hale, 373.)

In what case demandable.

In what cases it might be demanded.]—By stat. 25 Edw. III. st. 3, c. 4, all manner of clerks who were convicted before the secular judges for any treasons or felonies, touching other persons than the king himself, might have the privilege of the holy church.

Clergy was never allowed in this nation in cases of high treason, nor was it allowed on indictments of petit larceny or trespass; but by the above recited act clergy was allowed in all treasons, and felonies, except treason against the king; so that after this statute the benefit of clergy might be pleaded and allowed in all other treasons and felonies. (Hale's Sum. 230; 2 Hale, 326).

Consequently wherever clergy was not allowable in any other cases, it was taken away by some subsequent act of parliament. (Hale's Sum. 230.)

Also where a new felony was made by an act of parliament, clergy was to be allowed, unless expressly taken away by such statute. (Id.)

And if it be made a new felony, and took away clergy, not generally, but in such or such cases, regularly in other cases clergy was allowable. (2 Hale, 335.)

But if the statute enacted generally that it should be felony without benefit of clergy, or that he should suffer as in case of felony, without benefit of clergy, that excluded it in all circumstances and to all intents. (2 Hale, 335.)

And where an act took away clergy from the principal, and said nothing of the accessary, the accessaries, as well before as after, might have their clergy, (11 Rep. 37; Fost. 355); neither doth a statute excluding the accessaries thereby exclude the principals.

Benefit of clergy abolished.

Now abolished.]—By the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 6, it is enacted, "that benefit of clergy with respect to persons convicted of felony shall be abolished; but that nothing herein contained shall prevent the joinder in any indictment of any counts which might have been joined before the passing of this act."

The benefit of clergy had the same effect in restoring a party to his competency as a statute pardon; and the benefit of clergy being abolished, it was at least doubtful whether a person convicted of felony was a competent witness, although he had undergone the punishment. But this is now remedied by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 32, s. 3, by which the punishment for felony, after it is endured, has the effect of a pardon under great seal.

By the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 7, felonies without benefit of clergy, and sect. 8, felonies within benefit of clergy, are provided for under all circumstances consequent on the indictment. (See the provisions, "Felony," Vol. II.)

Clerk of the Parish.

THE most part of the following laws and observations will be found in Mr. Steer's valuable and well digested work on Parish Law, lately edited by Mr. Clive.

Origin of office.

Parish clerks were heretofore chosen from among the poorer candidates for the clerical office, of whom every minister had at least one to assist under him in the celebration of divine offices. For his better maintenance the profits of the office of aquæbajalus (an assistant in carrying the holy water) were annexed to the office of parish clerk; so that in after times aquæbajalus was only another name for the clerk officiating under the chief minister. (Lind. 142.)

His qualifications.

By canon 91, it is required that the said clerk shall be twenty years of age at least; known to the minister to be of honest conversation, and sufficient for his reading, writing, and also for his competent skill in singing, if it may be.

By whom chosen.

The nomination of clerks, it is said, was at one time vested in all incumbents by the common law and custom of the realm. (Gibs. 214.) But differences having arisen between ministers and their parishioners about the conferring of such offices, Archbishop Boniface decreed that the same rectors and vicars, whom it more particularly concerned to know who were fit, should make the choice. (Steer, P. L. 96.)

Chosen by minister.

By canon 91 no parish clerk, upon any vacation, shall be chosen within the city of London or elsewhere, but by the parson or vicar, or, where there is no parson or vicar, by the minister of that place for the time being; which choice shall be signified by the said minister, vicar, or parson, to the parishioners the next Sunday following in the time of divine service. (Steer, P. L. 97.)

Where the rector may nominate with the consent of the vestry, parties wishing to object should do so at the nomination. (R. v St. Anne's (Rector of) 3 Burr. 1877.)

Where certain governors unà cum assensu of the inhabitants were to nominate and appoint a chaplain, it was held that a nomination by the governors with a subsequent reference to the inhabitants for their assent was sufficient. (R. v. Davie, 6 Ad. & Ell. 374.)

Verbal appointment by rector sufficient.

A pauper was appointed parish clerk, by the rector of the parish, in the following manner:—The rector sent for the pauper on a Sunday, and requested him to perform duty on that day; and, on coming out of the desk, the rector said to the pauper, "I shall appoint you my regular clerk and sexton, and to follow me in funerals and marriages:" and this was held a proper appointment as parish clerk, without making any notification thereof to the parishioners. (R. v. Bobbing (Inhab.) 1 Nev. & Per. 166; 5 Ad. & Ell 682.)

Election by custom.

Since the making of the above 91st canon the right hath often been contested between incumbent and parishioners; and wherever it has appeared to be in the latter by custom, a prohibition has issued to the Ecclesiastical Court, in order that the question might be determined at the common law. (Id.)

Custom preferred to canon.

The parish of St. Alphage, in Canterbury, prescribed to have the election of their parish clerk; and by the canon the election of the clerk was given to the vicar. It was adjudged, however, that the prescription should be preferred before the canon, because the party chosen is a mere temporal man, and the custom is merely temporal, so as the official cannot deprive him, but upon occasion the parishioners might displace him. (13 Co. 70; Hughes, 275.) So in Jermyn's case, where the rector and clerk sued in the Spiritual Court, to have the said clerk established, having been nominated accordding to the canon, but disturbed by the parishioners, and the churchwardens and parishioners prayed a prohibition upon the surmise of a custom for the vestry to elect: after divers motions a prohibition was granted; for they held that it was a good custom, and that the canon cannot take it away. (Cro. Jac. 670; Townsend v. Thorpe, 2 Raym. 1507.) So, though he is in without deed (Inter the Parishes of Gatton and Milwich, 2 Salk. 536.)

An union of parishes.

Two parishes having been united, in which, before the union, the parish clerk was appointed by the parishioners and the rector: it was held, that after the union, an appointment by the rector alone was invalid. (Hartley v. Cook, 9 Bing. 728; 3 M. & Scott, 230; 5 C. & P. 411, S. C.)

Before the union of parishes, effected by the statute 22 Car. II. c. 11, there was a custom in the parish of St. M. P. for the parishioners to join with the rector in the election of a parish clerk. By that act the parish of St. M. C. was united to that of St. M. P., the church of the latter parish remaining: Held, that the right of election after the union continued in the inhabitants jointly with the rector, and that an appointment by the rector alone, without the concurrence of the majority of such parishioners, was void; and, consequently, that a person so appointed could not maintain trespass against the churchwardens, &c. for forcibly expelling him from the reading desk of the parish clerk. (Id.)

It was made a question, but not decided in that case, whether the election should be made by the rector and the inhabitants of both parishes in joint vestry assembled, or by the rector with the inhabitants of St. M. P. alone; and whether the rector should be present at the time of the election to make the appointment valid.

Mandamus to appoint.

A mandamus lies to the incumbent to appoint a parish clerk. (R. v. St. Ann's, Soho, 3 Burr. 1877.)

How admitted.

Parish clerks, after having been duly appointed, are usually licensed by the ordinary. (Johns, 204.) And sworn to obey the minister. (Johns, 205.) And if a parish clerk hath been used immemorially to be chosen by the vestry, and admitted and sworn before the archdeacon, and he refuse to swear him, but admitteth another chosen by the parson, a mandamus lies to the archdeacon, commanding him to swear him. (2 Rol. Ab. 234; Vin. Ab. Mandamus (H.); Bac. Ab. Mandamus (C.))

A temporal officer.

The office of parish clerk is a temporal office. (R. v. Warren, Cowp. 370; Tarrant v. Harby, 1 Burr. 367; Peake v. Bourne, 2 Stra. 942; semble, overruling.)

May appoint a deputy.

He may appoint a deputy, who need not be licensed by the ordinary. (Peake v. Bourne, 2 Stra. 942; 2 Lee, Ec. Ca. 587.)

A freehold office.

The common law regards parish clerks as belonging to the class of persons who have freeholds in their offices; and, therefore, though they may be punished, yet they cannot be deprived by ecclesiastical censures. (2 Rol. Ab. 234; Reg. v. Stogursey, 1 B. & Ad. 795.) The freehold is for life, or, which is the same thing in legal contemplation, during their good behaviour. In R. v. Warren, Cowp. 370, it was stated that the clerk was appointed by the minister; that he had since become bankrupt, and had not obtained a certificate; that he had been guilty of many omissions in his office; was actually in prison at the time of his amoval, and had appointed a deputy, who was totally unfit for the office. Yet after stating an adjournment of the case, the report adds, and now on this day, upon reading the affidavits, Lord Mansfield said it was settled in the case of K. and Dr. Ashton, 28 Geo. II., that a parish clerk is a temporal officer, and that the minister must show good ground for turning him out. Now in this case there is no sufficient reason assigned in the affidavits that have been read upon which the Court can exercise their judgment, nor is there an instance produced of any misbehaviour of consequence, therefore the rule for a mandamus to restore him must be made absolute.

Dismissal of.

For bad behaviour in his office the clerk may be dismissed by the minister. But before dismissing him he should summon him to answer the charges made against him, however gross those charges may be. (Ex parte Cirketh, 3 Dowl. 327; R. v. Gaskin, 8 T. R. 209; and The Queen on the prosecution of Harris v. Smith, Clerk, Qu. Bench, Feb. 8th, 1844.)

Disturbing congregation after.

A parish clerk having been dismissed from his office by the rector, though irregularly, and another appointed, the former entered the church before divine service had commenced, and took possession of the clerk's seat: it was held, that the churchwardens were justified in removing him from the clerk's desk, and also out of the church, if they had reasonable grounds for believing that he would offer interruption during the celebration of divine service. (Burton v. Henson, 10 Mee. & W. 105.)

Mandamus to restore.

A mandamus lies to the incumbent to replace a parish clerk improperly removed. The affidavit for it should state that such clerk was appointed for life, though it is not perhaps absolutely requisite. (Anon. 2 Chit. Rep. 254; R. v. Warren, Cowp. 370.)

The Court will not judge of the justice of the cause of removal upon ex parte statement of the incumbent. He must state it in his return to the mandamus, and give the clerk an opportunity of answering it. (R. v. Davies, 9 D. & Ry. 231; R. v. Neale, 4 N. & M. 868.)

The mandamus to restore must be directed to the incumbent and not to the churchwardens. (Exp. Cirkett, 3 Dowl. 327.)

A mandamus does not lie to restore one to the office of deputy parish clerk. (Anon. Loffl, 134.)

Prohibition.

A prohibition to the Spiritual Court to stay proceedings for restoring a parish clerk was granted. (Turrant v. Haxby, 1 Burr. 367.) For the law will not suffer the Ecclesiastical Court to deprive him, but only to correct him for any misdemeanor by ecclesiastical censure. (3 Roll. Ab. 234; Gibs 214.)

Remuneration.

It seems that parish clerks cannot claim any thing by way of a certain allowance or endowment by reason of their office of aquæbajalus. But their sustentation ought to be collected and levied according to the manner and custom of the country. And hereunto the parishioners may be compelled by the bishop. (Lindw. 143.)

A custom of this kind is good and laudable, that every master of a family (for instance) on every Lord's day give to the clerk somewhat according to the exigency of his condition; and that on Christmas-day he have of every house one loaf of bread, and a certain number of eggs at Easter, and in the autumn certain sheaves. Also that may be called a laudable custom where such clerk every quarter of the year receiveth something in way of money for his sustenance, which ought to be collected and levied in the whole parish. (Lind. 143; Gibs. 214.) But if he sue for these things in the Spiritual Court a prohibition lieth. (2 Roll. Ab. 286.)

An apparator cannot sue in the Spiritual Court for his fees. (Pearson v. Campion, 2 Dougl. 629.)

Clerk's rate.

In some instances a custom to levy so much money every year for his recompence is set up; and though by canon 91 it is ordained that he shall have his ancient wages, and sue for them in the Ecclesiastical Court, yet Holt, C. J. said, a clerk of a parish is neither a spiritual person, nor is this duty in demand spiritual; for it is founded on a custom, and by consequence triable at law; and therefore the clerk may have an action on the case against the churchwardens for neglecting to make a rate and levy it, or if it had been levied, and not paid by them to the plaintiff. (Parker v. Clarke, 6 Mod. 252; 3 Salk. 87.) So in Pitts v. Evans, a prohibition was granted to a suit by the clerk of St. Magnus for 1*s.* 4*d.* assessed on the defendant's house, at a vestry in 1672, to be paid to the parish clerk; for if such rate is due by custom, he may maintain an assumpsit, if not a quantum meruit or a bill in equity. (Strange, 1108; 13 Vin. Ab. 155.)

In new churches.

The recent acts for building new churches, and making new ecclesiastical districts, provides that the clerks to such churches and chapels shall be annually appointed by the minister thereof. 59 Geo. III. c. 134, s. 29; 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 38. There is no provision of this kind relating to the churches built under the 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 38, or the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 107.

Divided parishes.

And the 10th section of the same statute enacts, that when any parish shall be divided, &c., all fees and emoluments of the clerk and sexton afterwards arising in any division shall belong to the clerk and sexton of the division to which they shall be assigned.

Incorporated in London, &c.

By a charter of Hen. III. the parish clerks in and about London were incorporated and authorised to make by-laws and ordinances for their own regulation; and by the 10 Anne, for the building of fifty new churches within the bills of mortality, it is enacted, "that the parish clerks of such new erected churches shall be members of the company or corporation of the clerks of the parish churches within the city and suburbs and liberties of London, Westminster and Southwark, and the fifteen out parishes named in the letters-patent of the said corporation, and shall make weekly and yearly accounts of the churchings and burials happening in their parishes, and shall in all respects be subject to the rules and orders of the said company."

Falsifying, &c. registers.

The 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 66, s. 20, 21, 22, provides against the offence of forging, falsifying or destroying parish register. (See "Register," Vol. V.)

Embezzling alms.

The parish clerk is in some places employed upon the occasion of administering the Lord's Supper to collect the alms from the communicants, and the purloining or embezzling any portion of the money so received is doubtless punishable as a crime, though it seems from the following case that he cannot be considered as a servant to, nor the money so taken as the property of the minister and churchwardens, or either of them. But these objections would have less force against an indictment at common law, and the offence may be so charged as to ensure conviction and punishment where the facts are fully established. (R. v. Burton, 1 Moo. C. C. 237.)

Gains a settlement.

Serving the office of parish clerk for a year gains a settlement, although he be chosen by the parson and not the parishioners, and have no license from the ordinary, and although he be a certificate man. (1 Salk. 536; Peak v. Bourne, 2 Stra. 942; 2 Ses. Cas. 182.)

The office of parish clerk being vacant, the pauper began and continued for eleven years to perform the duties, for which he received a yearly salary from the parish. It did not appear how he came into the office. The appointment was in the vicar. It was held, that as the pauper was not even colourably appointed or chosen, he did not by his service as clerk execute an office within the parish so as to gain a settlement under the 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 11, s. 6. In the same case it was made a question, but not decided, whether the place of parish clerk be a public annual office or charge within that statute. (R. v. Stogursey, 1 B. & Adol. 795.)

Clerk of the Peace.

Who shall appoint and who appointed.

THE custos rotulorum shall appoint an able and sufficient person, residing in the county or division, to execute the office of clerk of the peace, by himself or his sufficient deputy (to be allowed of by the said custos rotulorum), 37 Hen. VIII. c. 1; and to take and receive the fees, profits, and perquisites thereof, for so long time only as such clerk of the peace shall well demean himself in his said office; 1 Will. III. sess. 1, c. 21, s. 5. And in the recent case of Harding v. Pollock (6 Bing. 25), it was fully settled, on error from the Exchequer Chamber in Ireland, that the appointment to the office of clerk of the peace is in the custos rotulorum of each county. See Crosbie v. Hurley, 1 Alcock & N. 431, (Irish Reports); 1 Dow & Clark, 453; 3 Bligh, N. S. 161, S. C. Bayley, J., diss.

Town clerk.

In cities or towns corporate there is usually an analogous officer who performs correspondent duties under some other title, as "town clerk," and who is generally appointed, not by the custos rotulorum, but by the body corporate, of which he is an officer. (Dick. Sess. by Talf. 52; and see The Municipal Corporation Act, post, title "Corporation," Vol. II.)

Duration of office.

The office of the clerk of the peace continues "for so long time as he shall well demean himself therein," and therefore he has an estate of freehold for life in the office, on condition of behaving well, and therefore he cannot be dispossessed, except for misbehaviour, by a competent tribunal; nor does his estate determine by the death or removal of the custos. (Harcourt v. Fox, 4 Mod. 167, 173; 1 Show. 426, S. C.; R. v. Owen, 4 Mod. 293.)

He can be appointed for no other term than "for so long time as he shall well demean himself in his office," and therefore an appointment during pleasure is void, and a party so appointed not a clerk of the peace.

May be displaced for misbehaviour.

By sect. 6 of the 1 Will. III. sess. 1, c. 21, if he shall misdemean himself in his office, and a complaint and charge in writing of such misdemeanor shall be exhibited against him to the justices in sessions, the said justices may, on examination and due proof thereof openly in the said sessions, suspend or discharge him from the said office; and in such case, the custos rotulorum shall appoint another able and sufficient person, residing in the said county or division, to be clerk of the peace. And in case of refusal or neglect to make such appointment, before the next general quarter sessions, the justices in sessions may appoint one.

Extortion is one of the offences for which this power of the sessions may be put in force. (Mod. Ca. 192.)

The order of sessions removing a party so charged with misconduct need not set forth the evidence on which it is founded. (R. v. Lloyd, 2 Stra. 996.)

Office not to be sold.

By sect. 8 of the 1 Will. III. sess. 1, c. 21, the custos rotulorum shall not sell the place of the clerk of the peace, or take any bond or other assurance to receive any reward, fee, or profit, directly or indirectly, to him or to any other person for such appointment; on pain that such custos rotulorum selling, and such clerk of the peace buying, shall be disabled to hold their respective places, and shall each forfeit double the value of the thing given to him who shall sue.

Oath.

By sect. 9, every clerk of the peace, before entering upon the execution of his office, shall, in open sessions, take the oath following:—

I, A. B. do swear, that I have not nor will pay any sum or sums of money, or other reward whatsoever, nor given any bond or other assurance to pay any money, fee, or profit, directly or indirectly, to any person or persons whomsoever, for such nomination and appointment. So help me God.

Qualifying.

He shall moreover take the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration, and perform the same requisites as other persons who qualify for offices.

May act as solicitor.

By stat. 22 Geo. II. c. 46, s. 14, a clerk of the peace, or his deputy, was prohibited from acting as an attorney, but this is repealed by the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73.

Duties of, at sessions.

Duties of.]—The clerk of the peace, by himself or his sufficient deputy, must be in constant attendance on the court of quarter sessions. He gives notice of its being holden or adjourned; issues its processes; records its proceedings; and does all the ministerial acts necessary to give effect to its decisions. (Dick. Sess. 52, 53.)

In the actual course of the sessions, it is his duty to read the acts directed to be read in sessions; to call the jurors, and make known their defaults and excuses to the court; to call the parties under recognizance, whether to prosecute, plead, or give evidence; to administer oaths; to present the bills to and receive them from the grand jury; to arraign prisoners; to receive and record verdicts; to tax costs, (Ex parte Holloway, 1 Dowl. 26); and make true entries of and record all proceedings. (Dick. Sess. 53.)

In preparing indictments.

It is his duty, when prosecutors do not choose to seek professional assistance elsewhere, to draw the bills of indictment for felony, at a fee of only 2*s.* each; and if an indictment so prepared be found defective, he is bound to provide another gratis, on pain of forfeiting 5*l.* to any one who will sue; 10 & 11 Will. III. c. 23, s. 7, 8. He has also been said to be amerciable in the Court of Queen's Bench for gross errors in indictments framed by him, and brought before that court on certiorari (Lilly's Prac. Reg. 71). And though perhaps at the present day he would scarcely be held responsible for mere error, there is no doubt that if an indictment drawn by him were of immoderate and oppressive length, it might be referred to the master, and the clerk of the peace might be ordered to pay the costs of such parts of it as should be found manifestly superfluous. (R. v. May, 1 Dougl. 193, 194; R. v. Bury, 1 Leach, 201.) It seems, however, that the obligation to draw indictments at the statutable fee of 2*s.* is confined to cases of felony; and in case of misdemeanor, he may make reasonable charges to prosecutors requiring his assistance. (Dick. Sess. 53.)

Estreats, fines and recognizances.

As to his duty in respect to estreats, fines, and recognizances, see "Fines," &c. Vol. III. He is bound to put the law in motion to levy all recognizances forfeited at quarter sessions. (Reg. v. Yorkshire (West Riding) Justices, 2 Nev. & Per. 457.)

Return of persons tried.

The 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 25, repeals the 55 Geo. III. c. 49, relative to his making returns of persons committed, tried, and convicted for criminal offences and misdemeanors.

Sheriff's appointment.

As to his duty upon the appointment of sheriffs and under-sheriffs, see 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 99, s. 4, 5; "Sheriff," Vol. V.

Insolvents.

As to his duties under the Insolvent Act, see the act 7 Geo. IV. c. 57, s. 77, 78, &c. post, "Insolvent Debtors," Vol. III.

Juries.

As to his duties in summoning, &c. juries, see post, "Jurors," Vol. III.

Highways.

As to his duties in respect of highways, see "Highways," Vol. III.

Savings banks.

Friendly societies.

As to the enrolment of rules of friendly societies and savings banks, see ante, "Banks for Savings," "Friendly Societies," Vol. III.

Exchange of common lands.

As to his duties in respect of the exchange of lands lying in common lands, see post, "Commons."

As to the duties imposed on him by the 38 & 39 Geo. III. c. 79, relating to printers and the suppression of treasonable societies, see "Printers," Vol. V. Printers.

As to the transfer of balances in their hands on account of lunatic asylum licenses, see "Lunatics," Vol. III. Lunatics.

Various other duties will be found under different titles of this work.

Fees of.]—The clerk of the peace is not bound to enter judgment, or the like, at the suit of any, without having the fee due for the same; but if the court order any thing without suit of another, to wit, ex officio, there he ought to enter the same, without having any fee for the entering thereof. (Cromp. 159.) Fees of.

As to his fee for drawing an indictment, see ante, 688.

The sessions cannot compel payment of his fees by summary process, or detain parties till they be paid, but he must seek his remedy by action. (Pollard v. Gerrard, 1 Ld. Raym. 703.)

In 1819, the plaintiff, who was then under age, was appointed clerk of the peace for the county of Kerry by the custos rotulorum of the county, and acted by himself as well as by deputies till 1824; in that year the defendant as appointee of the crown obtained possession of the office under a mandamus, and continued to hold the possession and receive all the fees and emoluments till 1829, when the plaintiff was restored to his office; the plaintiff then brought an action of indebitatus assumpsit against defendant for the fees received by him whilst clerk de facto:—Held, that the action was maintainable as the mandamus did not decide the title, but merely enabled the defendant to try the right, and the right being now settled upon principles of law to be in the custos and not in the crown; secondly, that the letters patent of the custos under the 55 Geo. III. c. 78, need not be stamped; thirdly, that the fact of the plaintiff having for a considerable time acted as clerk of the peace was sufficient evidence of his admission to the office. (Crosbie v. Hurley, 1 Alcock & Napier, 431 (Irish).)

It would seem from that case that the defendant could not sustain a claim of set-off for his work and labour while clerk de facto. (Id.)

The sessions have no jurisdiction to make a prospective order for a compensation thereafter to be made to the clerk of the peace; and therefore where a county treasurer, in obedience to such order, made the payment, and that payment was afterwards, by an order of sessions, allowed in his accounts, the Court of Q. B. quashed so much of the order of sessions as allowed that item. (R. v. Williams, 3 B. & Ald. 215.) It was made a question in that case, whether, under the 55 Geo. III. c. 51, s. 16, the session had power to make any compensation to the clerk of the peace. Lunatic asylum licenses.

The sessions are not authorised to order the payment by the bridge-master to the clerk of the peace of a per-centage on all money raised for the repair of bridges in a particular district in lieu of all his fees for indictments, presentments, or for bridges within it, although such per-centage was claimed as an ancient fee, and had been paid without dispute for a long period of time. (Rex v. Houldgrave, 1 Barn. & Ald. 312.) Bridges.

By the 5 Geo. IV. c. 84, s. 21, post, "Transportation," Vol. VI. p. 287,) in the case of convicts sentenced to be transported or pardoned on condition of being transported, the clerk of the court in which the offender is convicted is to be paid by the county treasurer the same fee as hath been usually paid and he is lawfully entitled to receive for every order of transportation. It was held on this enactment, first, that the clerk of every such court is entitled to receive such fees as can be proved to have been usually in fact paid to the clerk of that particular court for such order; second, that where the fees had been paid without variation as to amount as long as could be recollected down to the time of a particular clerk, and to him for the first four years after he entered upon the office, but not for the residue of the term (forty-five years) during which he held it, this could not of itself so interrupt the course of usual payment as to prevent a mandamus issuing to the treasurer to pay the fees to the successor of such clerk, and this, although previous statutes had provided for the payment by the treasurer to the clerk of the same fee as In case of convicts.

had been usually paid or the clerk was entitled to, and although still earlier and down to the latest receipt of the fees in the particular court they had been paid not by the treasurer but by the contractors for transportation. But it was held that the clerk was not entitled to any fees for those sentenced to hard labour only. (Reg. v. Baker, 7 Ad. & Ell. 502.)

Fees on discharge of prisoners abolished.

Stat. 55 Geo. III. c. 50, abolishes all fees and gratuities payable to the same for the entrance, commitment or discharge of prisoners, and makes it a misdemeanor in clerks of the peace, &c. exacting such fees. (See the enactment, title "Gaols," Vol. III. p. 395.)

Sessions to settle table of fees of.

Stat. 57 Geo. III. c. 91, s. 1, reciting, that "doubts have arisen touching the fees and allowances due and to be made to the clerks of the peace of the several counties and other divisions in England and Wales; for the removing of such doubts," enacts, "that from and after the first day of July next, it shall and may be lawful to and for the justices of the peace for the county of Kent, and for the county palatine of Lancaster, at their annual general sessions of the peace, and for the justices of the peace in every other county, riding, division, city, town, liberty or precinct, within England and Wales, at their respective general quarter sessions of the peace, to ascertain, make and settle a table of fees and allowances to be taken by the clerk of the peace for such county of Kent and such county palatine, and such other counties, ridings, divisions, cities, towns, liberties, and precincts respectively; and such table of fees and allowances, when so made, shall be subject to the approbation of the justices of the peace at the then next succeeding general annual sessions of the peace for the county palatine of Lancaster, and for the county of Kent, and at the then next succeeding general quarter session of the peace for every other such county, riding, division, city, town, liberty or precinct as aforesaid, or at some adjournment of such sessions respectively; and such table of fees respectively, when so approved respectively, shall be laid before the judges of assize at the next assizes for such counties and places respectively, except the several places being counties in which assizes are not constantly or regularly holden in every year, and in those cases before the justices at the next assizes for the adjoining county where assizes are constantly and regularly holden, and to which prisoners are generally removed for trial from such places respectively, and also except the counties in Wales and the county palatine of Chester, and before the justices at the next great sessions for the several counties in Wales, and for the county palatine of Chester; and the said judges and justices respectively are hereby authorised to ratify and confirm such tables respectively, either as settled and approved as aforesaid, or with such alterations, additions and improvements, as to such judges and justices last mentioned shall appear to be just and reasonable; and it shall be lawful for the said justices of the peace, at their respective quarter or general sessions of the peace, from time to time in like manner to make other table of fees and allowances, instead of or in addition to the tables of fees and allowances before made, which shall and may be approved and afterwards ratified and confirmed in like manner; which fees and allowances contained in such tables respectively, when so made and approved, and afterwards ratified and confirmed as aforesaid, shall be the only fees and allowances which shall be taken by the clerks of the peace of the several counties and places for which such tables respectively shall be so made, approved, ratified and confirmed, from and after such ratification and confirmation thereof respectively; any thing in any act or acts of parliament, or any law, usage or custom to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding."

Taking greater fees than allowed.

Sect. 2. "If at any time after any such table of fees and allowances shall have been so ratified and confirmed as aforesaid, any clerk of the peace, or any person or persons acting as such, shall, under pretence of any matter or thing done, transacted or performed, demand or receive any other or greater fee or allowance than the fee or allowance, fees or allowances, ascertained, ratified and confirmed as aforesaid, such clerk of the peace or other person shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of five pounds to any person who shall sue for the same by action of debt, bill, plaint or information, in any of his majesty's courts of record at Westminster, wherein no essoin, privilege, protection, wager of law, or more than one imparlance shall be granted or allowed." 57 Geo. 3, c. 91.

There is no doubt that if he wilfully take more than his due under colour of his office, he may be indicted at common law for extortion, or be removed from his office, on articles exhibited against him in the court of quarter sessions. (Mod. Cas. 102; "Extortion," Vol. II.)

Table of fees to be hung up in conspicuous place where sessions held.

Sect. 3. "Every table of fees and allowances which shall be made, approved, ratified and confirmed from time to time as aforesaid, shall be deposited with the clerk of the peace for the county or place for which such table of fees shall have been so made, approved, ratified and confirmed as aforesaid; and a true and exact written or printed copy or copies thereof shall be placed and constantly kept in a conspicuous part of every room or place wherein any general or quarter sessions of the peace for such county or place shall be held; and if any clerk of the peace, or person acting as such, shall at any time neglect to cause every such copy to be so placed and constantly kept according to the provisions of this act, he shall forfeit and pay to any person who shall sue for the same, for every such offence, the sum of five pounds, to be recovered by action of debt, bill, plaint or information, in any of his majesty's courts of record at Westminster, wherein no essoin, privilege, protection, wager of law, nor more than one imparlance, shall be granted or allowed."

Limitation of actions.

Sect. 4. "All suits and actions which shall be brought or commenced by virtue of this act, shall be brought before the end of three calendar months after the offence committed, and not otherwise."

[7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 5, 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 89, ss. 9, 12.]

I. Regulations as to Coals in General.

By stats. 30 Car. II. st. 1, c. 8; 6 & 7 Will. III. c. 10; and 11 Geo II. c. 15, for the admeasurement of keels, boats, waggons, wains, carts, and other carriages used for the carrying of coals in the ports of Newcastle, Sunderland, and the other members of the port of Newcastle; and by stat. 15 Geo. III. c. 27, for extending the like regulations to the other ports of this kingdom: if after the admeasurement thereof by the commissioners appointed for that purpose, the marks shall be removed or altered, every person who had a hand in or was privy to the doing thereof, shall, on conviction upon the oath of one witness before one justice, forfeit 10*l.* by distress, half to the king and half to the discoverer; and for want of distress shall be committed to the common gaol for three months

31 Geo. 3, c. 36. And by stat. 31 Geo. III. c. 36, s. 1, as to all such keels, boats, wains, carts, and other carriages used as aforesaid, which have been duly admeasured and marked as aforesaid, and such marks afterwards on repairing thereof or otherwise have been removed or altered, it is enacted that the same shall be re-admeasured and marked in manner aforesaid before they are again used, under penalty of forfeiture thereof, together with the coals laden thereon.

And by sect. 4, if any person shall wilfully or designedly remove, deface, or destroy any such mark, he shall on conviction before one justice, on the oath of one witness, forfeit and pay not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 40*s.*; and in default thereof shall be committed by such justice to the house of correction nearest to the place where the offence was committed for any time not exceeding one month nor less than seven days.

17 Geo. 2, c. 35. And by stat. 17 Geo. II c. 35, s. 1, reciting "Whereas by an act made in the sixteenth and seventeenth year of the reign of King Charles the Second, intituled 'An Act for regulating the Measures and Prices of Coals,' it is (amongst other things) enacted, That the Lord Mayor of London, and the Court of Aldermen, for the time being, and the justices of the peace of the several and respective counties and places where coals, commonly called sea-coals, brought into the river of Thames, are sold by retail, or any three or more of them, whereof one to be of the quorum, should be and are thereby empowered to set the rates and prices of all such coals as should be sold by retail, as they from time to time should judge reasonable, allowing a competent profit to the said retailer beyond the price paid by him to the importer and the ordinary charges thereupon accruing; and whereas many exactions and abuses are used by retailers of sea-coal, brought by sea into other rivers, creeks, havens, ports, cities, boroughs, towns, counties and places within the kingdom of England, dominion of Wales, and town of Berwick upon Tweed, besides such counties and places where such coals brought into the river Thames were and are sold by retail: for avoiding of which exactions and abuses in such other counties and places as aforesaid, a like remedy is needful to be provided, as by the said recited act is provided, touching the retailers of coals brought into the said river of Thames, and sold; it is enacted, "That from and after the 24th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1744, the justices of the peace of the several counties in the kingdom of England, dominion of Wales, and of the town of Berwick upon Tweed, or any three or more of them, whereof one to be of the quorum, shall be and are hereby empowered to set the rates and prices of all coals called sea-coals, as shall be brought by sea into any other rivers, creeks, havens, or ports, and sold by retail after landed, in any other cities, boroughs, towns, counties, and places within the kingdom of England, dominion of Wales, and town of Berwick upon Tweed, to which the said recited act doth not extend, as they from time to time shall judge reasonable, allowing a competent profit to the said retailer, beyond the price paid by him to the importer, and the ordinary charges thereupon accruing; and that if any ingrosser or retailer of such coals shall refuse to sell as aforesaid, that then the said justices of the peace respectively are hereby authorised to appoint and empower such officer or officers, or other persons as they shall think fit, to enter into any wharf, or other place where such coals are stored up, and in case of refusal taking a constable to force entrance, and the said coals to sell, or cause to be sold, at such rates as the said justices respectively shall judge reasonable, rendering to such ingrosser or retailer the money for which the said coals shall be so sold, necessary charges being deducted. And if any action shall be commenced against the justices of peace, constable, or any officer or person, for the thing to be done in pursuance of this act, the defendant in every such action may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence; and if the verdict be found for him, or the plaintiff become nonsuited, such defendant shall recover and have his damages and treble costs of suit, for his unjust vexation in that behalf."

Treble costs.

Sect. 2. "Provided always, that no person having interest in any wharf used for the receiving and uttering of coals, or doth or shall trade by himself or others, in his own or any other name, in the sale of any coals, or the engrossing the same, in order to sell the same, and not for his own private use only, shall act, or otherwise intermeddle in the setting the price of coals; any thing in this act to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding."

No interested person to be concerned in setting a price on coals.

By 52 Geo. III. c. 9, which repeals stat. 25 Geo. III. c. 54, so far as relates to England and Wales, and makes other provisions in lieu thereof, enacts, sect. 6, that all ships in the coal trade shall be measured, and the duties paid on the greatest quantity of coal, culm, or cinders, which it shall appear that any such ship or vessel is capable of containing.

52 Geo. 3, c. 9. Measuring ships.

By stat. 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 63, s. 9, reciting, "And whereas the sale of all coals, slack, culm, and cannel of every description by weight, and not by measure, would tend greatly to prevent the commission of frauds, and impositions in the vend and delivery of such coals, slack, culm, and cannel of every description; be it therefore enacted, that from and after the 1st day of January, 1836, all coals, slack, culm, and cannel of every description shall be sold by weight, and not by measure; and every person who shall, from and after the 1st day of January, 1836, sell any coals, slack, culm or cannel of every description by measure and not by weight, shall, on conviction, be liable to a penalty not exceeding 40*s.* for every such sale" (See "Weights and Measures," Vol. VI. p. 408, &c.; and as to the weighing of coals within twenty-five miles of London, see the 1 & 2 Will. II. Regulations as to Coals in and near London and its Precincts. (a)

By the 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. lxxvi. (b) intituled "An Act for Regulating the Vend and Delivery of Coals in the Cities of London and Westminster, and in Certain Parts of the Counties of Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, Essex, Hertfordshire, Buckinghamshire, and Berkshire," [5th October, 1831,] reciting that "The acts now in force for regulating the vend and delivery of coals in the cities of London and Westminster, and the liberties thereof, and in certain parts of the counties of Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, and Essex, have been found insufficient to prevent the commission of frauds and impositions in the vend and delivery of such coals: and that the objects intended to be effected by the said acts would be more effectually promoted, and the rates and charges which tend to increase the price of coals might be reduced, if the said acts were repealed, and other provisions were made in lieu thereof:" it is enacted "That so much of an act passed in the ninth year of the reign of Queen Anne, intituled 'An Act to dissolve the present and prevent the future Combination of Coal Owners, Lightermen, Masters of Ships, and others, to advance the Price of Coals, in Prejudice of the Navigation, Trade, and Manufactures of this Kingdom, and for the further Encouragement of the Coal Trade,' as directs that, for the further encouragement of the said coal trade, and for preventing of frauds and abuses therein, every fitter or other person vending or delivering coals, or some or one of them, shall give a full, true, and ample certificate or certificates to each and every ship master, every voyage, signed by his or their handwriting, containing the day of the month and year of such loading, the master's and ship's names, and the exact quantity, and the usual names of the several and respective collieries out of which the said coals are and shall be wrought and gotten, and the price paid by the master or masters for each and every sort of coals that each and every fitter or other person vending or delivering coals as aforesaid, his or their agent or servant, hath sold and loaded on board each and every ship or vessel; which said certificate or certificates shall, upon the arrival of the said ship at the port of London, or any other delivering port, be registered, if delivered in the port of London, at the cocquet office always kept and appointed by the lord mayor of London for the time being, and if delivered in any other delivering port, then at the custom-house, with the keeper of the cocquets there; for name in the purchase of three pounds per centum consolidated or three pounds per centum reduced bank annuities; and in the meantime, and until the bank annuities shall be ordered by the said court to be sold for the purposes aforesaid, the dividends and annual produce of the said consolidated or reduced bank annuities shall from time to time be paid, by order of the said court, to the body or bodies, person or persons, who would for the time being have been entitled to the rents and profits of the said tenements or hereditaments so hereby directed to be purchased, in case such purchase and settlement were made."

2. Regulations, &c. in London, &c.

1 & 2 Will. 4, c. lxxvi.

Sect. 12. "Provided that if any such money shall be agreed to be paid for any tenements or hereditaments, or part or parts thereof, or share or shares, estate or estates, interest or interests therein, or charge or charges thereon, purchased as aforesaid, belonging to any corporation, or any trustee or trustees, person or persons, or feme covert as aforesaid, which shall be less than the sum of two hundred pounds, and shall exceed or be equal to the sum of twenty pounds, then and in all such cases the same shall, at the option of the body or bodies, person or persons for the time being entitled to the rents and profits of the tenements or hereditaments, or parts, shares, estates, interest, or charges so purchased, or of the guardian or guardians, committee or committees of such person or persons, in case of infancy or lunacy, to be signified in writing under their respective hands or seals, be paid in the name and with the privity of the said accountant-general of the Court of Exchequer, and be placed to his account as aforesaid, in order to be applied in manner hereinbefore directed; or otherwise the same shall be paid, at the like option, to two trustees, to be nominated by the body or bodies, person or persons, making such option, and approved of by the said lord mayor for the time being, (such nomination and approbation to be signified in writing under the hands and seals or the seals of the nominating and approving persons,) in order that such principal money, and the dividends arising thereon, may be applied in any manner hereinbefore directed, so far as the case be applicable, without obtaining or being required to obtain the direction and approbation of the Court of Exchequer."

Application when the compensation shall be less than 200*l.* and exceed 20*l.*

Sect. 13. "Provided also, that where such money so to be paid as aforesaid shall be less than twenty pounds, then and in all such cases the same shall be applied to the use of the body or bodies, person or persons, who would for the time being have been entitled to the rents and profits of the tenements or hereditaments, parts, shares, estates, interests, and charges purchased as aforesaid, in such manner as the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, shall think fit; or in case of the infancy or lunacy of such person or persons, then such money shall be paid to his, her, or their guardian or guardians, committee or committees, to and for the use and benefit of such person or persons so entitled respectively."

Application where the money is less than 20*l.*

Sect. 14. "Provided also, that where the purchase or compensation money for any tenements or hereditaments, or part or parts thereof, or share or shares, estate or estates, interest or interests therein, or charge or charges thereon, to be purchased under the authority of this act, shall be required to be paid into the Bank of England in the name and with the privity of the accountant-general of the Court of Exchequer, and to be applied to the purchase of other lands, tenements, or hereditaments, to be settled to the like uses in pursuance of this act, it shall be lawful for the said court to order the expenses of all purchases from time to time to be made in pursuance of this act, or so much of such expenses as the said court shall deem reasonable, to be paid by the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, out of the monies to be applied for the purposes of this act, who shall from time to time pay such sums of money for such purposes as the said court shall direct."

The court may order expenses of purchase to be paid by the corporation.

Sect. 15. "It shall be lawful for the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, and they are hereby empowered, to pull down or cause to be pulled down, all houses, erections and buildings which shall be purchased by virtue of this act, or such of them or such part thereof respectively as they shall think proper to be pulled down, and to clear and level

1 & 2 Will. 4, c. lxxvi.

Power to let or sell any ground not wanted, or from which the market shall be removed.

Sect. 16. "It shall be lawful for the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, and they are hereby empowered, to let, sell, and dispose of, or cause to be let, sold, or disposed of, all or any part of the ground, tenements, or hereditaments to be purchased as aforesaid, which they shall not think necessary for a new market place, or for the enlargement of a market place, and also any ground and buildings from which the said market shall have been removed, after a new market place shall have been provided and opened in lieu thereof, to any person or persons who shall be willing to contract for, rent, or purchase the same."

Receipts of the chamberlain or his clerk to be effectual discharges.

Sect. 17. "The receipt or receipts of the chamberlain of the city of London, or his known clerk, for any purchase monies, rents or other sum or sums of money payable to the said mayor and commonalty and citizens, or the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, by virtue of this act, shall be a sufficient and effectual discharge or sufficient and effectual discharges for the money in such receipt or receipts expressed or acknowledged to be received; and the purchaser or purchasers to whom the same respectively shall be given shall not afterwards be answerable or accountable for the misapplication or non-application, nor be in anywise obliged to see to the application of the money in such receipt or receipts expressed or acknowledged to be received."

Money produced by sales and rent to be applied to the purposes of the act.

Sect. 18. "All and every the sum and sums of money which shall be received by the said chamberlain from any sale or sales of materials, tenements, and hereditaments hereinbefore directed or authorised to be made, and also the rents (if any) which shall be received from all the said ground, hereditaments and premises, or any of them, until the same shall be sold, shall (after payment of the costs and expenses of the said sale or sales, which are hereby directed to be paid thereout,) be applied in paying off the monies to be raised by this act as hereinafter mentioned, or any other of the purposes of this act."

Any new market to be vested in the corporation, and subject to the same regulations as the present.

Sect. 19. "When and so often as any new market place shall be provided by virtue of this act, the same shall be vested in the said mayor and commonalty and citizens of London, and shall be subject to the same jurisdiction and regulations in all respects, and the like rates, dues, and charges may be demanded, received, and taken at or in respect of the same, in the like manner and under the like authorities and provisions as if the said market had continued to be holden on its present site."

Restriction as to market places.

Sect. 20. "When any new market place shall have been provided and opened, no market shall any longer be holden in the place from whence the said market shall have been removed."

Notice to be given of the opening of any new market.

Sect. 21. "No new market place shall be or be deemed to be opened for the purposes of this act, until notice shall have been given, in the name of the said mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city of London, in the London Gazette, seven days previous to the day on which such market is to be opened; and in such notice the day on which such market is to be opened shall be specified; and on the day so specified in such notice such market shall be and be deemed to be opened and established for the purposes of this act."

Power to erect buildings, and repair and alter the same.

Sect. 22. "It shall be lawful for the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, by and out of the fund hereinafter mentioned, or the monies to be received for the purposes of this act, to erect or cause to be erected, on the present or any future market place, such buildings as they shall think necessary or proper for the purposes of the said market, with proper gates, fixtures, conveniences, and appurtenances thereto, and to maintain, keep in repair, or alter the same as they shall from time to time think proper."

A duty of 1*d.* per ton on coals, culm, and cinders, to be levied for defray-

Sect. 23. "For the purposes of defraying the charges and expenses of such market, and of the purchase of the tenements and hereditaments hereby authorised to be purchased, and of erecting and supporting convenient buildings thereon, and for defraying the salaries and allowances of the several clerks and other persons employed in the execution of this act, and for defraying the other charges and expenses of carrying the same into execution, and for paying the compensations hereinafter directed or authorised to be made, and the monies hereinafter authorised to be borrowed or raised, and the interest thereof, and for creating a fund for the purposes hereinafter mentioned, it shall be lawful for the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, to demand and take, or cause to be demanded and taken, of and from every master of a ship or vessel laden with coals, cinders, or culm, or other person having the care or command thereof, arriving at her moorings within any part of the port of London at or to the westward of Gravesend, the sum of one penny per ton, and no more, for every ton of coals, cinders, or culm contained in such ship or other vessel; and such sum of one penny per ton of all such coals, cinders, or culm shall and may be collected, levied, recovered and paid in such and the like manner, and by, with, and under such powers, authorities, and provisions, as the other duty or duties, or imposition or impositions on coals hereinafter made payable may be collected, levied, recovered and paid respectively." ing the expenses of the market, &c.

Sect. 24. "Provided always, that the costs, charges, and expenses incident to and incurred in obtaining and passing this act shall be paid and discharged by and out of the money to be received by virtue of this act; and when and as soon as such costs, charges, and expenses, and the costs, charges, and expenses of purchasing tenements and hereditaments for the said market, and of making buildings and other conveniences thereto, and the compensation hereinafter directed or authorised to be made, and the sums of money hereinafter authorised to be borrowed or raised, and the interest thereof, shall have been paid off and discharged, and the said duty of one penny per ton of coals, cinders, and culm shall be more than sufficient for maintaining, repairing and supporting the said market, and of the several buildings and conveniences thereto, and for paying the said compensation, and the salaries and other payments and allowances to the clerk or clerks and other officers and persons employed in the execution of this act, and for defraying the several other charges and expenses of carrying the same into execution, then and from thenceforth the residue or overplus of the monies to be received and produced from and by the said duty of one penny per ton of coals, cinders, and culm, shall from time to time, as and when received, be laid out or invested in the purchase of stock in some of the public stocks or funds, or upon government or real securities, at interest, in the names of the chamberlain, town clerk, and comptroller of the chamber of the city of London, for the time being, who shall from time to time lay out or invest the yearly dividends or interest of the stocks, funds, and securities so purchased in their names in like manner for the purpose of accumulation, until the yearly dividends and interest of all the stocks, funds, and securities so purchased shall be sufficient for the payment of the salaries and other payments and allowances to the clerk or clerks and other officers and persons employed in the execution of this act, and for defraying the several other charges and expenses of carrying the same into execution; and when and so soon as the same dividends and interest shall be fully sufficient for the purposes last mentioned, then and from thenceforth the said duty of one penny per ton of coals, cinders, and culm shall cease: provided always that it shall be lawful for the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, again to raise such duty, or any part thereof, to any sum not exceeding the sum granted by this act, when and so often as it shall be necessary for the purposes thereof; and such duty, or any part thereof, when so reduced or again raised, shall be collected, levied, and recovered in such and the same manner as the duty granted or continued by this act can or may be collected, levied, and recovered; and when and so often as the said duty of one penny per ton

When expenses of executing this act have been paid, and provision made for defraying the compensation and salaries to officers, the duty to cease;

but may be again levied.

(a) The duty here imposed is the same in amount as in s. 20 of the above statute. It will be a question whether "coke" be subject to duty under this act. It would seem the legislature intended it should. (Dowling on the Coal Act, p. 10, n.) on coals, cinders, and culm, or any part thereof, shall cease or be again renewed, the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, shall cause one calendar month's previous notice of such cesser or renewal to be given by advertisement in the London Gazette, and by affixing notice thereof in writing on the door or some conspicuous place in the said coal market."

Money may be raised on the credit of duty.

Sect. 25. "For the purposes of this act, it shall be lawful for the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, to borrow or raise, on the credit of the said duty of one penny per ton on coals, cinders and culm, any sum or sums of money not exceeding the sum of twenty thousand pounds; and upon payment of any monies so to be raised into the chamber of the said city, by such instalments, in such proportions, at such times, and in such manner as the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, shall direct, the persons who shall contract or advance or contribute any part of the said monies shall, in respect of the sums which they shall so respectively advance, be entitled to interest at such rate as the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, shall think reasonable and as shall be agreed upon, to be payable half-yearly, and to continue until the payment of each respective principal sum.

Common council to cause bonds or other securities to be given, assignable by indorsement.

Sect. 26. "The said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, shall cause one or more bond or bonds, note or notes, or other security or securities in writing, under the common seal of the said city, to be delivered to every person advancing any part of the said monies, for the payment of such interest in respect thereof until redeemed as is hereinafter mentioned, which notes or other securities shall be assignable by indorsement."

Upon notice of paying off bonds and tender of the monies, the interest to cease.

Sect. 27. "The said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, shall give or cause to be given notice in the London Gazette, and also in one or more daily papers published in the city of London or Westminster, of their intention to pay off such bonds as shall by virtue of this act be granted in respect of the said sum or sums of money to be raised as aforesaid; and at the end of six calendar months next after such notice shall be given, upon payment or tender of the respective principal sums for which such bonds shall have been given, together with interest for the same respectively up to the day of such payment or tender, to or for the person or persons then entitled thereto, at the office of the chamberlain of the said city, the interest payable to such person or persons respectively shall cease and determine: provided, nevertheless, that such person or persons, at any time after such notice shall have been given as aforesaid, shall, at the expiration of fourteen days next after a declaration in writing of his, her, or their intention to receive the same shall have been delivered at the said office, (such declaration being delivered between the hours of ten in the morning and two in the afternoon,) be paid to the said office the sum or sums of money for which such bond or bonds respectively shall have been given, together with interest for the same bond or bonds respectively up to the day expressed in such declaration for receiving the same, and such interest respectively shall, on the day specified in such declaration for payment, cease and determine."

Securities to be entered in books.

Sect. 28. "The said chamberlain shall enter in a book or books to be kept for that purpose the bond or bonds to be granted in pursuance of this act, and all assignments and transfers thereof, expressing in words at length the names, surnames, additions, places of abode, and other descriptions of such person or persons as shall from time to time be entitled to such bond or bonds, to which book and books all and every person and persons entitled to or interested in such bond or bonds shall at all reasonable times in the daytime have access, with free liberty to inspect the same, without fee or reward."

Application of the monies which shall be borrowed.

Sect. 29. "The sum and sums of money which shall be raised and borrowed by virtue of this act shall be applied for all and any of the purposes for which the said duty of one penny per ton on coals, cinders, and culm is hereinbefore directed to be applied."

Duty of 1d. per

Sect. 30. "The said duty of one penny per ton on coals, cinders, and culm shall be and the same is hereby charged and made chargeable with interest which shall be payable in respect of such sum or sums of money as aforesaid to be borrowed and raised under or by virtue of this act, and then with such principal sum or sums."

1 & 2 Will. 4, c. lxxvi.

Sect. 31. "Provided always, that if the said duty of one penny per ton on coals, cinders, and culm shall at any time hereafter prove insufficient to pay the interest of the sum or sums to be borrowed and raised as aforesaid, then and in every such case the sum which shall be wanting to complete the payment of such interest shall be advanced and paid out of the chamber of the said city, and be made good and supplied out of the future produce of the said duty."

ton charged with such annuities. Deficiencies to be paid out of the chamber of London.

Sect. 32. "It shall be lawful for the court of lord mayor and aldermen of the city of London from time to time to make, ordain and establish such orders, rules and bye-laws, and from time to time to amend, alter, or repeal the same or any of them, for the regulating, governing, and managing the said coal market, and all erections, buildings, works, matters, and things thereunto belonging, and also for the regulating of all officers to be employed in such market, and all other persons coming thereto or transacting any business therein, as to the said court of lord mayor and aldermen shall seem just and reasonable, and also from time to time, as occasion shall require, to repeal, amend, and alter such rules, orders, and bye-laws, and also to fix and appoint certain and reasonable penalties or forfeitures for the non-observance or non-performance or other breach of any such rule, order, or bye-law, not exceeding the sum of five pounds for any one offence; and all such penalties and forfeitures shall and may be recovered by such ways and means as any other penalties or forfeitures may be recovered by virtue of this act: provided always, that no such rule, order, or bye-law be repugnant to or inconsistent with the laws of that part of the united kingdom called England, or contrary to the directions and provisions in this act contained."

Court of aldermen may make bye-laws to regulate the market.

Sect. 33. "No such order, rule, or bye-law shall be good, valid, or effectual, nor shall any such order, rule, or bye-law be amended, altered, or repealed, unless such order, rule, or bye-law, or any amendment, alteration, or repeal of any such order, rule, or bye-law, shall have been submitted to and allowed and approved of from time to time by the lord high chancellor of Great Britain, the lord keeper or lords commissioners of the great seal, the lord chief justice and the rest of the justices of the Court of King's Bench, the lord chief justice and the rest of the justices of the Court of Common Pleas, and the lord chief baron and the rest of the barons of the Court of Exchequer, for the time being, or any one or more of them, who are and is hereby empowered and required, on request from time to time to them or him made by or on behalf of the said court of lord mayor and aldermen, to peruse and examine all such orders, rules and bye-laws as shall from time to time be made, amended, altered, or repealed by the said court of lord mayor and aldermen in pursuance of this act, and laid before them or him the said lord high chancellor, lord keeper or lords commissioners of the great seal, the lord chief justice and the rest of the justices of the Court of King's Bench, the lord chief justice and the rest of the justices of the Court of Common Pleas, and the lord chief baron and the rest of the barons of the Court of Exchequer, for the time being, or any one or more of them, and to alter and amend all such orders, rules, and bye-laws, or any of them, and to allow and approve of or disallow and disapprove of the same or any part thereof, or to allow and approve of or to disallow or disapprove of the repeal of the whole or any part thereof, as to them or him shall from time to time seem proper and expedient; and for doing thereof no fee or reward shall be paid or taken; and no such allowance or approval shall be given, unless previous notice of the intention to make, amend, alter, or repeal such orders, rules, or bye-laws shall have been given in the London Gazette at least seven days before the date of such allowance or approval."

Such bye-laws to be approved and allowed by one or more of the judges.

Sect. 34. "Provided always, that all such orders, rules, and bye-laws so to be from time to time made, altered, amended or repealed by the said court of lord mayor and aldermen, shall be printed; and such orders, rules, and bye-laws, and the several alterations and amendments made therein, and the repeal thereof respectively, shall also be made public in such other manner as the said court of lord mayor and aldermen shall think proper, and shall from time to time order and direct."

Corporation empowered to appoint committees.

Sect. 35. "It shall be lawful for the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, from time to time to appoint one or more committee or committees to manage and transact all or any of the matters or purposes which they the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, are hereby authorised and required to do, execute, or perform; which committee or committees so to be appointed shall have such or so much of the powers and authorities by this act given to the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, as they shall think fit or proper to delegate to such committee or committees."

Persons interested not eligible to such committees.

Sect. 36. "Provided nevertheless, that if any person being a member of any such committee shall be directly or indirectly interested or concerned in any contract which shall be made or entered into by or on behalf of such committee, for or concerning any of the works to be performed or done in pursuance of this act, or for or concerning any materials to be used or employed therein, every such contract shall be void, and the person who, being a member of such committee, shall be so interested or concerned, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of one hundred pounds to any person or persons who shall sue for the same."

Monies received under former act to be applied for the purposes of this act.

Sect. 37. "And whereas certain sums of money, which have been received by virtue of the said act of the forty-seventh year of the reign of King George the Third, are now in the chamber of the city of London; be it therefore further enacted, that the monies now in the chamber of London as aforesaid, and any surplus which may hereafter be received by virtue of the said act, shall be applied in aid of the fund hereinbefore directed to be created, or for the purposes of this act, or any of them."

Compensation to be given to land coal meters.

Sect. 38. "And whereas compensation should be made to such of the present principal and labouring land coal meters, and clerks, officers, and persons employed in the land metage of coals, as have regularly discharged their duty, except those appointed under the said act of the ninth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, or appointed or continued by the said act of the first year of the reign of his present majesty, for the loss of their offices, which will be rendered unnecessary by this act; be it therefore further enacted, that, out of the said funds, or out of the said duty of one penny per ton on coals, cinders, and culm, the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, with the consent and approbation of the lord high treasurer, or any three or more of the lords commissioners of his majesty's treasury (testified by writing under his or their hands), shall pay such sums of money, annuities, or other compensation to the principal and labouring land coal meters, and the clerks, officers, and persons employed in the land metage of coals, (except as aforesaid, and except those within the district attached to the city and liberties of Westminster, for whom provision is hereinafter made), as have regularly discharged their duty, and whose offices shall be abolished by virtue of this act, as they shall think proper."

Compensation to Westminster meters.

Sect. 39. "Provided always, that, out of the said fund, or out of the said duty of one penny per ton on coals, cinders, and culm, the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, shall likewise pay such further sums of money, annuities, or other compensation to the present principal and labouring land coal meters, and the clerks, officers, and persons employed in the land metage of coals within the district attached to the land coal meter's office for the city and liberties of Westminster, who have regularly discharged their duty, and whose offices shall be abolished by virtue of this act, as the said lord high treasurer or any three or more of the lords commissioners of his majesty's treasury shall think proper (the same to be certified in writing under his or their hand or hands)."

Sect. 40. "Out of the said fund, or out of the said duty of one penny per ton on coals, cinders, and culm, the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, shall pay to such of the late principal and labouring land coal meters, clerks, officers, and persons employed in the land metage of coals, as have been superannuated previous to the passing of this act, such sums of money or annuities as are now paid and payable to them respectively."

2. Regulations, &c. in London, &c.

1 & 2 Will. 4, c. lxxvi.

Sect. 41. "The chamberlain of the said city for the time being shall keep one or more book or books, in which all the monies to be received in respect of the aforesaid duty upon coals, cinders, and culm, and the monies to be raised or borrowed on the credit thereof by virtue of this act, shall, from time to time, be entered and set down; and wherein also all the monies to be paid and disbursed out of the monies received or to be received by virtue of the said last mentioned act, or to be received by virtue of this act, shall from time to time be entered and set down; and such entries shall specify the times when, the occasions for which, and the names of the persons to whom, the same shall be so paid."

Chamberlain to keep accounts of receipts and disbursements of the duty on coals, &c.

Sect. 42. "The said mayor, aldermen, and commons, shall once in each and every year, or oftener if required, lay before both houses of parliament an account of the produce of the said duty of one penny per ton hereby granted and made payable upon coals, cinders, and culm, and also of all receipts and disbursements received or paid for or on account of the said market."

Accounts to be laid before parliament.

Sect. 43. "All coals, cinders and culm which shall be sold from and out of any ship or vessel in the port of London, or at any place within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the general post office in the city of London, shall be sold by weight and not by measure." (a)

Coals shall be sold by weight.

Sect. 44. "All contracts or agreements for the sale and delivery of any quantity of coals by measure at any place within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the post office aforesaid, made previous to the first day of January next after the passing of this act, and which shall not have been completed by that period, shall be and continue in full force and virtue, except that such coals shall be delivered by weight and not by measure; and for that purpose twenty-five hundred weight and the half of another hundred weight shall be considered and taken to be equivalent to one chaldron: provided always, that in case the cargoes of any ships to which ship meters shall have been appointed previously to the first day of January next shall not have been wholly delivered at that period, the cargoes or the residue of the cargoes of such ships shall be delivered from such ships by measure in the same manner as if this act had not been passed."

Existing contracts for coals to be completed by weight instead of measure.

Sect. 45. "Any seller or sellers of or dealer or dealers in coals shall knowingly sell one sort of coals for and as a sort which they really are not, within the said port of London, or at any place within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the post office aforesaid, every such seller or sellers of or dealer or dealers in coals shall forfeit and pay for every such offence the sum of ten pounds per ton for every ton of coals so sold, and so in proportion for any smaller quantity; and such seller or sellers of or dealer or dealers in coals shall not be subject or liable to any penalty imposed by the said act of the ninth year of the reign of Queen Anne, or by the 3 Geo. II. c. 26, on every person who shall knowingly sell one sort of coals for and as a sort which they really are not: provided always, that no seller or sellers of or dealer or dealers in coals shall be subject to such penalty for or in respect of any number of tons exceeding twenty-five tons for the same offence." (b)

For preventing the sale of one sort of coals for another.

(a) The 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 63, ante, 693, extends this provision to all places.

(b) In sect. 32 of the repealed act, 47 Geo. III. c. lxviii. the point from which the twenty-five miles were to be measured was the Royal Exchange, and the penalty of 20*l.* a chaldron. Under the 3 Geo. IV. c. 26, s. 4, this offence was not complete by contracting for the coals without delivery. 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. lxxvi.

Lightermen may carry on partnership with coal dealers.

Sect. 46. "It shall be lawful for any lighterman or lightermen to enter into any co-partnership with any woodmonger or woodmongers, or other person or persons whomsoever, in the trade or business of a coal dealer or coal dealers, and to carry on as co-partner or co-partners with such person or persons such trade or business of a coal dealer or dealers, and to keep, use, and employ as such co-partners their own lighters, barges, or other craft in and for the carrying of coals to or from any such ship or other vessel in the river Thames, and to and from any wharf, dock, creek, or other place whatsoever on or near the said river Thames, without being subject to any penalty or penalties for any such joint trading together, any act, statute, bye law, or ordinance whatsoever to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding: provided, nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend so as to authorise or empower any lighterman or lightermen to be or become jointly interested with any woodmonger or woodmongers, or other person or persons whomsoever (not being a lighterman or lightermen), in the trade or business of carrying in lighters, barges, or other craft for hire any sort or description of goods whatsoever, other than and except only such coals as may be lightered by them in their said trade of coal dealers."

Sect. 47, relating to the seller's ticket to be sent with coals, is now repealed, and other provisions substituted by the 1 & 2 Vict. c. ci. s. 2, post, 727.

Coals to be delivered in sacks containing a certain quantity.

Sect. 48. "Coals sold from any lighter, barge, or other craft, or from any wharf, warehouse, or other place within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the post office aforesaid, in any quantity exceeding five hundred and sixty pounds, except coals carried and delivered in bulk as hereinafter mentioned, shall be carried and delivered to the respective purchasers thereof in sacks, each sack containing either one hundred and twelve pounds, or two hundred and twenty-four pounds net: provided always, that coals delivered by gang labour may be conveyed in sacks containing any weight; any thing herein contained to the contrary thereof notwithstanding." (a)

Coals may be delivered in bulk.

Sect. 49. "Provided always, that any coals sold from any ship, lighter, barge, or other craft, or from any wharf or place within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the post office aforesaid, in any quantity exceeding five hundred and sixty pounds, may be carried and delivered to the respective purchasers thereof, if they think fit, in bulk in carts or other carriages, or in any lighter, barge, or other craft: provided also, that in every case where any such coals shall be carried and delivered in any cart or other carriage in bulk as aforesaid, the weight of such cart or other carriage, as well as of the coals contained therein, shall be previously ascertained by a weighing machine fixed for that purpose on the wharf or place from which the coals shall be brought; and the seller's ticket shall, in such cases, state the weight of the cart or other carriage, as well as the weight of the coals contained therein; and if any sellers or dealers in coals shall carry or deliver to the purchaser or purchasers, by any cart or other carriage, any quantity of coals exceeding five hundred and sixty pounds in bulk, without having a weighing machine fixed up on his wharf or place, or without having previously ascertained by such weighing machine the weight of the cart or other carriage, and the weight of the coals contained therein, then and in every such case such seller or dealer shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding fifty pounds."

Carman to weigh the carriage and the coals, if required.

Sect. 50. "The carman or driver of any cart, waggon, or other carriage in which any coals exceeding in quantity five hundred and sixty pounds shall be carried in bulk, for delivery to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, from any ship, lighter, barge, or other craft, or any wharf, warehouse, or other place within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the post office aforesaid, shall (in case he shall be required so to do by the purchaser or purchasers of such coals, or his, her, or their servant or servants, or other person or persons acting on the behalf of such purchaser or purchasers), weigh the waggon or other carriage, with the coals therein, at any public weighing machine for carts or other carriages which may be situate on the road between the place from which the coals shall be brought and the place of delivery, or at any point within the distance of one hundred yards from any part of such road; and such carman or driver is also hereby directed (in case he shall be required so to do by the purchaser or purchasers, or any such other person or persons as aforesaid), to weigh in like manner the cart, waggon, or other carriage, without the coals, at any public weighing machine for carts or carriages which may be situate as aforesaid; and if any such carman or driver shall neglect or refuse, when so required as aforesaid, to weigh the cart, waggon, or other carriage, either with or without the coals, at any public weighing machine for carts and carriages which may be situate as aforesaid, such carman or driver shall for every such offence forfeit any sum not exceeding ten pounds: provided always that no carman or driver shall be compelled or obliged to weigh the cart, waggon, or other carriage, without the coals, until after the same shall have been delivered, and that no such carman or driver shall be obliged to go back or return to any such public weighing machine as aforesaid, for the purpose of weighing the cart, waggon, or other carriage, either with or without the coals, after he shall have passed the same."

2. Regulations, &c. in London, &c.

1 & 2 Will. 4, c. lxxvi.

Sect. 51. "If in any case where any coals shall be delivered in bulk to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, from any ship, lighter, barge, or other craft, or from any wharf, warehouse, or other place within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the post-office aforesaid, a less quantity shall be delivered than shall be expressed in the tickets to be delivered therewith as aforesaid, the seller or sellers shall for every such offence forfeit any sum not exceeding ten pounds; and if the deficiency shall exceed two hundred and twenty-four pounds, the seller or sellers shall forfeit any sum not exceeding fifty pounds."

Penalty on deficiency in weight of coals.

Sect. 52. "If any carman or driver of any cart, waggon, or other carriage laden with coals for sale, or to be delivered to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, by any seller or sellers of, or dealer or dealers in, or carrier or carriers of coals from any ship, lighter, barge, or other craft, or from any wharf, warehouse, or other place within the said port of London, or within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the post-office aforesaid, shall not have placed in, on, or under his cart, waggon, or carriage, a perfect weighing machine marked at Guildhall, London, by the proper officer there, for which the sum of two shillings and sixpence shall be paid, and no more (which machine shall be of the form, size, and dimensions of the machine approved by the lord high treasurer, or any three or more of the lords commissioners of his majesty's treasury, and deposited at the office of the hall keeper of the city of London, to which any person shall have access between the hours of ten in the morning and two in the afternoon, and shall be provided by the seller or sellers, dealer or dealers in, or carrier or carriers of such coals), then and in every such case every such carman or driver of such cart, waggon, or other carriage not having such machine so placed therein, thereon, or thereunder, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding ten pounds; and the seller or sellers of, or dealer or dealers in, or carrier or carriers of such coals, shall forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding twenty pounds: provided always, that coals which shall be carried or conveyed in bulk, or in any cart, waggon, or other carriage belonging to the purchaser or purchasers of such coals, may be so carried or conveyed without the carman being obliged to carry a weighing machine therewith, or any person or persons being subject or liable to any penalty or penalties in respect thereof." (As to what is a weighing machine within this section, and as to the penalty for carrying an improper one, see 1 & 2 Vict. c. ci. s. 5, post, 728.)

Carman to carry a weighing machine in his cart.

Penalty on carman; or seller.

Sect. 53. "If at any time or times it shall appear to the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, that a weighing machine may be made upon a better or more convenient principle or mode of construction than the machine for the time being deposited at the office of the hall keeper of the said city, they may, with the consent of the lord high treasurer, or any three or more of the lords commissioners of his majesty's treasury, cause a machine according to such better or more convenient principle or mode of construction to be deposited in the said office of the hall keeper, in lieu of the machine for the time being deposited there, and shall cause notice of the deposit of such new machine to be given by advertisement in the London Gazette; and until the expiration of three calendar months next after such advertisement the machine to be placed and carried as aforesaid in any cart, waggon, or carriage, may be either similar to such new machine, or similar to the machine in lieu of which the same shall have been deposited; and after the expiration of such three calendar months the machine to be placed and carried as aforesaid shall be similar to such new machine."

Carman required to weigh any of the sacks in the cart.

Sect. 54. "Provided always, that the carman or driver of any cart, waggon, or other carriage in which coals shall be carried in sacks for delivery to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, from any ship, lighter, barge, or other craft, or from any wharf, warehouse, or other places within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the post office aforesaid, shall and he is hereby directed to weigh, if he shall be required so to do, any one or more of the sacks contained in any such cart, waggon, or other carriage, which may be chosen by the purchaser or purchasers of the said coals, or his, her, or their servant or servants, or other person or persons acting on the behalf of such purchaser or purchasers, with the coals therein, and also afterwards to weigh in like manner such sack without any coals therein."

Penalty on carman for driving coals away without weighing, if required.

Sect. 55. "If any carman or driver of any cart or waggon or other carriage in which coals shall be carried in sacks for delivery to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, from any ship, vessel, lighter, barge, or other craft, or from any wharf, warehouse, or other place within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the post office aforesaid, shall neglect or refuse to weigh by the said machine any such sack or sacks of coals in manner hereinbefore directed, when thereunto required by the purchaser or purchasers of such coals, or by his, her, or their servant or servants, or other person or persons acting by, for, or under the authority of such purchaser or purchasers, or if any such carman or driver shall drive away, or permit or suffer the said cart, waggon, or other carriage to be driven away, without weighing in manner herein directed the said sack or sacks of coals, or shall hinder, obstruct, or otherwise prevent the purchaser or purchasers of such coals, or his, her, or their servant, or any other person or persons whomsoever, from examining the said machine, or weighing all or any of the sack or sacks of coals in such his cart, waggon, or other carriage, then and in every such case every such carman or driver so offending shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding twenty pounds nor less than five pounds." (This section is now repealed, so far as it imposes a penalty on the carman for preventing any person other than the purchaser or his servant from examining the machine. 1 & 2 Vict. c. ci. s. 6, post, 728.)

All the coals sent to be weighed, if desired by the purchaser.

Sect. 56. "Provided always, that if any purchaser or purchasers, or his, her, or their servant or servants, or any other person or persons acting by, for, or under the authority of such purchaser or purchasers, who shall require any sack or sacks of coals to be weighed as aforesaid, shall find the coals therein to be deficient in weight, and shall signify to the carman or other person attending such cart, waggon, or other carriage, his, her, or their desire to have all the coals contained in such cart, waggon, or other carriage, or any part of such coals, weighed or re-weighed in the presence of some constable, police officer, or other indifferent and credible person, then and in every such case the carman or driver of such cart, waggon, or other carriage in which such coals shall be brought, shall and he is hereby required to continue and remain at or before the house, lodging, or other premises of the purchaser or purchasers of such coals, with such coals, and the cart, waggon, or other carriage, until such coals are weighed; and if any such carman or driver shall drive away, or permit or suffer to be driven away, such cart, waggon, or other carriage, before the coals contained therein shall be weighed, without the consent of the purchaser or purchasers thereof, or his, her, or their servant or servants, or such other person or persons as aforesaid, then and in every such case such carman or driver shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding twenty pounds."

1 & 2 Will. 4, c. lxxvi.

Purchaser to procure the attendance of a constable, &c., if desirous of having the coals re-weighed.

Sect. 57. "Such purchaser or purchasers, or his, her, or their servant or servants, or other person or persons as aforesaid, so desiring such coals contained in such cart, waggon, or other carriage to be weighed, shall, and he, she, or they, is and are hereby required to procure the attendance of some constable, police officer, or other indifferent and credible person, to be present at the weighing of such coals; and all the said sacks, both with and without the coals therein, shall accordingly be weighed with the said machine by the carman or other person attending such cart, waggon, or other carriage, in the presence of the purchaser or purchasers of the said coals, or of his, her, or their agent or servant, agents or servants, if they or any of them shall attend to see the same weighed, and of such constable, police officer, or other person; and in case such purchaser or purchasers, or his, her, or their agent or servant, agents or servants, shall not attend for the purpose of seeing such coals so weighed, then such carman or other person shall proceed in the weighing of such sacks in his, her, or their absence; and in case such carman or other person shall refuse or neglect to weigh such sacks, or any of them, in manner aforesaid, he shall forfeit and pay for such offence any sum not exceeding ten pounds; and the constable, police officer, or any other person who may be present, may weigh the said sacks or any of them as aforesaid; and in case, upon the weighing of any such sack, it shall happen that any sack or sacks shall not contain either one hundred and twelve pounds or two hundred and twenty-four pounds net of coals, as the case may be, then and in every such case the seller or sellers of such coals shall for every such sack of coals that shall be so found deficient forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding five pounds."(a)

Penalty for not weighing.

For short weight

No quantity less than 560 pounds weight of coals to be sold without being weighed.

Sect. 58. "All coals sold in any quantity less than five hundred and sixty pounds, or in the quantity of five hundred and sixty pounds, from any place, or from any cart or other carriage, within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the post office aforesaid, shall be weighed previous to being delivered to the purchaser or purchasers of such coals, and also, if required by such purchaser or purchasers, or his, her, or their agent or servant, in the presence of such purchaser or purchasers, or his, her, or their agent or servant; and if any seller or dealer in coals shall deliver to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the post office aforesaid, any quantity of coals less than five hundred and sixty pounds, or the quantity of five hundred and sixty pounds, without previously weighing the same, and also, if required by such purchaser or purchasers, or his, her, or their agent or servant, in the presence of such purchaser or purchasers, or his, her, or their agent or servant, then and in every such case such seller or dealer shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding five pounds."

Weighing machines to be kept at watch houses and police stations.

Sect. 59. "A proper machine or proper scales and weights for weighing coals shall be kept at every watch-house or police station, or at any other place or places which shall from time to time be appointed by any two or more of his majesty's justices of the peace for the said cities or counties, within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the post office aforesaid; and the same shall be provided and kept in repair from time to time by the overseers of the poor of the township, parish, precinct, or place in which such watch-house, station, or such other place or places as aforesaid, shall be situate, out of the rate for the relief of the poor of such township, parish, precinct, or place, and shall and may be used at Charter of 3 James I.

Sect. 60. "And whereas, by a charter of his Majesty King James the First, bearing date the twentieth day of August, in the third year of his reign, after reciting that the mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city of London, from all the time whereof the memory of man was not to the contrary, had had and exercised, and ought and had been accustomed to have and exercise, the office of bailiff and the conservancy of the water of Thames, to be exercised and occupied by the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being, during the time of his mayoralty, or by his sufficient deputies, in, upon, and about the same water of Thames, (to wit), from the bridge of the town of Staines in the county of Middlesex westwards to London bridge, and thence to a certain place called Yendall, otherwise Yenland, otherwise Yenleete, towards the sea and eastwards, and in the Medway, and in the port of the city of London aforesaid, and upon every bank and upon every shore and every wharf of the same water of Thames within the limits and bounds aforesaid, and in, upon, and about each and every of the same, and also by all the time aforesaid had had and taken, and ought and had been accustomed to have and take, to their own use, by the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being, during the time of his mayoralty, or by his sufficient deputies, all the wages, rewards, fees, and profits pertaining and belonging to the same office of bailiff; and also reciting that the same mayor and commonalty and citizens, from all the time aforesaid, had had and exercised, and ought and had been accustomed to have and exercise, the office of measurer and the measuring of all and singular coals, and grains of every kind, and also of all kinds of salt, and all kinds of apples, pears, plums, and other fruits whatsoever, and of all eatable roots of every kind, and also of onions, and of all other merchandizes, wares, and things whatsoever measurable, and the measuring of the same whatsoever, landing, conveyed, or brought in or to the port of the said city of London upon the said water of Thames in every ship, boat, barge, or other vessel whatsoever, floating, laden, remaining, or being on every part of the same water of Thames, and upon every bank or every shore or every wharf of the same water of Thames, which should happen to stop, remain, and be delivered or set down from the aforesaid bridge of the same town of Staines in the said county of Middlesex westwards to the aforesaid London bridge, and thence to the aforesaid place called Yendall, otherwise Yenland, otherwise Yenleete, towards the sea and eartwards, and in the Medway, and in the said port of the city of London aforesaid, exercising and occupying the same office of measurer and the measuring aforesaid by the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being, during the time of his mayoralty, or by his sufficient deputies, and also by all the same time had had and taken and ought and had been accustomed to have and take, to their own use by the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being, during the time of his mayoralty, or by his sufficient deputies, all the wages, rewards, fees, and profits to the same office of measurer belonging and appertaining; and nevertheless the same mayor and commonalty and citizens then a short time ago were disturbed therein, and were unjustly hindered in some of the measurings aforesaid, and especially in the aforesaid office of the measuring of coals, supposing that that office to the said mayor and commonalty and citizens did not anciently pertain, nor did still pertain or belong by any lawful grant or prescription, where in truth it plainly and manifestly appeared that that office and all the other premises did anciently pertain and belong, and did then of right pertain to them, and that they had time being, during the time of his mayoralty, or by his sufficient deputies, and might have, receive, collect, and enjoy all and singular the fees, wages, rewards, and profits whatsoever pertaining and belonging to the same offices and measurings, and to every or either of them, to the use of the aforesaid mayor and commonalty and citizens, and their successors, to be received and perceived by the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being, during the time of his mayoralty, or by his sufficient deputies, without impeachment of his said majesty, or his heirs or successors, or any officers, bailiffs, or ministers of his said majesty, or his heirs and successors, or the admirals of England of his said majesty, his heirs and successors, or other subjects of his said majesty or his successors whomsoever, or of any grant by his said majesty or his heirs or successors to be made to the contrary; to have, hold, and enjoy the office aforesaid, and all and singular the other premises, with all and singular wages, rewards, fees, profits, and appurtenances whatsoever belonging or pertaining to the same offices and every or either of them, to the aforesaid mayor and commonalty and citizens, and their successors, for ever, to be exercised and executed by the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being, during the time of his mayoralty, or by his sufficient deputies, without rendering or making any account thereof or any other thing to his said majesty, his heirs or successors, so that no other bailiff or conservator of the water aforesaid, or measurer of coals, grains, salt, apples, pears, plumbs, eatable roots, onions, or other merchandizes, wares, or other thing or things above mentioned, be or in anywise intermeddle himself in the premises or any of them; and his said majesty, willing to show more abundant favour to the aforesaid mayor and commonalty and citizens, of his said majesty's special grace, and of his certain knowledge and mere motion, his said majesty did, for himself, his heirs and successors, grant, and by the said charter now in recital confirm, to the aforesaid mayor and commonalty and citizens, and their successors, that although the same mayor and commonalty and citizens, or their predecessors, in any case arising thitherto, had not fully used, or had perchance abused the offices aforesaid, or any one or other of the offices or measurings aforesaid, or any thing or things to the same or either of them pertaining or belonging, nevertheless the same mayor and commonalty and citizens, and their successors, might thenceforth freely, quietly, and peacefully enjoy and use the offices aforesaid so not used or abused, and every of them, and the measurings aforesaid so not used or abused, and every of them, without let or hindrance of his said majesty, his heirs or successors, the admirals of England of his said majesty, his heirs or successors, the justices, escheators, sheriffs, or other bailiffs, officers, or ministers of his said majesty, his heirs or successors, whomsoever; any statute or ordinances passed, or judgments rendered, or any charters of his said majesty's progenitors or predecessors, in past times made or granted to the contrary, notwithstanding that express mention was not made of the true yearly value or of any other value or certainty of the premises or any of them, or of any gifts or grants made before those times by his said majesty or any of his progenitors or predecessors to the aforesaid mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city of London aforesaid, and not made in the said charter now in recital, or any statute, act, ordinance, provision, proclamation, or restriction, to the contrary thereof, thitherto had, made, passed, ordained, or provided, or any other thing, cause, or matter whatsoever, in anywise notwithstanding; and whereas by another charter of his said majesty King James the First, bearing date the fifteenth day of December, in the twelfth year of his reign, after reciting that so great was the force of his said majesty's love towards the city of London, his royal chamber, that whatever in his said majesty lied, which he had deemed necessary or useful to the mayor and commonalty and citizens of his same city, he had freely of his own mind been inclined to give and bestow it upon the same mayor and commonalty and citizens of the said city, and his majesty's pleasure was, not only to confirm but also to amplify the grants in all past times made by his predecessors to his city of London; therefore, when, among other things, it was sufficiently manifest to his said majesty that the same mayor and commonalty and citizens of his city of London, from all times whereof the memory of man was not to the contrary, had had and lawfully exercised, and ought to have and exercise, the office of measurer and the measuring of all and singular coals of whatever kind, nature, and species soever they were, landed, conveyed or brought in or to the port of the said city upon the water of Thames, in every ship, boat, barge, or other vessel whatsoever, floating, laden, remaining, or being on every part of the same water of Thames, and upon every bank or every shore or every wharf of the same water of Thames, from the bridge of the town of Staines in the county of Middlesex westwards to London bridge aforesaid, and thence to a certain place called Yendall, otherwise Yenland, otherwise Yenleete, towards the sea and eastwards, and in the Medway, and in the port of the city of London, nevertheless a question had then very lately arisen whether the weighing of coals brought within the limits and bounds aforesaid, together with the measuring of coals, pertained to the mayor and commonalty and citizens of the said city; his said majesty therefore, in order to put an end to all controversy in that behalf then and at all times thereafter, and to set aside all doubt, and to the intent that the same mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city aforesaid might have, use, perceive, and enjoy, as well the weighing as the measuring, and every or either of them, and the wages, fees, and profits usual for the same, of his said majesty's especial grace and certain knowledge and mere motion, had given, granted, and confirmed, and by the said charter now in recital, for his said majesty, and his heirs and successors, did give, grant, and confirm to his beloved the mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city of London aforesaid, and their successors, the weighing of all and singular coals called stone coals, pit coals, earth coals, and all other coals weighable, of what kind, nature, and species soever they were, landed, conveyed, or brought in or to the port of the said city of London upon the aforesaid water of Thames, in every ship, boat, barge, or other vessel whatsoever, floating, laden, remaining, or being on either side of the same water of Thames, and upon every bank or every shore or every wharf of the said water of Thames, from the bridge of the town of Staines in the county of Middlesex aforesaid, westwards, to London bridge aforesaid, and thence to the aforesaid place called Yendall, otherwise Yenland, otherwise Yenleete, towards the sea, and in the Medway, and in the port of London aforesaid, to be sold or exposed to sale, and also the fees, wages, rewards, profits and advantages usual or thereunto belonging or in anywise appertaining, to be exercised by the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being, and by the deputies, officers and ministers of the same mayor; and further, of his said majesty's more abundant grace, and of his certain knowledge and mere motion, his said majesty had given, granted and confirmed, and by the charter now in recital for him, his heirs and successors, did give, grant and confirm, to the aforesaid mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that they and their successors for ever might have and enjoy, and should and might be able to have and enjoy, the office of the weighing of all and singular coals called stone coals, pit coals, earth coals, and all other coals weighable, of whatever kind, nature, or species soever they were, landed, conveyed, or brought in or to the port of the said city of London upon the aforesaid water of Thames, in every ship, boat, barge, or other vessel whatsoever, floating, laden, remaining, or being on every part of the same water of Thames, and upon every bank or every shore or every wharf of the same water of Thames, from the bridge of the town of Staines in the county of Middlesex aforesaid, westwards, to London bridge aforesaid, and thence to the aforesaid place called Yendall, otherwise Yenland, otherwise Yenleete, towards the sea, and in the Medway, and in the port of London aforesaid, to be sold or exposed to sale, and also all the fees, wages, rewards, profits, advantages, and emoluments whatsoever usual or to the same office belonging or in anywise pertaining, to be exercised by the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being, and by the deputies, officers and ministers of the same mayor; and also of his said majesty's further especial grace, and of his certain knowledge and mere motion, his said majesty had appointed, ordained, and made, and by the said charter now in recital, for his said majesty, his heirs and successors, did appoint, ordain, create, and make the aforesaid mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city of London aforesaid, and their successors, by the mayor of the same city for the time being, during the time of his mayoralty, or by the deputies, officers, ministers and servants of the same mayor for the time being, to be weighers of all and singular coals called stone coals, pit coals, earth coals, and all other coals weighable, and to have and exercise and execute the weighing of all and singular coals called stone coals, pit coals, earth coals, and all other coals weighable, of what kind, nature, or species soever they were, landed, conveyed or brought in or to the port of the said city of London upon the aforesaid water of Thames, in every ship, boat, barge, or other vessel whatsoever, floating, laden, remaining or being on every part of the same water of Thames, and upon every bank or every shore or every wharf of the same water of Thames, which should happen to stop, remain, and be delivered or set down from the aforesaid bridge of Staines in the said county of Middlesex westwards, and thence to the aforesaid place called Yendall, otherwise Yenland, otherwise Yenleete, towards the sea, and in the Medway, and in the port of London aforesaid, to be sold or exposed to sale; and reciting that a question had arisen respecting the quantity of the fee asked, taken and received by the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being, and by his deputies, ministers, servants and officers, for the weighing of every ton weight of coals weighable, computing twenty hundred weight (each hundred weight containing five score and twelve pounds weight) to every ton weight, brought within the limits and bounds aforesaid; his said majesty, entirely to put an end to all question of the kind, did, of his special grace, and of his certain knowledge and mere motion, declare, establish, and for him, his heirs and successors, grant to the aforesaid mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that it should and might be fully lawful to the said mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city aforesaid, and their successors, by the mayor of the same city for the time being, and by the deputies, ministers, officers, and servants of such mayor for the time being, to ask, demand, take, receive and have the fee of eight-pence of lawful money of England to the use of the aforesaid mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city aforesaid, and their successors, for the weighing of every the like ton of coals aforesaid, and of all other coals weighable, of every kind, and so according to the rate aforesaid for a greater or less quantity, of the person who should bring the like coals, for and in respect of the charge and cost of the same mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city of London aforesaid, and their successors, for scales, and for and in respect of their attendance, labour, and other necessary costs and expenses taken and expended in and about the premises, which said fee of eight-pence the aforesaid mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city aforesaid had hitherto had and perceived, and did then have and perceive, for the weighing of a like ton of coals; and also his said majesty did command, and by the said charter now in recital, for him, his heirs and successors, firmly order and enjoin, all and singular merchants and other persons whatsoever bringing and about to bring coals called sea coals, stone coals, pit coals, earth coals, or any other coals, of what kind, nature, or species soever they were, in or within the limits and bounds aforesaid, upon the water of Thames aforesaid, in any ship, boat, or other vessel whatsoever, being within the same limits, that neither they nor any of them should thenceforth deliver or set down, nor presume or cause or permit such coals called sea coals, pit coals, stone coals, and earth coals, or other coals, of whatsoever kind they were, to be unladen, discharged, delivered, or set down, from or out of the same ships, boats, or other vessels, being within the limits and bounds aforesaid, in the water of Thames aforesaid, upon every wharf, bank, or shore on either side of the same water of Thames within the limits aforesaid, or otherwise to be carried away or set down out of the same ships, boats, or other vessels, before the mayor of his city aforesaid for the time being should have received certain notice of the quantity of all such coals so brought in any ship, boat, or other vessel whatsoever within the limits aforesaid, and should have given direction for unlading the like coals, and for the weighing or measuring of the like coals, according to the nature and quality of the same coals; to the intent that the same mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being, according to the duty of his office, could and might be able to render a better and readier reckoning and account to his said majesty, his heirs and successors, of what quantity of coals of every kind from time to time had been brought into the port of his city of London aforesaid, and within the limits aforesaid, and in what manner the aforesaid city of London, his royal chamber, and the parts and places near and immediately adjoining the port of the same city, were from time to time and at all times provided, if occasion should so require, and at any time his said majesty, his heirs and successors, should demand the same of the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being; and also to the intent that the money to be taken, and the other profits due to his said majesty, his heirs and successors, for the like coals or any of them so brought and to be brought within the limits aforesaid (if any there should be), might be better answered for and paid to the officers and ministers of his said majesty, his heirs and successors, to the use of his said majesty, his heirs and successors, on pain of contempt of his royal command, and of incurring all such pains and penalties as by the laws and statutes of this realm of England could be inflicted against the like offenders for disregard and contempt; and also reciting, that because it was notoriously well known that the river Thames was so necessary, convenient, and useful to the city of London aforesaid, that without the said river the said city could not long subsist, flourish and continue, and that by the forestalling, engrossing and regrating of coals brought in or to the port of the said city upon the water of Thames aforesaid, the like coals were rendered dearer, to the great loss and prejudice as well of his said majesty as of his subjects; and further reciting, that divers ill-disposed persons, looking more to their own private advantage and profit than to the general and public good and benefit of his city aforesaid, and by no means regarding the conservancy of the same river, did with impunity, and then daily, usually sell coals and other things of that sort by retail in a less quantity, in boats commonly called lighters, and other vessels, floating, placed and being in and upon the water of Thames aforesaid, after the like coals had been unladen from the ships and other vessels which at first brought the same coals and other things of that sort within the limits and bounds abovesaid, upon the water of Thames aforesaid, which said persons made the boats commonly called lighters and other vessels as it were their common shops and warehouses, and in the same did daily hold, upon the water of Thames aforesaid, a common market for the sale of the like coals and other things of that sort, having one, two, three, and sometimes more boats, commonly called lighters, and other vessels, lying and affixed one to the other in the river Thames aforesaid, by which the forestalling, monopoly, and regrating aforesaid growed and increased every day, to the great deception, loss and oppression as well of the rich as the poor, and the prices of the coals and other things were augmented and rendered dearer; and that by the frequent importation, carrying away, measuring and weighing the like coals and other things of that sort into and out of the same boats, commonly called lighters, and other vessels, a great many of the same coals and other filth very often fell and were thrown into the river Thames, to the great nuisance and choking up of the stream of the same river, and the aforesaid boats and other vessels so placed greatly impeded as well the course of the stream of the river aforesaid as the passage of those passing by upon the water of the same river; his said majesty therefore, considering it just that so great an evil ought not longer to be permitted to continue, but should, as quickly as possible, be put an end to and removed, did firmly order and enjoin, and for him, his heirs and successors, prohibit all and singular persons whatsoever, that neither they nor any of them should thenceforth sell nor presume to sell any coals of any kind whatever upon the water of Thames, in any boat commonly called lighters, or in any other vessel whatsoever, except only in the same ships or other vessels which at first brought the like coals within the port of the city aforesaid, and within the limits and bounds abovesaid, and not otherwise, unless upon some port, quay, or wharf near the river aforesaid, under pain of contempt of his royal command, and of incurring such pains and penalties as by the laws and statutes of this realm could be inflicted against the like offenders for disregard and contempt; and because his said majesty's intention was, that the same mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city aforesaid, and their successors, should fully enjoy the premises aforesaid, his said majesty therefore, by the said charter now in recital, did declare and signify his will and pleasure, and will, and for him, his heirs and successors, grant and agree, to and with the aforesaid mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that the same mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city aforesaid, and their successors, might securely, peacefully and quietly have, exercise, enjoy and use all and singular the premises above mentioned, to them and their successors for ever, without hindrance of his said majesty, his heirs and successors, or any officers or ministers of his said majesty, his heirs or successors, and without making or rendering any account thereof or any other thing to his said majesty, his heirs and successors: and if it should happen that any defect in the said charter now in recital were thereafter found, or any doubt, ambiguity, or question respecting the premises arose or were made, his said majesty, his heirs and successors, would vouchsafe to grant and make other letters patent under the great seal of England, of him, his heirs or successors, to the same mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city aforesaid, and their successors, for the better donation, grant and confirmation, and for the more secure enjoyment of the premises, whenever it should be desired by the same mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city aforesaid, or their successors, that express mention of the true yearly value, or of the certainty of the premises or any of them, or of other gifts or grants before those times made by his said majesty, or any of his progenitors or ancestors, to the aforesaid mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city aforesaid, was not made in the said charter now in recital, or any statute, act, ordinance, provision, proclamation or restriction to the contrary thereof, thitherto had, made, passed, ordained or provided, or any other thing, cause or matter whatsoever, in anywise notwithstanding: and whereas by an act of parliament passed in the fifth and sixth year of the reign of King William and Queen Mary, intituled 'An Act for the Relief of the Orphans and other Creditors of the City of London,' it was enacted, that for all sorts of coal which should be imported or brought into the port of the said city of London, or the river of Thames within the liberty of the said city, upon the same river, to be sold by the chaldron or ton, there should be paid, by way of imposition thereupon, according to the rates and duties after mentioned, (that is to say,) for all such sorts of coal or culm as were usually sold by the chaldron, for every chaldron thereof which should be imported from and after the twenty-fourth day of June, one thousand six hundred and ninety-four, the sum of four-pence metage for ever, over and above what was then lawfully paid for the metage thereof, which said sum should be paid in like manner as the then present duty for metage was or had been accustomed to be paid and from time to time be paid to the said mayor and commonalty and citizens of the said city by the officer and officers receiving the said metage; and for all such sort of coals or culm which should be imported into the said port or members thereof from and after the twenty-ninth day of September, one thousand seven hundred, (over and above all other impositions and duties, and the above-mentioned sum of four-pence,) the further sum of sixpence for every chaldron thereof; and for such sort of coals, as were sold by the ton, for every ton thereof containing twenty hundred weight, the like sum of sixpence; which said imposition of sixpence should continue from the said twenty-ninth day of September for and during the term of fifty years and no longer; and the said imposition of sixpence per chaldron was to be answered and paid to the said mayor and commonalty and citizens by the master, owner or owners, or other person or persons taking charge of any ship or vessel whereupon the same should be laden, before they should break bulk, or have a meter assigned for the measuring or weighing any coals to be as aforesaid delivered from on board such ship or vessel, the same to be paid at such place or places as by the said mayor and court of aldermen should from time to time be appointed, within the said city or liberties thereof, for the receipt thereof, upon receipt whereof the party appointed to receive the same should, without delay, fee or reward, deliver a receipt to the person or persons who should pay the said duty or Water baillage and groundage suspended.

Sect. 62. "During the said term of seven years, if the said rate or duty of twelve pence per ton shall so long continue payable, the said mayor and commonalty and citizens shall not receive or take the water baillage and groundage to which they are now entitled in respect of the coals imported or brought into the said port of the said city of London, and the ship in which the same are imported, or the sums for which the said lord mayor for the time being is entitled for permits and for registering certificates."

Water baillage and groundage resumed after seven years.

Sect. 63. "Provided always, nevertheless, that at the end of the said term of seven years, and also if at any earlier period the said rate or duty of twelve pence per ton shall cease to be payable as aforesaid, the lord mayor of the said city of London, and the said mayor and commonalty and citizens, shall for ever thereafter be entitled to the said water baillage and groundage, and the sums to which the said lord mayor for the time being is entitled for permits and for registering certificates, in as full, ample and beneficial a manner, to all intents and purposes, as if this act had not been made, and the interruption in the exercise or in the receipt of the same shall not be or be deemed in law to be a waiver or discontinuance thereof, but the same shall be in as full force and effect, and may be enforced and recovered by the same remedies, and may be claimed and pleaded in the same manner, to all intents and purposes as if they had been received respectively during the time in which the exercise and receipt thereof respectively shall have been suspended, interrupted or varied by virtue of this act; and that the lord mayor of the said city of London, and the said mayor and commonalty and citizens, shall and may prescribe and continue to prescribe in any action, suit or other proceeding at law or equity, for the said water baillage and groundage, and the sums to which the said lord mayor for the time being is or may be entitled for permits and for registering certificates, as if they had continued in the receipt of the said water baillage and groundage, and the sums to which the said lord mayor for the time being is entitled for permits and for registering certificates, notwithstanding the nonuser thereof in pursuance of this act."

Sect. 64. "And whereas by an act passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled 'An Act for granting Duties of Customs,' a duty of one shilling and three-pence the ton is granted on coals, culm and cinders brought by the Grand Junction or Paddington canals nearer to London than the stone or post at or near the north-east point in Grove Park in the county of Hertford, or brought down the river Thames nearer to London than the city's stone placed on the west side of Staines Bridge in the county of Middlesex, payable to the proper officer of customs, in lieu of the duty called orphans' duty, and of all other rates, dues and duties payable to the corporation of London upon coal, culm and cinders imported into the port of London, to be paid over to the said corporation at the end of every quarter: and whereas it is expedient for the purposes of this act that the said duty of one shilling and three-pence should not be received at the present time, but that duties of one shilling per ton and one penny per ton on coals, culm and cinders should be taken in lieu thereof in the said canals and river at the aforesaid places: be it therefore further enacted, that during the term of seven years, to be computed from the thirty-first day of December next after the passing of this act, the sum of one shilling and three pence per ton on coals, culm and cinders brought by the Grand Junction and Paddington canals nearer to London than the stone or post at or near the north-east point in Grove Park in the county of Hertford, or brought down the Thames nearer to London than the city's stone placed on the west side of Staines Bridge in the county of Middlesex, shall not be paid; and in lieu thereof, and of all such other rates and duties as aforesaid, the sums of one shilling and one penny per ton on coals, culm and cinders brought nearer to London on the said canals and river than the places aforesaid, shall be paid to such person or persons, at such place or places, in such manner, and under such regulations, as the said mayor, aldermen and commons, in common council assembled, shall from time to time direct and appoint; and the receipt of such person or persons shall be a valid and effectual discharge for the same; and in case of neglect or refusal to pay such duties of one shilling and one penny per ton on coals, culm and cinders, or either of them, or any part or parts thereof, on demand, to such person or persons as aforesaid, then and in every such case it shall be lawful for the said mayor, aldermen and commons, in common council assembled, to sue for the same by action of debt or upon the case, in the name of the mayor and commonalty and citizens of the said city of London, in any of his majesty's courts of record at Westminster; or the person or persons to whom the said duty ought to have been paid may, and he and they is and are hereby empowered, either at the time of the barge or other vessel containing such coals, culm and cinders passing the place appointed for receiving such duty, or at any time afterwards, to seize and detain such barge or vessel, and the coals, culm and cinders therein, for or in respect whereof the said duties ought to be paid, until paymont thereof, together with reasonable charges for such seizure and detention; and if the same shall not be redeemed within five days after the taking thereof, the same may be appraised and sold as the law directs in case of distress for rent: provided always, nevertheless, that when the said duty or sum of one penny per ton first hereinbefore authorised to be taken shall cease, the said last-mentioned duty or sum of one penny shall also cease, and the said duty or sum of one shilling per ton shall be payable as aforesaid, without the said duty or sum of one penny per ton; and when and as often as the said first-mentioned duty, or any other renewed duty in lieu thereof, shall again be payable as aforesaid, a sum or duty of the like amount shall be payable, together with the said rate or duty of one shilling per ton, in manner hereinbefore mentioned."

upon the said water of Thames, in every ship, boat, barge or other vessel whatsoever, floating, laden, remaining or being on every part of the same water of Thames, and upon every bank or every shore, or every wharf of the same water of Thames, which should happen to stop, remain, and be delivered or set down from the aforesaid bridge of the said town of Staines in the said county of Middlesex westwards to the aforesaid bridge of London, and thence to the aforesaid place called Yendall, otherwise Yenland, otherwise Yenlecte, towards the sea and eastwards, and in the Medway, and in the said port of the city of London aforesaid, or to all wages, rewards, fees and profits to the same office of measurer belonging and pertaining, (being the rights mentioned in the said charter as aforesaid), or any other rights or privileges to which the said lord mayor, or the said mayor and commonalty and citizens respectively, are entitled, but that the same shall be and continue in full force and virtue, and may be enforced and recovered by the same remedies, and claimed or pleaded in the same manner, as if there had been no such suspension or interruption of any rights or privileges to which they are or may be entitled with respect to coals."

Chamberlain to keep account of receipts and disbursements on account of metage monies.

Sect. 67. "The chamberlain of the said city for the time being shall keep one or more book or books in which all the monies to be received by virtue of this act in respect of the said rates and duties of eight-pence per ton, and the application thereof, shall from time to time be entered and set down, and such entries shall specify the times when, the occasions for which, and the names of the persons to whom, the same shall be paid."

The city to lay accounts before parliament.

Sect. 68. "The said mayor, aldermen and commons, in common council assembled, shall once in each and every year, or oftener if required, lay before both houses of parliament an account of the monies to be received by virtue of this act in respect of the said rates and duties of eight-pence per ton."

Duties to be paid to the clerk of the coal market before bulk is broken.

Sect. 69. "The rates or duties of one penny and twelve-pence per ton on coals, cinders and culm, made payable by this act, shall be paid by every owner or master or other person having the command or charge of the ship or other vessel laden with such coals, cinders or culm, or by the factor thereof, before bulk shall be broken, or any of such coals, cinders or culm in such ship or vessel shall be unladen, and the same shall be paid at the said coal market for the time being, to one of the clerks of the said market; and the certificate or certificates of any clerk of the coal market, that the rates or duties on the coals, cinders or culm in any ship or vessel have been paid, shall be an effectual discharge for the same; and if any of the said clerks shall refuse, on demand, to receive the said rates or duties, or to give a certificate for the same, without fee or reward, such clerk shall for every such offence forfeit any sum not exceeding ten pounds."

Penalty on breaking bulk before payment of the duties.

Sect. 70. "If the bulk of any ship or vessel laden with coals, cinders or culm liable to the duties hereby imposed, shall be broken, or any of such coals, cinders, or culm shall be unladen, before the rates or duties made payable by this act shall have been paid, the master or owner of such ship or vessel shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding twenty-five pounds."

Custom house officers not to cancel bond before duties are paid.

Sect. 71. "And to the intent that the rates or duties aforesaid may be duly accounted for and paid, be it further enacted, that no collector or other officer of his majesty's customs shall on any pretence whatever cancel any bond which shall have been entered into by the master or owner or other person having the command or charge of any ship or other vessel which shall have been laden with coals, cinders, or culm liable to the duties hereby imposed, unless and until a return has been made by the clerk of the coal market to the coast office at the custom house, London, that the owner, master, or other person, having the command or charge of such ship or other vessel, has paid the rates or duties by this act imposed; and the clerk of the coal market shall, within seven days after the said rates or duties have been paid upon any such ship or vessel, transmit to the said coast office a return stating the name of the ship and the number of tons upon which the said rates or duties have been paid, upon pain of forfeiting for every such offence any sum not exceeding twenty-five pounds."

Manner of recovering rates and duties.

Sect. 72. "And to the intent that the rates and duties imposed by this act may be more effectually collected and levied, be it enacted, that in case any owner or master, or any other person having the command or charge of any ship or other vessel shall neglect to pay the same, it shall be lawful for any other person or persons, appointed for that purpose by the said mayor, aldermen and commons, in common council assembled, to go on board such ship or other vessel to demand, collect, and receive the said rates or duties, and on nonpayment thereof to take and distrain any such ship or other vessel, and all the tackle, apparel, and furniture thereto belonging, or any part thereof, and all or any part of the coals, cinders or culm in respect whereof such rates or duties shall be payable, either on board such ship or other vessel, or on land, and the same to retain until the respective rates or duties shall be satisfied and paid; and in case of any neglect or default in payment of the said rates or duties for the space of five days after any distress or distresses so made or taken, that then it shall be lawful for the said person or persons appointed as aforesaid, to cause the same to be appraised by two or more sworn appraisers or other sufficient persons, and afterwards to sell the said distress or distresses, and out of the produce of the sale thereof to satisfy themselves or himself, as well for and in respect of their or his reasonable charges in taking, keeping, appraising, and selling the same, as also for or in respect of the said rates and duties and every of them, rendering the overplus (if any such there be) to the owner, upon demand; and it shall be lawful for the said mayor and commonalty and citizens, in case of nonpayment of the rates and duties as aforesaid, instead of recovering the same in manner aforesaid, or in case the whole thereof shall not be so recovered, to proceed for the recovery of the same, or so much thereof as shall not be so recovered, by action of debt or on the case in any court of record at Westminster."

Persons evading payment of duties to remain liable, and also to forfeit a sum equal thereto.

Sect. 73. "If any master, owner, or other person having the command or charge of any ship or other vessel, or the owner or factor of any coals, cinders or culm, shall by any means whatsoever at any time or times elude, evade, or avoid the payment of the rates or duties hereby made payable in respect thereof, or any part of the same, every person eluding, evading, or avoiding payment as aforesaid, shall forfeit and pay to the said mayor and commonalty and citizens, a sum equal to the amount of such rates and duties, and shall also stand charged with and be liable to the payment of the said rates and duties; which rates and duties, as well as the forfeiture incurred by having eluded, evaded, or avoided the payment thereof, shall and may be recovered from such master or owner or factor, or such person having such command or charge respectively, at any time or times either by the means hereinbefore prescribed for the levying the said rates or duties, and by the same method, or in such manner as is hereinafter directed for levying and recovering the fines, forfeitures, and penalties imposed by this act, and with the like costs."

Owners of ships may compound for the number of tons in respect of which the duties shall be paid.

Sect 74. "In order to prevent any trouble in ascertaining the quantity of coals, cinders or culm contained in any ship or vessel, it shall be lawful for the said mayor, aldermen and commons of the city of London, in common council assembled, or any committee or committees appointed by them, to agree and compound with the master, owner, or agent of any such ship or other vessel, that the same shall on any voyage or voyages, with respect to the rates or duties hereby made payable, be considered to contain such number of tons of coals, cinders, or culm as the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, or such committee or committees, upon consideration, shall think reasonable; and a certificate of such composition, signed by the town clerk of the said city for the time being, expressing the number of tons of coals, cinders, or culm agreed to be considered to be contained in such ship or vessel, in respect of which the rates or duties imposed by this act shall be payable, shall be given to the master or owner of such ship or vessel: provided always, that if any such ship or other vessel shall, after such composition, be enlarged, repaired, altered, or varied, whereby or by means whereof a larger quantity of coal can be carried in such ship or vessel, such composition shall be void; and if the master or

1 & 2 Will. 4, c. lxxvi.

Penalty for neglect to register, or refusing to show certificate.

Sect. 76. "Where no such certificate of composition shall have been given, and the said mayor, aldermen, and commons of the said city of London, in common council assembled, or any inspector appointed by them, shall not be satisfied with any such fitter's certificate or account and affidavit as aforesaid, and shall require, before any coals shall be delivered from the ship or vessel respecting which the same shall have been given, that such coals shall be weighed, in order to ascertain whether such certificate or account and affidavit be correct, the master of such ship or vessel shall permit any such inspector to weigh the coals in such ship or vessel at the time of the delivery thereof; and in case the quantity of coals in such ship or vessel shall exceed the quantity mentioned in the fitter's certificate thereof, or such account and affidavit as aforesaid, to the extent of five pounds over and above every one hundred pounds of such coals, then, in addition to the penalty of one hundred pounds which will be incurred by sending or giving such false certificate or account as aforesaid, there shall be paid by the master of such ship or vessel to the inspector by whom such coals shall be weighed, a sum not exceeding three pence per ton for or in respect of the trouble of weighing the same and the use of the weighing machines employed for that purpose, which sum shall be recovered in the same manner as hereinafter is directed with respect to any penalty imposed by this act; but no payment shall be required by such inspector for trouble or the use of machines in case the quantity of coals shall not be found to exceed the quantity stated in such certificate or account as aforesaid to the extent hereinbefore mentioned."

In certain cases master of ship to permit inspector to weigh coals.

Additional penalty of 3*d.* per ton if coals shall exceed the quantity mentioned in fitter's certificate by 5lbs. in 100lbs.

Sect. 77. "All fines, penalties, or forfeitures by this act, or by virtue of the powers and authorities thereof, imposed, (the manner of levying and recovering whereof is not hereby otherwise directed), not exceeding twenty-five pounds, shall be sued for within one calendar month (now two calendar months, 1 & 2 Vict. c. ci., s. 7, post, 729) after the offence or offences committed; and all such fines, penalties, and forfeitures shall be levied and recovered before any justice or justices of the peace for the county, city, or place where the offence shall be committed; and such justice or justices is and are hereby empowered and required, upon information or complaint to him or them made, to grant a summons or warrant to bring before him or them such offender or offenders at the time and place as shall be in such warrant specified; and if, on the conviction of the offenders respectively, either on his, her, or their confession, or on the evidence of any one or more credible witness or witnesses upon oath, (which oath such justice or justices is and are hereby empowered to administer), such fine, penalty, or forfeiture, shall not be forthwith paid, the same shall be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender or offenders, by warrant under the hand and seal of such justice or justice; and the overplus of the money (if any) raised by such distress and sale, after deducting the fine, penalty, or forfeiture, and the costs and charges of making such distress and sale shall be rendered to the owner of the goods and chattels so distrained; and for want of distress, or in case the fine, penalty, or forfeiture, shall not be forthwith paid, it shall and may be lawful to and for such justice or justices to commit every such offender to the common gaol or house of correction for the county, city, or place where the offence shall be committed, there to remain without bail or mainprize for any time not exceeding six calendar months, unless such fine, penalty, or forfeiture, and all reasonable charges attending the recovery thereof, shall be sooner paid; and all such fines, penalties, and forfeitures when recovered shall be paid into the hands of the overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place where the same shall have been incurred, for the use of the poor of such parish, township, or place."

Justices may proceed by summons in the recovery of penalties.

Sect. 78. "In all cases in which by this act any penalty or forfeiture is made recoverable before a justice of the peace, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace to whom complaint shall be made of any offence against this act, to summon the party complained against before him, and on such summons to hear and determine the matter of such complaint, and on proof of the offence to convict the offender, and to adjudge him to pay the penalty or forfeiture incurred, and to proceed to recover the same, although no information in writing shall have been exhibited or taken by or before such justice; and all such proceedings by summons without information shall be as good, valid, and effectual, to all intents and purposes, as if an information in writing was exhibited."

Power to the justice to give part of penalties to informers.

Sect. 79. "Provided always nevertheless, that it shall be lawful for any justice or justices before whom any such conviction shall take place, if they or he shall think fit, to order and direct any part, not exceeding one half, of such fines, penalties, and forfeitures, to be paid or applied to or for the use of the informer or informers, or other persons aiding or assisting in the apprehension of the offender or offenders, or any of them."

Expenses of witnesses may be directed to be paid.

Sect. 80. "It shall be lawful for any justice or justices, before whom any person or persons shall be brought or convicted for any offence for which a penalty is imposed by this act, to direct all or any part, according to the discretion of such justice or justices, of the reasonable expenses of any constable, police officer, or other witness of the matter which shall be charged, and of such compensation (if any) for the time and trouble of such witness, as such justice or justices shall think reasonable, to be paid either by the offender or offenders, or the complainant or complainants; and the sum so ordered to be paid shall and may be recovered, together with any penalty of which the person by whom the same shall be ordered to be paid shall have been convicted, or without, in the same manner as any penalty directed to be recovered by this act, and shall be paid to such constable, police officer, or other witness."

Penalties incurred by carmen may be recovered from their employers;

Sect. 81. "Where any carman, driver, or other person employed by any seller or sellers of, or dealer or dealers in coals, shall have been convicted of any offence against this act, and the penalty or forfeiture for the same, or any sum directed to be paid to any witness, shall not be forthwith paid, the same respectively shall be paid by the seller or sellers, dealer or dealers, by whom such carman, driver, or other person shall have been employed at the time when such offence was committed, and shall be recovered by such ways and means as are hereinbefore directed with respect to any penalty imposed by this act: provided always, that such carman, driver, or other person shall be liable to repay to such seller or sellers, dealer or dealers, the amount of such penalty and the costs attending the same; and in case of nonpayment thereof upon demand, and oath, or by a quaker or quakers an affirmation, of the payment thereof, and that the same and the cost thereof have not been repaid by such carman, driver, or person, although demanded, (such oath or affirmation to be made before any justice or justices of the peace for the county, city, or place where such penalty shall have been recovered), the amount of such penalty and costs shall be recovered in like manner as any penalty is directed to be recovered by this act, and shall be paid to such seller or sellers, dealer or dealers respectively."

who may recover them back.

Appeal to sessions.

Sect. 82. "It shall and may be lawful to and for any person or persons so convicted by any justice or justices of the peace, as before mentioned, of any offence or offences against this act, or against any rule, order, or by-law made in pursuance thereof, to appeal to the justices of the peace assembled at the next general quarter sessions or general sessions to be holden for the county, city, or place where such conviction shall be made, on giving immediate notice of such appeal, and finding sufficient security to the satisfaction of such justice or justices for prosecuting the said appeal with effect, and abiding the determination of the Court therein; and such justices in such general quarter sessions or general sessions shall hear and determine the matter of such appeal, and may either confirm or quash and annul the said conviction, and award such costs to either party, as to them the said justices shall seem just and reasonable; and the decision of the said justices therein shall be final, binding, and conclusive; and no proceedings to be had or taken in pursuance of this act shall be quashed or vacated for want of form only, or be removed by certiorari, or any other writ or process whatsoever, into any of his majesty's courts of record at Westminster or elsewhere, any law or statute to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding."

Plaintiff not to recover after tender of amends.

Notice of action.

Sect. 88. "No plaintiff or plaintiffs shall recover in any action to be commenced against any person or persons for any thing done in pursuance of this act, unless notice in writing shall have been given to the defendant or defendants twenty-one days before such action, signed by the attorney for the plaintiff or plaintiffs, specifying the cause of such action; nor shall the plaintiff or plaintiffs recover in any such action, if tender of sufficient amends hath been made to him, her, or them, or to his, her, or their attorney, by or on the behalf of the defendant or defendants, before such action brought; and in case no tender shall have been made, it shall and may be lawful to and for the defendant or defendants in any such action, at any time before issue joined, to pay into Court such sum of money as he, she, or they shall think fit, whereupon such proceeding, order, and judgment shall be made and given in and by such Court as in other actions where the defendant is allowed to pay money into court."

Limitation of actions.

Sect. 89. "No action or suit shall be commenced against any person or persons for any thing done in pursuance of this act after three calendar months next after the fact committed; and every such action or suit shall be brought and tried in the county or place where the cause of action shall arise; and if any such action or suit shall be brought before twenty-one days' notice shall have been given, or after a sufficient satisfaction made or tendered as aforesaid, or after the time limited for bringing the same as aforesaid, or shall be brought in any other county or place than as aforesaid, then the jury shall find for the defendant or defendants; and upon such verdict, or if the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall be nonsuited, or discontinue his, her, or their action or suit after the defendant or defendants shall have appeared, or if upon demurrer judgment shall be given against the plaintiff or plaintiffs, then the defendant or defendants shall recover double costs, and have such remedy for recovering the same as any defendant hath for costs of suit in any other cases by law."

Commencement of the act.

Sect. 90. "This act shall commence and take place from and after the thirty-first day of December next after the passing of this act."

Public act.

Sect. 91. "This act shall be deemed and taken to be a public act, and shall be judicially taken notice of as such by all judges, justices, and others, without being specially pleaded."

By stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. ci., intituled "An Act to continue for Seven Years an Act for regulating the Vend and Delivery of Coals in London and Westminster, and in certain Parts of the adjacent Counties," (14th August, 1838,) and reciting the passing of the 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. lxxvi., and "that the term of seven years, during which the provisions contained in the said act were thereby directed to continue in force, will expire on the thirty-first day of December one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight, and that it was expedient that the same should be continued, and that in the respects herein-after mentioned the said recited act should be altered and amended:" it is enacted "that the said act, and all the powers, authorities, directions, provisions, penalties, forfeitures, regulations, clauses, matters, and things therein contained (except such of them or such parts thereof respectively as are repealed, altered, or otherwise provided for), shall be and the same is and are hereby continued for the further term of seven years from the thirty-first day of December one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight; and all the provisions, regulations, clauses, matters, and things in the said act contained to take effect at the end of the term of seven years therein mentioned, or at any other time or times, shall take effect in the same manner, to all intents and purposes, as if the term of fourteen years had been inserted in the said act instead of the said term of seven years."

2. Regulations, &c. in London, &c.

1 & 2 Vict. c. cl.

1 & 2 Will. 4, c. lxxvi. continued, except as hereby altered.

Sect. 2. "That so much of the said act as directs that with any quantity of coals exceeding five hundred and sixty pounds, delivered from any lighter, ship, barge, or other craft, or from any wharf, warehouse, or other place within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the General Post Office in the city of London, the seller or sellers thereof should deliver or cause to be delivered to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, or to his, her, or their agent or agents, servant or servants, immediately on the arrival of the cart, waggon, or other carriage, or lighter, barge, or craft, in which such coals should be sent, and before any of such coals should be unloaded, a paper or ticket in the form therein mentioned, and as imposes a penalty on any such seller or sellers as should not deliver or cause to be delivered such ticket as therein is mentioned, and a penalty on the carman, driver of, or other person attending any such cart, waggon, or other carriage, or the person having the charge of the lighter, barge, or craft laden with any such coals, who should refuse or neglect to deliver such ticket as therein is mentioned, shall, so far as relates to any coals delivered from and after sixty days after the passing of this act, be and the same is hereby repealed."

Repeal of so much of 1 & 2 Will 4, c. lxxvi. as directs the seller's ticket to be sent with coals.

Sect 3. "That with any quantity of coals exceeding five hundred and sixty pounds, delivered, from and after sixty days after the passing of this act, by any cart, waggon, or other carriage, within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the post office aforesaid, the seller or sellers thereof shall deliver or cause to be delivered to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, or to his, her, or their agent or agents, or servant or servants, immediately on the arrival of the cart, waggon, or other carriage in which such coals shall be sent, and before any of such coals shall be unloaded, a paper or ticket, according to the form in Schedule (A.) to this act annexed; and in case any such seller or sellers do not deliver or cause to be delivered such paper or ticket as aforesaid to the purchaser or purchasers of such coals, or to his, her, or their agent or agents, or servant or servants, before any part of such coals are unloaded, every such seller shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding twenty pounds; and in case the carman, driver of, or other person attending any such cart, waggon, or other carriage laden with any such coals, to whom any such paper or ticket shall have been given by or by the orders of the seller in order to be delivered to the purchaser, shall (having so first received the same from the seller or any person by the direction of the seller) refuse or neglect to deliver such paper or ticket to the purchaser or purchasers of such coals, or to his, her, or their agent or agents, or servant or servants, before any part of such coals shall be unloaded, such carman, driver, or other person so offending shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding twenty pounds: provided always, that coals delivered to any seller or dealer in coals, or to any person or persons purchasing the same at the coal market, may be delivered without any such paper or ticket." (a)

New enactment regarding the seller's ticket being sent with coals.

Exception.

(a) The 113th sect. of the 47 Geo. III. c. lxviii. made it imperative on the vender to deliver a ticket of this kind; and where a ticket was delivered not signed by the vender, it was held the vender could not recover the price of the coals

2. Regulations, &c. in London, &c.

1 & 2 Vict. c. ci.

A paper or ticket to be sent with coals delivered from lighters.

Sect. 4. "That with any quantity of coals exceeding five hundred and sixty pounds, delivered, from and after ten days after the passing of this act, by any lighter, vessel, barge, or other craft, within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the Post Office aforesaid, the seller or sellers thereof shall deliver or cause to be delivered to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, or to his, her, or their agent or agents, or servant or servants, immediately on the arrival of the lighter, vessel, barge, or other craft in which such coals shall be sent, and before any of such coals shall be unloaded, a paper or ticket setting forth in words at length the number of tons to be delivered, and the name of the coals, together with the name and number of the lighter, vessel, barge, or other craft, and the name of the seller or sellers, and also the name of the lighterman; and in case any such seller or sellers do not deliver or cause to be delivered such paper or ticket as aforesaid to the purchaser or purchasers of such coals, or to his, her, or their agent or agents, or servant or servants, before any part of such coals are unloaded, every such seller shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding twenty pounds; and in case the person having the charge of the lighter, vessel, barge, or craft laden with any such coals, to whom any such paper or ticket shall have been given by or by the orders of the seller, in order to be delivered to the purchaser, shall (having so first received the same from the seller, or any person by the direction of the seller,) refuse or neglect to deliver such paper or ticket to the purchaser or purchasers of such coals, or to his, her, or their agent or agents, or servant or servants, before any part of such coals shall be unloaded, the person so offending shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding twenty pounds: provided always, that coals delivered to any seller or dealer in coals, or to any person or persons purchasing the same at the coal market, may be delivered without any such paper or ticket."

Exception.

As to the weighing machines required to be sent with each cart, &c.

Sect. 5. "That no weighing machine shall be deemed a perfect weighing machine within the meaning of the said act unless proper weights shall be carried therewith, and also that any other just balance, with an even beam and legal weights, shall be deemed a perfect weighing machine within the meaning of the said act, without having been marked at Guildhall; and if any carman or driver required to carry a weighing machine by the said act and this act shall have placed in, on, or under his cart, waggon, or other carriage, any beam or scales or other weighing machine, or any weights, which shall be imperfect, or improper for the purpose of denoting the weight of coals, then and in every such case every such carman or driver, or person delivering such coals, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding five pounds, and the seller or sellers of, or dealer or dealers in, or carrier or carriers of such coals, shall forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding ten pounds."

Repeal of the penalty on preventing persons, other than the purchaser or his servant, from examining the weighing machine or weighing the sacks of coals.

Sect. 6. "That so much of the said act as imposes a penalty on any carman or driver of any cart, waggon, or other carriage in which coals shall be carried in sacks for delivery to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, for hindering, obstructing, or otherwise preventing the purchaser or purchasers of such coals, or his, her, or their servant, or any other person or persons whomsoever, from examining the weighing machine which in pursuance of the said act shall be placed in, on, or under such his cart, waggon, or other carriage, or weighing all or any of the sack or sacks of coals in such his cart, waggon, or other carriage, shall, so far as relates to the hindering, obstructing, or otherwise preventing as aforesaid any person or persons other than the purchaser or purchasers of such coals, or his, her, or their servant, be and the same is hereby repealed." sold. (Little v. Poole, 9 B. & Cres. 192; vide Brown v. Duncan, 10 B. & Cres. 93, explaining the law.)

Where the vender of coals himself inserts in the vender's ticket the description of them, it was not necessary in an action for penalties under the 47 Geo. III. c. lxviii to produce the ship meter's certificate as required by the 55th section of that act. (Reeve v. Starey, 4 Car. & P. 17.)

2. Regulations, &c. in London, &c.

1 & 2 Vict. c. ci.

Repeal of provision directing the suing for certain fines, &c.

Sect. 7. "That so much of the said act as directs that fines, penalties, or forfeitures, not exceeding twenty-five pounds, shall be sued for within one calendar month after the offence or offences committed, shall be and the same is hereby repealed; and that from and after the passing of this act all fines, penalties or forfeitures by the said act, or by virtue of the powers and authorities thereof, or by this act imposed, the manner of levying and recovering whereof is not otherwise provided for, not exceeding twenty-five pounds, shall be sued for within two calendar months after the offence or offences committed."

Such fines, &c. to be sued for within two calendar months.

Repeal of so much of 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 76, as directs fitter's affidavit to be transmitted to clerk of coal market every three months, and as directs an affidavit of the master to be made in case of loss of fitter's certificate.

Sect. 8. "That so much of the said act as directs that every fitter who should send or give any such certificate as therein mentioned to the clerk of the coal market in manner therein mentioned should, on or before the expiration of three calendar months next after the same should have been given, send, in a letter directed to the clerk of the coal market, an affidavit according to the form in the schedule to the said act annexed, sworn by him before a justice of the peace, and also so much of the said act as directs that in case it should happen that such fitter's certificate should be accidentally lost, or in case any such ship or vessel should have been originally loaded or entered outwards for exportation, and should afterwards change her destination, and arrive or come into the port of London without any such fitter's certificate having been obtained or provided, each and every master of such ship or vessel should deliver an account of the quantity and name or description of the coals on board his ship or vessel at the office of the clerk of the coal market, together with an affidavit to accompany such account, and to be sworn by such master before any justice of the peace, and as imposes a penalty on any master of any ship or vessel who should knowingly give in any false certificate or account as aforesaid to be registered, or who should not, when no certificate should have been sent by post within twenty-four hours after the arrival of the ship at her moorings within the port of London, deliver or cause to be delivered in his certificate, or such account and affidavit, to be registered in manner aforesaid, shall from and after the passing of this act be and the same is hereby repealed."

Fitter to transmit a declaration to the coal market every month; and master to make declaration in case of loss of certificate, &c.

5 & 6 W. 4, c. 62.

Penalty for refusing to send declaration.

When certificate lost, master to send an account and declaration.

Sect. 9. "That every fitter, who from and after the passing of this act shall send or give any such certificate as aforesaid, shall, on or before the expiration of one calendar month next after the same shall have been given, send, in a letter directed to the said clerk of the coal market, and put into the General Post Office, or deliver at the office of the said clerk of the coal market, a declaration to be made before any justice of the peace, or any master extraordinary in chancery, or commissioner for taking affidavits in any of her Majesty's courts at Westminster, according to the form in schedule (B.) to this act annexed, pursuant to the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 62, (see "Oaths," Vol. V.), in which declaration such fitter shall verify such certificate, alone or together with any other certificates which may have been sent or given by him in the meantime; and in case any such fitter shall omit or refuse to send the said declaration to the said clerk of the coal market in manner aforesaid, on or before the expiration of every calendar month, he shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding one hundred pounds; and in case it shall happen that such fitter's certificate shall be accidentally lost, or in case any such ship or vessel shall have been originally loaded or entered outwards for exportation, and shall afterwards change her destination, and arrive or come into the port of London, without any such fitter's certificate having been obtained or provided, then and in either of such last-mentioned cases each and every master of such ship or vessel shall deliver or cause to be delivered an account of the quantity, and name or names, or description or descriptions of coals on board of such his ship or vessel, at the office of the clerk of the coal market, together with a declaration to accompany such account pursuant to the said act of the sixth year of the reign of King William the Fourth, in which declaration such master shall state and verify such circumstances, either of the accidental loss of any such certificate, or of any such ship having been originally entered outwards and having afterwards changed her destination and arrived as aforesaid without any such certificate having been obtained or provided (as the case may be); and in case any master of any ship or vessel shall knowingly give in any false certificate or account as aforesaid to be registered, or shall not, when no certificate shall have been sent by the post within twenty-four hours after the arrival of his ship at her moorings in the port of London, deliver or cause to be delivered in his certificate or such account and declaration as aforesaid to be registered in manner aforesaid, every person so offending shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding one hundred pounds."

Allowance of drawback.

Sect. 10. "That from and after sixty days after the passing of this act there shall be allowed in the cases hereinafter mentioned, upon the exportation from the port of London of coals exceeding in quantity in one vessel twenty tons, which shall not have been landed, a drawback of the full amount of all the rates or duties which shall have been paid in respect of such coals; and in every case in which the owner of any such coals, or his agent, is desirous of obtaining such drawback, he shall give notice to the clerk of the coal market before such coals shall have been unloaded, according to the form number (1) in schedule (C.) to this act annexed; and in case the clerk of the coal market shall not be satisfied with the coal-weigher named in such notice, he may refuse to grant any certificate; but if and when the clerk of the coal market shall be satisfied with the coal-weigher named in such notice, he shall grant to the owner of the coals or his agent a certificate according to the form numbered (2) in schedule (C.) to this act annexed; and after such certificate shall have been granted the coals intended to be exported shall be weighed or delivered out of one vessel, either by lighter or otherwise, into the other; and thereupon the master of the vessel out of which such coals shall be weighed or delivered shall give a certificate to such coal-weigher according to the form number (3) in schedule (C.) to this act annexed; and the master of the vessel into which such coals shall be delivered shall give a certificate to such coal-weigher according to the form numbered (4) in schedule (C.) to this act annexed; and such coal-weigher shall deliver such two last-mentioned certificates to the clerk of the coal market, together with another certificate, to be signed by such coal-weigher, according to the form number (5) in schedule (C.) to this act annexed; and upon the receipt of such three certificates as last aforesaid, and, where such coals are exported to foreign parts, upon the production of a certificate from the proper officer of her Majesty's customs, if required, that the vessel mentioned in such certificate into which the coals have been delivered hath sailed from the port of London for foreign parts with such coals on board the same, the clerk of the coal market shall give to the owner of such coals or his agent an order for the payment of such drawback according to the form number (6) in schedule (C.) to this act annexed; and in every case in which any part of the coals (exceeding in quantity twenty tons in one vessel), upon which all the rates or duties shall have been paid, shall, without having been unloaded or transhipped, be left in and exported by the same vessel, the clerk of the coal market, if he shall be satisfied that the vessel in which such coals have been left has sailed from the port of London, with such coals on board the same, but not otherwise, shall give to the owner of such coals or his agent an order for the payment of such drawback according to the form number (7) in schedule (C.) to this act annexed; and upon the receipt and delivery of any such order as hereinbefore is mentioned for the payment of drawback at the chamber of the city of London the chamberlain shall pay to the bearer of such order the drawback therein ordered to be paid; and if the master of any vessel or any coal-weigher shall, in any certificate to be given according to the directions hereinbefore contained, state any circumstance which is not true for the purpose of enabling the owner of such coals or his agent to obtain any such drawback as aforesaid, or if any lighterman or other person employed to carry such coals from one vessel to another shall not deliver the whole quantity of such coals into the vessel named in the certificate, every such master or coal-weigher, lighterman, or other person so offending shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding one hundred pounds."

Vessels laden with coals departing without discharging their cargo to be exempt from

Sect. 11. "That in case the master of any vessel laden with coals shall, within ten days after the arrival of such vessel in the port of London and being duly entered at the office of the clerk of the coal market, be desirous of departing from the said port without discharging any part of the coals on board such vessel, the master of such vessel shall deliver a notice thereof to the clerk of the coal market according to the form number (1.) in schedule (D.) to this act annexed; and if no part of the cargo of such vessel has been delivered in the port of London, the clerk of the coal market shall deliver to the master of such vessel a permit according to the form number (2.) in schedule (D.) to this act annexed; and upon the receipt of such permit from the clerk of the coal market it shall be lawful for the said vessel to sail or depart from the port of London without having paid the duties upon such cargo, any statute, charter, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding: provided always, that in case any part of the cargo of such vessel shall have been delivered in the port of London, the master of such vessel and all other persons concerned shall be liable to and pay the penalties in the said act of the first and second years of the reign of King William the Fourth contained for breaking bulk without payment of duties."

2. Regulations, &c. in London, &c.

1 & 2 Vict. c. ci. payment of duties upon obtaining a permit.

Proviso.

The 6 & 7 Vict. c. ci. s. 23, enacts, "That immediately after the discharge of the cargo or the part thereof undertaken to be discharged by the coalwhippers sent from the coalwhippers' office shall be finished, the master of the vessel in which they were employed, or such other person as aforesaid, shall pay to some person authorised by the said commissioners the full hire and wages due in respect of the labour of such coalwhippers in current money of the United Kingdom; and from and after the establishment of the coalwhippers' office under this act so much of the said act passed in the first and second years of the reign of her present Majesty as relates to the payment of the wages of persons employed in the discharge or delivery of coals from vessels laden therewith in the port of London shall be and the same is hereby repealed: provided always, that such master or other person as aforesaid shall not be compellable to pay such hire or wages except on board the vessel."

After discharge of cargo, ship-master to pay wages to person authorised from coalwhippers' office.

Repeal of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 101, s. 12.

Sect. 24. "That the person so authorised as aforesaid by the said commissioners shall receive the money to be paid as hire or wages for the labour of the coalwhippers so discharging the cargo of such vessel as aforesaid, and shall deduct therefrom the sum or proportion prescribed under the authority of this act, not exceeding one farthing in each shilling, and shall, either immediately on board such vessel or forthwith thereafter at the nearest head office or branch office or station of coalwhippers, pay and divide the residue of the monies so received to and among the coalwhippers so employed, without any other deduction or abatement, and without imposing any terms or conditions whatever; and if any such authorised person as aforesaid shall neglect or refuse to pay such residue at the time and place aforesaid, or shall make any other deduction than as aforesaid, or shall impose any terms or conditions on making such payment, he shall for every such offence forfeit any sum not exceeding ten pounds."

Such authorised person to make deduction and pay the residue among coalwhippers.

Penalty.

By 1 & 2 Vict. c. ci. s. 13. "And whereas great inconvenience has been caused to the navigation of the port of London in consequence of the collection of large numbers of vessels laden with coals in different parts of the said port: and whereas it is expedient that the mayor, aldermen, and commons of the city of London, in common council assembled, should, in exercise of the powers vested in them for that purpose by the 10 Geo. 4, c. cxxiv. make bye laws for remedying the inconveniences aforesaid, and that such bye laws should be subjected to the consideration and supervision of the committee of her Majesty's privy council for managing the affairs of trade; be it therefore enacted, that within three calendar months next after the passing of this act the mayor, aldermen, and commons of the city of London, in common council assembled, shall and they are hereby required to make such bye laws as shall be necessary for regulating or removing vessels laden with coals, and otherwise remedying the inconveniences hereinbefore mentioned, and shall from time to time alter and vary such bye laws as shall be necessary: provided always, that all bye laws which shall relate to the navigation to the river Thames by vessels engaged in carrying coals or returning in ballast from carrying coals within the said port of London, which shall from and after the passing of this act be made, altered, or varied by the mayor, aldermen, and commons of the city of London, in common council assembled, shall be submitted to the committee of her Majesty's privy council for managing the affairs of trade, for their consideration and supervision, and within one week after such bye laws have been so submitted to the said committee, a copy thereof shall be published in the coal market in London, by being fixed on some conspicuous place therein; and such bye laws shall not have legal effect until eight weeks after they shall have been so submitted to the committee aforesaid, and so published in the said coal market as aforesaid; and it shall be lawful for such committee as aforesaid to approve of and sanction such bye laws, or to suggest such alterations and amendments therein, or from time to time to suspend or rescind the same, as to them shall seem fit; and if the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, shall concur in the said amendments, or if the said bye laws shall be approved without alteration, then and in that case the bye laws so sanctioned or amended shall be forthwith made public in manner hereinafter mentioned, and shall have full legal effect at the expiration of four weeks after such publication; but no bye law shall have legal effect unless in accordance with the expressed or implied sanction of the said committee: provided also, that if the said committee shall for four weeks after the receipt of any such bye laws fail to express an opinion on the bye laws so submitted to them, then and in that case it shall be lawful for the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, at the termination of such four weeks, to make public such bye laws in manner hereinafter mentioned; and such bye laws shall have full legal effect at the termination of four weeks from the time of the publication thereof: provided also, that before any such bye laws as aforesaid shall have legal effect, the same shall be made public by the advertisement thereof twice in the London Gazette in two succeeding weeks, and by affixing copies thereof to some conspicuous place or places in the coal market and custom house in the city of London, and in the custom house at Gravesend, and in such other manner as to the said mayor, aldermen, and commons, in common council assembled, shall seem fit."

Bye laws to be published in the Gazette and at the custom houses in London and Gravesend.

Expenses of this act how to be paid.

Sect. 14. "That the costs, charges, and expenses incident to and incurred in obtaining and passing this act shall be paid and discharged by and out of the money received or to be received in respect of the duty or sum of one penny per ton, made payable by the said act of the first and second years of the reign of King William the Fourth."

Meaning of the word "exportation."

Sect. 15. "That where in this act the word "exportation" is used, the same shall be understood to mean the conveyance of coal from the port of London in any ship or vessel below Gravesend beyond the limits of the port of London, unless it be otherwise specially provided, or there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction."

6 & 7 Vict. c. 2.

By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 2, intituled "An act to discontinue certain Actions under the Provisions of an Act of the Second Year of King William the Fourth, for regulating the Vend and Delivery of Coals in the Cities of London and Westminster, and in certain parts of the adjacent Counties," (3*d March*, 1843,) reciting that by the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. lxxvi, it was amongst other things enacted, that every fitter or other person vending or delivering coals for the port of London should send, in a letter directed to the clerk of the coal market, and put into the general post office on the day on which the ship or vessel containing any coals should sail on any such voyage, or should give to the ship-master of such ship or vessel before the same should sail on every or any such voyage, a certificate, signed by such fitter, containing the day of the month and year of such loading, the master's and ship's names, and the quantity of tons, and the usual names of the several and respective collieries out of which the said coals were and should be wrought and gotten, and the price paid by the master or masters for each and every sort of coals that each and every fitter or other person vending or delivering coals as aforesaid, his or their agent or servant, had sold and loaded on board each and every ship or vessel; and in case any person or persons should omit or refuse to give such certificate as aforesaid, or should give or make any false certificate, every person so offending should for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of one hundred pounds; and whereas by the said act the said penalty and forfeiture is made recoverable in manner in the said act directed: and that divers fitters and other persons have inadvertently omitted to comply with the aforesaid provision of the said act, and many actions, bills, plaints, and informations have been brought and may be commenced against such fitters and other persons, or some of them, by persons who sue, inform, and prosecute, as well on their own behalf as on behalf of her Majesty, to recover various penalties incurred or alleged to have been incurred under or by virtue of the said act, by reason of such neglect; and it is expedient that all further proceedings in such actions, bills, plaints, and informations should be prevented:" it is therefore enacted, "that immediately from and after the passing of this act it shall be lawful for any person or persons against whom any action, bill, plaint, or information shall have been or may be sued out, commenced, or prosecuted for the recovery of any pecuniary penalty or penalties incurred on or before the day of the passing of this act, under the aforesaid provision of the said act, for not inserting in the fitter's certificate the usual names of the several and respective collieries out of which the said coals should be wrought and gotten, to apply to the Court in which such action, bill, plaint, or information shall have been or may be sued out, commenced, or prosecuted, or to any judge of any of the Superior Courts at Westminster, for an order that such action, bill, plaint, or information shall be discontinued upon payment of the costs thereof incurred to the time of such application being made, such costs to be taxed according to the form of such Court; and every such court or judge is hereby authorised and required, upon such application, to make such order as aforesaid, and upon the making such order, and payment or tender of such costs as aforesaid, such action, bill, plaint, or information shall be forthwith discontinued: provided always, that if it shall be made to appear to the said court or judge, by affidavit or otherwise, that any penalty or penalties sought to be recovered in any such action, bill, plaint, or information, has been incurred by the fraud of the defendant or defendants in such action, bill, plaint, or information, then and in every such case it shall be lawful for such court or judge to refuse to make such order as to such penalty or penalties, and thereupon to make such other order as to the said court or judge shall seem expedient.

III. Offences as to Coals and Coal Mines.

Stealing from.

As to the offence of stealing from, see "Larceny," Vol. III.

As to drowning or obstructing mines, 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 6; destroying mining engines, &c. (Id. s. 7;) and injuries by rioters to mines, &c. (Id. s. 8,) affecting mines in general, will be found treated of under "Malicious Injuries to Property," Vol. V. p. 31.

Disputes, &c. between colliers, &c.

As to disputes between colliers, keelmen, pitmen, and miners, and their masters in general, and other matters relative to offences by colliers, and who are forbidden to work in collieries, see 5 & 6 Vict. c. 99, and title "Servants," Vol. V.

Setting fire to.

By 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 89, s. 9, "whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to any mine of coal or cannel coal, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be transported beyond the seas for the term of the natural life of such offender, or for any term not less than fifteen years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years."

By sect. 12, the punishment of imprisonment may be with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement, such confinement not exceeding one month at any one time, nor three months in any one year.

This offence is not triable at any quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1.

Conspiracy to raise price.

Independently of the offence at common law, by the 28 Geo. III. c. 53, s. 2, it is enacted, that any number of persons united in covenants or partnerships, or in any way whatsoever, consisting of more than five persons, for purchasing coals for sale or making regulations with respect to the manner of carrying on the said trade in coals, shall be deemed an unlawful combination to advance the price of coals, and every person concerned therein shall be liable to an indictment or information. 3. Offences, &c.

Coin.

COIN, in French, signifieth a corner, and from thence hath its name, because in ancient times money was square with corners, as it is in some countries to this day. (1 Inst. 207.) Origin of the word.

The word doth properly signify a wedge, as the Latin cuneus; and hath a verb belonging to it in the several languages; and is translated to lawful money; either from the form of a wedge, ingot, or lingot, (linguetta,) in which bullion was transported from all antiquity, or else from the instrument, a wedge or chisel, with which in trade these lingots were occasionally cut to the weight required, as they are at this day in the East Indies with shears.

I. Repeal of Statutes by 2 Will. IV. c. 34, and Commencement of that Act.

Repeal of acts.

The 2 Will. IV. c. 34, intituled "An Act for consolidating and amending the Laws against Offences relating to the Coin," [passed the 23d May, 1832,] reciting that "The offence of counterfeiting the coin, as well as certain other offences relating to the coin, are now by virtue of several statutes punishable with death:" and that "it is expedient to abolish the punishment of death in all such cases, and to repeal the several statutes against offences relating to the coin, in order that the provisions thereof may be amended and consolidated into one act;" repeals the former statutes and parts of statutes relating to the offence, "except so far as any of the said acts may repeal the whole or any part of any other acts, or may be in force in any part of his majesty's dominions out of the United Kingdom, and except as to offences and other matters committed or done before or upon the said last day of April, which shall be dealt with and punished as if this act had not been passed: provided always, that if any person shall, after the commencement of this act, be convicted of any offence against any of the said acts committed before or upon the said last day of April, and such offence shall have been punishable with death by virtue of any of the said acts, in every such case the person convicted of such offence shall not suffer the punishment of death, but shall in lieu thereof be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding four years."

Offences committed previously to.

Commencement of act.

By sect. 2, "this act shall commence and take effect on the 1st day of May, in the year of our Lord 1832."

II. Rules of Interpretation of 2 Will. IV. c. 34.

Rules of interpretation as to current coin, counterfeit coin, and criminal possession.

By the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 21, it is declared and enacted, "that where 'the king's current gold or silver coin, or 'the king's current copper coin,' shall be mentioned in any part of this act, the same shall be deemed to include and denote any gold or silver coin or any copper coin respectively coined in any of his majesty's mints, and lawfully current in any part of his majesty's dominions, whether within the United Kingdom or otherwise; and that any of the king's current coin which shall have been gilt, silvered, washed, coloured or cased over, or in any manner altered so as to resemble, or be apparently intended to resemble or pass for, any of the king's current coin of a higher denomination, shall be deemed and taken to be counterfeit coin within the intent and meaning of those parts of this act wherein mention is made of 'false or counterfeit coin resembling, or apparently intended to resemble or pass for, any of the king's current gold or silver coin;' and that where the having any matter in the custody or possession of any person is in this act expressed to be an offence, if any person shall have any such matter in his personal custody or possession, or shall knowingly and wilfully have any such matter in any dwelling-house or other building, lodging, apartment, field, or other place, open or inclosed, whether belonging to or occupied by himself or not, and whether such matter shall be so had for his own use or benefit, or for that of another, every such person shall be deemed and taken to have such matter in his custody or possession within the meaning of this act."

III. Counterfeiting Gold or Silver Coin.

Offence of counterfeiting gold and silver coin.

By the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 3, "if any person shall falsely make or counterfeit any coin, resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the king's current gold or silver coin, every such offender shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland, of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding four years, and every such offence shall be deemed to be complete, although the coin so made or counterfeited shall not be in a fit state to be uttered, or the counterfeiting thereof shall not be finished or perfected."

Offence when deemed complete.

By 7 Will. IV & 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 5, the imprisonment may be with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement. (Sect. 19, post, 756.) Such confinement not exceeding one month at any one time, nor three months in any one year.

This offence is not triable at any quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1.

Nature of the coin.

We have seen, supra, that by the interpretation clause of the statute, it is declared that where "the king's current gold or silver coin" shall be mentioned in any part of the act, the same shall be deemed to include and denote any gold or silver coin respectively coined in any of his majesty's mints, and lawfully current in any part of his majesty's dominions, whether within the United Kingdom or otherwise.

A proclamation has been sometimes made as a more solemn manner of giving coin currency. But this in general cases is certainly not necessary, and in prosecutions for coin need not be proved. Neither is it necessary in the same case to produce the indentures, though it may be of use in case of any new coin, with a new impression, not yet familiar to the people, to produce either the indentures or one of the officers of the mint cognizant of the fact, or the stamps used, or the like evidence. But in general, whether the coin, upon a question of counterfeiting or impairing it, be the king's money or not is a mere question of fact, which may be found upon evidence of common usage or notoriety. (1 East's P. C. 149; and see 1 Hale, 213.)

Any coin once legally made and issued by the Queen's authority continues to be the current coin of the kingdom until recalled, notwithstanding any change in the authority which constituted it. (Id.)

3. Counterfeiting Gold or Silver Coin.

What a sufficient counterfeiting.

We have just seen, ante, 739, that the statute declares that the offence shall be deemed complete although the coin made or counterfeited be not in a fit state to be uttered or the counterfeiting of it has not been finished or complete. By the old law the monies charged to be counterfeited must have resembled the true and lawful coin, but this resemblance was a matter of fact, of which the jury were to judge upon the evidence before them; the rule being, that the resemblance need not be perfect, but such as might in circulation ordinarily impose upon the world. Thus a counterfeiting with some little variation in the inscription, effigies or arms, done probably with intent to evade the law, was yet within it; and so is the counterfeiting in a different metal, if in appearance it were made to resemble the true coin. (1 Hawk. c. 17, s. 81; 1 Hale, 178, 184, 211, 215; 1 East's P. C. 163.) In one case the shillings produced in evidence against the prisoner were quite smooth, without the smallest vestige of either head or tail, and without any resemblance of the shillings in circulation, except their colour, size and shape; and the master of the mint proved that they were bad, but that they were very like those shillings the impression on which had been worn away by time, and might very probably be taken by persons having less skill than himself for good shillings. And the Court were of opinion that a blank that is smoothed, and made like a piece of legal coin, the impression of which is worn out, and yet suffered to remain in circulation, is sufficiently counterfeited to the similitude of the current coin of this realm to bring the counterfeiters and coiners of such blanks within the statute; these blanks having some reasonable likeness to that coin which has been defaced by time, and yet passes in circulation. (Wilson's case, O. B. 1783, 1 Leach, 285.) And in the subsequent case of Patrick and John Welsh, Hertford Lent Assizes, 1785, 1 East's P. C. 164; 1 Leach, 364; the point received the more solemn consideration of the twelve judges; the counsel for the prisoners having objected upon the fact of no impression of any sort or kind being discernible upon the shillings produced in evidence, that they were not counterfeited to the likeness and similitude of the good and legal coin of this realm. But the judges were of opinion, that it was a question of fact whether the counterfeit monies were of the likeness and similitude of the lawful current silver coin called a shilling. And the jury having so found it, the want of an impression was immaterial; because, from the impression being generally worn out or defaced, it was notorious that the currency of the genuine coin of that denomination was not thereby affected; the counterfeit, therefore, was perfect for circulation, and possibly might deceive the more readily from having no appearance of an impression; and in the deception the offence consists. But in Varley's case, where the impression of money was forged on an irregular piece of metal, not rounded, without finishing it, so as not to be in a state to pass current, the offence was holden to be incomplete, although he had actually attempted to pass it in that condition. (Varley's case, 1771; 2 Blac. R. 632; 1 MS. Sum. 46.) And where the prisoners were convicted upon a count in the indictment, framed upon stat. 25 Edw. III. c. 2, and upon the evidence it appeared that no one piece of the base metal found upon the prisoners was in such a state as to make it passable, the conviction was held to be wrong. (R. v. Harris and Minion, 1 Leach, 135.) The case was referred to the judges; but the grounds of their decision are not stated in the report And query, if the case was not disposed of upon a defect in the indictment. Besides the count on the 25 Edw. III. c. 2, there was another count upon the 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 26, s. 4. (1 Russ. 60.)

Mr. Roscoe, in his work on Coining, p. 4, observes, "that the provision of the new statute, s. 3, would certainly be held to extend to a case like that of Harris and Minion (supra), where every thing was done but the last finishing operation, although the coin could not deceive even the most unwary. But it seems that it would still be necessary that the offence should not be merely in its initiatory stage; for the statute speaks of the false coin as coin 'so made or counterfeited,' and of the counterfeiting as 'not finished or perfected;' and therefore, the preparing the metal or perhaps cutting out rough blanks intended to be afterwards stamped and worked up, would not come within this section of the statute. In another clause of the statute, where it is intended to include the initiatory stage of the offence, express words are introduced for that purpose, it being enacted by sect. 10, 'that if any person shall make or mend, or begin or proceed to make or mend, any puncheon,' &c."

3. Counterfeiting Gold or Silver Coin.

Officers of the mint are within the statute. (See Rosc. on Coining, p. 5; 1 East's P. C. 166; 1 Hale, 213; 1 Hawk. b. 1, c. 17, s. 55.)

Officers of mint.

As to accessaries in counterfeiting, see post, 755.

Accessaries.

It is rarely the case that the counterfeiting can be proved directly by positive evidence; it is usually made out by circumstantial evidence, such as finding the necessary coining tools in the defendant's house, together with some pieces of the counterfeit money in a finished, some in an unfinished state, or such other circumstances as may fairly warrant the jury in presuming that the defendant either counterfeited, or caused to be counterfeited, or was present aiding and abetting in counterfeiting the coin in question. Before the recent statute, if several conspired to counterfeit the Queen's coin, and one of them actually did so in pursuance of the conspiracy, it was treason in all, and they might all have been indicted for counterfeiting the Queen's coin generally; (1 Hale, 214); but now, only the party who actually counterfeits would be the principal felon, and the others accessaries before the fact. (Jervis's Arch. C. L. 509.)

Evidence of offence.

A variance between the indictment and the evidence, in the number of the pieces of coin alleged to be counterfeited, is immaterial; but a variance as to the denomination of such coin, as guineas, sovereigns, shillings, &c. would be fatal. (Id.)

Proof that a man occasionally visited coiners; that the rattling of money was occasionally heard with them; that he was seen counting something as if it was money when he left them; that on coming to the lodgings just after the apprehension, he endeavoured to escape, and was found to have had money about him; is not sufficient evidence to implicate him as counselling, procuring, aiding and abetting the coining. Two women were indicted for colouring a shilling and sixpence, and a man (Isaacs) as counselling them, &c. The evidence against him was, that he visited them once or twice a week; that the rattling of copper money was heard whilst he was with them; that once he was counting something just after he came out; that on going to the room just after the apprehension, he resisted being stopped, and jumped over a wall to escape; and that there were then found upon him a bad 3*s.* piece, five bad shillings, and five bad sixpences; but upon a case reserved, the judges thought the evidence too slight to convict him. (R. v. Isaacs, Hil. T. 1813, cor. Bayley, J., 1 Russ. 62.)

Any credible witness may prove the coin to be counterfeit, and it is not necessary for this purpose to produce any moneyer or other officer from the mint. (2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 17, post, 756.)

If it become a question whether the coin, which the counterfeit money was intended to imitate, be the Queen's coin, it is not necessary to produce the proclamation to prove its legitimation; it is a mere question of fact, to be left to the jury, upon evidence of usage, reputation, &c. (1 Hale, 196, 212, 213; ante, 739.)

It is not necessary to prove that the counterfeit coin was uttered or attempted to be uttered. (1 Hale, 215, 229; 3 Inst. 16; 1 East's P. C. 165.)

IV. Colouring, filing, or altering Gold or Silver Coin.

Colouring counterfeit coin or any pieces of metal with intent to make them pass for gold or silver coin;

By the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 4, "if any person shall gild or silver, or shall with any wash or materials capable of producing the colour of gold or of silver, wash, colour or case over, any coin whatsoever resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the king's current gold or silver coin, or if any person shall gild or silver, or shall, with any wash or materials, capable of producing the colour of gold or of silver, wash, colour, or case over, any piece of silver or copper, or of coarse gold or coarse silver, or of any metal or mixture of metals respectively, being of a fit size and figure to be coined, and with intent that the same shall be coined, into false and counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the king's current gold or silver coin; or if any person shall gild, or shall, with any wash or materials capable of producing the colour of gold, wash, colour, or case over, any of the king's current silver coin, or file, or in any manner alter such coin, with intent to make the same resemble or pass for any of the king's current gold coin; or if any person shall gild or silver, or shall, with any wash or materials capable of producing the colour of gold or of silver, wash, colour or case over, any of the king's current copper coin, or file or in any manner alter such coin, with intent to make the same resemble or pass for any of the king's current gold or silver coin; every such offender shall, in England and Ireland be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding four years."

colouring or altering genuine coin, with intent to make it pass for a higher coin;

transportation for life, &c.

By the 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 90, the imprisonment may be with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement (s. 19, post), such confinement not exceeding one month at any one time, nor three months in any one year.

The offences specified in this section are not triable at quarter sessions. (5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1.)

What a colouring within the old law.

As to what amounted to a colouring within the now repealed act 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 26, s. 4, the following case was determined by the judges. (R. v. W. Case, Lancaster Spring Assizes, 1795, cor. Heath, J., 1 East's P. C. 165.) William Case was found guilty, on an indictment for traitorously colouring, with materials producing the colour of silver, a piece of base coin resembling a shilling. The prisoner was taken in the very act of making counterfeit shillings in the ordinary way, by steeping round blanks composed of brass and silver in aquafortis. The round blanks were found, some steeped in aquafortis, and some already taken out of it. They had the appearance of lead, and by rubbing they would resemble silver coin, but as they were, none would pass current. The judges, except two, thought the conviction right. They considered that the offence was complete when the piece was coloured, for it was then coloured with materials which produce the colour of silver, and that it was not necessary that the piece so coloured should be current, for the colouring of blanks was an offence within the clause.

A case under the like circumstances had been before expressly decided by the unanimous opinion of the judges to come within the same statute. But there the doubt was not, as in the last instance, upon the necessity of rubbing the blank after it was taken out of the wash, in order to give it the appearance of silver, but whether the legislature did not intend such a colouring only as is altogether produced by some outward application. But they all thought that the process of extracting the latent silver, by the power of the wash, from the body to the surface of the blank, was a colouring within the words of the act. They thought, besides, that it might be charged as a colouring with silver; for the effect of the aquafortis is to corrode the base metal, and leave the silver only on the superficies, and so the copper is coloured or cased with silver. (R. v. Lavey and Parker, O. B. December, 1776, 1 East's P. C. 166; 1 Leach, 153, S. C.)

But these cases were decided upon the statutes 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 26, and 15 Geo. II. c. 28; and the words "capable of producing," seem to have been introduced into the present statute for the purpose of obviating the doubt.

Evidence.

As observed by Mr. Roscoe in his work on Coining, p. 17, the act of colouring or gilding, &c., the nature of the wash or materials, and of the substance to which they are applied, must be shown; and it must appear that the prisoner committed the act with the intention of making counterfeit coin. The wash or materials must be shown, either from the application of them by the prisoner in the particular instance, or from an examination of their properties, to be such as are capable of producing the colour of gold or silver. But an indictment charging the use of such materials will be supported by proof of a colouring with gold itself. (Reg. v. Turner, 2 Mood. C. C. 41.) Where direct evidence of the act of colouring cannot be obtained, circumstances may be shown from which the act may be presumed, as that the prisoner was in possession of false coin, and that blanks coloured and materials for colouring were found in his house.

4. Colouring, &c.

It is not necessary to prove the offence that a moneyer or other officer from the Mint should be subpœnaed. (2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 17, post, 756.)

V. Impairing Gold or Silver Coin.

By the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 5, "if any person shall impair, diminish, or lighten any of the king's current gold or silver coin, with intent to make the coin so impaired, diminished, or lightened, pass for the king's current gold or silver coin, every such offender shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be transported beyond the seas for any term not exceeding fourteen years nor less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years.

Impairing the gold or silver coin, with intent, &c.

transportation for fourteen years, &c.

The imprisonment may be with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement (s. 19, post, 756), such confinement not exceeding one month at any one time, nor three months in any one year. (7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 5; post, 757; "Larceny," Vol. III.)

The act of impairing must be shown, either by direct evidence of persons who saw the prisoner engaged in it, or by presumptive evidence, such as the possession of filings and of impaired coin, or of instruments for filing, &c. The intent to pass off the impaired coin must then appear. This may be done by showing that the prisoner attempted to pass the coin so impaired, or that he carried it about his person, which would raise a presumption that he intended to pass it. And if the coin were not so defaced by the process of impairing as not apparently to affect its currency, it would, under the circumstances, without further evidence, be a question for the jury, whether the diminished coin was intended to be passed. (Rosc. on Coin. 19.)

Evidence.

VI. Buying or selling Counterfeit Gold or Silver Coin for less Value than its Denomination imports.(a) Importing Counterfeit Coin current in this Kingdom.

By the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 6, "if any person shall buy, sell, receive, pay, or put off, or offer to buy, sell, receive, pay, or put off, any false or counterfeit coin resembling, or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the king's current gold or silver coin, at or for a lower rate or value than the same by its denomination imports or was coined or counterfeited for; or if any person shall import into the United Kingdom from beyond the seas any false or counterfeit coin, resembling, or apparently intended to resemble or pass for, any of the king's current gold or silver coin, knowing

Buying or selling, &c. counterfeit gold or silver coin for lower value than its denomination;

importing counterfeit coin from beyond seas

(a) The coining and legitimation of money, and the giving it its current value, are the unquestionable prerogatives of the crown; though great doubt has been entertained whether by force of the stats. 25 Edw. III. c. 13, 9 Hen. V. st. 2, c. 6, and other acts settling the standard of sterling, the king is not now restrained from altering it by increasing the alloy. But at this day it is the less necessary to consider the point, because the impolicy of the act is alone sufficient to prevent the attempt from being made, unless the marketable and relative value of gold and silver should sensibly alter. (1 East's P. C. 148; 1 Hale, 188; 4 Bla. Com. 88.)

6. Buying, &c. the same to be false or counterfeit; every such offender shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding four years."

transportation for life, &c.

The imprisonment may be with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement (s. 19, post, 756), such confinement not exceeding one month at any one time, nor three months in any one year. (7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 9, s. 5, post, 757.)

This offence is not triable at any quarter sessions. (5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1.)

What an offence of putting off, &c.

The putting off under these repealed statutes meant an actual passing or getting rid of the money, and not merely an attempt to do so; as by tendering it to another, who returned it again, refusing to accept it; which was a distinct offence, provided for by stat. 15 Geo. II. c. 28. (See 1 East's P. C. 179.) In the case of Wooldridge, who was indicted on stat. 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 26, s. 6, for putting off counterfeit money to a Mrs. Levy, it appeared that he had carried a large quantity of such money to her house, which he had agreed to put off to her, and she to receive from him, at the rate of 29*s.* for every guinea; and having laid the shillings down on a table, she was proceeding to count them out at that rate, and counted out part of the heap, when the officers entered the room and apprehended them before she could pay the prisoner for those she had selected. This was ruled not to be a completion of the offence charged, and the prisoner was acquitted. (R. v. Wooldridge, 1 Leach, 251, O. B. Feb. 1784; 1 East's P. C. 179, S. C.) By the above new enactment it will be observed that the words used are "offer to buy, sell," &c., which would include the case just cited.

Under the now repealed act, 8 & 9 Will. III. it was necessary to constitute the offence that the money should be milled.(a) But the words of the new statute are "any false or counterfeit coin, resembling, or apparently intended to resemble or pass for the king's current gold or silver coin."

It will be observed that the new statute does not include the putting off, &c. of money unlawfully diminished and not cut in pieces, for less value.

It is necessary, in order to bring a case within the statute, that the money be vended at a lower value than the coin imports, and that it should be so stated in the indictment and proved. And if the names of the persons to whom the money was put off can be ascertained, they ought to be mentioned, and laid severally in the indictment; but if they cannot be ascertained, the same rule will apply which prevails in the case of stealing the property of persons unknown. (1 Russ. 81.)

Where an indictment stated that five counterfeit shillings were put off for two shillings, and the proof was that they were sold for two shillings and sixpence, Thompson, C. B., and Heath, J. held that as this was a contract, it must be proved as laid, and directed an acquittal. (R. v. Joyce, Car. Sup. 184; 3 C. & P. 411.) But where the indictment stated that the defendant put off a counterfeit sovereign, and three counterfeit shillings, for five shillings, and the evidence was that the sovereign was sold for four shillings, and the shillings for one shilling, Vaughan, B. held the evidence to be sufficient, because the whole was one transaction. (R. v. Hedges, 3 C. & P. 410.)

What an offence of importing, &c.

It would seem to be no offence within the enactment as to importing counterfeit coin, to import from the king's dominions beyond the seas; (1

(a) The meaning of "milled money" in this statute was considered in the case of Bunning. (1 East's P.C. 180.) Milled money is so called to distinguish it from hammered money, and all the money now current is milled, i. e. passed through a mill or press to make the plate out of which it is cut of a proper thickness, though by a vulgar error it is frequently supposed to mean the marking on the edges, which is properly termed graining. Mr. East says he has been informed that there has been no hammered money since the time of Car. II. (1 East's P. C, 180, notis.)

Hawk, c. 17, s. 87; 1 East, P. C. 175;) because the counterfeiting there is punishable by the laws of England.

6. Buying, &c.

It was no offence by the old law (nor is it by the new statute), unless the importer knew the coin to be counterfeit, and such knowledge must be averred in the indictment and proved. (1 Hale, 228; 1 East, P. C. 175; Ros. Coin. 24.)

As to importing counterfeit coin not current here, see post, 750.

VII. Uttering Counterfeit Gold or Silver Coin. (a)

Uttering counterfeit gold or silver coin, imprisonment.

By the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 7, "if any person shall tender, utter, or put off any false or counterfeit coin resembling, or apparently intended to resemble or pass for, any of the king's current gold or silver coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, every such offender shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and being convicted thereof, shall be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year; and if any person shall tender, utter, or put off any false or counterfeit coin resembling, or apparently intended to resemble or pass for, any of the king's current gold or silver coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, and such person shall, at the time of such tendering, uttering, or putting off, have in his possession, besides the false or counterfeit coin so tendered, uttered, or put off, one or more piece or pieces of false or counterfeit coin resembling, or apparently intended to resemble or pass for, any of the king's current gold or silver coin, or shall either on the day of such tendering, uttering, or putting off, or within the space of ten days then next ensuing, tender, utter, or put off any more or other false or counterfeit coin resembling, or apparently intended to resemble or pass for, any of the king's current gold or silver coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, every such offender shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and being convicted thereof, shall be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years; and if any person who shall have been convicted of any of the misdemeanors, or crimes and offences hereinbefore mentioned, shall afterwards commit any of the said misdemeanors, or crimes and offences, such person shall, in England and Ireland, be deemed guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for life or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding four years."

Uttering, accompanied by possession of other counterfeit coin, or followed by a second uttering, imprisonment.

Every second offence of uttering after a previous conviction shall be felony;

Punishment.

Sect. 9. "Where any person shall have been convicted of any offence against this act and shall afterwards be indicted for any offence against this act committed subsequent to such conviction, a copy of the previous indictment and conviction, purporting to be signed and certified as a true copy by the clerk of the court or other officer having the custody of the records of the court where the offender was first convicted, or by the deputy of such clerk

What is sufficient evidence of a conviction for a previous offence against this act.

(a) The stat. 9 Geo. III. c. 37, s. 7, contains a provision for the purpose of preventing the parish poor being paid in base or counterfeit coin, which enacts, that if any churchwarden or overseer of any parish, township, or place, or other person authorised by them to make payments to or for the use of the poor within such parish, township, or place respectively, shall wilfully and knowingly make any such payments in any base or counterfeit money, or in any other than lawful money of Great Britain, one justice may, and he is hereby required, on complaint, to summon the churchwarden, overseer, or other person charged, and in a summary way, upon his or their non-appearance or confession, or proof upon oath of one witness, adjudge the party so offending to forfeit for each offence a sum not less than 10*s.* nor more than 20*s.*; and to levy the same by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such offender, and to be applied to the use of any poor person or persons of the parish or place respectively as the justice shall appoint.

No person can be enforced to take in payment any money but of lawful metal, that is, of silver or gold, except for sums under sixpence. (2 Inst. 5, 7; 1 Hale, 195; see Tidd, Supp. Tender.) or officer, shall, upon proof of the identity of the person of the offender, be sufficient evidence of the previous indictment and conviction, without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed and certified the same; and for every such copy a fee of six shillings and eightpence, and no more, shall be demanded or taken; and if any such clerk, officer, or deputy shall certify or utter as true any false copy of any indictment or conviction for any offence against this act, knowing the same to be false, or if any person other than such clerk, officer, or deputy, shall sign or certify any copy of any such indictment or conviction, as such clerk, officer, or deputy, or shall utter any copy thereof with a false or counterfeit signature thereto, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, every such offender shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for any term not exceeding fourteen years, nor less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years."

Making false certificate of conviction, &c.

Punishment.

To the imprisonment inflicted under this section may be added hard labour and solitary confinement, as directed by section 19, and 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 5, post, 757.

What an uttering within act.

Where a good shilling was given to a Jew boy for fruit, and he put it into his mouth, under pretence of trying if it were good, and then taking a bad shilling out of his mouth instead of it, returned it to the party, saying that it was not good; this (which is called ringing the changes) was holden to be an uttering within the meaning of the statute 15 Geo. II. c. 28. (R. v. Franks, 2 Leach, 644, 736.)

As to what is a "putting off," see ante, 744.

Under an indictment for uttering counterfeit coin, it must be proved that the defendant knew it to be a counterfeit sovereign at the time he uttered it. This proof must, of course, rest on circumstantial evidence. If it be proved that he uttered, either on the same day or other times, base money of the same description to the same or to a different person, or had other pieces of base money about him when he uttered the counterfeit money in question, this will be evidence from which the jury may presume a guilty knowledge. (Per Thompson, B., in R. v. Whiley et al., 2 Leach, 983; see R. v. Ball, 1 Campb. 324; R. v. Millard, Bayley on B. 449.)

If a man utter a bad shilling, and fifty other bad shillings are found upon him, this would bring him within the description of a common utterer; but if the indictment do not contain that charge, yet these circumstances may be given in evidence among other charges of uttering, to show that he uttered the money with a knowledge of its being bad. (Per eund. 2 Leach, 983; see also Ball's case, 1 Campb. 325; and Phil. on Ev. 137.)

The giving of a piece of counterfeit money in charity is not an uttering within the statute, although the person may know it to be counterfeit; as in cases of this kind there must be some intention to defraud. (Reg. v. Page, 8 C. & P. 122.)

An indictment for uttering counterfeit coin, knowing it to be counterfeit, (after a previous conviction), charged that the prisoner did utter a counterfeit half-crown to E. H., "knowing the same to be false and counterfeit:" it was held that the allegation of the scienter was sufficient, and that the word "knowing" must be taken to apply to the prisoner, and not to E. H., who was the last antecedent; and that the scienter must be taken to apply to the time of the uttering, although it was not stated to be "then and there." (Reg. v. Page, 9 C. & P. 756.)

Joint uttering.

Where several persons are charged with an uttering it must appear either that they were all present, or so near to the party actually uttering as to be able to afford him aid and assistance. (See R. v. Soares, R. & R. 25; 2 East's P. C. 794, S. C.; R. v. Davis, R. & R. 113; "Forgery," Vol. III.)

If two persons jointly prepare counterfeit coin, and then utter it in different shops, apart from each other, but in concert, and intending to share the proceeds, the utterings of each are the joint utterings of both, and they may be convicted jointly. (Reg. v. Hurse, 2 M. & R. 360.)

7. Uttering, &c.

But if two utterers of counterfeit coin, with a general community of purpose, go different ways, and utter coin apart from each other, and not near enough to assist each other, their respective utterings are not joint utterings by both. (R. v. Manners, 7 C. & P. 801.)

What a possession of other counterfeit money.

As to what shall be a sufficient custody of the other false coin, the following case was decided upon the 15 Geo. II. c. 28, s. 3. A man and a woman were jointly indicted for uttering a counterfeit shilling, having about them in their custody, at the same time, another counterfeit shilling, knowing, &c. It appeared that they came together to a public-house and slept there, and the woman in the absence of the man paid away the counterfeit shilling; that on the same day the man went to another public-house and offered to sell a large quantity of counterfeit shillings; and that on the following day the prisoners were apprehended while in bed. Near the bed was found a quantity of bad halfpence, some silver (four shillings and sixpence) in the man's pocket, which was good, and one shilling and sixpence bad; and concealed under his arm was found a paper parcel of bad shillings, which, if good, would have been worth 14*l.*; in the woman's pocket were found a good half-crown, seven good shillings, and six counterfeit shillings, like the counterfeits found in the paper under the man's arm. Upon this evidence it was insisted for the prisoners that there was no ground to convict the man, he not having uttered the shilling in question, nor being present at the time the woman uttered it. And that, with respect to the woman, she could only be convicted of uttering the shilling (the offence in the former part of the count), knowing it to be counterfeit, it not appearing that at the time of uttering it (not having been searched that day), she had any other counterfeit money about her. Both the prisoners being convicted, the judges held the conviction of the woman for the single offence good, but not good for uttering and having about her at the time other money; and as to the conviction of the man, they held it could not be supported. (R. v. Else, R. & R. 142.) And where one of two persons in company utters counterfeit coin, and other counterfeit coin is found on the other person, they are jointly guilty of the aggravated offence under section 7, if acting in concert, and both knowing of the possession. (See R. v. Gerrish, 2 M. & R. 829; see R. v. Manners, 7 C. & P. 801; Reg. v. Jones, 9 C. & P. 761.)

In the following case two persons were convicted of a joint uttering, having another counterfeit shilling in their possession, although the latter coin was found upon the person of one of them only. It appeared that one of the prisoners went into a shop and there purchased a loaf, for which she tendered a counterfeit shilling in payment. She was secured, but no more counterfeit money was found upon her. The other prisoner, who had come with her and was waiting at the shop-door, then ran away, but was immediately secured, and fourteen bad shillings were found on her, wrapped in gauze paper. It was objected that the complete offence stated in the indictment was not proved against either of the prisoners, and the above case of R. v. Else was cited. Garrow, B., was of opinion, "that the two prisoners coming together to the shop, and the one staying outside, they must both be taken to be jointly guilty of the uttering, and that it was for the jury to say, whether the possession of the remaining pieces of bad money was not joint." The jury found both the prisoners guilty. (R. v. Skerritt, 2 C. & P. 427; Rosc. on Coin. 40; see Reg. v. Rogers, 2 Mood. C. C. 85.

By the interpretation clause of the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 21, "where the having any matter in the custody or possession of any person in this act expressed to be an offence, if any person shall have any such matter in his personal custody or possession, or shall knowingly and wilfully have any such matter in any dwelling-house or other building, lodging, apartment, field or other place, open or inclosed, whether belonging to or occupied by himself or not, and whether such matter shall be so had for his own use or benefit, or for that of another, every such person shall be deemed and taken to have such matter in his custody or possession within the meaning of this act."

Uttering twice in ten days.

Under an indictment for an uttering twice in ten days, the double uttering

7. Uttering, &c.

must be charged in one count. (R. v. Tundy, 2 Leach, 835; 1 East's P. C. 182, S. C.; and see R. v. Martyn, 2 Leach, 923; 1 East's P. C. Add. XVIII.; 1 Russ. 82.) On a conviction for two separate offences of uttering coin in two counts, one judgment for two years' imprisonment under the 7th sect. (ante, 745) is bad. (R. v. Robinson, 1 Mood. C. C. 413.)

After conviction of previous offence.

Where the party is indicted for a second offence, rendered felony by the statute, it is necessary to set forth the previous conviction in the indictment, with a prout patet per recordum. (R. v. Turner, R. & M. C. C. 47; and see R. v. Smith, R. & R. C. C. 7.) And where an indictment stated, that, at the assizes holden at H., on the 3rd August, 4 Will. IV. "C. P. (the present prisoner) together with one J. P., by the name and description of C. P., late of B., in the county of H., labourer, and J. P., late of the same, labourer, was in due form of law tried and convicted," by a certain jury duly taken "between our said late lord the king and the said C. P. and T. P.," upon an indictment against them for uttering counterfeit coin, they having other counterfeit coin in their possession; and thereupon it was considered by the Court there, that the said C. P. should be imprisoned for two years." The record of the conviction of C. P. stated his conviction, and the acquittal of T. P.; it was held, that this was no variance; and that this allegation in the indictment did not import that T. B. was convicted. (Reg. v. Page, 9 C. & P. 756.)

A conviction under the old law cannot be joined with an offence under the new statute. (Jervis's Arch. C. L. 9th ed. 520.)

VIII. Having Possession of Three or more Pieces of Counterfeit Gold or Silver Coin.

Having three or more pieces of counterfeit gold or silver coin in possession, &c. with intent, &c. imprisonment.

By the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 8, "if any person shall have in his custody or possession three or more pieces of false or counterfeit coin resembling, or apparently intended to resemble or pass for, any of the king's current gold or silver coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, and with intent to utter or put off the same, every such offender shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years; and if any person so convicted shall afterwards commit the like misdemeanor, or crime and offence, such person shall, in England and Ireland, be deemed guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for life or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding four years."

Second offence, felony and transportation.

To the imprisonment inflicted under this section may be added hard labour and solitary confinement, as directed by sect. 19, and 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 5, post, 756, 757.

Sect. 9 (ante, 745) provides as to what shall be deemed a second offence within the act.

As to what shall be a sufficient "custody or possession" within the act, see ante, 747.

As to what will be evidence of a guilty knowledge and intention, see ante, 746.

In order to convict a person charged on this section, it is not necessary that the possession should be individual possession, but it is enough if the coin be in the possession of the person charged, or his immediate agent, as the interpretation clause of the same statute (sect. 21, ante, 747) provides for such a case. Therefore, where two persons were taken into custody together, one of them having on him sixteen pieces of counterfeit coin, and the other only two pieces, the judges held that the person who had only the two pieces might, in point of law, be convicted as well as the person who had the sixteen. (Reg. v. Williams, 1 Car. & M. 259.)

At common law it was no offence to have possession of counterfeit coin with intent to utter it. (R. v. Stewart, R. & R. 288; R. v. Heath, Id. 184.)

The unlawful procuring of counterfeit coin with intent to circulate it, though no act of uttering be proved, is a misdemeanor at common law, and the possession of a large quantity of counterfeit coin, all newly finished, never having been in circulation, and of the same denomination, unaccounted for, is evidence of an unlawful procurement, with intent to circulate. (R. v. Robinson and Fuller, 1 Russ. 47, 48; R. & R. 308.)

8. Having Possession, &c.

IX. Counterfeiting, and other Offences as to Copper Coin.

Various offences relating to the copper coin.

By the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 12, "if any person shall falsely make or counterfeit any coin resembling, or apparently intended to resemble or pass for, any of the king's current copper coin; or if any person shall knowingly, and without lawful authority, (the proof of which authority shall lie on the party accused,) make or mend, or begin or proceed to make or mend, or buy or sell, or shall knowingly, and without lawful excuse, (the proof of which excuse shall lie on the party accused,) have in his custody or possession any instrument, tool, or engine adapted and intended for the counterfeiting any of the king's current copper coin; or if any person shall buy, sell, receive, pay, or put off, or offer to buy, sell, receive, pay, or put off, any false or counterfeit coin resembling, or apparently intended to resemble or pass for, any of the king's current copper coin, at or for a lower rate or value than the same by its denomination imports, or was coined or counterfeited for; every such offender shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for any term not exceeding seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years; and if any person shall tender, utter, or put off (a) any false or counterfeit coin resembling, or apparently intended to resemble or pass for, any of the king's current copper coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, or shall have in his custody or possession three or more pieces of false or counterfeit coin resembling, or apparently intended to resemble or pass for, any of the king's current copper coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, and with intent to utter or put off the same, every such offender shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year."

To imprisonment inflicted under this section may be added hard labour and solitary confinement, as directed by sect. 19 of 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 5, post, 756, 757.

The evidence on prosecutions for the various offences relating to the copper coin, will in general be the same as on prosecutions relating to the counterfeiting of the gold and silver coin. It may be observed, however, that on an indictment for counterfeiting the copper coin, the false coin, in order to sustain the indictment, must be in a fit state to be issued. (Rosc. on Coin. 54.)

By the interpretation clause of the new statute, sect. 21, (ante, 747,) it is enacted, that where "the king's current copper coin" shall be mentioned in any part of the act, the same shall be deemed to include and denote any copper coin coined in any of his majesty's mints, and lawfully current in any part of his majesty's dominions, whether within the united kingdom or otherwise.

(a) This creates a new offence; see the old law. (R. v. Ciruan, 1 East's P. C. 182; 2 Leach, 834, S. C.) In that case the prisoner was indicted (Oxford Sum. Ass. 1794, 1 East's P. C. 182) for "unlawfully uttering and tendering in payment to J. H. ten counterfeit halfpence, knowing them to be counterfeit;" and this was laid in the one count against the form of the statute, and in another generally. The defendant was convicted on the general count, it being admitted at the trial that there was no statute applicable to the fact. But upon reference to all the judges, (Hil. T. 1795,) they held the conviction wrong, it not being an indictable offence.

X. Counterfeiting, and other Offences relative to Foreign Coin.

Counterfeiting foreign gold or silver coin, felony; transportation for seven years.

Counterfeiting Foreign Gold or Silver Coin.]—By stat. 37 Geo. III. c. 126, reciting, that "the practice of counterfeiting foreign gold and silver coin, and the bringing into this realm, and uttering within the same, false and counterfeit foreign gold and silver coin, and particularly pieces of gold coin commonly called louis d'or, and pieces of silver coin commonly called dollars, hath of late greatly increased, and it is expedient that provision should be made more effectually to prevent the same," sect. 2, it is enacted, "that if any person or persons shall, from and after the passing of this act, make, coin, or counterfeit any kind of coin, not the proper coin of this realm, nor permitted to be current within the same, but resembling, or made with intent to resemble, or look like any gold or silver coin of any foreign prince, state, or country, or to pass as such foreign coin, such person or persons offending therein shall be deemed and adjudged to be guilty of felony, and may be transported for any term of years not exceeding seven years."

By the words in this act, "not permitted to be current within the realm," must be understood not permitted to be current by proclamation under the great seal. (1 East's P. C. 161.) The queen may by her proclamation legitimate foreign coin, and make it current money of this kingdom, according to the value imposed by such proclamation. (1 Hale, 192.)

Importing foreign counterfeit coin not current, with intent to utter, felony.

Importing Foreign Coin not Current.]—Stat. 37 Geo. III. c. 126, s. 3, "if any person or persons shall bring into this realm any such false or counterfeit coin as aforesaid, resembling, or made with intent to resemble or look like any gold or silver coin of any foreign prince, state, or country, or to pass as such foreign coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, to the intent to utter the same within this realm, or within any dominions of the same, all and every such person or persons shall be deemed and adjudged to be guilty of felony, and may be transported for any term of years not exceeding seven years." (See the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 6, ante, 743, as to importing counterfeit foreign coin resembling the coin of the realm.)

Accessaries before are not mentioned in this statute; but these are incident to every felony. Yet quære, if they are liable to the punishment of transportation. (See 1 Russ. 3rd ed. 65.)

The collecting of the counterfeit monies of foreign countries from the vendors of it in this country, with intent to utter it in this realm, or the dominions of the same, is not an offence within the 37 Geo. III. c. 126, s. 3, which requires a bringing into the realm. (See 1 East's P. C. 177.)

An importation with intent to utter is sufficient, without any actual uttering; which intent must be collected from circumstances. But though an actual uttering may be the best evidence of such intent, yet it seems safest that the indictment should follow the words of the statute. (1 East's P. C. 176; 1 Russ. 3rd ed. 65.)

Importing light silver coin.

Considerable quantities of old silver coin of the realm, or coin purporting to be such, below the standard of the mint in weight, were formerly imported to the public detriment at that time; in consequence of which, stat. 14 Geo. III. c. 42, prohibited the bringing into the kingdom any such coin, and provided that if any silver coin, being or purporting to be the coin of this realm, exceeding in amount the sum of 5*l.*, should be found by any officer of his majesty's customs on board any ship, &c. or in the custody of any person coming directly from the water-side, or upon the information of one or more persons, in any house or other place, on search there made in the manner directed by stat. 14 Car. II. c. 11, s. 5, the officer might seize the same; and if upon examination it should appear to be of the standard weight, it should be restored: but if it should be less in weight than the standard of the mint, that is to say, at and after the rate of 62*s.* to every pound troy, it shall be forfeited. This act was revived and made perpetual by stat. 39 Geo. III. c. 75; but by stat. 56 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 2, so much of stat. 14 Geo. III. as enacts that any silver coin of the realm less in weight than after the rate of

62s. for every pound troy, shall be forfeited, and of any act or acts for reviving or continuing or making perpetual the provisions of the said last recited act in this respect, is repealed. (See 1 Russ. 3rd ed. 65, 66.)

10. Counterfeiting, &c.

Uttering, Tendering, &c. Foreign Counterfeit Gold or Silver Coin.]—The stat. 37 Geo. III. c. 126, enacts by sect. 4, "That if any person or persons shall, from and after the passing of this act, utter or tender in payment, or give in exchange, or pay or put off to any person or persons, any such false or counterfeit coin as aforesaid, resembling or made with intent to resemble or look like, any gold or silver coin of any foreign prince, state or country, or to pass as such foreign coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, and shall be thereof convicted, every person so offending shall suffer six months imprisonment, and find sureties for his or her good behaviour for six months more, to be computed from the end of the said first six months; and if the same person shall afterwards be convicted a second time for the like offence of uttering or tendering in payment, or giving in exchange, or paying or putting off any such false or counterfeit coin as aforesaid, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, such person shall, for such second offence, suffer two years' imprisonment, and find sureties for his or her good behaviour for two years more, to be computed from the end of the said first two years; and if the same person shall afterwards offend a third time, in uttering or tendering in payment, or giving in exchange, or paying or putting off any such false or counterfeit coin as aforesaid, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, and shall be convicted of such third offence, he or she shall be adjudged guilty of felony, without benefit of clergy."

Tendering in payment such counterfeit coin, first offence six months' imprisonment; second offence, two years;

third offence, felony.

This latter part of the clause, as far as regards the capital punishment, is repealed by the 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 66; and see that enactment also, sect. 26, and 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 5, post, 757.

Certificate of Conviction.]—Sect. 5. "If any person shall be convicted of uttering or tendering any such false or counterfeit coin as aforesaid, and shall afterwards be guilty of the like offence in any other county, city or place, the clerk of the assize or clerk of the peace for the county, city or place where such former conviction shall have been had, shall, at the request of the prosecutor or any other on his majesty's behalf, certify the same by a transcript in a few words, containing the effect and tenor of such conviction; for which certificate two shillings and sixpence, and no more, shall be paid, and such certificate being produced in court shall be sufficient proof of such former conviction."

Clerk of assize or of peace to certify conviction of person for uttering counterfeit coin.

Search Warrants, &c.]—Sect. 7. "It shall and may be lawful to and for any one justice of the peace, on complaint made before him upon the oath of one credible person, that there is just cause to suspect that any one or more person or persons is or are or hath or have been concerned in making or counterfeiting any such false or counterfeit coin as aforesaid, resembling or made with an intent to resemble or look like any gold or silver coin of any foreign prince, state or country, or to pass as such foreign coin, by warrant under the hand of such justice to cause the dwelling-house, room, workshop, outhouse, or other building, yard, garden or other place belonging to such suspected person or persons, or where any such person or persons shall be suspected to carry on any such making or counterfeiting, to be searched for any such false or counterfeit coin, or for tools or implements for coining such false or counterfeit coin, or for materials for making or coining the same; and if any such false or counterfeit coin, or any such tools or instruments, or any such materials for making any such false or counterfeit coin, shall be found in any place so searched, or if any such tools, implements or materials shall be found in the custody or possession of any such person or persons whomsoever, not having the same by some lawful authority, it shall and may be lawful to and for any person or persons whatsoever discovering the same to seize, and he and they are hereby authorised and required to seize such false or counterfeit coin, tools, implements and materials, and to carry the Justices may grant warrants for searching suspected places.

Such counterfeit coin and tools and materials may be seized and carried before a justice, who shall secure same as evidence, and to be afterwards destroyed.

10. Counterfeiting, &c.

same forthwith to a justice of the peace of the county, city or place where the same shall be seized, who shall cause the same to be secured and produced in evidence against any person or persons who shall or may be prosecuted for any of the offences aforesaid, in some court of justice proper for the determination thereof; and after such time as any such false or counterfeit coin, or any such tools, implements or materials shall have been produced in evidence as aforesaid, as well so much and such parts thereof as shall have been so produced as every other part thereof so seized and not made use of in evidence, shall forthwith, by order of the court where such offender or offenders shall be tried, or by order of some justice or justices of the peace in case there shall be no such trial, be defaced or destroyed or otherwise disposed of as such court or such justice shall direct."

Limitation of actions, &c.

Sect. 9 limits actions for acts, &c. to three months, and gives the general issue treble costs.

Having more than five pieces of false foreign coin in possession.

Having in Custody Foreign Gold or Silver Coin.]—Having in custody a greater number than five pieces of counterfeit foreign coin, whether current here or not, makes the party liable to punishment by proceedings before a justice of the peace.

This is provided for by the 6th section of 37 Geo. III. c. 126, which enacts, that "if any person or persons shall have in his, her or their custody, without lawful excuse, any greater number of pieces than five pieces of false or counterfeit coin, of any kind or kinds, resembling, or made with intent to resemble or look like, any gold or silver coin or coins of any foreign prince, state or country, or to pass as such foreign coin, every such person, being thereof convicted upon the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, before one of his majesty's justices of the peace, shall forfeit and lose all such false and counterfeit coin, which shall be cut in pieces and destroyed by order of such justice, and shall, for every such offence, forfeit and pay any sum of money not exceeding five pounds nor less than forty shillings, for every such piece of false or counterfeit coin which shall be found in the custody of such person, one moiety to the informer or informers, and the other moiety to the poor of the parish where such offence shall be committed; and in case any such penalty shall not be forthwith paid, it shall be lawful for such justice to commit the person who shall be adjudged to pay the same to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour, for the space of three calendar months, or until such penalty shall be paid."

Counterfeiting foreign coin not current by proclamation, but resembling copper or mixed metal coin of foreign state, a misdemeanor.

Counterfeiting Foreign Copper Money.]—The counterfeiting of foreign coin of copper, or of other metal, of less value than silver, not current here, is made a misdemeanor by stat. 43 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 3, which enacts, that "if any person shall, within any part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, make, coin or counterfeit any kind of coin not the proper coin of this realm, nor ordered by his majesty's proclamation to be deemed current money, but resembling or made with intent to resemble any copper coin or other coin made of any metal or mixed metals of less value than the silver coin of any foreign prince, state or country, or to pass as such foreign coin, such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and breach of the peace; and on conviction shall for the first offence be imprisoned not exceeding a year, and for the second offence shall be transported for seven years."

Sect. 4. No traverse to be allowed to a subsequent assizes or sessions, without cause shown to and allowed by the Court.

Sect. 5 enacts, that certificates of former convictions shall be produced in cases where persons are tried for second offences.

And a penalty of not exceeding 40*s.* nor less than 10*s.* is inflicted by sect. 6 for every such piece of counterfeit foreign coin in possession of any person who shall have more than five pieces thereof in his custody without lawful excuse.

Sect. 7 provides that houses of suspected persons may be searched by warrant of one justice, and counterfeit coin seized, &c.

By sect. 8 proceedings not to be quashed for want of form or removed by certiorari. 10. Counterfeiting, &c.

XI. Making Coining Tools.

Making, mending or having possession of any coining tools, felony.

By the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 10, "if any person shall knowingly, and without lawful authority, (the proof of which authority shall lie on the party accused), make or mend, or begin or proceed to make or mend, or buy or sell, or shall, knowingly and without lawful excuse (the proof of which excuse shall lie on the party accused), have in his custody or possession any puncheon, counter-puncheon, matrix, stamp, die, pattern or mould, in or upon which there shall be made or impressed, or which will make or impress, or which shall be intended to make or impress, the figure, stamp or apparent resemblance (a) of both or either of the sides of any of the king's current gold or silver coin, or any part or parts of both or either of such sides; or if any person shall, without lawful authority (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), make or mend, or begin or proceed to make or mend, or buy or sell, or shall, without lawful excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), have in his custody or possession, any edger, edging tool, collar, instrument or engine adapted and intended for the marking of coin round the edges with letters, grainings or other marks or figures apparently resembling those on the edges of any of the king's current gold or silver coin, such person knowing the same to be so adapted and intended as aforesaid; or if any person shall, without lawful authority, to be proved as aforesaid, make or mend, or begin or proceed to make or mend, or buy or sell, or shall, without lawful excuse, to be proved as aforesaid, have in his custody or possession, any press for coinage, or any cutting engine for cutting by force of a screw or of any other contrivance round blanks out of gold, silver or other metal, such person knowing such press to be a press for coinage, or knowing such engine to have been used or to be intended to be used for or in order to the counterfeiting of any of the king's current gold or silver coin, every such offender shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding four years." The imprisonment with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement, as enacted by s. 19, and 6 & 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 5, post.

Punishment.

The offences under this section are not triable at any quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1.

Making a puncheon for coining

To constitute the offence of making, &c. a puncheon, &c. for coining, it is not necessary that the instrument should be capable of making an impression of the whole of one side of the coin; for the words, "or any part or parts," &c. are introduced into this statute, and consequently the difficulty in R. v. Sutton; (2 Str. 1074; Hardw. 370;) where the instrument was capable of making the sceptre only, cannot now occur. (Jerv. Arch. C. L. 523). It is not necessary to prove, under this branch of the statute, the knowledge or intent of the defendant; for the mere similitude is treated by the legislature as evidence of the intent; neither is it essential to show that money was actually made with the instrument in question. (R. v. Ridgeley, 1 East, P. C. 171; Jerv. Arch. C. L. 397.) Where an indictment charged making a mould, "intended to make and impress the figure and apparent resemblance of the obverse side of a shilling," it is sufficient to prove that the prisoner made the mould and a part of the impression, though he had not completed the entire impression. (R. v. Foster, 7 C. & P. 495.)

Although in an indictment for making, &c. an instrument for coining, it is more accurate to describe the instrument according to its actual use, it may be described either way. (R. v. Lennard, 1 Leach, 85; 1 East, P. C. 170, S. C.; 1 Russ. 74.)

(a) See 1 East's P. C. 172; R. v. Ridgeley, 1 Leach, 189.

11. Making Coining Tools.

Making a press for coining.

As to the offence of making a press for coining, it is to be observed, that in this section there is no qualification applicable to the coining press, though there is as to the cutting engine in the same branch of the section. In John Bell's case, (Fost. 430; 1 East, P. C. 169), it was decided, that a press for coinage, proper to be used for the coining of guineas, shilling and louis d'ors, was within stat. 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 26. But that if it be in the person's possession for the purpose of coining foreign coin only, that circumstance alone took it out of the act. However, Lord C. J. Ryder, and Lord Hardwicke, and Foster, J. doubted of this, and Mansfield, J. concurred. (See Dodson's Life of Sir M. Foster, p. 44.)

Where a prisoner was indicted for having in his possession a mould on which was impressed a resemblance of the obverse side of a shilling, it was held, that in order to convict the jury must be satisfied that at the time he had it in his possession the whole of the obverse side was impressed on the mould. (R. v. Foster, 7 C. & P. 491.)

Being possessed of coining tools.

The having tools for coining in possession, with intent to use them, has been held to be a misdemeanor at common law. (R. v. Sutton, Cas. temp. Hardw. 370; 1 East's P. C. 172.) This is, however, a very questionable doctrine; and in evidence to support an indictment for the offence it will be necessary to prove that the defendant had in his possession the pieces of coin mentioned in the indictment, and that he knew them to be false and counterfeit, which can of course be only implied from circumstances or from the defendant's admission. Merely having counterfeit silver in the party's possession with intent to utter it as good, is no offence, for there is no criminal act done; (R. v. Stewart, R. & R. 288; R. v. Heath, id. 184); but procuring it with intent to utter it as good, is a misdemeanor; and having a large quantity of such coin is evidence that it was procured with such intent, unless there be circumstances to show that the defendant was the maker of it. (R. v. Fuller, id. 308.)

XII. Conveying Tools or Monies out of Mint.

Conveying tools or monies out of the mint without authority, felony.

By the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 11, "if any person shall, without lawful authority, (the proof whereof shall lie upon the party accused), knowingly convey out of any of his majesty's mints any puncheon, counter-puncheon, matrix, stamp, die, pattern, mould, edger, edging tool, collar, instrument, press or engine, used or employed in or about the coining of coin, or any useful part of any of the several matters aforesaid, or any coin, bullion, metal or mixture of metals, every such offender shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding four years." The imprisonment may be with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement, as directed by s. 19, and 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 5, post, 757.)

Transportation for life, &c.

The offences under this section are not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 30, s. 1.

XIII. Diminishing, or cutting suspected Coin. Discovery and seizure of Counterfeit Coin and Tools, &c.

Coin suspected to be diminished or counterfeit may be cut by any person to whom it is tendered.

By the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 13, "where any gold or silver coin shall be tendered to any person, who shall suspect any piece or pieces thereof to be diminished otherwise than by reasonable wearing, or to be counterfeit, it shall be lawful for such person to cut, break or deface such piece or pieces; and if any piece so cut, broken or defaced shall appear to be diminished otherwise than by reasonable wearing, or to be counterfeit, the person tendering the same shall bear the loss thereof; but if the same shall be of due weight, and appear to be lawful coin, the person cutting, breaking or defacing

Who shall bear the loss.

the same is hereby required to receive the same at the rate it was coined for; and if any dispute shall arise, whether the piece so cut, broken or defaced be diminished in manner aforesaid, or counterfeit, it shall be heard and finally determined in a summary manner by any justice of the peace, who is hereby empowered to examine upon oath as well the parties as any other person, in order to the decision of such dispute; and the tellers at the receipt of his majesty's exchequer, and their deputies and clerks, and the receivers general of every branch of his majesty's revenue, are hereby required to cut, break or deface, or cause to be cut, broken or defaced, every piece of counterfeit or unlawfully-diminished gold or silver coin which shall be tendered to them in payment of any part of his majesty's revenue."

In case of dispute justice of peace to dispose of case.

Sect. 14. "If any person shall find or discover in any place whatever, or in the possession of any person having the same without lawful excuse, any false or counterfeit coin resembling, or apparently intended to resemble or pass for, any of the king's current gold, silver or copper coin, or any instrument, tool or engine whatsoever adapted and intended for the counterfeiting of any such coin, it shall be lawful for the person so finding or discovering, and he is hereby required, to seize the same, and to carry the same forthwith before some justice of the peace; and where it shall be proved, on the oath of a credible witness before any justice of the peace, that there is reasonable cause to suspect that any person has been concerned in counterfeiting the king's current gold, silver or copper coin, or has in his custody or possession any such counterfeit coin, or any instrument, tool or engine whatsoever adapted and intended for the counterfeiting of any such coin, it shall be lawful for such justice, by warrant under his hand, to cause any place whatsoever belonging to or in the occupation or under the control of such suspected person to be searched, either in the day or in the night, and if any such counterfeit coin, or any such instrument, tool, or engine, shall be found in any place so searched, to cause the same to be seized and carried forthwith before the said justice, or some other justice of the peace; and wherever any such counterfeit coin, or any such instrument, tool, or engine as aforesaid, shall in any case whatever be seized and carried before a justice of the peace, he shall cause the same to be secured, for the purpose of being produced in evidence against any person who may be prosecuted for any offence against this act; and all counterfeit coin, and all instruments, tools, and engines adapted and intended for the counterfeiting of coin, after they shall have been produced in evidence, or where they shall have been seized, and shall not be required to be produced in evidence, shall forthwith be delivered up to the officers of his majesty's mint, or to their solicitor, or to any person authorised by them or him to receive the same."

Provision for the discovery and seizure of counterfeit coin and coining tools, for securing them as evidence, and for ultimately disposing of them.

Search warrants, &c.

If false or clipt money be found in a man's hands, if he be suspicious, he may be arrested till he have found his warrant. (3 Inst. 18; 1 Hawk. c. 17, s. 68; Hale's Sum. 21.)

As to search warrants for counterfeit foreign coin, see ante, 751; and as to search warrants in general, see "Search Warrant," Vol. V.

XIV. Accessaries.

By the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 18, "in the case of every felony punishable under this act, every principal in the second degree and every accessary before the fact shall be punishable in the same manner as the principal in the first degree is by this act punishable; and every accessary after the fact to any felony punishable under this act shall, on conviction, be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years; and in so far as relates to Scotland, every person who shall become accessary after the fact to any of the offences to which the punishment of transportation is by this act attached, shall, on conviction, be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years; the general law of Scotland as to accession, or art and

As to accessaries.

14. Accessaries. part, being in all other respects to regulate the punishments to be awarded under this act."

As to accessaries in general, see ante, "Accessary."

If A. counterfeits, and, by agreement before that counterfeiting, B. is to take off and vend the counterfeit money, B. is an aider and abettor (1 Hale, 514); but if B., knowing that A. has counterfeited money, puts off the false money for him after the fact, without any such agreement precedent to the counterfeiting, he seems to be all one with a receiver of him, because he maintains him. (Id.) In the latter case the offender would now be an accessary after the fact, and as such, by sect. 18 of the new act, subject to imprisonment for two years, though the proper course would be to proceed against such an offender for the substantive offence of uttering. (Rose. on Coin, 6.)

XV. Venue in Indictments under the 2 Will. IV. c. 34.

Venue.

By 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 15, "where two or more persons, acting in concert in different counties or jurisdictions, shall commit any offence against this act, all or any of the said offenders may be dealt with, indicted, tried, and punished, and their offence laid and charged to have been committed, in any one of the said counties or jurisdictions, in the same manner as if the offence had been actually and wholly committed within such one county or jurisdiction; provided always, that crimes and offences against this act committed in Scotland shall be proceeded against and tried in Scotland, in such manner and form as crimes and offences generally have been heretofore tried in that country."

See as to the venue in indictments in general, "Indictment," Vol. III.

XVI. Traverses of Indictments under 2 Will. IV. c. 34.

Indictments not to be traversed except for cause shown.

By 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 16, "no person against whom any bill of indictment shall be found at any assizes or sessions of the peace, for any misdemeanor against this act, shall be entitled to traverse the same to any subsequent assizes or sessions, but the Court before which the bill of indictment shall be returned as found shall forthwith proceed to try the person against whom the same is found, unless such person or the prosecutor shall show good cause, to be allowed by the Court, for the postponement of trial: provided always, that the rights and liabilities of persons indicted under this act in Scotland, so far as relates to the postponement or time of trial, shall remain and be dealt with in the same manner as in the cases of all other persons indicted for crime in that country." As to traverses in general, see "Traverse," Vol. VI.

XVII. Officer of Mint need not be called to prove Coin being Counterfeit.

What shall be sufficient proof of coin being counterfeit.

By the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 17, it is declared and enacted, "that where, upon the trial of any person charged with any offence against this act, it shall be necessary to prove that any coin produced in evidence against such person is false or counterfeit, it shall not be necessary to prove the same to be false and counterfeit by the evidence of any moneyer or other officer of his majesty's Mint, but it shall be sufficient to prove the same to be false or counterfeit by the evidence of any other credible witness." (See ante, 741.)

XVIII. Punishment of Hard Labour or Solitary Confinement.

The Court may order hard labour or solitary confinement.

By the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 19, "where any person shall be convicted of any offence punishable under this act for which imprisonment may be awarded, it shall be lawful for the Court to sentence the offender to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction, and also to direct that the offender shall be kept in solitary confinement for the whole or any portion or portions of such imprisonment, as to the Court in its discretion shall seem meet." 18. Punishment, &c.

But now the 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 5, enacts that it shall not be lawful for any Court to direct that any offender shall be kept in solitary confinement for any longer period than one month at a time, or than three months in the space of one year. By the Prisons Regulation Act, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 56, s. 4, the separate solitary confinement directed by that act, is not to be deemed confinement within the meaning of any act forbidding solitary confinement for more than a limited time. See further, title "Hard Labour," Vol. III.

XIX. Offences at Sea.

By the 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 20, "where any offence punishable under this act shall be committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, the same shall be dealt with, inquired of, tried, and determined in the same manner as any other offence committed within that jurisdiction." See ante, "Admiralty." As to offences committed at sea.

XX. Indemnity to Persons acting under the 2 Will. IV. c. 34.

By 2 Will. IV. c. 34, s. 24, for the protection of persons acting in the execution of this act, it is enacted, "that all actions and prosecutions to be commenced against any person for any thing done in pursuance of this act shall, in England or Ireland, be laid and tried in the county where the fact was committed, and shall, in England, Ireland, or Scotland, be commenced within six calendar months after the fact committed, and not otherwise; and notice in writing of such action, and of the cause thereof, shall be given to the defendant or defender one calendar month at least before the commencement of the action; and in any such action brought in England or Ireland, the defendant may plead the general issue, and give this act and the special matter in evidence, at any trial to be had thereupon, and in Scotland the defender may insist on all relevant defences; and no plaintiff or pursuer shall recover in any such action if tender of sufficient amends shall have been made before such action brought, or if a sufficient sum of money shall have been paid into Court after such action brought by or on behalf of the defendant or defender; and if, in England or Ireland, a verdict shall pass for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall become nonsuit, or discontinue any such action after issue joined, or if, upon demurrer or otherwise, judgment shall be given against the plaintiff, or if in Scotland the verdict shall be for the defender, or if the pursuer shall abandon the action or the Court shall dismiss it as irrelevant or improperly laid; in every such case the defendant or defender shall recover his full costs as between attorney and client, and have the like remedy for the same as any defendant or defender hath by law in other cases; and though a verdict shall be given for the plaintiff or pursuer in any such action, such plaintiff or pursuer shall not have costs against the defendant or defender, unless the judge before whom the trial shall be, shall certify his approbation of the action and of the verdict obtained thereupon." Venue in proceedings against persons acting under this act. General issue. Tender of amends, &c. Costs. Judge's certificate.

XXI. Tokens.

Bank Tokens.]—The governor and company of the Bank of England, for the convenience of the public, were by stat. 44 Geo. III. c. 71, empowered to issue certain silver dollars, and provision was therein made against the counterfeiting and uttering counterfeits; and the governor and company, for the further convenience of the public, were by stat. 51 Geo. III. c. 110, authorised to issue certain silver pieces called tokens, for 3*s.* and 1*s.* 6*d.* each; Bank tokens.

21. Tokens. and persons uttering or vending counterfeits were by 52 Geo. III. s. 138, subject to certain punishments imposed by the said acts.

But upon the issuing of the new current silver coin, the further circulation of these tokens was prohibited, after the 25th of March, 1818, by 57 Geo. III. c. 113; extended (by stat. 58 Geo. III. c. 14,) to the 5th July, 1818, and further to the 5th April, 1819, &c.

Penalty for circulating them.

By 57 Geo. III. c. 113, s. 1, if "any person or persons shall from and after the said 25th day of March, 1818, utter, offer, or tender in payment, or give in exchange, or pass, circulate, or put off, any such dollar or tokens, whether the value thereof shall be paid or given in money or goods, or in any other manner whatsoever, every person so offending, and being thereof convicted upon the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, before one or more of his majesty's justices of the peace acting for the county, riding, city or place within which such offence shall be committed, shall for every such dollar or token so uttered, offered, tendered in payment, given in exchange, or passed, circulated, or put off, contrary to the prohibition hereinbefore contained, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 40*s.*, at the discretion of the justice or justices of the peace who shall hear and determine such offence: provided that nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to prevent any person or persons from presenting any such dollars or tokens for payment to the governor and company of the Bank of England, or at any time before the 25th day of March, 1820, or to any of their officers or servants, or to discharge or excuse the said governor and company from their liability to pay the same before the said 25th day of March, 1820: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall restrain or prevent any person or persons, after the 25th day of March next, from selling or disposing of any such dollars or tokens as aforesaid as old silver, according to the weight thereof, at the current price of silver, and without regard to the nominal or current value at which the same shall have been circulated."

May be presented at the Bank till 25th March, 1820.

May be sold as old silver.

Justices of peace empowered to hear and determine offences.

Sect. 2. "It shall be lawful for any justice or justices of the peace acting for the county, riding, city or place within which any offence against this act shall be committed, to hear and determine the same in a summary way; and such justice or justices, upon any information exhibited, or complaint made upon oath in that behalf, shall summon the person or persons accused, and also the witnesses on either side, and shall examine into the matter of fact, and upon due proof made thereof, either by the voluntary confession of the person or persons accused, or by the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, which oath such justice or justices is or are hereby authorised to administer, shall convict the offender or offenders, and adjudge the penalty for such offence."

Witnesses not attending.

Sect. 3. "If any person shall be summoned as a witness to give evidence before such justice or justices, either on the part of the informer or prosecutor, or of the person or persons accused, and shall neglect or refuse to appear at the time or place to be for that purpose appointed, without a reasonable excuse for such his neglect or refusal, to be allowed by such justice or justices, then such person shall forfeit for every such offence the sum of 20*l.*, to be levied and paid in such manner and by such means as are directed for recovery of other penalties under this act."

Penalties, how levied and how applied.

Sect. 6. "The pecuniary penalties and forfeitures hereby incurred and made payable upon any conviction against this act, shall be forthwith paid by the person or persons convicted as follows: one moiety of the forfeiture to the informer, and the other moiety to the poor of the parish or place where the offence shall be committed; and in case the person or persons so convicted shall refuse or neglect to pay the same, or to give sufficient security, to the satisfaction of such justice or justices, to prosecute any appeal against such conviction, such justice or justices shall, by warrant under his or their hand and seal, or hands and seals, cause the same to be levied by distress and sale of the offender's goods and chattels, together with all costs and charges attending such distress and sale, returning the overplus (if any) to the owner or owners."

Appeal.

21. Tokens.

Sect. 8. "If no sufficient distress can be had, then and in such case the said justice or justices shall and may commit such offender or offenders to the common gaol or house of correction of the county, riding, division, city or place where the offence shall be committed, for the space of three calendar months, unless the money forfeited shall be sooner paid, or unless or until such offender or offenders, thinking him, her, or themselves aggrieved by such conviction, shall give notice to the informer that he, she or they intend to appeal to the justices of the peace at the next general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden for the county, riding, division, city or place wherein the offence shall be committed, and shall enter into recognizance before some justice or justices, with two sufficient sureties, conditioned to try such appeal, and to abide the order of and pay such costs as shall be awarded by the justices at such quarter sessions; which notice of appeal being given not less than eight days before the trial thereof, the person or persons so aggrieved is or are hereby empowered to give; and the said justices at such sessions, upon due proof of such notice being given as aforesaid, and of the entering into such recognizance, shall hear and finally determine the causes and matters of such appeal in a summary way, and award such costs to the parties appealing or appealed against as they the said justices shall think proper; and the determination of such quarter sessions shall be final, binding, and conclusive to all intents and purposes.

Offenders committed for want of distress.

Appeal on notice.

Recognizance.

Notice not less than eight days before trial.

Local tokens.

Local Tokens.]—The 52 Geo. III. c. 157, prohibited the circulation of local tokens of gold, silver, or mixed metal, after the 25th of March, 1813, but that period was extended, by 53 Geo. III. c. 19, to the 5th of July, 1813. By stat. 53 Geo. III. c. 114, after reciting that "an act passed in this session of parliament, intituled 'An Act to amend an Act of the last Session of Parliament, to prevent the issuing and circulating of Pieces of Gold and Silver, or other Metal, usually called Tokens, except such as are issued by the Banks of England and Ireland respectively;' and whereas it is expedient that the period limited in the said act for the circulation of pieces of gold or silver and mixed metals, in the said act specified and denominated tokens, should be further extended, and that the said act should be amended," it is enacted, "that so much of the said recited act as prohibits the circulation of any such tokens as are in the said recited act described, after the 5th of July, 1813, shall be and the same is hereby repealed."

Tokens not to be circulated after a certain time.

Sect. 2. "From and after six weeks from the commencement of the next session of parliament, no piece of gold or silver, or of any mixed metal composed partly of gold or silver, of whatever name the same may be, shall pass or circulate as a token for money, or as purporting that the bearer or holder thereof is entitled to demand any value denoted thereon, either by letters, words, figures, marks or otherwise, whether such value is to be paid or given in money or goods, or other value, or in any manner whatsoever; and every person who shall, after six weeks from the commencement of the next session of parliament, circulate or pass as for any nominal value in money or goods any such token, shall for every such token so circulated or passed, whether such person shall be or have been concerned in the original issuing or circulation of any such token, or only the bearer or holder thereof for the time being, forfeit any sum not less than 5*l.* nor more than 10*l.*, at the discretion of such justice or justices of the peace who shall hear and determine such offence: provided that nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to prevent any person from presenting any such token for payment to the original issuer thereof, or to discharge or excuse any such original issuer from his liability to pay the same."

Original issuer.

Act not to authorise issue of promissory notes under 20*s.*

Sect. 4. "Nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to authorise or make legal the issuing of any promissory note, not being a token composed of gold or silver, or of mixed metal composed partly of gold or silver, which cannot now be issued by law."

Act not to extend to tokens of Bank of England or Ireland.

Sect. 5. "Nothing in this act contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to any tokens issued or circulated by or under the authority of the governor and company of the Bank of England, or by or under the authority of the governor and company of the Bank of Ireland respectively; or in any manner to affect any such tokens or the circulation thereof; or to subject any company or companies, or person or persons, to any penalty for issuing or circulating any such tokens."

Sect. 4. Justices of the peace are empowered to hear and determine offences in a summary way.

Sect. 5. Witnesses not attending on summons to forfeit 20*l.*, to be levied (as other penalties under these acts) by distress.

Sect. 9. Justices are empowered to detain offenders in custody until return can be had of any warrant of distress.

Sect. 10. In default of distress offenders may be committed to the common gaol or house of correction for three calendar months, unless the penalty be sooner paid, or the offender give notice of appeal to the next general quarter sessions, and enter into recognizance to try such appeal. Determination of sessions to be final.

57 Geo. 3, c. 46.

Copper tokens.

By stat. 57 Geo. III. c. 46, s. 1, after reciting that "various pieces of copper, and mixed metals composed in part of copper, usually denominated tokens, have lately been, and are issued and circulated, by persons residing in various parts of the United Kingdom, in great quantities, as money, and for a nominal value of the metals of which they are composed; and whereas it is expedient that the further making and issuing of such tokens should be prohibited, and that the circulation of those already made or issued should also be prohibited after a limited period," it is enacted, "that from and after the passing of this act, no piece of copper, or mixed metal composed in part of copper, of whatever value the same may be, shall be made or manufactured or originally issued as a token for money, or as purporting that the bearer or holder thereof is entitled to demand any value denoted thereon, either by letters, words, figures, marks or otherwise, whether such value is to be paid or given in money or goods, or in any manner whatsoever; and every person who shall, after the passing of this act, make or manufacture or originally issue, or cause or procure to be made, manufactured, or originally issued, or permit or suffer to be so issued, on his or her behalf, as for nominal value in money or goods, any such token, shall for every token so made, manufactured or issued, or procured or permitted to be so made, manufactured or issued as aforesaid, forfeit any sum not less than 1*l.* nor more than 5*l.*, at the discretion of the justice or justices of the peace who shall hear and determine such offence."

No copper or mixed metal tokens to be made or issued.

Penalty.

Circulating such tokens.

Sect. 2. "From and after the 1st day of January, 1818, no piece of copper, or of any mixed metal composed partly of copper, of whatever value the same may be, shall pass or circulate as a token for money, or as purporting that the bearer or holder thereof is entitled to demand any value denoted thereon, either by letters, words, figures, marks, or otherwise, whether such value is to be paid or given in money or goods or other value, or in any manner whatsoever; and every person who shall, after the said 1st day of January, 1818, circulate or pass, as for any nominal value in money or goods, any such token, shall, for every such token so circulated or passed, whether such person shall be or have been concerned in the original issuing or circulation of any such token, or only the bearer or holder thereof for the time being, forfeit any sum not less than 2*s.* nor more than 10*s.*, at the discretion of the justice or justices of the peace who shall hear and determine such offence; provided that nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to prevent any person from presenting any such token for payment to the original issuer thereof, or to discharge or excuse any such original issuer from his liability to pay the same: provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed as affecting any tokens which have been or may be issued by the Bank of England."

Issuer to be liable for payment.

Proviso for Bank of England tokens.

Sect. 3. "And whereas certain tokens made of copper or of a mixed metal composed partly of copper, and bearing the superscription, 'Sheffield Penny Token,' were issued from time to time during the years 1812, 1813, 1814, and 1815, by the overseers of the poor of the township of Sheffield, in the county of York; and whereas the immediate suppression of the circulation of the aforesaid tokens would be attended with great loss to the said township of Sheffield and to the holders thereof, who are for the most part labourers and mechanics, as well as with great inconvenience to the inhabitants of the town of Sheffield and the neighbourhood thereof; be it further enacted, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prevent such tokens as aforesaid from being passed and circulated at any time previous to the 25th day of March which will be in the year of our Lord 1823; provided always, that from and after the 25th day of March, 1823, all and every the provisions of this act shall be construed to prevent such tokens as aforesaid from being passed or circulated."

Sheffield penny tokens issued for the relief of the poor may circulate until 25th March, 1823.

Sect. 4. "In case any token or tokens made of copper or of a mixed metal composed partly of copper, with the superscription, 'Sheffield Penny Token,' and which has or have been issued by the overseers of the poor of the township of Sheffield, at any time previous to the passing of this act, shall, after the 25th day of March, 1823, and previous to the 25th day of September, 1823, be presented to the overseers of the poor of the township of Sheffield for the time being, or their agent, at the workhouse of the said township, the said overseers shall receive and take such token or tokens as aforesaid, paying to the holder or holders thereof one penny of the current coin of the realm for each and every token so presented as aforesaid; and in case such overseers or their agent shall neglect or refuse to receive and take such token as aforesaid, and to pay one penny for the same as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for one justice of the peace, upon complaint upon oath in that behalf made, to summon such overseers or their agent, and after hearing the parties upon both sides, to direct and order (if he shall see just cause) the said overseers of the poor or their agent to take and receive such token as aforesaid, and to pay one penny for the same as aforesaid, together with all costs and charges whatever attending such complaint so made before such justice: provided always, that it shall and may be lawful for the overseers of the poor of the said township of Sheffield to pay such penny as aforesaid out of any money received by them for the relief and maintenance of the poor of the said township; but that it shall not be lawful for the said overseers of the poor to pay the costs and charges attending any such complaint as aforesaid out of any money received by them as aforesaid."

Overseers of the poor of Sheffield to pay 1*d.* for their tokens.

Justice upon complaint may summon overseers.

Overseers may pay such penny out of poor's rates.

Sect. 5. "In case the overseers of the poor for the township of Sheffield for the time being shall at any time previous to the said 25th of March, 1823, deem it advisable to call in such tokens as aforesaid, or any amount of them, it shall and may be lawful for them to take such measures as may to them seem necessary for that purpose; paying, however, for each and every token so called in, one penny of the current coin of the realm, out of any money received by them for the relief and maintenance of the poor of the said township of Sheffield."

Overseers of the poor of Sheffield may call in tokens before 25th March, 1823.

Sect. 6. "And whereas certain other tokens made of copper, or of a mixed metal composed partly of copper, and bearing the superscription 'Birmingham, One Penny,' were issued from time to time during the years 1811, 1812, 1813, 1814, and 1815, by the overseers of the poor of the parish of Birmingham, in the county of Warwick: and whereas the immediate suppression of the circulation of the aforesaid tokens would be attended with great loss to the said parish of Birmingham, and to the holders thereof, as well as with great inconvenience to the inhabitants of the town of Birmingham and the neighbourhood thereof; be it further enacted, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prevent such tokens as aforesaid from being passed and circulated at any time previous to the 25th day of March, 1820: provided always, that from and after the said 25th of March, 1820, all and every the provisions of this act shall be construed to prevent such tokens as aforesaid from being passed and circulated."

Birmingham penny tokens issued for the relief of the poor may circulate until 25th March, 1820.

Sect. 7. "In case any token or tokens made of copper, or of a mixed metal composed partly of copper, with the superscription 'Birmingham, One Penny,' and which have been issued by the overseers of the poor of Birmingham at any time previous to the passing of this act, shall, after the 25th day of March, 1820, and previous to the 25th day of September, 1820, be presented to the overseers of the poor of Birmingham, or their agents, at the workhouse of the said parish, the said overseers shall receive and take such token or tokens as aforesaid, paying to the holder or holders thereof one penny of the current coin of the realm for each and every token so presented as aforesaid; and in case such overseers or their agents shall neglect or refuse to receive and take such token as aforesaid, and to pay one penny as aforesaid for the same, it shall and may be lawful for one justice of the peace, upon complaint upon oath in such behalf made, to summon such overseers or their agent, and after hearing the parties upon either side to direct and order (if he shall see just cause) the said overseers of the poor or their agent to take and receive such token as aforesaid, and to pay one penny as aforesaid for the same, together with all costs and charges whatever attending such complaint so made before such justice: provided always, that it shall and may be lawful for the overseers of the poor of the parish of Birmingham to pay such penny as aforesaid out of any money received by them for the relief and maintenance of the poor of the said parish; but that it shall not be lawful for them to pay the costs and charges attending any complaint out of such money.

Justice upon complaint may summon overseers.

Overseers may pay such penny out of poor's rates.

Overseers of the poor of Birmingham may call in tokens before 25th March, 1820.

Sect. 8. "In case the overseers of the poor of Birmingham shall, at any time previous to the said 25th day of March, 1820, deem it advisable to call in such tokens as aforesaid, or any amount of them, it shall and may be lawful for them to take such measures as may to them seem necessary for that purpose; paying, however, for each and every such token so called in, one penny of the current coin of the realm, from and out of any money received by them for the relief and maintenance of the poor of the said township of Birmingham."

Justices to determine offences.

Sect. 9. "It shall be lawful for any justice or justices of the peace acting for the county, riding, city or place within which any offence against this act shall be committed, to hear and determine the same in a summary way; and such justice or justices, upon any information exhibited, or complaint made upon oath in that behalf, shall summon the party accused, and also the witnesses on either side, and shall examine into the matter of fact; and upon due proof made thereof, either by the voluntary confession of the party, or by the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses or otherwise, (which oath such justice or justices is or are hereby authorised to administer,) shall convict the offender, and adjudge the penalty for such offence."

Witnesses not attending to forfeit 50*l.*

Sect. 10. "If any person shall be summoned as a witness to give evidence before such justice or justices, either on the part of the prosecutor or the person accused, and shall neglect or refuse to appear at the time or place to be for that purpose appointed, without a reasonable excuse for such his neglect or refusal, to be allowed by such justice or justices, then such person shall forfeit for every such offence the sum of 50*l.* to be levied and paid in such manner and by such means as are directed for recovery of other penalties under this act."

Conviction.

Sect. 11. "The justice or justices before whom any offender shall be convicted as aforesaid, shall cause the said conviction to be made out in the manner and form following; (that is to say,)

"BE it remembered, that on the day of , in the year of our Lord , A. B. having appeared before me [or us] one [or more] of his majesty's justices of the peace [as the case may be] for the county, riding, city or place [as the case may be], and due proof having been made upon oath by one or more credible witness or witnesses, or by confession of the party, [as the case may be,] is convicted of [specifying the offence,] in the sum of . Given under my hand and seal [or our hands and seals] the day and year aforesaid."

"which conviction the said justice or justices shall cause to be returned to the then next general quarter sessions of the peace of the county, city, riding or place where such conviction was made, to be filed by the clerk of the peace, to remain and be kept among the records of such county, riding, city, or place."

Clerk of the peace to deliver a copy

Sect. 12. "It shall be lawful for any clerk of the peace for any county, riding, city or place, and he is hereby required, upon application made to him by any person or persons for that purpose, to cause a copy or copies of any conviction or convictions filed by him under the directions of this act, to be forthwith delivered to such person or persons, upon payment of 1*s.* for every such copy."

thereof on payment of 1*s.*

Recovery and distribution of penalties.

Sect. 13. "The pecuniary penalties and forfeitures hereby incurred and made payable upon any conviction against this act, shall be forthwith paid by the person convicted as follows; one moiety of the forfeiture to the informer, and the other moiety to the poor of the parish or place where the offence shall be committed; and in case such person shall refuse or neglect to pay the same, or to give sufficient security to the satisfaction of such justice or justices to prosecute any appeal against such conviction, such justice or justices shall by warrant under his or their hand and seal, or hands and seals, cause the same to be levied by distress and sale of the offender's goods and chattels, together with all costs and charges attending such distress and sale, returning the overplus (if any) to the owner; and which said warrant of distress the said justice or justices shall cause to be made out in the manner and form following; (that is to say,)

Warrant.

"To the Constable, Headborough or Tithingman of .

"WHEREAS A. B. of , in the county of , is this day convicted before me [or us] one [or more] of his majesty's justices of the peace [as the case may be,] for the county of , [or for the riding of the county of York, or for the town, liberty or district of ,] [as the case may be,] upon the oath of , [or , a credible witness or witnesses,] [or by confession of the party,] [as the case may be,] for that the said A. B. hath [here set forth the offence,] contrary to the statute in that case made and provided, by reason whereof the said A. B. hath forfeited the sum of , to be distributed as herein is mentioned, which he hath refused to pay: these are therefore in his majesty's name to command you to levy the said sum of by distress of the goods and chattels of him the said A. B.; and if within the space of days next after such distress by you taken, the said sum, together with the reasonable charges of taking the same, shall not be paid, then that you do sell the said goods and chattels so by you distrained, and out of the money arising by such sale, that you do pay one half of the said sum of , to of who informed me [or us as the case shall be,] of the said offence, and the other half of the said sum of to the overseer of the poor of the parish [township or place] where the offence was committed, to be employed for the benefit of such poor, returning the overplus (if any) upon demand to the said A. B., the reasonable charges of taking, keeping and selling the said distress being first deducted; and if sufficient distress cannot be found of the goods and chattels of the said A. B. whereon to levy the said sum of , that then you certify the same to me [or us, as the case shall be,] together with this warrant. Given under my hand and seal, [or our hands and seals,] the day of in the year of our Lord ."

For detaining offenders till return of warrant.

Sect. 14. "It shall be lawful for such justice or justices to order such offender to be detained in safe custody until return may conveniently be had and made to such warrant of distress, unless the party so convicted shall give sufficient security to the satisfaction of such justice or justices for his appearance before the said justice or justices on such day as shall be appointed by the said justice or justices for the day of the return of the said warrant of distress, (such day not exceeding five days from the taking of such security,) which security the said justice or justices is and are hereby empowered to take by way of recognizance or otherwise."

Committal of defaulters.

Sect. 15. "If upon such return no sufficient distress can be had, then and in such case the said justice or justices shall and may commit such offender to the common gaol or house of correction of the county, riding, division or place where the offence shall be committed, for the space of one calendar month, unless the money forfeited shall be sooner paid, or unless or until such offender, thinking him or herself aggrieved by such conviction, shall give notice to the informer that he or she intends to appeal to the justices of the peace at the next general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden for the county, riding or place wherein the offence shall be committed, and shall enter into recognizances before some justice or justices, with two sufficient sureties, conditioned to try such appeal, and to abide the order of and pay such costs as shall be awarded by the justices at such quarter sessions; which notice of appeal, being not less than eight days before such quarter sessions, such person so aggrieved is hereby empowered to give; and the said justices at such sessions, upon due proof of such notice being given as aforesaid, and of the entering into such recognizance, shall hear and finally determine the causes and matters of such appeal in a summary way, and award such costs to the parties appealing or appealed against, as they the said justices shall think proper; and the determination of such quarter sessions shall be final, binding and conclusive to all intents and purposes."

Competency of witnesses.

Proceedings not to be removed by certiorari.

Sect. 16. "No person shall be disabled from being a witness in any prosecution for any offence against this act, by reason of his being an inhabitant of the parish wherein such offence was committed: provided always, that no proceeding to be had touching the conviction or convictions of any offender or offenders against this act shall be quashed or vacated for want of form, or be removed by writ of certiorari, or any other writ or process whatsoever, into any of his majesty's courts of record at Westminster or elsewhere."

Limitation of actions.

Sect. 17. "If any action or suit shall be commenced against any person or persons for any thing done or acted in pursuance of this act, then and in every such case such action or suit shall be commenced or prosecuted within three calendar months after the fact was committed, and not afterwards; and the same and every such action or suit shall be brought within the county where the fact was committed, and not elsewhere; and the defendant or defendants in every such action or suit shall and may plead the general issue, and give this act and the special matter in evidence at any trial to be had thereupon, and that the same was done in pursuance and by the authority of this act; and if the same shall appear to have been so done, or if any such action or suit shall be brought after the time limited for bringing the same, or be brought or laid in any other place than as afore-mentioned, then the jury shall find for the defendant or defendants; or if the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall become nonsuit, or discontinue his, her or their action after the defendant or defendants shall have appeared, or if upon demurrer judgment shall be given against the plaintiff or plaintiffs, the defendant or defendants shall and may recover treble costs, and have the like remedy for the recovery thereof as any defendant or defendants hath or have in any other cases by law."

Not to extend to copper monies of the realm.

Sect. 18. "Nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to any copper monies of the realm now current or to be current, by virtue of any proclamation or proclamations that shall have been or may be issued by his majesty."

As to the proof of judgments in Courts of, see "Evidence," Vol. II. p. 400.

6 & 7 Vict. c. 34.

By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 34, intituled "An Act for the better Apprehension of certain Offenders," (28th July, 1843,) reciting that "it is expedient to make more effectual provision for the apprehension and trial of offenders against the laws who may be in other parts of her Majesty's dominions than those in which their offences were committed:" it is enacted, "that from and after the passing of this act, if any person charged with having committed any offence such as is hereinafter mentioned against the laws of any part of her Majesty's dominions not being part of the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and against whom a warrant shall have been issued for such offence by any person having lawful authority to issue the same within that part of her Majesty's dominions where such offence shall have been committed, shall be in any place within the said united kingdom, it shall be lawful, in Great Britain, for one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, and in Ireland for the chief secretary of the lord lieutenant of Ireland, to endorse his name on such warrant, which warrant so endorsed shall be a sufficient authority to the person or persons bringing such warrant, and to all persons to whom such warrant was originally directed, and also to all constables and other peace officers in that part of the united kingdom where the Offenders in colonies escaping into united kingdom may be there apprehended.

6 & 7 Vict. c. 34.

said warrant shall be so endorsed, to execute the said warrant, by apprehending the person against whom such warrant is directed, and to convey the said person before a justice of the peace for the county or other jurisdiction in which the supposed offender shall be apprehended, or in Scotland either before such justice of the peace or before the sheriff depute or substitute."

For apprehension of offenders escaping to the colonies.

Sect. 2. "And to remedy the like failure of justice by the escape of persons charged with having committed offences into those parts of her Majesty's dominions which do not form part of the said united kingdom, be it enacted, that from and after the passing of this act, if any person charged with having committed any offence such as is hereinafter mentioned, in any part of her Majesty's dominions, whether or not within the said united kingdom, and against whom a warrant shall be issued by any person or persons having lawful authority to issue the same, shall be in any other part of her Majesty's dominions not forming part of the said united kingdom, it shall be lawful for the chief justice or any other judge of her Majesty's superior court of law within that other part of her Majesty's dominions where such person shall be to endorse his name on such warrant, which warrant so endorsed shall be a sufficient authority to the person or persons bringing such warrant, and also to all persons to whom such warrant was originally directed, and also to all peace officers of the place where the warrant shall be so endorsed, to execute the same within the jurisdiction of the person by whom it shall be so endorsed, by apprehending the person against whom such warrant is directed, and to convey him before a magistrate or other person having authority to examine and commit offenders for trial in that part of her Majesty's dominions."

Offender may be committed to gaol until he can be sent back to the place where the offence was committed.

Information of committal to be given.

Sect. 3. "That it shall be lawful for any person duly authorised to examine and commit offenders for trial before whom such supposed offender shall be brought as aforesaid, upon such evidence of criminality as would justify his committal if the offence had been committed in that part of her Majesty's dominions, to commit such supposed offender to prison, there to remain until he can be sent back, in manner hereinafter mentioned, to that part of her Majesty's dominions in which he is charged with having committed such offence; and immediately upon the committal of such person information thereof in writing under the hand of the committing magistrate, accompanied by a copy of the said warrant, shall be given, in Great Britain, to one of her majesty's principal secretaries of state, and in Ireland to the chief secretary of the lord lieutenant, and in any other part of her Majesty's dominions to the governor or acting governor."

Copies of depositions may be given in evidence.

Sect. 4. Provides and enacts, "That in every such case copies of the depositions upon which the original warrant was granted, certified under the hand of the person or persons issuing such warrant, and attested upon the oath of the party producing them to be the true copies of the original depositions, may be received in evidence of the criminality of the person so apprehended."

Offenders apprehended to be sent to the place where the offence was committed;

Sect. 5. "That it shall be lawful, in Great Britain, for any one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, and in Ireland for the chief secretary of the lord lieutenant, and in any other part of her Majesty's dominions for the governor or acting governor, by warrant under his hand and seal, to order any person who shall have been so apprehended and committed to gaol to be delivered into the custody of some person or persons, to be named in the said warrant, for the purpose of being conveyed into that part of her Majesty's dominions in which he is charged with having committed the offence, and being delivered into the custody of the proper authorities there, to be dealt with in due course of law as if he had been there apprehended, and to order that the person so committed to gaol be so conveyed accordingly; and if the said person, after he shall have been so apprehended, shall escape out of any custody to which he shall have been committed as aforesaid, it shall be lawful to retake such person, in the same manner as any person accused of any crime against the laws of that part of her Majesty's dominions may be retaken upon an escape."

If not sent within two months after

Sect. 6. "That where any person who shall have been committed to gaol under this act shall not be conveyed out of that part of her Majesty's dominions in which he shall have been so committed to gaol within two calendar months after such committal, over and above the time actually required to convey the prisoner from the gaol to which he was committed by the readiest way out of that part of her Majesty's dominions, it shall be lawful for any of her Majesty's judges in that part of her Majesty's dominions in which such supposed offender shall be in custody, upon application made to him or them by or on behalf of the person so committed, and upon proof made to him or them that reasonable notice of the intention to make such application has been given to one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state in Great Britain, or in Ireland to the chief secretary of the lord lieutenant of Ireland, or to the governor or acting governor in any other part of her Majesty's dominions, to order the person so committed to be discharged out of custody, unless sufficient cause shall be shown to such judge or judges why such discharge ought not to be ordered."

6 & 7 Vict. c. 34.

committal, may apply to be discharged.

Sect. 7. "That in case any person apprehended under this act shall not be indicted for the offence for which he shall have been so apprehended within the period of six calendar months after his arrival in that part of her Majesty's dominions in which he is charged to have committed the offence, or if upon his trial he shall be acquitted, it shall be lawful, in Great Britain, for one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, and in Ireland for the chief secretary of the lord lieutenant of Ireland, and for the governor or acting governor in any other part of her Majesty's dominions, if he shall think fit, upon the request of the person so apprehended, to cause such person to be sent back, free of cost to such person, and with as little delay as possible, to that part of her Majesty's dominions in which he shall have been so apprehended."

Persons apprehended, if not indicted within six months, or if not convicted, may be sent back.

Sect. 8. "That the court before which any person apprehended under this act shall be prosecuted or tried within the said united kingdom may order, if it shall think fit, that the expenses of apprehending and removing the prisoner from any part of her Majesty's dominions not within the said united kingdom to any place within the said united kingdom shall be repaid to the person defraying the same, by the treasurer of the county or other jurisdiction in England or Ireland, or by the sheriff depute or substitute of the county in Scotland, in which the offence is charged to have been committed, the amount of such expenses being previously ascertained by an account thereof, verified by production of proper vouchers before two justices of the peace of such county or other jurisdiction, which last-mentioned justices shall examine into the correctness of the said account, and shall allow the same, or such part thereof as shall to them appear just and reasonable, under their hands and seals; and every treasurer, or sheriff depute or substitute, who shall pay the amount so ascertained, shall be allowed such payment in his accounts respecting the business of such county or other jurisdiction."

Providing for expense of removal of offenders to united kingdom.

Sect. 9 provides and enacts, "That it shall not be lawful for any person to endorse his name on any such warrant, for the purpose of authorising the apprehension of any person under this act, until it shall have been proved to him, upon oath or by affidavit, that the seal or signature upon the same is the seal or signature of the person having lawful authority to issue such warrant whose seal or signature the same purports to be."

Proof of signature of person issuing original warrant.

Sect. 10 provides and enacts, "That it shall not be lawful for any person to endorse his name upon any such warrant, for the purpose of authorising the apprehension of any person under this act, unless it shall appear upon the face of the said warrant that the offence which the person for whose apprehension the said warrant has been issued is charged to have committed is such that, if committed within that part of her Majesty's dominions where the warrant is so endorsed, it would have amounted in law to a treason, or some felony such as the justices of the peace in general or quarter sessions assembled have not authority to try in England under the provisions of an act passed in the sixth year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled 'An Act to define the Jurisdiction of Justices in General and Quarter Sessions of the Peace,' or unless the depositions appear sufficient to warrant the committal of such person for trial."

Warrant not to be endorsed, except in cases of treason and felony, &c.

5 & 6 Vict. c. 38.

6 & 7 Vict. c. 94.

By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 94, intituled "An Act to remove Doubts as to the Exercise of Power and Jurisdiction by Her Majesty within divers Countries and Places out of Her Majesty's Dominions, and to render the same more effectual," [24th August, 1843,] reciting that "by treaty, capitulation, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means her Majesty hath power and jurisdiction within divers countries and places out of her Majesty's dominions: and that doubts have arisen how far the exercise of such power and jurisdiction is controlled by and dependent on the laws and customs of this realm, and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed:" it is therefore enacted, "that it is and shall be lawful for her Majesty to hold, exercise, and enjoy any power or jurisdiction which her Majesty now hath or may at any time hereafter have within any country or place out of her Majesty's dominions, in the same and as ample a manner as if her Majesty had acquired such power or jurisdiction by the cession or conquest of territory."

The power acquired by her Majesty in countries out of her dominions shall be held on the same terms as her Majesty's authority in the crown colonies.

Sect. 2. "That every act, matter, and thing which may at any time be done, in pursuance of any such power or jurisdiction of her Majesty, in any country or place out of her Majesty's dominions, shall, in all courts ecclesiastical and temporal and elsewhere within her Majesty's dominions, be and be deemed and adjudged to be, in all cases and to all intents and purposes whatsoever, as valid and effectual as though the same had been done according to the local law then in force within such country or place."

Acts done in pursuance of such power to be of the same effect as if done under local laws.

Sect. 3. "That if in any suit or other proceedings, whether civil or criminal, in any court ecclesiastical or temporal within her Majesty's dominions, any issue or question of law or of fact shall arise for the due determination whereof it shall, in the opinion of the judge or judges of such court, be necessary to produce evidence of the existence of any such power or jurisdiction as aforesaid, or of the extent thereof, it shall be lawful for the judge or judges of any such court, and he or they are hereby authorised, to transmit, under his or their hand and seal or hands and seals, to one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, questions by him or them properly framed respecting such of the matters aforesaid as it may be necessary to ascertain in order to the due determination of any such issue or question as aforesaid; and such secretary of state is hereby empowered and required, within a reasonable time in that behalf, to cause proper and sufficient answers to be returned to all such questions, and to be directed to the said judge or judges, or their successors; and such answers shall, upon production thereof, be final and conclusive evidence, in such suit or other proceedings, of the several matters therein contained and required to be ascertained thereby."

Courts authorised to procure evidence of such power by application to secretary of state.

Sect. 4. "And whereas it may in certain cases be expedient that crimes and offences committed within such countries or places as aforesaid should be inquired of, tried, determined, and punished within her Majesty's dominions; be it enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for any person having authority derived from her Majesty in that behalf, by warrant under his hand and seal, to cause any person charged with the commission of any crime or offence the cognizance whereof may at any time appertain to any judge, magistrate, or other officer of her Majesty within any such country or place as aforesaid, to be sent for trial to any British colony which her Majesty may by any order or orders in council from time to time appoint in that behalf; and upon the arrival of such person within such colony it shall and may be lawful for the supreme court exercising criminal jurisdiction within the same to cause such person to be kept in safe and proper custody, and, so soon as conveniently may be, to inquire of, try, and determine such crime or offence, and upon conviction of the person so charged as aforesaid to correct and punish him according to the laws in force in that behalf within such colony, in the same manner as if the said crime or offence had been committed within the jurisdiction of such supreme court: provided always, that before any such person shall be sent for trial to any such colony as aforesaid it shall be lawful for him to tender for examination to the judge, magistrate, or other officer of her Majesty to whom the cognizance of the crime or offence with which he is charged may appertain, within the country or place where the same may be alleged to have been committed, any competent witness or witnesses, the Power to send persons charged with crimes for trial to a British colony.

Before any such person shall be sent to any colony for trial he may tender any material evidence that he would be unable to produce evidence of whom he may deem material for his defence, and whom he may allege himself to be unable to produce at his trial in the said colony; and the said judge, magistrate, or other officer shall thereupon proceed in the examination and cross-examination of such witness or witnesses in the same manner as though the same had been tendered at a trial before such judge, magistrate, or other officer, and shall cause the evidence so taken to be reduced into writing, and shall transmit a copy of such evidence to the supreme court before which the trial of such person is to take place, together with a certificate under his hand and seal of the correctness of such copy; and thereupon it shall be lawful for the said supreme court, and it is hereby required, to allow so much of the evidence so taken as aforesaid as would have been admissible according to the law and practice of the said supreme court, had the said witness or witnesses been produced and examined at the trial before the said court, to be read and received as legal evidence at such trial: provided also, that if it shall be made to appear at such trial that the laws by which the person charged with any criminal act would have been tried had his trial taken place before a judge, magistrate, or other officer of her Majesty in the country or place in which such act may be alleged to have been committed, vary from or are inconsistent with the laws in force within such colony, in respect either of the criminality of the act charged, or of the nature or degree of the alleged crime or offence, or of the punishment to be awarded for the same, such supreme court is hereby empowered and required to admit and give effect to the laws by which such person would have been so tried as aforesaid, so far as but not further or otherwise than the same relate to the criminality of such act, or to the nature or degree of such crime or offence, or to the punishment thereof: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to alter or repeal any law, statute, or usage by virtue of which any crime or offence committed out of her Majesty's dominions might, at the time of the passing of this act, be inquired of, tried, determined, and punished within her Majesty's dominions, or any part thereof, but the same shall remain in full force and effect, any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding."

on trial, and which shall be taken down and transmitted.

In case the laws of the place in which the act was committed vary from those of the colony the court may give effect to them.

Nothing herein to alter any law respecting crimes committed out of her Majesty's dominions.

Sect. 5. "And whereas it may likewise in certain cases be expedient that the sentences passed within such countries and places as aforesaid at the trial of crimes and offences within the same should be carried into effect within her Majesty's dominions; be it enacted, That if any offender shall have been sentenced to suffer death or imprisonment for or in respect of any crime or offence of which such offender shall have been lawfully convicted before any judge, magistrate, or other officer of her Majesty within any such country or place as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for any person having authority derived from her Majesty in that behalf, by warrant under his hand and seal, to cause such offender to be sent to any British colony which her Majesty may by any order or orders in council from time to time appoint in that behalf, in order that the sentence so passed upon such offender may be carried into effect within the same; and the magistrates, gaolers, and other officers to whom it may appertain to give effect to any sentence passed by the supreme court exercising criminal jurisdiction within such colony are hereby empowered and required to do all acts and things necessary to carry into effect the sentence so passed upon such offender, in the same manner as though the same had been passed by such supreme court."

Power to send convicts for execution or imprisonment to a British colony.

Sect. 6. "That if any offender shall have been ordered or sentenced to be transported beyond the seas by any judge, magistrate, or other officer of her Majesty within any such country or place as aforesaid, or, having been adjudged to suffer death, shall have received her Majesty's most gracious pardon upon condition of transportation beyond the seas, it shall be lawful for any person having authority derived from her Majesty in that behalf to cause such offender to be sent to any place beyond seas to which convicts may at any time be lawfully transported from any part of her Majesty's dominions, and, if there shall be no convenient means of transporting such offender without bringing him to England, to cause such offender to be brought to England in order to be transported, and to be imprisoned in any place of confinement provided under the authority of any law or statute relating to the transportation of offenders convicted in England, until such offender shall be transported or shall become entitled to his liberty; and as soon as any such offender shall have arrived at the place to which he may be transported, or, if brought to England, shall have been there imprisoned as aforesaid, all the provisions, rules, regulations, authorities, powers, penalties, matters, and things concerning the safe custody, confinement, treatment, and transportation of any offender convicted in Great Britain shall extend and be construed to extend to such offender as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if such offender had been convicted and sentenced at any session of gaol delivery holden for any county in England."

Power to transport convicts.

Limitations of actions.

Sect. 7. "That if any suit or action shall be brought in any court within her Majesty's dominions against any person or persons for any thing done in pursuance of any such power or jurisdiction of her Majesty as aforesaid or of this act, then and in every such case such action or suit shall be commenced or prosecuted within six months after the fact committed, and not afterwards, except where the cause of action shall have arisen out of her Majesty's dominions, and then within six months after the plaintiff or plaintiffs and defendant or defendants shall have been within the jurisdiction of the court in which the same may be brought; and the same and every such action or suit shall be brought in the county or place where the cause of action shall have arisen, and not elsewhere, except where the cause of action shall have arisen out of her Majesty's dominions; and the defendant or defendants shall be entitled to the like notice, and shall have the like privilege of tendering amends to the plaintiff or plaintiffs, or their agent or attorney, as is provided in actions brought against any justice of the peace for acts done in the execution of his office by an act passed in the twenty-fourth year of the reign of King George the Second, intituled 'An Act for the rendering Justices of the Peace more safe in the Execution of their Office, and for indemnifying Constables and others acting in obedience to their Warrants;' and the defendant or defendants in every such action or suit may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence; and if the matter or thing complained of shall appear to have been done under the authority and in execution of any such power or jurisdiction of her Majesty as aforesaid or of this act, or if any such action or suit shall be brought after the time limited for bringing the same, or be brought and laid in any other county or place than the same ought to have been brought or laid in as aforesaid, then the jury shall find for the defendant or defendants; and if the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall become nonsuit, or discontinue any action after the defendant or defendants shall have appeared, or if a verdict shall pass against the plaintiff or plaintiffs, or if upon demurrer judgment shall be taken against the plaintiff or plaintiffs, the defendant or defendants shall and may recover treble costs, and have the like remedy for recovery thereof as any defendant or defendants hath or have in any cases of law."

Repeal of sect. 4 of 6 Geo. 4, c. 33, and of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 78.

Sect. 8. "That from and after the first day of October in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-four so much of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 33, s. 4, as provides, 'that from and immediately after the enrolment of any such deed or instrument as therein mentioned all such rights and duties of jurisdiction and authority over his majesty's subjects resorting to the ports of the Levant, for the purposes of trade or otherwise, as were lawfully exercised and performed, or which the letters patent or acts by the said act recited, or any of them, authorised to be exercised and performed, by any consul or other officers appointed by the said company, or which such consuls or other officers lawfully exercised and performed under and by virtue of any power or authority whatever, should, from and after the enrolment of such deed or instrument as aforesaid, be and become vested in and should be exercised and performed by such consuls and other officers respectively as his majesty might be pleased to appoint for the protection of the trade of his majesty's subjects in the ports and places respectively mentioned in the said letters patent and acts, or any or either of them;' and also that from and after the passing of this act, the Commitment.

COMMITMENT signifies the committing or sending of a person to prison, by a warrant or order, on account of some offence committed, or suspected to have been committed by him; or for the purpose of enforcing obedience to a judgment, conviction, or order. What.

There are two species of commitments, which will be here noticed; 1st, Commitments for Safe Custody—and 2d, Commitments in Execution.

As to commitments for re-examination, see "Examination," Vol. II. p. 470.

Commitment for Safe Custody.

I. For what, and who may be committed.

All persons apprehended or brought before magistrates for offences which are not bailable, and also all persons who neglect to offer or complete bail for offences which are bailable, must be committed; if a primâ facie case is made For what offences.

out against them by witnesses entitled to a reasonable degree of credit. (2 Hawk. c. 16, s. 1.)

In 3 Hawk. P. C. 7th ed. c. 8, s. 64, it is said, "that it hath been of late settled that justices of the peace have no jurisdiction over forgery or perjury at the common law," and the author then assigns as a reason "that inasmuch as the chief end of the institution of the office of these justices was for the preservation of the peace against personal wrongs and open violence, and the word 'trespass,' in its most proper and natural sense, is taken for such kind of injuries, it shall be understood in that sense only in the said statute and commission, or at the most to extend to such other offences only as have a direct and immediate tendency to cause such breaches of the peace, as libels, and such like, which, on this account, have been adjudged indictable before justices of the peace."

It seems therefore, that justices cannot commit for the offence of perjury or forgery at common law; and see R. v. Bartlett, 3 Dowl. N. S. 95; 12 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 127, S.C. There is, however, statutable perjury under the 5 Eliz. c. 9, for which justices may commit. (Id.)

A primâ facie case must be made out.

It is necessary, that in all cases, before committing a party for safe custody, that some primâ facie case be made out against him by witnesses entitled to a reasonable degree of credit; (Cox v. Coleridge, 1 B. & C. 43, 50; 2 D. & R. 86, S.C.;) otherwise the magistrate would be subject to an action.

Examinations in writing must be taken.

Also, before a magistrate commits a party for a felony or misdemeanor, he must, (as required by the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, ss. 2, 3), take the examination of the party charged, and the information upon oath of witnesses, and reduce the same into writing. (See "Examination," Vol. II.)

Persons guilty of contempt.

It seems doubtful whether a justice can commit for a contempt when not sitting in court. (See Petit v. Addington, Peake, 62; R. v. James, 5 B. & Ald. 894; 2 Barnard. 155; see "Examination," Vol. II. p. 470; "Justices," Vol. III.; "Sessions," Vol. V.) According to the cases of R. v. Revel, 1 Stra. 420; 2 id. 786; Mayhew v. Locke, 7 Taunt. 63; he may commit a party for uttering abusive language while acting in the execution of his office, as for a contempt.

Persons refusing to enter into recognizance, &c.

It is said, however, that, wheresoever a justice is empowered by any statute to bind a person over, or to cause him to do a certain thing, and such person being in his presence shall refuse to be bound, or to do such thing, the justice may commit him to the gaol, to remain there till he shall comply. (2 Hawk. c. 16, s. 2; Rex v. Twyford, 5 Ad. & Ell. 430, post.)

And a justice may commit a feme covert, who is a material witness upon a charge of felony brought before him, and who refuses to appear at the sessions to give evidence, or to find sureties for her appearance. (Bennet and Wife v. Watson and another, 3 M. & Sel. 1. And see "Examination," Vol. II. p. 466.)

Re-examination.

Liability of magistrate for wrongful commitment.

If the magistrate, acting within the scope of his jurisdiction, but taking an erroneous view of the effect of the evidence, should come to a wrong conclusion and commit the defendant, and the defendant should be afterwards discharged by the superior court on an habeas corpus, yet he cannot on that account sue the magistrate. (Burdett v. Abbott, 14 East, 82; Cave v. Mountain, 1 M. & Gr. 257; 1 Scott, N. R. 132, S. C.; Newman v. Hardwicke (Earl), 8 Ad. & Ell. 124, S. C.)

Where the plaintiff was summoned before two magistrates on a charge of bastardy, and at the hearing received a verbal order to pay the sum of 1*s.* 6*d.* weekly for the support of the child, and at the same time the magistrates signed and sealed two papers, intended to be orders and exact copies of each other, one of which they delivered to the plaintiff, and the other to the churchwardens. In the paper delivered to the plaintiff, they, by mistake, ordered the mother of the child, instead of the plaintiff, to pay the sum of 1*s.* 6*d.* weekly. In the paper which was handed to the churchwardens the plaintiff was ordered to pay that sum. It did not appear which paper was first signed and sealed. The plaintiff was served with the latter paper; and, on his refusal to pay the weekly sum, the defendant, on production of the order handed to the churchwardens, committed the plaintiff to prison: it was held, that the defendant was justified in so doing. The order produced before him being valid on the face of it; and therefore that trespass would not lie. (Wilkins v. Hemsworth, 3 Nev. & Per. 55; 7 Ad. & Ell. 807, S. C.)

1. For what, and who may be committed.

Three magistrates, acting under 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 60, committed the crier of the borough of E. to the county gaol, until he should deliver up the bell, which was stated in the conviction and commitment to be the property of the council of the borough. This conviction was afterwards quashed on appeal: held, that the magistrates had jurisdiction to convict; and, there being nothing on the face of the conviction to make it void, that trespass would not lie against the magistrates. (Baylis v. Strickland, 1 Scott, N. R. 540.)

But a magistrate, who commits a party in a case where he has no jurisdiction, is liable to an action of trespass; but where, supposing the facts alleged to be true, the magistrate has jurisdiction, his liability to be sued, or his exemption from such liability on the ground of jurisdiction, cannot be affected by the truth or falsehood of these facts, or by the sufficiency or insufficiency of the evidence adduced for the purpose of establishing them. (Cave v. Mountain, 1 Man. & G. 257; 1 Scott, N. R. 132, S. C.)

An information brought before a magistrate, which charges an offence within his cognizance, is sufficient to give the magistrate jurisdiction, and to protect him in an action for false imprisonment, although the information disclose no legal evidence against the alleged offender, and even although it purports to be founded upon inadmissible hearsay evidence. (Ib.)

In a case where the period for which a party has been committed for further examination appeared to the Court to be too long, yet the jurors having, to the satisfaction of the judge at Nisi Prius, found that the detention was not excessive, a rule nisi for a new trial was refused. (Ib).

In the same case it was held, that knowledge on the part of the committing magistrate that the prisoner would be subject to restriction unnecessarily severe, in the gaol to which the commitment is made, does not make the magistrate a trespasser, unless he expressly direct such treatment to be adopted in the particular case. (Ib.)

II. Who may commit.

Who may commit.

A justice of the peace, or other officer who has power to examine and bail the prisoner, has also in general, as incident to his office, power to commit him. (R. v. Kendal, 1 Ld. Raym. 66; 1 Salk. 347, S. C.; 2 Hawk. c. 16, s. 3; Bane v. Methuen, 2 Bing. 62; 9 Moore, 161, S. C.) The 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 1, expressly recognizes this power in justices of the peace. (See ante, 321.)

The privy council and secretaries of state have the power of committing for treason and other offences affecting the public. (R. v. Despard, 7 T. R. 736, 742; 2 Hawk. c. 16.)

We have already seen who may bail a prisoner; (ante, 320, 321;) and from this may be collected who may commit him.

By several justices.

Before the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, s. 2, if where two justices were required to convict, the commitment must have been by the two; (1 Mod. 68;) but by that act a commitment in such a case by one will suffice.

All acts of judgment required of two or more persons, must be done together; (see Battye v. Gresley, 8 East, 327, and cases cited in note;) and if two or more magistrates are required to commit the party, they should both be present in determining upon the commitment; but the mere act of placing their names and seals to the warrant may perhaps be done separately.

III. To what Prison, and Time, &c. of Imprisonment.

To gaol of county.

Formerly if the party accused of a felony was not bailed, or discharged without bail, he must have been committed to the common gaol of the county, &c. (5 Hen. IV. c. 10; 23 Hen. VIII. c. 2.) Or when charged merely with small offences, or for not finding sureties to keep the peace, (Ex parte Aston, 13 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 52,) either to the common gaol or house of correction, at the option of the committing justice. (6 Geo. I. c. 19.) But now by the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 38, s. 3, a justice is empowered to commit any offender, whether the offence be a felony or not, for safe custody to any house of correction near the place where the assizes or sessions are to be holden, at which such offender is to be tried. (See "Gaols," Vol. III. p. 365.) By 6 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 7, vagrants are to be committed to the house of correction only. (See "Vagrants," Vol. VI.)

To house of correction.

The right of a county magistrate to commit to Newgate is not taken away by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 4. (R. v. Cope, 6 Ad. & Ell. 226; 1 N. & P. 515, S. C.)

The Court of Queen's Bench may commit defendants to any prison in England they think fit. (Bothe's case, Moore, 666.)

Must be in England.

The prison must be within the realm of England. (2 Hawk. c. 16, s. 5; and see the Habeas Corpus Act, "Habeas Corpus," Vol. III. giving a remedy by action for acting to the contrary.)

Where offence in a different county.

Generally, if a man commit felony in one county, and be arrested for the same in another county, he shall be committed to gaol in that county where he is taken. (Dalt. c. 170.) Yet if he escape, and be taken on fresh suit in another county, he may be carried back to the county where he was first taken. (Id.)

Backing warrants.

Also by statute 24 Geo. II. c. 55, s. 1, if a person be apprehended upon a warrant indorsed in another county, commonly called a backed warrant, for an offence not bailable, or if he shall not there find bail, he shall be carried back by the constable or person having him in custody before a justice of the proper county or place where the offence was committed, and there be dealt with according to law. (See this act at length, "Warrant," Vol. VI.)

Justices of a liberty, &c. contributing to house of correction of county, &c. may commit offenders to that house of correction, &c.

Stat. 15 Geo. II. c. 24, recites that "doubts and questions have arisen, touching the commitment of offenders, by justices of the peace of liberties and corporations, to the houses of correction of counties, ridings, or divisions, in which such liberties or corporations are situate, though the inhabitants of such liberties and corporations contribute to the maintenance and support of such houses of correction," and enacts, "that in all cases where any person liable by law to be committed to the house of correction, shall be apprehended within any liberty, city or town corporate, whose inhabitants are contributory to the support and maintenance of the house or houses of correction of the county, riding or division, in which such liberty, city or town corporate is situate; it shall and may be lawful for the justices of the peace of such liberty, city, or town corporate, to commit such person to the house of correction of the county, riding or division, in which such liberty, city, or town corporate is situate; which person so committed shall and may be received, detained, dealt with and ordered, and be set and kept to hard labour, or conveyed and sent away, or discharged, and be subject and liable to the same correction and punishment, to all intents and purposes, as if committed by any justice or justices of the peace of the same county, riding, or division."

This act is a declaratory one, and should have a liberal construction; and therefore where justices of a borough, contributing to the county rate, have committed persons to the county house of correction for offences cognizable within the county, the justices at their borough sessions have a right to order such prisoners to be brought before them for trial there. (R. v. Amos, 2 B. & Ald. 533.) It is questionable also where a county magistrate, having concurrent jurisdiction, has committed a prisoner for an offence within the borough, whether the borough sessions have not the same power of ordering such prisoner to be brought before them for trial.

Where the justices of a borough had exclusive jurisdiction within the borough itself, and jurisdiction concurrent with that of the county justices over certain places called the liberties of the borough, it was held that for an offence committed within the liberties they might commit to the county gaol, and cause the prisoner to be brought before them for trial at the borough sessions. (R. v. Musson, 6 B. & C. 74; 9 D & R. 172, S. C.)

3. To what Prison, &c.

Stat. 60 Geo. III. & 1 Geo. IV. c. 14, after reciting that "the trial of capital offences before justices of peace, within local and exclusive jurisdictions not being counties, may be attended with inconvenience, and it is desirable that some remedy should be provided for the same," enacts, "that the justices of the peace acting within and for any town, liberty, soke, or place, not being a county, but having an exclusive jurisdiction for the trial of felonies and misdemeanors committed within the same, shall, from and after the passing of this act, have full power within their respective limits, at their discretion, to commit any person duly charged before them or any of them with any capital offence committed within such limits, to the gaol of the county within which such town, liberty, soke or place shall be situated, there to be tried at the next session of oyer and terminer or general goal delivery, to be held in and for such county, in the same manner as if such offence had been committed within any other part of the said county, and as if such person had been committed by any justice of the same county, not being within such limits."

Justices of a town &c. having exclusive jurisdiction for trial of offences may commit for capital felonies to county gaol.

By the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 27, intituled "An Act for the better Administration of Justice in certain Boroughs and Franchises," (25th July, 1834), reciting, "Whereas the justices of the peace acting in and for certain boroughs and franchises in that part of the United Kingdom called England, not being empowered by charter or otherwise to hear and determine felonies at the general sessions of the peace held in and for such boroughs and franchises, are by law required to send for trial at the general assizes for the county wherein such borough or franchise may be situated, every person charged with felony, whereby the administration of justice is injuriously delayed, and the expenses to which the county in such cases is liable are grievously increased;" it is enacted, "That from and after the passing of this act, the justices of the peace, and any such justice acting in and for any borough or franchise in that part of the United Kingdom called England, not being empowered by charter or otherwise to hear and determine felonies, shall and may commit every person charged with any such felony as the court of quarter sessions may have jurisdiction to try, to be tried at the general quarter sessions of the peace for the county, riding, or division wherein such borough or franchise shall be situate, or at any adjournment thereof; and the justices of the peace acting in and for such county, riding, or division, are hereby empowered to try persons so committed at the general quarter sessions for the peace held for such county, riding, or division, or at any adjournment thereof."

Justices of boroughs and franchises not having power to try felonies, may commit for trial at county sessions.

Sect. 2. "And whereas the justices of the peace acting in and for certain boroughs and franchises in that part of the said United Kingdom called England have jurisdiction at the general sessions of the peace held in and for such borough or franchise to hear and determine divers felonies, and it is expedient that any such justice or justices should have power in certain cases to commit for trial, at the general quarter sessions of the peace for the county, riding, division or shire in which such borough or franchise may be situate, any person charged with felony which the said justices are not authorised or empowered to hear and determine at the general sessions of the peace held in and for such borough or franchise;" be it therefore enacted, "That from and after the passing of this act it shall and may be lawful to and for a justice or for justices of the peace acting in any of the said last-mentioned boroughs or franchises to commit to the gaol of the county, riding, division or shire in which such borough or franchise may be situate, to be tried at the general quarter sessions of the peace in and for such county, riding, division or shire, any person charged with a felony which the said court of quarter sessions may have jurisdiction to try, and to the trial of which the jurisdiction of the justices of such borough or franchise at the general sessions of the peace in and Justices of boroughs, &c. having jurisdiction at sessions over certain felonies, may commit to county gaol persons charged with a felony the trial of which may legally take place at the quarter sessions, but to which the jurisdiction of the borough justices does not extend.

3. To what Prison, &c.

for such borough or franchise does not extend; and the justices of the peace acting in and for such last-mentioned county, riding, division, or shire, are hereby authorised and empowered to try any such person so committed as last aforesaid at the general quarter sessions of the peace held in and for such county, riding, division, or shire."

But in places having a recorder and a fit prison, the magistrates shall commit to such; and the quarter sessions of such places shall have authority to punish offenders.

Sect. 3. "In all such towns or franchises which have a recorder and a prison fit for the confinement of prisoners, the magistrates of such town or franchise shall commit to the prison of such town all persons charged with having committed within such town or franchise any felony or misdemeanor, which might, if the same had been committed out of such town or franchise and within the body of any county, have been tried by the justices of quarter sessions of such county; and the court of quarter sessions of such town or franchise shall have the same authority to inquire of, hear, determine, and punish any persons charged with such felonies or misdemeanors as the Courts of quarter sessions of counties have; which quarter sessions the justices for such town or franchise are hereby required to hold."

County justices may contract with council of boroughs for committal of prisoners to borough gaol.

By the 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 105, county justices may contract with the council of a borough, in which there is a sufficient gaol, for the committal of county prisoners thereto. See "Corporations," Vol. II.

Time of imprisonment.

Time of Imprisonment.]—The time during which the defendant may be imprisoned will be treated of while considering the mode of framing the commitment, post, 780. As to the time for which a party may be committed for re-examination, see "Examination," Vol. II. p. 470.

Mode of imprisonment, and right to have advisers, &c. in prison.

Mode of Imprisonment and Right to have Attorney, &c. in Prison.]—The 4 Geo. IV. c. 64, provides for the mode and places of imprisonment of persons committed for trial for various offences, and the admissions at proper times and under certain restrictions of persons with whom such prisoners may desire to communicate. See "Gaol," Vol. III. 366, 369, &c.

The observance of this act may be enforced by mandamus from the Court of Queen's Bench, ordering the sheriff and gaoler to admit an attorney into the prison to consult with the prisoners. (R. v. Thurtell, M. T. 1823.)

IV. How Commitment to be framed.

Must be in writing under seal, &c.

Must be in writing, &c.]—Commitments to the custody of gaolers, &c. must be in writing under the hand and seal of the justice making the commitment, directed to the gaoler or keeper of the prison, mentioning the time and place of making it. (2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16, s. 13; Hutchinson v. Lowndes, 4 B. & Ad. 118.)

The justice may, by parol, order a party to be detained for a reasonable time, until the commitment can be made out, but not further than is necessary for that purpose; (Hutchinson v. Lowndes, 4 B. & Ad. 118; Still v. Walls, 7 East, 533;) or in cases of felony until the prisoner (in case of doubt as to bailing) shall be taken before two justices, in pursuance of the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 1. The question as to what is a reasonable time is mainly for the jury to decide on. (Cave v. Mountain, 1 Scott, N. R. 132; 1 M. & Gr. 257, S. C.; and title "Examination," Vol. II. pp. 470, 471.)

Also if by some reasonable occasion, as the absence of a witness or the like, the justice cannot at the return of the warrant take the examination, he may by word of mouth command the constable or any other person to detain in custody the prisoner till the next day, and then to bring him before the justice for further examination. And this detainer is justifiable by the constable or any other person, without showing the particular cause for which he was to be examined, or any warrant in writing. (1 Hale, 585; 2 Hale, 120; and see Davis v. Capper, 10 B. & Cres. 32.) Where, however, the detainer is for a long time, there had better be a warrant in writing for that purpose.

The time of detainer must not be longer than is necessary for the further examination. The question as to what time is necessary is mainly for a jury. (Supra.) 4. How Commitment to be framed.

In the case of a breach of the peace within view of a justice, he may instantly order the offender to be taken into custody. (Ante, 272.)

Direction.]—The commitment should be directed to the gaoler or keeper of the prison, and not generally to carry the party to prison. (2 Hawk. c. 16, s. 13; R. v. Smith, 2 Stra. 934; R. v. Fell, 1 Ld. Raym. 424.) It is usually directed to a constable and to the keeper of the goal, directing the former to convey the prisoner into the custody of the gaoler, and the latter to receive and keep him. In London and the metropolis, the commitment is usually directed to the gaoler only. Direction.

Name and authority of Justice.]—It is said that not only the name but that the office and the authority of the magistrate ought to be shown on the face of the warrant, but this in strictness is not absolutely necessary, for his authority may be supplied by parol evidence. (See 2 Hawk. c. 16, s. 13; 2 Hale, 122; Ken. R. 122; Mayhew v. Locke, 2 Marsh. Rep. 377.) It is however usual and best to state such authority. (Id.; Toone, 63.) Name and authority of magistrate.

The commitment may be in the Queen's name, but it is most usually in the magistrate's awarding it. (See Dalt. J. 125; 2 Hawk. c. 16, s. 14.) In Queen's name.

Name of Party.]—It should contain the name and surname of the party committed, if known. If not known, then it may be sufficient to describe the person by his age, stature, complexion, colour of his hair, and the like, and to add that he refuses to tell his name. (1 Hale, 577.) Name of defendant.

Oath.]—It is safe, but not absolutely necessary, to set forth that the party is charged upon oath. (2 Hawk. c. 17, s. 117; R. v. Wilkes, 2 Wils. 158; 1 Leach, 167.) Oath.

The Offence.]—It ought to contain concisely the cause for the commitment and with sufficient certainty to distinguish the nature of the offence; otherwise if it contain no cause at all, if the prisoner escape it is no offence at all; whereas if the mittimus contained the cause, the escape were treason or felony, though he were not guilty of the offence; and therefore for the Queen's benefit, and that the prisoner may be the more safely kept, the mittimus ought to contain the cause. (2 Inst. 52.) The offence.

In Dr. Groenvelt's case it was resolved, "that the cause of commitment ought to be certain, to the end that the party may know for what he suffers, and how he might regain his liberty." (1 Ld. Raym. 213.)

And hereupon it appeareth, that a warrant or mittimus "to answer to such things as should be objected against him," is utterly against law. (2 Inst. 591.)

Also it ought to contain the certainty of the cause; and therefore if it be for felony, it ought not to be generally for felony, but it must contain the special nature of the felony, briefly, as for felony, "for the death of J. S.;" or for burglary, "in breaking the house of J. S.;" and the reason is, because it may appear to the judges of the Queen's Bench, upon an habeas corpus, whether it be felony or not. (2 Hale, 122.) In high treason it is sufficient if the commitment be simply for high treason. (2 Hawk. c. 16, s. 16; and see R. v. Despard, 7 T. R. 736.)

And although it is not necessary to state in a warrant of commitment on a charge of felony, that the act was done "feloniously," yet unless it sufficiently appears on the facts stated in the commitment to be in law a felony, the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench are bound to bail the defendant. (R. v. Judd, 2 T. R. 25; R. v. Croker, 2 Chit. Rep. 138.)

A warrant of commitment for a riot, under the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 8, stating that the defendant began to pull down and destroy "in part" a dwelling-house, was held bad. (R. v. Lowden, 7 Dowl. 538.)

4. How Commitment to be framed.

A commitment for perjury, stating "that H. B. in a certain affidavit made and sworn to by him before one C. C., a competent authority by law to administer the same, did falsely, wickedly, wilfully, and corruptly commit wilful and corrupt perjury," is bad as not stating that the oath was administered in a judicial proceeding, or before a competent authority to administer an oath in a judicial proceeding. (Reg. v. Bartlett, 12 L. J. Rep. (N. S.), M. C. 127; 2 Dowl. N. S., S. C.)

Where the commitment was for a contempt in refusing to give evidence for a specific charge brought before the justice, and it omitted to allege that the party was duly apprised that there was such a charge under inquiry before the justice, it was held bad. (Cropper v. Horton, 8 D. & Ry. 166.)

But a commitment for safe custody before conviction need not be so peculiarly certain, and is not construed so strictly as commitment in execution after conviction, and at all events need not be framed with the same precision as an indictment. (R. v. Gourlay, 7 B. & Cres. 669; 1 M. & R. 619, S. C.; sed vide Fortes. 272; post, 794.)

A commitment stating that A B. had been discovered and apprehended under circumstances that denoted a derangement of mind and a purpose of committing some crime for which, if committed, he would be liable to be indicted, to wit, an assault; and that the said A. B. being brought before the justice, he committed him as a dangerous person, suspected to be insane, under the 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 94, s. 3, was held to be sufficient, although it did not state the name of the person whom the prisoner intended to assault, and it did not appear that the committing magistrate had received any evidence. (R. v. Gourlay, 7 B. & Cres. 669; 1 M. & R. 619, S. C.)

The plaintiff was taken before a magistrate, and by him committed for further examination, on a charge of felony, in unlawfully cutting trees:—Held, that this was no excess of jurisdiction, though it did not appear that the amount of the injury exceeded 20s., as is required to constitute the offence of felony, by the 7 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 19. (Cave v. Mountain, 1 Scott, N. R. 132; 1 Man. & G. 257, S. C.)

A commitment "for treasonable practices" is legal. (R. v. Despard, 7 T. R. 736.) So is a commitment "for high treason." (2 Hawk. c. 16, s. 16.) And see as to a libel, R. v. Wilkes, 2 Wils. 153, 159.

Even in cases of felony, the want of the certainty of the cause seems not to make the commitment absolutely void, so as to subject the gaoler to a false imprisonment; but it lies in averment to excuse the gaoler or officer, that the matter was for felony. (1 Hale, 584.)

And although the commitment itself, if it be for safe custody and not a commitment in execution, be informal, yet if the corpus delicti appear on the deposition returned to the court, the defendant will not be bailed but remanded. (R. v. Marks, 3 East's Rep. 157; Cald. 295; 1 Chit. C. L. 113.)

As to commitments to keep the peace and be of good behaviour, see "Surety of Peace," Vol. V.

Conclusion.

Conclusion.]—It must have an apt conclusion; as if it be for felony, or a crime either at common law or created by statute, for which he is punishable by indictment, to detain him "till he be thence delivered by law," or "by order of law," or "by due course of law," or words to that effect. (2 Hale, 123; 2 Hawk. c. 16, s. 18; R. v. Nash, 2 Bla. Rep. 806.)

But if the commitment be not for an offence so indictable, or being an offence rather of a civil than criminal nature, as for contumacy in refusing to do something which he ought to do, the conclusion ought to be "until he comply and perform the thing required," for he is entitled to be discharged immediately upon the performance of his duty. If, therefore, an overseer of the poor be committed for refusing to account, the warrant of commitment must conclude, "there to remain until he shall account." (Carth. 152.)

The true distinction is, that where a man is committed for any crime, either at common law or created by act of parliament, for which he is punishable by indictment, then he is to be committed till discharged by due course of law; but when the commitment is in pursuance of a special authority, the terms of the commitment must be special, and exactly pursue that authority. (Nash's case, 2 Bla. Rep. 806.)

4. How Commitment to be framed.

In a case, however, where a collector of the parish rates was committed to the county gaol by warrant of two justices, upon complaint made against him for that he having been duly appointed collector of the rates for the parish of Richmond, pursuant to stat. 25 Geo. III. c. 41, refused to account, and pay over the monies collected by him by virtue of the act to W. S., the person duly authorised to receive them; and the justices adjudged that he should be committed to the gaol, there to remain without bail or mainprize, until he should have made a true and fair account, and until such money, as upon the said account shall appear to be remaining in his hands, should be paid by him or his sureties to W. S., and they required the keeper of the gaol to receive and safely keep him until he should be discharged by due course of law, and because the warrant directed that he should be detained "until he was discharged by due course of law," a habeas corpus was obtained on the ground of the warrant being void; the cases of Yorley, 1 Salk. 351; 1 Ld. Raym. 100, S. C.; Bracy, 1 Ld. Raym. 99; Hollingshead, 2 Ld. Raym. 851; and Baldwin v. Blackmore, 1 Burr. 602, having been cited, Lord Ellenborough, C.J., after the argument of the case, said, "If there was any uncertainty on the face of the commitment, I should have agreed with the argument. But coupling the premises with the conclusion, is it not in effect the same as if the warrant had directed the gaoler to detain the party until he had accounted? We must read the warrant as if the magistrates had in the conclusion recited over again the adjudication." Et per Le Blanc, J. "Some precise authority should be shown to justify the Court in adopting the objection made to this warrant. When the party has accounted and paid over the money, he will be entitled to be discharged by due course of law." The prisoner was remanded. (Exp. Goff, 3 M. & Sel. 203.)

A conviction by two justices of an overseer, under stat. 17 Geo. II. c. 33, upon complaint of the succeeding overseers, for refusing and neglecting to deliver over to them a "certain book belonging to the parish, called, 'The Bastardy Ledger,'" convicting him of the said offences, and adjudging that he should be committed to the common gaol "until he shall have yielded up all and every the books concerning his said office of overseer belonging to the parish," &c.; was held void as to the adjudication in respect to the imprisonment and the commitment made in pursuance thereof, on account of a clear excess of jurisdiction, the imprisonment being for too long a time; and it was held that the imprisonment under the commitment was a trespass in the committing magistrate, for which an action was maintainable, the commitment being void in toto. (Groome v. Forrester, 5 M. & Sel. 314; "Poor," Vol. IV.)

See further as to the conclusion of the commitment where it is in execution, post, 792.

Consequences of defect in conclusion.

In the case of warrants of commitment for safe custody, if only part of the conclusion be irregular, it doth not seem to make the warrant void, but the law will reject that which is surplusage, and the rest shall stand; so that if the matter appear to be such, for which he is to remain in custody, or be bailed, he shall be bailed or committed as the case requires, and not discharged, but the wrong conclusion shall be rejected. (1 Hale, 584; and see Davis v. Capper, 10 B. & Cres. 37.)

But if a man be committed in execution for non-payment of two sums, one of which is not due, the warrant of commitment is bad for the whole. (Exp. Addis, 1 B. & Cres. 90; 2 D. & R. 167, S. C.; when otherwise, see Morgan v. Brown, 4 Ad. & Ell. 516; Skingley v. Surridge, 11 M. & Wels. 503.)

And we have just seen, though a warrant of commitment for felony be informal, yet if the corpus delicti appear in the depositions returned to the Court, they will not bail, but will remand the prisoner. The practice in cases of defective commitments was in this case altered, to prevent in future prisoners thus remanded from renewing the same application to another court or judge. (R. v. Marks and others, 3 East, 157; R. v. Taylor, 7 D. & R. 622; 3 D. & R. M. C. 491, S. C.)

4. How Commitment to be framed.

May be a fresh valid detainer after a bad commitment.

In the case of R. v. James Gordon (1 B. & Ald. 572, n.), the prisoner being committed to the New Prison, Clerkenwell, till the next general sessions, for assaulting a custom-house officer's assistant in the execution of his duty, a motion was made for a habeas corpus, because the stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 11, directs that such offender shall be committed, without bail, till the next quarter sessions. The writ was granted. Afterwards, the defendant being brought up, the keeper of New Prison returned the warrant of commitment, which appeared to be to the general sessions; but he also returned a warrant of detainer for the same offence, issued the day before he was brought up, by the same justice, which was till the next quarter sessions. The defendant, therefore, was remanded without opposition, the warrant of detainer being strictly regular.

Seal.

Seal.]—It must be under seal; without this, the commitment is unlawful, the gaoler is liable to false imprisonment, and the wilful escape by the gaoler, or breach of prison by the felon, makes no felony. (1 Hale, 583.)

But this must not be intended of a commitment by the sessions, or other court of record: for there the record itself, or the memorial thereof, which may at any time be entered of record, are a sufficient warrant, without any warrant under seal. (1 Hale, 584.)

Date and place of making

Date and Place of Making.]—It should also set forth the time and place at which it is made. (2 Hawk. c. 16, s. 13; and see Re Fletcher, 13 L. J. (N. S.), M. C. 16.) A mistake in the date might be fatal. (Exp. M'Gee, 6 Mad. Rep. 206; Salt's case, 13 Vesey, 361.) But it seems if dated too soon the commitment would not be bad, if not issued too soon. (See Newman v. Hardwicke, 3 Nev. & Per. 368.)

V. Charges of the Commitment.

Charges to be paid by the offender if able.

By stat. 3 Jac. I. c. 10, s 1, "all and every person and persons whatsoever, that from and after the end of this present session of parliament, shall be committed to the common or usual gaol within any county or liberty within this realm, by any justice or justices of the peace, for any offence or misdemeanor, to any such gaol, that the said person or persons so to be committed as aforesaid, having means or ability thereunto, shall bear their own reasonable charges for so conveying or sending them to the said gaol, and the charges also of such as shall be appointed to guard them to such gaol, and shall so guard them thither: and if any such person or persons so to be committed as aforesaid shall refuse, at the time of their commitment and sending to the said gaol, to defray the said charges, or shall not then pay or bear the same, that then such justice or justices of the peace shall and may by writing under his or their hand and seal, or hands and seals, give warrant to the constable or constables of the hundred, or constable or tithing-man of the tithing or township where such person or persons shall be dwelling and inhabit, or from whence he or they shall be committed as aforesaid, or where he or they shall have any goods within the county or liberty, to sell such and so much of the goods and chattels of the said persons so to be committed, as by the discretion of the said justice or justices of the peace shall satisfy and pay the charges of such his or their conveying and sending to the said gaol, the appraisement to be made by four of the honest inhabitants of the parish or tithing where such goods or chattels shall remain and be, and the overplus of the money, which shall be made thereof, to be delivered to the party to whom the said goods shall belong."

If not able, to be paid out of the county rates.

And by the 27 Geo. II. c. 3, st. 1, reciting that "by an act passed in the third year of the reign of King James the First, intituled 'An Act for the rating and levying of the Charges for conveying Malefactors and Offenders to the Gaol,' every offender so to be conveyed shall bear the charges of himself and of those who convey him; and if he refuse so to do, his goods within the same county may be distrained and sold to satisfy the same: and if he hath no goods, the constable, churchwardens, and other inhabitants of the parish where he was taken, shall make a tax on every inhabitant thereof to pay the said charges: and whereas the taxing the parish where such offender was taken to pay such charges is a great discouragement to parishes to take offenders, and it is also found by experience to be very difficult to make a rate on the inhabitants to raise such tax, whereby constables and others are often kept out of their money by them advanced for the service of the public, and sometimes lose the same, to their very great injury and vexation;" enacts, "that from and after the 24th day of June, 1754, when any person, not having goods or money within the county where he is taken, sufficient to bear the charges of himself and of those who convey him, is committed to gaol or the house of correction, by warrant from any justice or justices of the peace, then, on application by any constable or other officer who conveyed him, to any justice of the peace for the same county or place, he shall upon oath examine into and ascertain the reasonable expenses to be allowed such constable or other officer, and shall forthwith, without fee or reward, by warrant under his hand and seal, order the treasurer of the county or place to pay the same, which the said treasurer is hereby required to do, as soon as he receives such warrant; and any sum so paid shall be allowed in his accounts."

5. Charges of. 27 Geo. 2, c. 3.

Sect. 4. "Nothing in this act contained shall extend to empower such court, or any justice or justices of the peace, to make warrants or orders on the treasurer of the county of Middlesex for the payment of the expenses of the constable or other officer in conveying any person to gaol, or for the payment of any person for his time, trouble, and expense, who shall appear on his recognizance to give evidence as aforesaid; but that within the said county of Middlesex the expenses of the constable or other officer, occasioned by his conveying of any person to gaol by virtue of a warrant from any justice or justices of the peace, shall, (after such expenses have been examined into upon oath, and allowed by such justice or justices, and for which no fee or reward shall be taken,) be paid by the overseer or overseers of the poor of the parish or place where the said person was apprehended, who is and are hereby authorised and required to pay the same; and the sum or sums so paid shall be allowed in his or their accounts."

Except in Middlesex.

By the Habeas Corpus Act, 31 Car. II. c. 2, s. 2, the charge of conveying an offender is limited not to exceed 12*d.* a mile; which may be an argument for allowing as much in this case, especially as security is to be given before a man is removed on that act by habeas corpus that he shall not escape by the way, which renders guards in that case not so necessary.

Rate of charge per mile.

The provisions of the 55 Geo. III. c. 50, do not seem to affect these regulations.

As to the expenses of carrying vagrants to gaol, where they have no effects, see 4 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 39; 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 22; "Vagrant," Vol. VI.

Vagrants.

A justice before whom a deserter is brought and committed to the county gaol may, under the authority of these statutes, if the deserter be unable to bear the charges himself, direct the expenses of conveying him thither to be paid by the treasurer of the county to the constable of the parish who found and apprehended him in the parish, and conveyed him to the gaol. (R. v. Pierce, 3 M. & Sel. 62.)

Deserter

VI. Duty of Gaoler as to Receiving, &c. the Prisoner.

If the gaoler shall refuse to receive a felon, or shall take any thing for receiving him, he shall be punished for the same by the justices of gaol delivery. (Dalt c. 170, p. 410. Stat. 4 Edw. III. c. 10. See also stat. 55 Geo. III. c. 50.)

Gaoler to receive a prisoner.

But if a man be committed for felony, and the gaoler will not receive him, the constable must bring him back to the town where he was taken; and that town shall be charged with the keeping of him until the next gaol delivery; or the person that arrested him may in such case keep the prisoner in his own house, as it seemeth. (Dalt. c. 170, p. 410.)

But in other cases it seems that regularly no one can justify detaining a prisoner in custody out of the common gaol, unless there be some particular reason for so doing; as if the party be so dangerously sick that it would apparently hazard his life to send him to the gaol, or there be evident danger of a rescous from rebels, or the like. (2 Hawk. c. 16, s. 9; see ante.)

A gaoler is protected from liability though he should receive by mistake of the constable a person whom it was intended not to confine. (Sir T. Jones, 214; Badkin v. Powell, Cowp. 479; sed vide Aaron v. Alexander, 3 Campb. 35.)

As to the classification and treatment of prisoners in gaols in general, and compelling them to work, see "Goal," Vol. III.

VII. Certifying the Commitment.

Certifying commitment.

By stat. 3 Hen. VII. c. 3, the sheriff or gaoler shall certify the commitment to the next gaol delivery.

VIII. Prisoner's right to a Copy of Commitment.

Copy of commitment.

The Habeas Corpus Act, 31 Car. II. c. 2, s. 5, enacts, "that if any officer or gaoler shall, upon demand made by the prisoner or other person on his behalf, refuse to deliver, or within the space of six hours after demand shall not deliver, to the person so demanding, a true copy of the warrant of commitment or detainer of such prisoner, he shall forfeit to the prisoner or party aggrieved, for the first offence 100*l.*, and for the second offence 200*l.*; and shall also be deprived of his office: and the prisoner suing as the party grieved is entitled to the costs of action. (See Ward v. Snell, 1 H. Bla. 10.)

And where a person is sent over from Ireland under a warrant from a secretary of state for that country, charged with any offence, and is committed to prison until he can be brought before a judge, and the warrant is left with the gaoler, this is such a commitment as entitles the prisoner to a copy under the above act, after it has been demanded. (Sedley v. Arbouin, 3 Esp. Rep. 174.)

But where a person after appearing before a magistrate, and being unable to find bail, at his own request is permitted to continue in the custody of the officer for a short time, he is not entitled to a copy of the commitment. (Hudson v. Ash, 1 Stra. 167.)

And service of a demand of a copy of the commitment on the turnkey of a prison, is not sufficient to support an action against the gaoler for the penalty incurred by him under the Habeas Corpus Act, if the gaoler himself were in the prison: but if he be not there, then the deputy may be served; and if the deputy have no deputy, then in the absence of the deputy, service may be made on the turnkey, or it may be left at the gaol; for it is the duty of the governor to leave some person in his place. (Huntley v. Luscombe, 2 Bos. & Pul. 530.)

As to the right to a copy of the depositions, see "Examination," Vol. II. p. 474; to a copy of conviction, see post, "Conviction;" and to a copy of indictment, see "Indictment," Vol. III.

IX. Discharge of Prisoner.

Discharge of prisoner.

It seems that a person legally committed for a crime certainly appearing to have been done by some one or other cannot be lawfully discharged by any one but the queen, till he be acquitted on his trial, or have an ignoramus found by the grand jury, or none to prosecute him on a proclamation for that purpose by the justices of gaol delivery. But if a person be committed on a bare suspicion, without an indictment, for a supposed crime, where afterwards it appears that there was none, as for the murder of a person thought to be dead, who afterwards is found to be alive, it hath been holden, that he may be safely dismissed without any further proceeding, so that he who suffers him to escape is properly punishable only as an accessary to his supposed offence; and it is impossible that there should be an accessary where there can be no principal, and it would be hard to punish one for a contempt in disregarding a commitment founded on a suspicion, appearing in so uncontested a manner to be groundless. (2 Hawk. c. 16, s. 22.)

9. Discharge of.

When a defendant is advised that his commitment is illegal, or that he is entitled to be discharged or bailed by a superior jurisdiction, he may obtain relief by writ of habeas corpus. (See "Habeas Corpus," Vol. III.)

X. Forms.

I. For what, and who may be committed.

For what, and who may be committed.

A commitment in execution is used either as an original punishment, or as the means of enforcing payment of a pecuniary fine, or in any other manner enforcing obedience to the sentence of a magistrate or sessions.

The power of making commitments of this nature is derived for the most part from statutory provisions; in many cases, however, it exists at common law as an incidental means of enforcing the law.

If a statute assigns a commitment as a mode of punishment in the first instance, the commitment follows upon and is the legal consequence of the judgment. But where it is assigned merely as a subsidiary to the enforcing a punishment or penalty, the magistrate cannot adopt it till he has ascertained the punishment or penalty cannot be enforced. As if a statute imposes a penalty for an offence to be levied by distress, or a commitment in default of payment, before making the commitment, the want of sufficient goods to answer the penalty should be ascertained, and this is generally done by means of the officer's return to a warrant of distress. (See R. v. Hawkins, Fort. 272; Hill v. Bateman, 1 Stra. 710.) The 5 Geo. IV. c. 18, gives magistrates power in all cases to commit an offender convicted in a penalty where there is no distress to be had for the penalty; and he may, under this act, order the party to be detained in custody until the return of the warrant of distress; or may even commit him in the first instance, if it satisfactorily appears to him that the defendant has not sufficient goods to satisfy the penalty and costs.

1. For what, &c.

Where an offender is convicted in one penalty, under a statute providing a corporal punishment, on failure of sufficient distress, and has effects sufficient only to satisfy part, it has been held that the goods ought not to be taken, but the corporal punishment should be resorted to. If, however, the same person be separately convicted in two penalties, and his goods are sufficient to satisfy one only, they ought to be levied under one conviction, and the corporal punishment should be inflicted for the other. (See Reg. v. Wyatt, 2 Ld. Raym. 1195; Fort. 132; 11 Mod. 54, S. C.; and see Morgan v. Brown, 4 Ad. & Ell. 515; N. & M. 56, S. C.) But the law never intended that a man should suffer both punishments for one conviction. (Reg. v. Wyatt, 2 Ld. Raym. 1196.)

For a second offence the imprisonment may be from the expiration of the imprisonment under the prior conviction. (4 Burr. 2577; 1 Leach, 536; 1 Chit. C. L. 800.)

A commitment for a contempt is a commitment for punishment. (R. v. James, 5 B. & Ald. 894; 1 D. & R. 559, S. C.) A question was there raised, but not decided, as to whether a magistrate could commit for a contempt. (See Cropper v. Horton, 8 D. & R. 166, "Examination," Vol. II. p. 470.)

A commitment of an insane person under the 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 94, s. 3, is not a commitment in execution. (Ex parte Gourlay, 7 B. & Cres. 669; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 282, S. C.; "Lunatics," Vol. III.)

II. Who may commit, and to what Prison.

The observations already made as to commitments for safe custody, ante, 776, will for the most part here apply.

Who may commit, and to what prison.

In the case of a conviction the commitment is in general made by the justice who convicted the offender. By 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, s. 2, however, a commitment may in all cases be made by one justice, even in cases where the conviction must be by two, and it is immaterial whether the justice who makes the commitment be one of the justices before whom the conviction was made. (See post, "Conviction.")

If the statute imposing a penalty on conviction for an offence, provide, as it frequently does, that the same shall be recovered in a summary way before two justices, to be levied by distress and sale of the offender's goods, and that if there be no sufficient distress, the offender shall be committed to prison for a certain time without bail; and the conviction be removed into the Queen's Bench by certiorari, that Court has no jurisdiction to make such commitment, which is left to the discretion of the justices; and in such case if to a levari facias issued out of that Court the sheriff return nulla bona, the Court will award a procedendo, &c. (R. v. Neville, 2 B. & Adol. 299.)

To house of correction.

By the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 38, s. 3, the Court in which the offender is convicted at the assizes or sessions for any offence for which he is liable to the punishment of death, transportation, or imprisonment, may commit such convict to the house of correction in execution of the judgment against him.

How persons convicted of offences for which they are liable to death &c. shall be disposed of.

By sect. 4, "Whenever any person shall be convicted at any assizes or sessions of any offence for which he or she shall be liable either to the punishment of death, transportation or imprisonment, it shall be lawful for the Court (if it shall so think fit) to commit such person to any house of correction for such county, in execution of his or her judgment; and in case of the commitment of any person sentenced to death, execution of such judgment shall and may be had and done by the sheriff of the county; and in case of the commitment of any person either sentenced to transportation, or pardoned for any capital offence on condition of transportation, all the powers, provisions and authorities for the removal of offenders sentenced to transportation, given or granted by any former act or acts of parliament to sheriffs or gaolers, shall be and the same are hereby extended and given to the keepers of houses of correction in whose custody such last-mentioned offenders shall be." (See "Gaols," Vol. III.)

III. How Commitment to be framed and construed, &c.

Must be in writing, &c.

The commitment must be in writing under the hand and seal of the justice by whom it is made, and expressing his office or authority and the time and place at which it is made, &c. (2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16, s. 13; Hutchinson v. Lowndes, 1 Nev. & M. 674; 4 B. & Ad. 118, S. C.)

It need not be immediately made out; the detention of the party during the time necessarily required to make it out would be justifiable, but not beyond that time. (Ante, 778.)

In cases where a distress may be issued, the magistrate may detain the party in custody till the return of the warrant of distress; such order of detention may be by parol. (Ante, 778.)

Several justices.

As to the necessity for both the justices being present together when making the commitment, in the case of a commitment by two or more justices, see ante, 775.

Form of commitment.

The observations already made as to the form of the commitment for safe custody will be applicable here, ante, 779 to 782.

Construed strictly.

Commitments in execution, however, must be more peculiarly certain and construed more strictly than commitments for safe custody. (See Exparte Gourlay, 7 B. & Cres. 669; 1 M. & R. 619, S. C.) It is not a mere matter of form, for by not having the causes of his commitment duly stated, the party imprisoned is for the time deprived of the benefit of a habeas corpus. Sometimes they amount to a conviction, and must have the same rule of construction. (See Wilkins v. Wright, 2 C. & M. 203.) And in general it would seem, that they must be construed as strictly as a conviction. (Re Peerless, 1 Ad. & Ell. N. S. 143; 10 Law J. (N. S.) M. C. 67, S. C.) But it will not be criticised with the same strictness to which a conviction is subjected, if there be reasonable ground for presuming that the conviction on which the commitment is founded is free from objection, and which in general may be presumed. (R. v. Rogers, 1 D. & R. 156; 1 D. & R. M. C. 59; 5 B. & Ald. 773, S. C.; and see further, "Habeas Corpus," Vol. III.)

Must not be in alternative.

It ought not in any material part to be in the disjunctive. (R. v. Evered, Cald. 26.) Two justices committed Robert Collehole, an apprentice, for running away from his master. An objection was taken to the form of the commitment, for the uncertainty thereof, which ran thus: "as an apprentice or servant, for disobeying his indentures or articles." Lord Mansfield said, that the objection to the warrant of commitment as running in the disjunctive must undoubtedly prevail. The counsel for the prosecution consented to the prisoner's discharge. (And see R. v. North, 6 D. & R. 143; 3 D. & R. M. C. 119, S. C.; R. v. Sadler, 2 Chit. Rep. 519; R. v. Pain, 7 D. & R. 678; 3 D. & R. M. C. 517, S. C.)

Should be an offence within the statute.

Where the offence is created by statute, it should be described accordingly. (R. v. Remnant, 5 T. R. 169; 2 Leach, 583.)

But not always sufficient to follow words of statute.

But the commitment may be insufficient, though, in describing the offence, it pursues the words of the statute. Thus a commitment under the Pilot Act was held defective for not alleging the offer of the licensed pilot to have been made to the defendant, or in his presence, though the act does not contain these words. (Reg. v. Chancy, 6 Dowl. 281; Re Fletcher, 13 Law J. (N. S.) M. C. 16.)

Need not name the statute.

It is sufficient to state that the offence was "contrary to a certain statute made and passed in the first year of the reign of Geo. I." without pointing out specifically the statute. (R. v. Harpur, 1 D. & R. 222; 1 D. & R. M. C. 67, S. C.; and see further, "Indictment," Vol. III.; post, "Conviction.")

If the statute requires the complaint to be on oath, the commitment should show that it was so. (See R. v. Lewis, 13 Law J. (N. S.) M. C. 46.)

3. How to be framed.

If the warrant be on a conviction, it must show before whom the conviction was, (R v. York, 5 Burr. 2684,) and recite a conviction for an offence over which the committing magistrate had jurisdiction, and show that he had such jurisdiction; and the Court will not presume a conviction to be good, which, according to the recital, shows a want of jurisdiction. (R. v. King, 13 Law J. (N. S.) M. C. 43; Wickes v. Clutterbuck, 4 Bing. 333; R. v. Chaney, 6 Dowl. 281; Johnson v. Reid, 6 M. & W. 124; Re Peerless, 1 Ad. & Ell. N. S. 143.)

Must show complaint was on oath if statute require such oath.

Must show before whom conviction was and that the justice had jurisdiction.

So a warrant of commitment for not obeying a magistrate's order must show clearly all that is required by the statute to give the magistrate authority to commit; and therefore a commitment for not paying a sum awarded by an order of maintenance on the 49 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 3, was held bad, where it omitted to state that there was a complaint on oath by one of the overseers of the parish liable to maintain the child, an adjudication by the magistrate, that at the time of the commitment a sum was due and unpaid; that the party charged was called upon for his defence, and that he did not show any reasonable or sufficient cause for not paying. (Wilkins v. Wright, 2 Crom. & Mee. 191.)

Thus a commitment under 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 26, reciting a conviction that the defendant did unlawfully kill and carry away one fallow deer, the property of her majesty Queen Victoria, against the form of the statute, was held bad, for omitting to state that the deer was in the unenclosed part of some forest, chase, or purlieu. (Reg. v. King, 13 Law J. Rep. (N. S.) M. C. 43; and see Wickes v. Clutterbuck, supra.)

Instances of bad commitment for not showing jurisdiction.

In a case under the Malicious Trespass Act, (1 Geo. IV. c. 56, now the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 24,) where it was not stated in the commitment that the damage sustained by the injury amounted to 5*l.* and defendant was convicted in and committed for non-payment of that sum, the Court held it unwarrantable. (R. v. Harper, 1 D. & R. 222; 1 D. & R. M. C. 67, S. C.)

A commitment under 4 Geo. IV. c. 34, s. 2, stating that the defendant, a miner, had contracted to serve A. B., but omitting to state "in the employment of a miner," was held bad. (Reg. v. Lewis, 13 Law J. Rep. (N. S.) M. C. 46.)

So a commitment under that statute alleging a complaint of the master on oath, and then reciting that the magistrate had duly examined the proofs and allegations of both the parties touching the matter of the complaint, and adjudging it to be true, was held bad, for want of an averment that the latter examination was on oath. (Id.)

So where a commitment under the 4 Geo. IV. c. 34, s. 3, recited that A. B. contracted to print certain pieces of woollen goods, and adopted such contract, and entered into the service of C. D. under such contract, and refused to perform such contract, wherefore the justices adjudged that the said A. B. be delivered unto the keeper of the house of correction, there to remain and be corrected, and held to hard labour for the space of six weeks, it was held, that contracting to print certain pieces of woollen cotton goods was not contracting to serve within the meaning of the act; that the magistrate had not jurisdiction, and that the party must be immediately discharged on habeas corpus. (Reg. v. Johnson, 7 Dowl. P. C. 702.)

In another case the plaintiff was committed by the defendant, a magistrate, under the 4 Geo. IV. c. 34, s. 3, by a warrant of commitment, which was in the following form:—"To the constable of M., Surrey, &c. Whereas information and complaint hath been made unto me, one, &c., upon the oaths of J. H. and S. M., both of M., in the said county of S., calico printers, that W. J., of M. aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, calico printer, did, on Wednesday, the 8th of May inst., contract with the said S. M. to print certain pieces of woollen cotton goods, and the said W. J. had adopted such contract, and entered into the service of the said S. M. under such contract, and that the said W. J. hath, in his said service, been guilty of divers misdemeanors, miscarriages, and ill-behaviour towards the said S. M., and particularly with having, on the 9th of May inst., refused to perform such contract, and left his said work unfinished, and the service of the said S. M., without his license or consent. And whereas in pursuance of the statute in that case made and provided, I have duly examined the proofs and allegations of both the said parties touching the matter of the said complaint, and upon due consideration had thereof, have adjudged and determined, and do hereby adjudge and determine the said complaint to be true." It then commanded the constable to convey the plaintiff to the house of correction, and deliver him to the keeper thereof, who was ordered to detain him in custody: it was held, that this was a commitment in execution, and that it was bad, because it did not show either that the contract was entered into, or the work refused to be done, or the plaintiff found within the jurisdiction of the magistrate. (Johnson v. Reid, 6 Mee. & W. 124.)

Statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 53, enacts, that any subject of the king found within a certain distance of the coast of the United Kingdom, &c. on board any vessel from which part of the cargo has been thrown overboard to prevent seizure, shall forfeit 100*l.*, and any officer of customs, &c. may carry him before any justice of the peace in the United Kingdom to be dealt with as after directed. Forfeitures may be recovered before any two or more justices of the peace in the United Kingdom. Every offence against the act committed or forfeiture incurred upon the high seas shall, for the purpose of prosecution, be deemed to have been committed or incurred at the place on land in the United Kingdom, &c. into which the person shall be taken, or in which he shall be found, and the justices of the peace for such place shall have jurisdiction. Any two or more justices before whom any person liable to be detained, and who shall have been detained for an offence against the act, shall be brought, may, on confession and proof, convict.

The 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 13, repeals so much of the last-mentioned act as imposes certain pecuniary penalties for any of the offences thereinafter next mentioned, and then enacts, that any subject of the king discovered to have been within the distances mentioned in the former act on board any vessel from which part of the cargo has been thrown overboard to prevent seizure, &c. shall, upon being duly convicted of any of the said offences before any two justices of the peace, be imprisoned for a term mentioned; and that all informations and convictions before justices of the peace, and warrants of justices founded on such convictions, shall be drawn up in the form or to the effect in the schedule annexed to the act. The form of warrant in the schedule states, that the party has been duly convicted before two justices in and for ——— of having [state the offence as in the information], without further setting out the jurisdiction. A warrant under stat. 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 13, set forth that P. had been duly convicted before two justices in and for the county of Kent, for that he being a subject, &c. was found on the high seas within, &c. of the coast of the United Kingdom, to wit, the coast of the county of Kent, on board a vessel from which part of the cargo had been then and there thrown overboard to prevent seizure, and that P. was by such conviction adjudged by the justices to be imprisoned, &c. On habeas corpus the warrant of commitment alone was returned. The Court held the prisoner entitled to his discharge, because, 1st, the warrant ought to show a good conviction; and 2ndly, because the justices could have jurisdiction only by the offence being committed in Kent, or by its being committed on the high seas, and the offender found in or brought to Kent; the stat. 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 13, not creating a new offence, or altering the jurisdiction, but only changing the punishment and the words, "any two justices" being applicable only to justices having jurisdiction by the common law, or under the statute, and therefore the conviction as stated in the warrant did not show jurisdiction, and was therefore bad. (In the matter of Peerless, 1 Ad. & Ell. N. S. 143.)

Must show there was a conviction.

It must show that the offender was convicted of the offence. Therefore where one was brought up by habeas corpus, and the warrant was returned in the following form, viz. "receive into your custody the body of F. R. herewith, &c. brought before me J. S. one of his majesty's justices, &c. by J. A.

constable, and charged before me, on the oath of M. S. for being a rogue and vagabond within the meaning and intent of an act (17 Geo. II.) &c. for that the said F. R. on, &c. at, &c. did unlawfully use a certain craft to deceive, &c. (setting out the offence of acting as a fortune teller) contrary to the statute; 'him the said F. R. therefore safely keep in your custody, &c." The Court, considering this as a commitment by way of punishment and not for safe custody only, were unanimously of opinion that the commitment was bad, because it only stated that the party had been charged with, not that he had been convicted of, the offence imputed to him. (R. v. Rhodes, 4 T. R. 220; 12 East, 78, n.; S. C. 2 Inst. 52; R. v. Cooper, 6 T. R. 509.)

3. How to be framed.

The commitment when on a conviction should correspond in every material particular with the conviction. Though the conviction may be correct, yet if the commitment be for a different offence, the magistrate would be liable to an action for the imprisonment, &c. under it. (Rogers v. Jones, 5 D. & R. 268; 3 B. & Cres. 409; 1 R. & M. 129, S. C.; and see Wickes v. Clutterbuck, 2 Bing. 483; 10 Moore, 63.)

Should correspond with conviction.

Where a defendant was committed under the Malicious Trespass Act, (then the 1 Geo. IV. c. 56, and now the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 24,) and the commitment recited, "that one M. P. had made complaint to the justice that he had lost a post or pale out of his fence, and that he had cause to suspect and did suspect that G. H. on whose premises the same was found, did cut, spoil, and take and carry away the same, and that the said G. H. did not appear before the justice, and not giving the justice any satisfactory account how she came by the post, nor producing the party of whom she bought it, nor any credible witness to testify the sale, she was therefore by him committed, 'for wilfully and maliciously carrying away the same.'" Per Bailey, J. "This commitment is clearly bad; the charge recited is, that the defendant had cut, spoiled and taken away the post, and the justice convicts her of carrying it away. It is perfectly consistent with the statement in the commitment that somebody else may have cut and spoiled the post, and that she might have carried it away, which is no offence within this act. Therefore as she is convicted of no offence she must be discharged." (R. v. Harpur, 1 D. & R. 222; 1 D. & R. M. C. 67, S. C.)

Upon a complaint against a servant for absenting himself from his services, made under the 4 Geo. IV. c. 34, s. 3, the conviction adjudged that he should be imprisoned in the House of Correction, there to remain and be held to hard labour for one month. The commitment required the keeper to receive him into custody, there to remain "and be corrected," and held to hard labour for one month (following the words of the 20 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 2): it was held, that the "correction" therein mentioned must be understood to mean something beyond the hard labour, and therefore that the commitment was bad, as varying in this respect from the conviction, and authorising a punishment not warranted by the statute. (Wood v. Fenwick, 10 M. & W. 195.)

In trespass for false imprisonment against two magistrates, the defendants gave in evidence a conviction, under 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 24, of the plaintiff, for "unlawfully and maliciously damaging," &c a quantity of rushes, for which they adjudged the plaintiff to pay the sum of 10*s.* as a reasonable compensation, and 6*s.* 6*d.* for costs, and in default of immediate payment, the plaintiff to be imprisoned for one calendar month, unless the said sums should be sooner paid. The warrant of commitment stated the offence to be, that the plaintiff unlawfully trespassed on land in the occupation of D. Thomas, and cut down and carried away a quantity of rushes, for which offence he was ordered the sum of 10*s.* penalty, and the gaoler was ordered to detain for the space of one month, or until he should be delivered by the due order of law, it was held, that the conviction sufficiently supported the commitment. (Daniell v. Philipps, 1 C. M. & Ros. 662.)

A warrant of commitment under the 11 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 4, for a fraudulent removal of goods by a tenant, did not state that there had been a complaint in writing to the justices, or that the examination of witnesses was upon oath; but it referred to the order of the justices (for payment of double the value of the goods removed) in which those matters were stated; this was held sufficient, and the justices were considered not liable in trespass. (Coster v. Wilson, 3 Mee. & W. 411.)

3. How to be framed.

But if a warrant of commitment recites, that the prisoner was convicted of an offence, which is stated at length, and such statement is substantially defective, the Court, when the certiorari is taken away, will presume that the conviction contains the same defect, and will discharge the prisoner. In such a case, if the conviction be correct, the proper course is to remove it by certiorari on the part of the crown, in order to support the warrant. (Reg. v. Chaney, 6 Dowl. 281.)

Need not state the conviction in form.

It is not necessary to state the conviction in a precise or technical form; it is only to show that the party has been convicted of some specific offence, and by a person having competent authority for that purpose. (1 Paley on Conv. 253; R. v. Helps, 3 M. & Sel. 331; R. v. Rogers, 1 D. & R. 156; 1 D. & R. M. C. 59; 5 B. & Ald. 773, S. C.)

Need not state evidence or witnesses, &c.

It is not required, therefore, to set forth the evidence or the facts in detail; (R. v. Walter, 8 Mod. 5;) or the name of the witness; and if by mistake a wrong name is mentioned, as that of the witness upon whose oath the conviction was made, it is surplusage and may be disregarded. (Massey v. Johnson, 12 East, 67.)

Statement of want of distress.

Where a commitment is inflicted only by a statute, as an alternative punishment for want of a sufficient distress, such want should be noticed in the commitment. (See R. v. Chandler, 1 Ld. Raym. 545; R. v. Whitelock, 1 Stra. 263.) It is submitted it is no longer necessary to state how the want of a sufficient distress appears to the magistrate, (see the 5 Geo. IV. c. 18, s. 1,) unless the act authorising the commitment points out how it must appear, as does the second section of that act. (See "Distress under Justices' Warrant," Vol. II.)

Statement of time and manner of imprisonment.

The time during which the defendant is to be imprisoned, and the manner of the imprisonment, must be stated accurately, and according to the directions of the law or statute from which the authority to commit is derived, and in this respect more accuracy is required than in commitments for safe custody. (Ante, 780.)

A commitment directing the gaoler to imprison a party for three months, omitting the day of the month on which it was granted, has been held bad; and as this was a defect arising out of the warrant itself, it was held it could not be aided by a good conviction. (In re Fletcher, 13 L. J. Rep. (N. S.) M. C. 16.)

Where a statute appoints imprisonment, but limits no time how long, in such case the prisoner must remain imprisoned at the discretion of the Court. (Dalt. c. 170, p. 410.)

Under the Vagrant Act (17 Geo. II. c. 5, s. 7, now the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, "Vagrants," Vol. VI.) which directed the offender to be imprisoned till the next sessions or for any less time, as the justice should think proper, a commitment ordering the party to be detained, not for any limited time but until he should be discharged according to the laws and customs of this realm, was held bad. (R. v. Hall, 3 Burr. 1636.)

A commitment under the 35 Eliz. c. 2, (which empowers a justice to inquire into certain matters and commit such persons as refuse to answer), "till discharged by due course of law," was held bad. (Yoxley's case, 1 Salk. 351.) And so in a case where magistrates committed for a contempt. (R. v. James, 1 D. & R. 559; 1 D. & R. M. C. 131; 5 B. & Ald. 894, S. C.; and see Exparte Leake, 9 B. & Cres. 234.)

A commitment by the Vice Chancellor of Oxford, stating the offence to be carrying goods without a license, and ordering the party to remain in custody until he should give security to carry no more, and to observe the statutes of the University for life, was adjudged to be illegal. (R. v. Barnes, 2 Stra. 917.)

Hard labour.

If a statute order a commitment for hard labour, it must be so signified in the commitment. Where a statute, besides ordering a commitment to prison, adds also, "there to remain and be corrected and kept to hard labour," the correction understood is by whipping. (R. v. Hoscason, 14 East, 607; and see Wood v. Fenwick, 10 M. & W. 195, ante, 791.)

3. How to be framed.

Whipping.

The condition, if any, upon which defendant may be discharged, must be distinctly stated in the commitment. Therefore if he be authorised to be committed till the payment of a penalty or the performance of some other act, the condition must be distinctly expressed and such as is authorised. It ought to be for imprisonment until he has paid the penalty.

Statement of and condition of discharge.

A commitment reciting that the defendant had been convicted by the College of Physicians and fined 20*l.*, and was thereby committed to gaol "till he should be delivered by the said college or otherwise by due course of law," was held bad, as being too general, and not sufficiently ascertaining whether the commitment was a distinct punishment or merely for enforcing the fine. (Dr. Groenvelt's case, 1 Ld. Raym. 213.)

Must be distinctly expressed.

Where justices committed the late overseer of a parish, under 17 Geo. II. c. 38, upon a conviction (on the complaint of the succeeding overseers) for neglecting and refusing to deliver over a certain book belonging to the parish, called "The Bastardy Ledger," and committed him, in pursuance of their adjudication, "until he should have yielded up all and every the books concerning his said office of overseer belonging to the parish;" the Court held the commitment void in toto, for which the magistrates might be sued in trespass for false imprisonment, although the conviction had not been quashed. (Groome v. Forrester, 5 M. & Sel. 314, noticed more fully, "Poor," Vol. IV.; and see Exparte Leake, 9 B. & Cres. 234; 3 Y. & J. 46, S. C., as to a commitment by commissioners of bankrupts.)

Where a party was committed as the reputed father of a bastard child, "until he should pay the sum due and legal accustomed fees, or until he should be otherwise delivered by due course of law," the commitment was held bad, the commitment not having been authorised by the 49 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 3. (Robson v. Spearman, 3 B. & Ald. 493.)

Amount of penalty and costs.

If the commitment be till payment of a penalty, the sum must be stated and fixed. Thus a conviction and commitment for a forcible entry, "there to remain till they shall have paid a fine to the king," the justices not having assessed any fine, was held to be bad. (R. v. Elwell, 2 Ld. Raym. 1575; Stra. 794, S. C.)

So under the 6 Geo. I. c. 16, s. 1, which empowers a justice to commit till the penalty and charges are paid, a commitment for nine months or until the sum of 15*l.* "together with the charges previous to and attending the conviction shall be paid," was held bad, for want of ascertaining the exact sum by the payment of which the defendant might be released. (R. v. Hall, Cowp. 60.) And see a case on the commitment of a toll-keeper for refusing to account, R v. Catherall, Fitzg. 266.

So where a conviction took place on the Stage Coach Act, 50 Geo. III. c. 48 (now repealed), and the commitment recited the conviction, from which it appeared the defendant had been committed by the justices for three months, "unless before that time he pays the sum of 6*l.*, together with the expenses of the warrant, viz. the sum of —— shillings," without expressing the sum which he was to pay for the expenses, the Court held the commitment bad on that account, for the defendant could not know on what terms he might be discharged, and the gaoler was equally in the dark. The conviction and commitment should have ascertained precisely what sum for expenses the defendant was to pay. (R. v. Payne, 4 D. & R. 72; 1 D & R. M. C. 67; R. v. Rogers, 2 B. & Ald. 773; 1 D. & R. 156; 1 D. & R. M. C. 59, S. C.)

The form of a commitment for costs, in default of a sufficient distress, is given by the 18 Geo. III. c. 19. (See post, "Costs," Vol. II.)

For two sums.

A commitment for payment of two sums of money, one of which was not due, was held bad altogether, though as to one of the sums it was correct. (Exparte Addis, 2 D. & R. 167; 1 B. & C. 90; and see Goff's case, 3 M. & Sel. 203; sed vide Skingley v. Surridge, 11 M. & Wels. 503.)

Where several offenders.

A statutory conviction of A. and B. for an offence several in its nature (as an assault under stat. 9 Geo. IV. c. 31), adjudging that they the said A. and B. for their said offence do forfeit the sum of, &c. and in default of payment be imprisoned for the space of, &c. is bad, inasmuch as the penalty ought to be imposed on the parties severally and not jointly. And a party committed under such a conviction may recover in trespass against the committing magistrate. (Morgan v. Brown, 4 Adol. & Ell. 515; 6 Nev. & M. 56, S. C.)

3. How to be framed.

To whom penalty, &c. to be paid.

It is not necessary expressly to state to whom the payment of the pehalty or costs should be made. (See R. v. Rogers, 1 D. & R. 156; 1 D. & R. 59; 5 B. & Ald. 773, S. C.) It seems, however, that it must appear from some part of the commitment, who is the party entitled to the penalty, and at all events it is better that it should. (See R. v. Helps, 3 M. & Sel. 331.)

Date of.

As regards the date of the commitment, see ante, 782. And it seems that if not issued too soon, it is not bad because it is dated too soon. (Newman v. Hardwicke, 3 Nev. & Per. 368.)

Bad in part, bad in whole.

If the commitment in execution be bad in part, it is bad for the whole. (Ex parte Addis, supra; Morgan v. Brown, supra; Goff's case, 3 M. & Sel. 203.)

Amendment of.

In some cases (though rarely so) the statute allows the magistrate to amend the commitment. A party convicted in a penalty under an act against smuggling, (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 53,) was committed to gaol by warrant of the convicting justices till he should pay the forfeiture. The act (s. 90) empowers justices to amend any such conviction or warrant of commitment, whether before or after conviction. Four days after the committal, the warrant (which was defective in point of law) was withdrawn from the gaoler's possession, and another substituted; it did not appear by whom. The second warrant was of the same date, and signed and sealed by the same justices as the first, and did not materially vary from it, except that in the recital of the conviction certain cordage was said to be adapted for "slinging" casks, instead of "slinging or sinking," and the name of the place at which the party was said to have been detained for his offence was altered. The above facts, and copies of the warrants being returned on certiorari and habeas corpus, held, that the Court could not presume, either from the facts returned, or from the warrants, that the second warrant was substituted by the justices, as an amendment of the first, in pursuance of the authority given them by the act. The prisoner was discharged. (In the matter of Elmy and Sawyer, 3 Nev. & M. 733; 1 Adol. & Ell. 843, S. C.)

Defects when cured.

It is a general rule, that if a warrant of commitment in execution on a conviction manifestly defective on the face of it, shows that there has been a conviction, the Court will not notice the defect until the conviction is returned into Court, and if the conviction be right, the defects in the commitment will be cured, provided the latter show the like offence as is stated in the conviction. (R. v. Taylor, 7 D. & R. 622; 3 D. & R. M. C. 491, S. C.; ante, 781.)

Defect in warrant when aided.

By 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 73 (the Larceny Act), no warrant of commitment on a conviction under that act shall be held by reason of any defect therein, provided it be alleged that the party has been convicted, and there be a good and valid conviction to sustain the same. The 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30 (the Act against Malicious Injuries to Property), s. 39, contains a similar enactment. So does also s. 36 of 9 Geo. IV. c. 31 (the Act relating to Offences against the Person). And also the 1 & 2 Will IV. c. 32, s. 45 (the Game Act). And see as to clauses of this kind, Daniell v. Philipps, (1 C. M. & R. 662.)

Consequences of defect.

If the commitment be void on the face of it, an action for false imprisonment will lie against the magistrates making the same, and this although the conviction be not quashed. (See Groome v. Forrester, 5 M. & Sel. 514; Rogers v. Jones, 5 D. & R. 268; 3 B. & Cres. 409; 1 R. & M. 129, S.C.; Wickes v. Clutterbuck, 2 Bingh. 483; 10 Moore, 63; "Justices," Vol. III. p. 583; and the cases, ante, 774.)

Besides this, if the commitment be void, the party may obtain his discharge by habeas corpus. (See "Habeas Corpus," Vol. III.)

IV. Execution, Expenses, and Copy and Certificate of Commitment.

As to the mode of executing a warrant of commitment, see in general, "Warrant," Vol. VI. Execution of.

The observations already made, ante, 782 to 784, as to the expenses, copy, or certificate of the commitment for safe custody, will here apply. Expenses, copy, and certificate of.

V. Discharge of Defendant.

A commitment in execution does not, like a commitment for safe custody, in any case admit of bail. (See Anon. 11 Mod. 45; Anon. id. 52.) Discharge of party after commitment.

And although a right of appeal be given by statute to the next sessions, which may not be till after the term of imprisonment has expired, (as is the case with the present Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 11,) yet after a commitment by one justice, it is not competent for others to discharge the defendant upon his appealing to the next sessions, and giving bail to prosecute that appeal. (R. v. Brooke, 2 T. R. 190.)

It is said in Dalt. c. 170, p. 410, that upon the defendant's finding sureties for payment of the fine, he ought to be discharged; but this seems very questionable.

Under stat. 17 Geo. III. c. 56, ss. 1, 2, 20, 22, two justices may convict and sentence to imprisonment; and the party convicted may appeal to sessions, giving notice to the justices at the time of conviction, and at the same time entering into recognizance with sufficient sureties to try the appeal and abide the judgment at sessions: but if he do not at such time enter into such recognizance, the convicting justices are to commit him till the sessions, unless such recognizance be sooner entered into, and are to transmit the conviction to the sessions; and the sessions, on proof of notice of appeal, and on receiving the conviction, are to hear the appeal; and if the conviction be affirmed, the party is to suffer the punishment originally adjudged, the time of imprisonment, if inflicted, being computed from the time of affirmance, unless the party has been imprisoned under the original conviction, in which case the time for which he has been so confined is to be included in the order of confirmation. A party convicted by two justices, and sentenced to eleven weeks' imprisonment, gave notice of appeal, and was committed for not entering into recognizance. By the practice of sessions, the appeal is to be entered, and the order for hearing it obtained, by the party disputing the conviction. The party not having entered the appeal, the sessions discharged him. The Court of Queen's Bench held, that the convicting magistrates had no longer power to commit in execution of the conviction; or that, at any rate, no mandamus should be granted to compel them to do so. (Rex v. Twyford, 5 Ad. & Ell. 430.)

If the commitment be until payment of a certain fine or penalty, it follows as of course that the party is to be set at liberty immediately on payment or tender thereof. (1 Paley on Conv. 265.) A payment or tender to the gaoler or officer entrusted with the execution of the commitment would, it should seem, be sufficient. Where an officer, after a tender of the penalty, persisted in conveying a person to gaol, insisting also upon payment of a further sum, indorsed by the justice on the warrant of commitment, under the name of costs, he was held liable to an action for false imprisonment. (Smith v. Sibson, 1 Wils. 153.) Payment of penalty, &c.

The commitment remains in force until it be executed, so long as the magistrate who made it is living. ("Warrant," Vol. VI.) How long warrant in force.

If the commitment be void, the party may obtain his discharge on habeas corpus. (See "Habeas Corpus," Vol. III.) Habeas corpus.

VI. Forms.

(1.) Commitment where the punishment is by imprisonment, &c.

III. Putting Stoned and Scabbed Horses and Sheep upon, 859.
[32 Hen. VIII. c. 13; 38 Geo. III. c. 65.]

I. Exchange of Lands in Common Fields.

By the common law an exchange is a mutual grant of equal interest, the one in consideration of the other: as fee simple for fee simple; estate for life for estate for life, &c., and though no livery of seisin was required, an entry by each of the parties was absolutely necessary to effectuate it; but in the case of exchanges under Inclosure Acts, and the act about to be treated of, these rules as well as the others which affected the subject at common law, are considerably modified, if not wholly inapplicable.

By stat. 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 30, intituled "An Act to facilitate the Exchange of Lands lying in Common Fields," [25th July, 1834,] reciting, "Whereas it is expedient to facilitate the exchange of pieces of land lying intermixed and dispersed in common fields, meadows or pastures, for other pieces of land either lying therein or being part of the enclosed lands in the same or any adjoining parish:" it is enacted, "That from and after the passing of this act it shall be lawful for any person who shall be seised or possessed of, or entitled in possession to any land in any common field, as tenant in fee simple, or in fee tail, general or special, or for life or lives, or by the curtesy of England, or for any other estate of freehold, or for years determinable on any life or lives, or for any term of years whereof one hundred years shall be unexpired, and for the guardian, trustee, feoffee for charitable or other uses, husband, or committee of such person who, at the time of making any exchange authorised by this act, shall be an infant, idiot, lunatic, or feme covert, or under any other disability, by such deed and with such consent as hereinafter mentioned, to grant and convey such land or any part thereof to any other person, in lieu of and in exchange for any other land, whether lying in the same or any other common field, or for any inclosed land lying within the same or any adjoining parish, and to accept and take from such other person any land in lieu of and in exchange for the land in such common field."

4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 30.

Proprietors of land in common fields may exchange same.

Sect. 2. "It shall be lawful for any person who shall be seised or possessed of or entitled in possession to any land which it may be desirable to exchange for the land in such common field, whether such person shall be tenant in fee simple, or in fee tail, general or special, or for life or lives, or by the curtesy of England, or for any other estate of freehold, or for years determinable on any life or lives, or for any term of years whereof one hundred years shall be unexpired, and for the guardian, trustee, feoffee for charitable or other uses, husband, or committee of such person who shall be an infant, idiot, lunatic, or feme covert, or under any other disability, to consent and agree to such exchange, and to grant and convey such land to the person proposing to make such exchange, in lieu of and in exchange for the land lying in such common field, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained."

All persons enabled to give land in exchange for such common field land.

1. Exchange of Lands in Common Fields.

4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 30.

Land given in exchange by persons having limited interests, to be of equal value with land taken.

If exchange made by any person having only a limited interest, or under disability, consent of person next in remainder to be obtained.

In case person next in remainder should be an infant, &c.

Consent of patron and bishop necessary for exchange of land held in right of a church.

Sect. 3. "Provided always, that when any such exchange shall be made by any person having a less estate or interest than in fee simple in the land to be by him granted or conveyed in exchange, or shall be made by any person under any disability, the land to be so taken in exchange shall, at the time of making such exchange, be, or shall by the payment of a sufficient sum for equality of exchange be made, of equal value with, or not of less value than the land to be granted or conveyed in exchange."

Sect. 4. "Whenever any exchange shall be proposed to be made under the authority of this act, and either of the parties thereto shall have a less estate or interest in the land to be by him granted or conveyed in exchange than a fee simple, or shall be under any disability, such exchange shall not be completed unless the person to whom the next immediate vested estate of freehold in remainder or reversion shall have been limited (provided such person shall be of the full age of twenty-one years, and being a female shall be unmarried), shall consent thereto, and shall testify such consent by signing the draft deed of exchange hereinafter mentioned, and such consent shall be sufficient for the purpose of authorising such exchange, notwithstanding the person giving the same may have an equitable estate only in the land intended to be conveyed in exchange, or may have previously disposed of, or charged or incumbered his reversionary estate therein: Provided always, that if the person to whom such next immediate vested estate in remainder or reversion may have been limited shall, at the time of such exchange, happen to be an infant or feme covert, or an idiot or lunatic, then and in such case it shall be lawful for the guardian or husband, or committee of such infant, feme covert, idiot, or lunatic, (such guardian, husband, or committee not being himself the person by whom such exchange is proposed to be made), to consent to such exchange, and to sign the draft deed of exchange in his or her stead: Provided further, that whenever the guardian or husband, or committee of such infant, feme covert, idiot, or lunatic, shall himself be the person by whom such exchange is proposed to be made, then and in such case it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery, upon petition, to be preferred to the said court in a summary way, to appoint a person to act as protector to such infant, feme covert, idiot or lunatic, for the purposes of this act; and if he shall think fit so to do, to consent to such exchange, and to sign the draft deed of exchange in the stead of such infant, feme covert, idiot or lunatic, or of his or her guardian, husband, or committee."

Sect. 5. "Provided always, that no exchange shall be made of any land held in right of any benefice, without the consent of the patron thereof, and of the archbishop or bishop to whose ordinary or peculiar jurisdiction the said benefice may be subject, such consent to be signified by the patron and archbishop or bishop respectively signing the draft deed of exchange hereinafter mentioned; and such consent, when so given and signified, shall be a sufficient authority for such exchange, any law or statute to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided always, that if the patronage of such benefice shall happen to be in the crown, and the benefice shall exceed the yearly value of twenty pounds in the king's books, it shall be lawful for the lord high treasurer or the first lord commissioner of the treasury for the time being, but if it shall not exceed the yearly value of twenty pounds in the king's books, then for the lord high chancellor, lord keeper, or lords commissioners of the great seal for the time being, to consent to such exchange, and to sign the draft deed of exchange on behalf of the crown; and if the patronage of such benefice shall happen to be in the crown in right of the duchy of Lancaster, it shall be lawful for the chancellor for the time being of the said duchy to consent to such exchange, and to sign the draft deed of exchange on behalf of the crown; and if the patronage of such benefice shall be part of the possessions of the duchy of Cornwall, it shall be lawful for the Duke of Cornwall for the time being, if of full age, but if not of full age, or in case such benefice shall be within the patronage of the crown in right of the duchy of Cornwall, then for the same person who is hereinbefore authorised to consent on behalf of the crown, in respect of a benefice in the patronage of the crown, to consent to such exchange, and to sign the draft deed of exchange on behalf either of the Duke of Cornwall, or, as the case may be, on behalf of the crown in right of the duchy of Cornwall; and if the patron of such benefice shall happen to be a minor, idiot, lunatic or feme covert, it shall and may be lawful for the guardian, committee or husband of such patron to consent to such exchange, and to sign the draft deed of exchange in the stead of such patron, and on his or her behalf."

1. Exchange of Lands in Common Fields.

4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 30.

Sect. 6. Provided always, "that no exchange shall be made under the authority of this act by any bishop, dean, or other head of a chapter, archdeacon, prebendary, or other ecclesiastical corporation sole, unless, in the case of a bishop, with the consent of the archbishop of the province, to be signified by such archbishop signing the draft deed of exchange hereinafter mentioned, or unless, in the case of a dean or other head of a chapter, with the consent of the chapter, to be signified by their affixing their common seal to the said draft deed of exchange, or unless, in the case of an archdeacon, prebendary, or other ecclesiastical corporation sole, with the consent of the archbishop or bishop of the diocese, to be signified by such archbishop or bishop signing the said draft deed of exchange."

Draft deed of exchange to be signed or sealed by ecclesiastical person, or corporation consenting.

Sect. 7. "Every exchange under the authority of this act shall be made according to the form in the schedule to this act annexed, or as near thereto as the number of parties and the circumstances of the case will admit, and shall, when executed by the respective parties, be valid and effectual in the law to all intents and purposes, without livery of seisin made or taken, or any other act done, by any person or party to perfect or complete the same."

Exchange to be made in the form given in the schedule.

Sect. 8. Provided always, "that whenever any land held by copy of court-roll shall be exchanged under the authority of this act, the deed of exchange, when executed by the respective parties, shall be produced to the lord of the manor of which the land may be parcel, or to his steward, or to the deputy of such steward, who shall cause the same to be entered on the court-rolls of the manor."

In case of copyholds, the deed of exchange to be entered on the court-rolls.

Sect. 9. "The fees and charges to be demanded by and paid to any steward of a manor for entering on the court-rolls of such manor any deed of exchange or other instrument required by this act to be entered thereon shall not exceed the sum of sixpence for every law folio of seventy-two words contained in such deed or other instrument."

Fees to stewards.

Sect. 10. "Whenever any exchange shall be made under the authority of this act by any archbishop, bishop, dean or other head of a chapter, dean or other head of a chapter and chapter, archdeacon, prebendary or other ecclesiastical corporation, or by the incumbent of any benefice, the deed of exchange, when executed by the respective parties, shall, in the case of the exchange being made by an archbishop or bishop, be entered in his own registry, and in the case of the exchange being made by a dean or other head of a chapter, or by a dean or other head of a chapter and chapter, be entered in the registry of such chapter, and in the case of the exchange being made by an archdeacon, prebendary or other ecclesiastical corporation, or by the incumbent of a benefice, be entered in the registry of the bishop of the diocese."

In case of church lands, deed to be entered in proper ecclesiastical registry.

Sect. 11. "An office copy of any deed of exchange or other instrument which under the provisions of this act shall be entered on any such registry as aforesaid (such office copy being certified by the registrar or his deputy) shall be allowed as evidence thereof in all courts and places, and every person shall be entitled to require any such office copy, and shall also be allowed at all usual and proper times to search for and inspect any deed of exchange or other instrument which shall be so entered; and the registrar shall be entitled to charge for the entry of every such deed of exchange or other instrument after the rate of sixpence for every law folio of seventy-two words contained therein, and the sum of one shilling, and no more, for allowing any such search or inspection as aforesaid, and after the rate of sixpence for every law folio of seventy-two words in any office copy to be made and certified as aforesaid."

Office copies of instruments deposited in registry to be evidence.

Sect. 12. "Before any exchange shall be made under the authority of this act a draft of the intended deed of exchange, containing a correct description of the several lands proposed to be exchanged, and signed by the respective

Draft of intended exchange to be deposited with clerk of the peace, and notice inserted in some newspaper circulating in the county.

parties, and also by the several persons whose consent to such exchange is herein-before required to be given, and accompanied by an estimate of the value as well of the land proposed to be given as of the land proposed to be taken in exchange, and whenever the exchange shall be proposed to be made by or with any person under disability, then accompanied also by a copy of the several limitations contained in the deed or will under which such person may be entitled, shall be deposited with the clerk of the peace of the county in which the greater part of the land may be situated; and a notice of such draft and estimate having been so deposited (such notice containing a description of the land intended to be exchanged) shall be published in some newspaper usually circulated in the county wherein such land is situated at three several times in three successive months after such draft and estimate shall have been so deposited: provided always, that whenever a corporation aggregate shall be one of the parties to such proposed exchange, or the consent of a corporation aggregate shall be necessary thereto, the affixing of the common seal of such corporation to such draft deed of exchange shall be deemed a sufficient compliance with the provisions of this act."

Proviso as to certain corporations.

Persons having objections to deposit them with clerk of the peace within a certain time.

Sect. 13. "If any person claiming to have an interest in the land proposed to be exchanged shall object to such exchange, it shall be lawful for him to state such objection in writing, and to deposit the same with the clerk of the peace at any time not less than fourteen days before the holding of the assizes at which such proposed exchange shall be taken into consideration as hereinafter mentioned; and such draft deed of exchange, and estimate, and copy of limitations, and the said statement of objection, shall be open to the inspection of any person."

Fees to be taken by clerks of the peace.

Sect. 14. "The justices of the peace for the several counties, ridings, divisions, cities, towns, liberties and precincts within England and Wales, shall in the manner directed by an act passed in the fifty-seventh year of the reign of King George the Third, intituled 'An Act to enable Justices of the Peace to settle the Fees to be taken by the Clerks of the Peace of the respective Counties and other Divisions of England and Wales,' ascertain, make and settle a table of fees and allowances to be taken by the clerks of the peace for such counties, ridings, divisions, cities, towns, liberties and precincts, for their trouble in the execution of the duties imposed upon them by this act, and such fees shall be subject to alteration and regulation in the manner by the said act directed."

Clerk of the peace to cause draft deed, &c. to be laid before a judge of assize, who shall appoint a barrister to consider same.

Sect. 15. "The clerk of the peace shall cause the said draft deed of exchange, estimate and statement of objection (if any), and all other papers relating thereto, to be laid before the senior judge of nisi prius at the assizes to be holden next after the expiration of three months from the time of the deposit of such draft deed of exchange with the clerk of the peace as aforesaid; and such judge shall appoint a barrister, of not less than five years standing, for taking into consideration the said draft deed and statement, who shall forthwith appoint a time for that purpose."

Barrister may summon witnesses.
False swearing perjury.

Sect. 16. "Such barrister shall be empowered to summon and to compel the attendance of witnesses, and to administer an oath; and that any person wilfully swearing falsely before such barrister shall be liable to all the penalties of wilful perjury."

Barristers to examine witnesses, and determine objections.

Sect. 17. "Such barrister shall satisfy himself, by the production of deeds, the examination of witnesses, or by such other evidence as he shall think fit to require, of the value of the lands proposed to be exchanged, and that the person proposing to make such exchange is not under any disability, or if he is, that the person stated to have the next immediate vested estate of freehold in reversion or remainder has such estate, and that the notices and the consents required by this act have been duly given; and such barrister shall hear and determine all objections (if any) which may have been made by any person claiming to have an interest in the land proposed to be exchanged."

After inquiry barrister to certify as case may be.

Sect. 18. "After such inquiry shall have been had before such barrister he shall grant a certificate under his hand, in which he shall state that the parties proposing to make such exchange are not under any disability, or if they are, or either of them is under disability, that the persons or person having the next immediate vested estate of freehold in remainder or reversion have concurred therein, that the persons whose consents are required under this act have consented to the exchange, and that the equality and the fairness of the proposed exchange have been proved, or otherwise, as the case may be; and he shall suggest in such certificate such alterations as to him may seem expedient for the better protecting the rights of parties having an interest in the lands proposed to be exchanged."

1. Exchange of Lands in Common Fields.

4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 30.

Sect. 19. "In any case of an exchange to be made under this act in which there shall be a difference of not more than one-fifth in the value of the lands proposed to be exchanged, it shall be lawful for the said barrister to allow or insert a provision in such exchange for the payment in money of such difference in value: provided always, that no exchange shall be made under the authority of this act in which there shall be a difference of more than one-fifth part in the value of the lands proposed to be exchanged."

In case of exchange in which there shall be a difference in value of not more than one-fifth.

Sect. 20. "The said certificate, together with the said draft deed of exchange, and estimate, and such statement of objections, if any, and all other papers relating thereto, shall be laid before the said judge of assize, who shall thereupon make such order therein, either for confirming the said exchange, or for annulling the same, or for altering the same, as to him may seem expedient; and the said draft deed of exchange, when so confirmed or altered by the said order, shall be immediately engrossed and executed by the necessary parties, and shall, when so executed, be binding upon the owners or proprietors of the pieces of land so exchanged, and all other parties interested therein: provided always, that before making such final order it shall be lawful for such judge to institute or cause to be instituted such further inquiry, by the means aforesaid, into the several matters relating to any such agreement, as he may think necessary.

Certificate with draft deed, &c. to be laid before the judge, who shall make order thereupon.

Judge may institute further inquiry.

Sect. 21. Provided also, "that such barrister shall further certify to the said judge by whom and in what proportions the costs and charges of such proceedings relative to such agreement ought to be borne, and thereupon the said judge shall make such order for payment of such costs and charges as he may think right: provided always, that in the case of any disagreement respecting the amount of such costs, such costs shall be taxed by the master or secondary of the Court of King's Bench."

Costs and charges of proceedings.

Sect. 22. "Every barrister before whom any inquiry shall be had under the authority of this act shall be entitled to be paid at the rate of five guineas for every day that he shall be employed in making such inquiry, over and above his travelling and all other expenses; and every such barrister shall after the termination of such inquiry transmit a statement of the number of days during which he shall have been so employed, and an account of the travelling and all other expenses incurred by him in respect of such employment, to the judge by whom he shall have been appointed, or in case of the death or illness or retirement of such judge, to any other judge of the superior courts of record at Westminster, who shall examine and allow the same, or so much or such parts thereof as he shall see fit; and the same when so allowed shall be paid in the same manner as the other costs and charges incident to such exchange are hereinbefore directed to be paid: provided always, that if more than one case of exchange shall be referred to the same barrister, the remuneration to such barrister shall not be cumulative, but shall be considered as fixed for the day and not for the case."

Remuneration to barrister.

Sect. 23. "In case any money shall be directed to be paid by either party to the other of them for equality of exchange, and the party to whom such money shall be directed to be paid* shall (in case it shall exceed the sum of twenty pounds) be paid with all convenient speed into the Bank of England in the name and with the privity of the accountant general of the Court of Chancery, to be placed to his account there ex parte the person entitled to the rents and profits of the land for or in respect of which such money shall be payable, to the intent that such money shall be applied, under the direction of the court, to be signified by an order made in a summary way upon a petition to be preferred by or on behalf of the person who would have been entitled to the rents and profits of the said land, either in the purchase or redemption of the land tax, or in discharging any debt or incumbrance affecting the said land, or affecting any other lands standing settled therewith to the same or the like uses, or in the purchase of other lands, which shall be conveyed to the same or the like uses, or such of them as shall be then subsisting and capable of taking effect; and in the meantime and until such purchase shall be made, the said money shall, by order of the said court, upon application thereto, be invested by the said accountant general in his name in some of the public funds, and the dividends thereof shall from time to time be paid to the person who would have been entitled to the rents of the land so to be purchased and settled; but in case such money shall not exceed the sum of twenty pounds, then the same shall be paid to the person entitled to the rents and profits of the land for or in respect of which the same may be payable, or in case of infancy, lunacy, idiotcy, or coverture, to his or her guardian, committee, or husband, as the case may be."

Application of money paid for equality of exchange when party entitled to same under disability.

Lands given in exchange to be exonerated from the uses affecting them at the time, and to become subject to such uses as affected the lands taken.

Sect. 24. "From and immediately after such deed of exchange as hereinbefore is mentioned shall have been duly executed by the necessary parties, the land by which such deed is given in exchange shall be exonerated and discharged from the uses, trusts, powers, conditions, limitations and restrictions, charges and incumbrances then affecting the same, and shall be and become subject to such and the same uses, trusts, powers, conditions, limitations and restrictions, charges and incumbrances, as affected the land taken in exchange at the same date; and the land so taken in exchange shall be exonerated and discharged from all uses, trusts, powers, conditions, limitations and restrictions, charges and incumbrances then affecting the same, and shall be and become subject to such and the same uses, trusts, powers, conditions, limitations and restrictions, charges and incumbrances as affected the lands given in exchange at the same time."

After exchange party not to be evicted.

Sect. 25. "No person to whom any land shall have been granted or conveyed in exchange according to the provisions of this act shall at any time thereafter be evicted from the peaceable and quiet possession of such land by reason or in consequence of any person claiming right thereto through any title prior to that of, or through any defect of title in, the person by whom such land may have been granted or conveyed; but nevertheless it shall be lawful for the person claiming such right, and he is hereby authorised and empowered to use, exercise, and enjoy all such and the same powers and remedies in trying his right to and in obtaining and recovering possession of the land which shall have been granted or conveyed in exchange as the person so claiming would in case this act had not been made, have been enabled to use, exercise, or enjoy in trying the right to and recovering the possession of the land in exchange for which the same shall have been so granted or conveyed under the authority of this act."

General saving.

Sect. 26. "Saving always to the king's most excellent majesty, his heirs and successors, and to all and every other person, bodies politic, corporate and collegiate, his and their heirs, successors, executors, and administrators, (other than and except the several owners and proprietors of the said exchanged lands, and the several persons and parties who shall have consented to such exchange, and all other persons claiming under them, or under the same will or deed or other conveyance as the said owners and proprietors, any right, title, estate, or interest to or in the said exchanged lands,) all such estate, right, title, interest, claim, and demand whatsoever, as they, every or any of them had before the making and confirming of any such exchange, or could or might have had or enjoyed in case such exchange had not been made."

Meaning of words in the act.

Sect. 27. "The words and expressions herein-after mentioned, which in their ordinary signification have a more confined or different meaning, shall, in the construction of this act, except where the nature of the provision or the context of the act shall exclude such construction, be interpreted as follows; that is to say, the word 'person' shall extend as well to an individual as to a body politic, corporate, or collegiate, and to a corporation as well aggregate as sole, whether such corporation be eleemosynary or civil, ecclesiastical or lay; the word 'benefice' shall extend to and be taken to comprehend rectories, vicarages, donatives, perpetual curacies, parochial and consolidated chapelries, district parishes and district chapelries, and churches and chapels having a district assigned thereto; the word 'land' shall extend to every species of land, whether arable, meadow, or pasture, and whether freehold, copyhold, or customary, or held by any other tenure, and as well to one piece or parcel as to any number of pieces or parcels of land; and every word importing the singular number only shall extend and be applied to several persons or things as well as one person or thing; and every word importing the masculine gender only shall extend and be applied to a female as well as a male."

In the general Inclosure Act, 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 115, s. 35, powers are incidentally given to proprietors of lands proposed to be allotted to effect exchanges; the subject will be more appropriately treated of under that particular section, post, p. 848.

II. Inclosure of Commons. (a)

Previous to the passing of the stat. 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 115, inclosures of commons and wastes were usually regulated by local statutes, subject to and adopting the provisions of certain general statutes; that enactment enables a certain majority of the proprietors of open and common lands to inclose and allot them without special application to the legislature; but as that statute is only an extension of the previously existing general statutes, it will be necessary to give the reader a view of their provisions.

(a) A bill is at present before parliament on the subject of inclosures; should it pass into a law before the publication of this work, it will be found in the Addenda.

2. Inclosure of.

Inclosure bills are not to be considered merely as private acts. (1 Atk. 281.)

Freeholds.

Inclosures make the allotments freehold, unless the Inclosure Act otherwise directs. (Nevell v. Jodrell, 2 T. R. 415.)

Commons.

As, where the waste of a manor is inclosed and allotted to commoners, they hold the allotments as freehold tenures, because they were freehold before the inclosure, namely, the freehold of the lord. (Doe d. Lowes v. Danuen, 2 M. & Sel. 175.)

But the legal freehold does not vest in the allottee until the execution and proclamation of the award. (Farrer v. Billing, 2 B. & Ald. 171; post, 818, n. (a).)

Unless by the wording of the particular act an intention appear on the part of the legislature to give the seisin upon the allotment only, and before the execution of the award. (Kingsley v. Young, 17 Ves. 468; 18 Ves. 207; Doe d. Harris v. Saunder, 5 A. & E. 664.) Nor is the legal title to purchase-money or compensation-money to be ascertained by the award of a commissioner under an inclosure act complete till the award is made. (Cator v. The Croyden Canal Company, 4 You. & C. 405.)

No technical form is necessary in the award. (Pick v. Clarkson, 2 Bl. Rep. 1318.)

Allotment to lord.

An inclosure act directed allotments to be made to A., as a full compensation for his right to the soil of the waste as lord of the manor, for his right to the tithes as rector, and for his right of common. Part of the waste had been used by the lord as a rabbit-warren, but no mention of it as such was made in the inclosure act, nor did it appear that the lord had any right of warren in the waste. The commissioners made an allotment to A. as a full compensation for his right and interest in the warren, and also three other allotments as a full compensation for his rights above-mentioned. Held, that A.'s title to the allotment in respect of the warren could not be objected to, as that allotment was a portion of the lord's compensation for his right of soil. (Casamajor v. Strode, 5 Sim. 87; 2 M. & K. 706.)

A lord of the manor was held entitled to an allotment under an inclosure act in respect of his demesnes of the manor, over and above the allotment awarded to him by the act in respect of his right as lord of the manor. (Arundell v. Falmouth (Viscount), 2 M. & S. 440.)

An owner of the soil sufficiently answers the description of lord of the manor to take an allotment under an inclosure act, although the manor be to other purposes extinct. (Smith v. Smith, 2 Price, 101.)

Under a local inclosure act the commissioners allotted to the lord of the manor one full eighteenth part in value of the moor or common lands in compensation for his right to the soil of the said moor, reserving to him, as by the act directed, the right "from time to time, and at all times thereafter, to have, hold, and enjoy all courts, &c., fairs, markets, tolls, stallages, rights, royalties, with free warren, and liberty of hunting, hawking, fishing, and fowling, &c., to the said manor, or to the lord thereof for the time being, incident, belonging or appertaining, in as full, ample, and beneficial a manner, to all intents and purposes, as he could or might have enjoyed the same if the act had not been made:" Held, that the right of hunting or fowling over the allotments of the moor or common was not reserved to the lord of the manor by the saving clause; such right not being a mere licence or liberty incident to him as lord, but a mode of direct enjoyment of his own property. (Greathead v. Morley, 3 Scott, N. R. 538.)

Where commissioners under an inclosure act awarded that certain persons intitled to a right of common in certain commonable lands, "should for ever thereafter use and enjoy the said commonable place as a common pasture, exclusive of all others whatsoever:" Held, that the right of the commoners was still subservient to the right of the lord to take stone, it appearing that both before and since the award the lord had exercised that right; and that an action was not maintainable against his lessee, although the soil had latterly been subverted to an unusual extent. (Place v. Jackson, 4 D. & R. 318.)

2. Inclosure of.

By an act for inclosing common lands in G., after reciting that the corporation of G. claimed the right of soil as lords of the manor, and that certain individuals were proprietors of the common lands intended to be inclosed, it was enacted that the commissioners might set out and allot plots of ground out of the East and West Commons in G., as a compensation for the rights of common of all the owners and proprietors of commonable messuages or cottages, for such messuages or cottages only, as well on the said commons as on certain other lands named; such plots of ground to be used and enjoyed as the commissioners should by their award direct. Parties dissatisfied with the award might bring an action against the persons in whose favour the determination should be, within three months, or might appeal within six months to the justices in quarter sessions, who were to determine the matter, and award costs and damages. In default of such action or appeal, the determination of the commissioners was to be final. The commissioners by their award allotted a plot of land on the West Common, as common pasture, to the owners and proprietors of commonable messuages or cottages, and their respective tenants or occupiers of the said messuages and cottages only having right of common on the said West Common; and they limited the use of the pastures as the act empowered them. Before the passing of the act, the rights attaching to the commonable messuages could only be exercised by such occupiers as were freemen of the borough of G. Subsequently to the act, one of the messuages on West Common being in the hands of a person not a freeman, the corporation brought trespass against him for turning his cattle on the above-mentioned allotment. Held, that the act, though general in its words, did not authorise the commissioners to extend the benefits of their allotments in lieu of common to occupiers who were not freemen; and that the award itself did not purport to do so; nor could it have done so unless the act had given power to the commissioners to ascertain who should be intitled to the newly granted rights; and consequently, that the present action was maintainable, though brought more than six months after the award. (The Bailiff's Assistants and Commonalty of Gumecester otherwise Godmanchester v. Phillips, 5 B. & Adol. 198; 2 Nev. & M. 713, S. C.)

Tithes.

Tithes.]—An inclosure act empowered commissioners to allot to the rector of the parish of W. cum S., such lands within the township of S., and of the titheable parts of the township of W. as should (quantity, quality, and situation considered) be equal in value to two fifteenth parts of the titheable places of the last-mentioned lands and grounds, in lieu of tithes belonging to the rector, and arising within those lands and grounds. Another clause saved to all persons, their heirs, &c. (except the persons to whom any allotment should be made by virtue of the act, in respect of the interest or property for which such allotment should be made), all such estate and interest as they had in respect of the waste lands before the passing of the act. The commissioners allotted to the rector lands in W., lands in S., and lands in A.; such lands were more than two-fifteenths of the lands inclosed in S. and A., but less than two fifteenths of the lands inclosed in W., S., and A. No one of the allotments was expressed in the award to be in lieu of the rector's tithes in W. Held, that the commissioners had not made the rector any allotment in lieu of his tithes in W., and that his right to tithes in kind there was reserved to him by the saving clause. (Cooper v. Walker, 6 D. & R. 31; 4 B. & C. 36, S. C.; and see Chatfield v. Ruston, 5 D. & R. 675; 4 B. & C. 863, S. C.)

Where, under an inclosure act, the tithes payable in respect of certain old inclosures were extinguished, and in lieu thereof a corn-rent substituted, which was directed to be paid for ever afterwards to the impropriator and vicar, by the person who for the time being should be in the possession or occupation of the land out of which the rent should be issuing; and a power of distress was given for the recovery thereof, the same as for rent service or other rent in arrear; and for several years part of such land remained uncultivated, untenanted, and wholly unprofitable to the owner, who during that time resided on another estate; and he afterwards devised the land to another tenant, who entered and occupied, and brought it into cultivation: Held, that during the time the land was unoccupied and uncultivated, the landlord was in the legal possession thereof within the meaning of the act, so as to subject him to the payment of the corn-rent in arrear; and the tenant coming in under him was liable to be distrained upon for such payment. (Newling v. Pearce, 2 D. & R. 607; 1 B. & C. 437, S. C.)

2. Inclosure of.

By an inclosure act, referees were appointed to ascertain the average price of corn for fourteen years preceding the week after the close of Easter next after the division and allotments under the inclosure acts were finished, and the exact amount of a yearly corn-rent in lieu of tithes was to be declared by an order of quarter sessions. The referees delivered their report in the court of quarter sessions, who ordered it to be filed: Held, that this was not an order as required by the statute, declaring the exact amount of the yearly corn-rent in the manner therein directed. (Bendshyse v. Pearse, 4 Moore, 99; 1 B. & B. 460, S. C.)

A modus of 10*s.* a year was payable to an impropriate rector, in lieu of all the tithes of a farm, to which farm were appurtenant rights of common in two several townships, B. and C. Under an inclosure act, to which the impropriator was a party, the common lands in the township of B. were inclosed, and allotments made to the impropriator in lieu of tithes, moduses, prescriptions, and customary payments. The act directed, that when the allotment should be made to the impropriator, all tithes, moduses, prescriptions, and customary payments should cease and be for every extinguished. By a contemporaneous act, to which the impropriator was not a party, the common lands in the township of C. were also inclosed: Held, that the impropriator being only entitled to a modus in respect of the farms and commons appurtenant, and the modus having been extinguished under the provisions of the first-mentioned act, he was not entitled to tithes of the allotments made in respect of the farm under the other act. (Jackson v. Douglas, 1 Younge, 391.)

An inclosure act directed that the commissioners should set out, allot, and award certain portions of lands out of the commons to be inclosed, to the impropriate rectors and curate, in lieu of all great and vicarial tithes; and the commissioners were then required to distinguish, by their award, the several allotments to such rectors and curate respectively; and the same allotments were thereby declared to be in full satisfaction and discharge of all tithes: Held, that the tithes were not extinguished until the commissioners had made their award. (Ellis v. Arnison, 5 B. & Ald. 47; 1 B. & C. 70; 2 D. & R. 161, S. C.)

Where therefore to an action of covenant for not setting out tithes of certain garden ground, the defendant pleaded the above act, by which the plaintiff received an allotment of waste lands in the parish, in lieu of tithe, but omitted to allege that the commissioners under the act had made their award in pursuance thereof; after a finding for the defendant by the jury, upon an issue of fact, the Court entered judgment for the plaintiff non obstante veredicto. (Ellis v. Arnison, 3 D. & R. 27; 1 B. & C. 78, S. C.)

Where commissioners under an inclosure act of 1769 were to make allotments to persons possessing interests in the contiguous townships of A., B., and C., and they made allotments to a rector in B. and C. in respect of tithes and glebe to which he was entitled in those townships, and in A. in respect of glebe, to which he was entitled in A., but omitted to make any specific allotment in A. in respect of tithes to which he was there entitled: Held, as the act contained a saving clause for all persons other than those to whom the allotments or compensations should be made in respect of their several interests, that the rector was not barred from suing for his tithes in 1825, although the award was to be final, unless appealed against in six months. (Thorpe v. Cooper (in error), 5 Bing. 116; 2 M. & P. 245, S. C.)

Mines.

Mines.]—Where, by the terms of an inclosure act, for inclosing the wastes of a manor, a certain portion was to be made to the lord in lieu of his right and interest in the soil, and the residue was to be allotted to the several tenants in fee, discharged from all customary tenures, &c., a saving clause, reserving to the lord all seigniories incident to the manor, and all rents, fines, services, &c., and all other royalties and manorial jurisdictions whatever, will not reserve mines under those allotments to the tenants, though it appear that there was a subsisting lease of such mines at the time the act passed, granted by the lord of the manor. (Townley v. Gibson, 2 T. R. 701; see R. v. Pitt, 5 B. & Adol. 565; 2 Nev. & M. 363, S.C.)

2. Inclosure of.

Evidence.]—To make a title to an allotment, under an inclosure act, of a sixteenth, to be set out for the person claiming to be lord of a certain manor, it is sufficient on the trial of an issue under the act to show that he is owner of the soil, and it need not be proved that there is such a manor existing in law, or that the claimant is lord, properly so called. (Smith v. Smith, 2 Price, 101.)

Evidence.

But the award would not be vitiated by error in the allotment. (Id.)

An inclosure act empowered the commissioners to sell such portions of the waste lands as should be necessary to defray the expenses of the act, before award made: in ejectment, it appeared that the lessor of the plaintiff, who claimed under a conveyance from the commissioner in pursuance of such power, had never taken possession of the land; it did not appear that any award had been made under the inclosure act: Held, that plaintiff was not bound, in order to recover in ejectment, to prove that the commissioner had duly qualified and given notice, &c. required in this section, before the execution of the conveyance. (Doe d. Nanney v. Gore, 2 M. & W. 320.)

Commissioners under an inclosure act are liable to suits at law and in equity for acts which are done not according to their authority. (Speer v. Crawter, 17 Ves. jun. 216.)

The commissioners' allotment must be produced. (Bendshyse v. Pearse, 4 Moore, 99; 1 B. & B. 460, S. C.)

An inhabitant of the parish is a competent witness. (Meredith v. Gilpin, 6 Price, 146.)

It has been considered that the provisions of this section, that the commissioners' oath, and the appointment of any new commissioner, shall be annexed to and inrolled with the award, are merely directory. (Casamajor v. Strode, 2 M. & K. 706; 5 Sim. C. C. 87, S. C.)

Where three commissioners and their successors were appointed to transact the business under an inclosure act, and the act of any two of them was to be valid, an assessment executed by two, after the death of one of the three, and before the appointment of a successor, was holden invalid, there not being three commissioners in existence at the time. (Doe v. Middleton, H. 2 & 3 Geo. IV.; 6 Moore, 532; 3 B. & B. 214, S. C.)

By a local inclosure act, it was provided, that, whenever the office of a commissioner should become vacant, the lord of the manor, with the major part in value of the proprietors of lands and common rights in the parish (such value to be ascertained according to their respective assessments in the last rates made for the relief of the poor in the said parish) present at a public meeting, should elect another. The office of commissioner having become vacant, a new one was elected by the lord of the manor, and the major part in value of the proprietors of lands at a public meeting. No one there disputed that he had such majority, but no reference was made to the poor rates: held, that, nevertheless, the appointment was valid. (Doe d. Harris v. Bodenham, 9 B. & C. 495.)

Provisions of sect. 1 merely directory.

Commissioners, vacancy of.

The commissioners' power is not determined absolutely by their award. (Haggerston v. Dugmore, 1 B. & Ald. 82; post, 816.)

Commissioners' power not determined by award.

By stat. 41 Geo. III. (U. K.) c. 109, s. 1, after reciting, "That in order to diminish the expense attending the passing of acts of inclosure, it is expedient that certain clauses usually contained in such acts should be comprised in one law, and certain regulations adopted for facilitating the mode of proving the several facts usually required by parliament on the passing of such acts;" it is enacted, "That no person shall be capable of acting as a commissioner in the execution of any of the powers to be given by any act hereafter to be passed for dividing, allotting, or inclosing any lands or grounds, except the power of signing and giving notice of the first meeting of the commissioner or commissioners for executing any such act, and of adminis-

Commissioners declining to act, to give notice of such intention to the other commissioners; and none to purchase lands within any parish in which the inclosures are to be made, for a limited time.

Sect. 2. "Every person appointed a commissioner in or by virtue of any such act, who shall refuse or decline to act as such, shall forthwith give notice in writing to the other commissioner or commissioners of his intention to refuse or decline acting as a commissioner: provided always, that no such commissioner shall be capable of being a purchaser of any part or parts of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments within any parish in which the lands and grounds intended to be inclosed are situate, either in his own name, or in the name or names of any person or persons, until five years after the date and execution of the award to be made by any such commissioner or commissioners."

Commissioners to inquire into the boundaries of parishes, and if not sufficiently ascertained, fix them, giving notice of their intention so to do.

Sect. 3. "And whereas disputes or doubts may arise concerning the boundaries of parishes, manors, hamlets, or districts to be divided and inclosed, and of parishes, manors, hamlets, or districts adjoining thereto;" it is therefore enacted, "That the commissioner or commissioners appointed in or by virtue of any such act shall, and he or they is and are hereby authorised and required, by examination of witnesses upon oath or affirmation, (which oath or affirmation any one of such commissioners is hereby empowered to administer), and by such other legal ways and means as he or they shall think proper, to inquire into the boundaries of such several parishes, manors, hamlets, or districts; and in case it shall appear to such commissioner or commissioners that the boundaries of the same respectively are not then sufficiently ascertained and distinguished, such commissioner or commissioners shall, and he or they is and are hereby authorised and required, to ascertain, set out, determine, and fix the same respectively; and after the said boundaries shall be so ascertained, set out, determined and fixed, the same shall and are hereby declared to be the boundaries of such parishes, manors, hamlets or districts; (a) provided always, that such commissioner or

(R. v. St. Mary, in Bury St. Edmunds, 4 B. & Ald. 462.) Order of removal from Rougham, in Suffolk, to St. Mary, in Bury St. Edmunds. Confirmed by sessions, subject to the opinion of K. B., on the following case:—The pauper, in 1783, gained a settlement by hiring and service, in a house called Eldo Farm, which lay partly in Rougham and partly in St. Mary, Bury. He had at different times afterwards, in the course of thirty years and upwards, and up to the time of the removal, been relieved by Rougham, while living in another parish. In the years 1813 and 1814, separate inclosures took place of lands in Rougham and Bury. Under the Rougham Inclosure Act, in 1813, the commissioners in their award, ascertained and fixed the boundary line between Rougham and St. Mary, in Bury, and thereby included within the latter the apartment in which the pauper slept during his service at the Eldo Farm; and the commissioner under the Bury Inclosure Act, in 1814, also ascertained and fixed the boundaries of Bury by his commissioners (before he or they proceed to ascertain and set out the boundaries of such parishes, manors, hamlets, or districts) shall, and he or they is and are hereby required to give public notice, by writing under his or their hands, to be affixed on the most public doors of the churches of such parishes, and also by advertisement to be inserted in some newspaper to be named in such act, and also by writing to be delivered to or left at the last or usual places of the abode of the respective lords, or stewards of the lords, of the manors in which the lands and grounds to be inclosed shall be situate, and of such adjoining manor or manors, ten days at least before the time of setting out such boundaries, or his or their intention to ascertain, set out, determine and fix the same respectively; and such commissioner or commissioners shall, within one month after his or their ascertaining and setting out the same boundaries, cause a description thereof in writing to be delivered to, or left at the places of abode of one of the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the respective parishes, (b) and also of such respective lords or stewards: provided award, and thereby found and declared, that the boundary of the parish of St. Mary, in Bury, proceeded along the boundary of Rougham parish, through the Eldo Farm House, as the same had been ascertained and fixed under the Rougham inclosure. In a perambulation also made subsequently to these acts, the parishioners of Bury included the apartment in which the pauper slept within the parish of St. Mary, in Bury. These facts being proved by the respondents, the appellants contended, that the boundary line set out by the commissioners was not conclusive as to the actual boundary before the award, and tendered to the court evidence to prove, that, before the inclosure acts, the spot in question was in Rougham. This evidence was objected to; and the sessions, considering the award of the commissioners as retrospective and conclusive, rejected the evidence, and confirmed the order of removal.—After argument, Abbott, C. J., said, "It seems to me, that great mischief might follow, if the court were to hold, that the decision of the commissioners in this case, as to the boundaries of the parish, was conclusive, and at the same time retrospective; for many cases may be put, both of fines of lands and wills, in which such a decision might materially affect the rights of third persons. The best and safest course, therefore, will be, to hold such determination not to be conclusive evidence of what the boundaries were previously to the period when it was made. In that case the sessions ought to have received the evidence which they have rejected; and I think, therefore, that the order of sessions should be quashed, and the case sent back to be re-heard." The other judges concurring—Case sent back to the sessions.

By a private inclosure act, commissioners were directed to fix and settle the boundaries of a parish in a certain manner therein specified, and to advertise in a provincial newspaper, a description of the boundaries so fixed and settled. The boundaries so fixed and settled were also to be inserted in the award of the commissioners, and to be final, binding, and conclusive. The commissioners having fixed and settled the boundaries in the mode specified, duly advertised a description of them; but the boundaries mentioned in the award varied from those which had been advertised:—held, that the commissioners had not pursued the authority given by that act, and that their award was not binding as to the boundaries of the parish. (R. v. Washbrook, 4 B. & C. 732; 7 D. & R. 221, S. C.)

(b) A parish was divided into four tithings, A., B., C., and D.; A. containing the parish church. Each tithing maintained its own poor, and each had a churchwarden, elected at a vestry of the parish in general, but from and by its own inhabitants. The minute of appointment included all the four, and stated them to have been nominated to serve the office of churchwardens for the tithings for the year ensuing. All were sworn in together at the archdeacon's visitation, the oath being administered to them and each of them "truly to execute the office of churchwarden within your parish." None ever acted out of his own tithing, unless in signing the annual presentments to the archdeacon of the state of the church, &c. Each of the tithings (except A., which was exempt) raised its own church-rate, and paid it to the vestry-clerk; and he kept a separate account for each churchwarden, who accounted with the inhabitants of his own tithing. A commissioner of inclosure under the local act and the General Act, 41 Geo. III. c. 109, s. 3, made an order settling the boundaries between the above parish and another parish adjacent, and adjudging certain lands to be in the latter; and he within a month, served a description of the boundaries on a party then acting as churchwarden of tithing A. Until the order, the lands in question had been rated to tithing B. On appeal against a poor-rate made upon the above lands, as situate in tithing B., notwithstanding the commissioner's order:—held, that the description of boundaries had been sufficiently served, according to the proviso of stat. 41 Geo. III. c. 109, s. 3, requiring such description to be served upon "one of the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the respective parishes," although the party served had finished his year of office, but continued to do the duties, because his successor had not been sworn in or acted: held, also, that the sessions had acted rightly in rejecting evidence offered to show that the commissioner, in his inquiry into the boundaries, had not conducted his examination in the manner required by stat. 41 Geo. III. c. 109, s. 3. (Rex v. Marsh, 6 Ad. & Ell. 468.)

(a) Where a clause in a private inclosure act, in which the above general inclosure act was recited, gave an appeal to any person aggrieved by any thing done in pursuance of that act, in all cases "except as to such acts, determinations, or proceedings of the commissioners, as by the general inclosure act were directed to be final, binding, and conclusive;" and an order was made by a commissioner and a magistrate jointly, for stopping up a private road set out under the local act:—held, that an appeal lay to the sessions against such order, because it was not an order of the commissioner alone, but of him and a magistrate together, and there being no words contained in the general inclosure act which rendered the decision of the commissioner and justice final and conclusive, or that an order of a commissioner should be final, as far as regarded private roads. (R. v. West Riding of Yorkshire Justices, 3 D. & R. 306; 2 B. & C. 228, S. C.)

A clause in a private inclosure act, declaring that no item or charge in the accounts of the commissioners shall be binding to the parties concerned, or valid in law, unless the same shall have been duly allowed by a justice of the peace in the manner therein pointed out, does not take away an appeal given by a subsequent clause "to the party grieved by any thing done in pursuance of that or the general inclosure act, (other than and except such determinations as were by that or the general inclosure act declared to be binding, final, and conclusive)," the allowance of the accounts by a justice not falling within this exception. (R. v. Justices of Cumberland, 1 B. & C. 64.)

See R. v. Townshend, (5 B. & Ald. 420, post, 814, n.), as to appeal.

(b) By an inclosure act, an appeal was given to the next sessions within six calendar months after the cause of complaint, at which said sessions the justices were authorised and required to hear and determine the matter of such appeal, and make such order as to them should seem reasonable; the appellant moved the Court of Sessions (in due time) to receive and respite his appeal to the next sessions, which was refused, because the following sessions would not happen before the expiration of six months after the cause of complaint. The Court of Queen's Bench had no doubt but that the clause was compulsory on the justices to receive the appeal, but not to respite it, and therefore refused to grant a mandamus to the justices to receive it. (R. v. Justices of Derbyshire, 4 T. R. 488.)

Though a statute, giving an appeal to the sessions within four months after the cause of complaint shall arise, direct the justices at the said sessions, to hear and determine the matter of such appeal, &c. yet it seems they have an incidental power of adjourning it to another sessions upon lawful cause, such as the absence of a material witness, of the sufficiency of which they are to judge; but where the appeal was against the suffithan three weeks from the date and publication of such notice; at which meeting it shall and may be lawful for any person who may be injured or aggrieved by the setting out of such roads to attend; and if any such person shall object to the setting out of the same, then such commissioner or commissioners, together with any justice or justices of peace, acting in and for the division of the county in which such inclosure shall be made, and not being interested in the same, who may attend such meeting, shall hear and determine such objection, and the objections of any other such person, to any alteration that the said commissioner or commissioners, together with such justice or justices, may in consequence propose to make, and shall, and he or they are hereby required, according to the best of their judgment upon the whole, to order and finally direct how such carriage roads shall be set out, and either to confirm the said map, or make such alterations therein as the case may require: provided always, that in case such commissioner or commissioners shall by such bill be empowered to stop up any old or accustomed road passing or leading through any part of the old inclosures in such parish, township or place, the same shall in no case be done without the concurrence and order of two justices of the peace, acting in and for such division, and not interested in the repair of such roads, and which order shall be subject to Old road not to be stopped up without order of two justices, and which shall be subject to appeal to quarter sessions.(a)

(a) Under this section the commissioners are authorised to stop up or divert footways as well as carriage roads; and the proviso at the end of the section is not confined to carriage roads, but extends to every species of ways. Therefore, where commissioners were empowered by the local inclosure act to stop up all ways passing over the lands to be inclosed, as well as ways passing through old inclosures in the parish; it was held, that in order effectually to stop up a public footway, passing partly over the lands to be inclosed, and partly over an old inclosure, it was necessary for them to have the concurrence and order of two justices: and no such order or concurrence having been obtained, it was held, that a footway, which the commissioners ordered to be stopped up, had not been effectually stopped, but continued a public footway. (Logan v. Burton, 5 B. & C. 513; 8 D. & R. 299, S. C.)

Where an inclosure act authorised the commissioners to stop up old roads in the parish, besides those over the lands to be inclosed, provided it were not done without the concurrence of two justices, it was, it seems, considered, that under this clause, the concurrence of two justices was necessary to warrant the stopping up of any part of a public footway which passed through an old inclosure. (Id.)

A local inclosure act empowered the commissioners, with the concurrence and order of two justices of the peace, to stop up and discontinue any of the roads or ways in, through, over, or on the sides of the inclosed lands. The General Inclosure Act, 41 Geo. III. c. 109, s. 8, supra, requires the commissioners, first to appoint and set out the public carriage roads and highways, and to describe them by metes and bounds in a map; of all which notice is to be given in a public newspaper, and a meeting is to be advertised, whereat any person aggrieved by the setting out of such carriage roads, may attend and complain, and a commissioner, or the commissioners and two magistrates, are to determine such complaints, and to alter and finally confirm the map. It is then provided (in the same section), that no old or accustomed road, passing or leading through the old inclosures, which the commissioner or commissioners may be by any bill authorised to stop up, shall be stopped up in any case without the concurrence and order of two justices of the peace acting, &c., and such order shall be subject to an appeal to the quarter sessions. By the 10th section, post, 816, the commissioners are empowered to set out and appoint such private roads, &c., in, over, upon, and through, or by the sides of allotments, as they shall think fit, giving such notice. By the 11th section, post, 817, it is provided, that all roads, ways and paths, over, through and upon such lands and grounds, which shall not be set out as aforesaid, shall be for ever stopped up and extinguished, and shall be deemed and taken as part of the lands and grounds to be divided, allotted and inclosed. The commissioners published in the newspapers the roads set out, and advertised the required meeting also in the newspaper, announcing therein, that any person injured or aggrieved by the setting out such roads, or by the omission of any other, might attend, and they would be heard. After that meeting, the commissioners and two magistrates made and signed an order confirming the map, and the roads and footways therein described, excepting three which were specified, and such map was annexed to the award.—A proprietor of one of the new inclosures brought an action of trespass for breaking his close, &c.; the defendant justified under an alleged right of way, and proved an ancient footpath over the locus in quo. On a special case, stating that such old footpath had been omitted by the commissioners in preparing the map of roads, &c. to be set out, the Court of Exchequer decided, that the old way was not stopped up and extinguished, according to a true construction of the acts of parliament, by what had been done by the commissioners and magistrates for that purpose, and with that intention: the positive concurrence and order of two magistrates being indispensably necessary to the stopping up of the roads, whether they be public carriage roads, or private or bridle and foot roads. Nothing short of an order of two magistrates expressly stopping up the road will satisfy the statute; merely not setting it out is not sufficient to extinguish it, even in the case of a private road, bridle or footway. (Harber v. Rand, 9 Price, 58.)

Way, how to be formed.

An old footway passed from a public highway over wastes to old inclosures, into another public highway. By an award of the commissioners under a local act for inclosing the wastes, the part of the waste over which the footway ran was allotted; but the footway was not mentioned in the award, nor was any new way set out therein. No power to stop up ways over old inclosures was given by the particular inclosure act:—Held, that the old footway was not extinguished by the allotment. (Thackrah v. Seymour, 1 C. & M. 18; 8 Tyr. 87.)

Who to repair.

The plaintiff, having an allotment made to him by a commissioner under an inclosure act, of land, over which the defendants had a private right of way before the passing of the act, but which way was not noticed or described amongst those set out by the commissioner appointed for executing that act, (the operation of which, as to the powers of setting out or stopping up roads, was left to the General Inclosure Act, 41 Geo. III. c. 109), may, under the 11th section of the latter statute, justify the stopping up of such way, without any directions from the commissioners for that purpose in the award, or any other road being set out or appointed in lieu of it. (White v. Reeves, 2 Moore, 23.)

Commissioners' authority to direct repairs of ways.

The commissioners have, in general, no authority to allot an ancient towing-path. (Simpson v. Scales, 2 B. & P. 496.)

Before the repeal of the 55 Geo. III. c. 60, (see "Highways in general," Vol. III.) it was made a question, but not decided, whether it was necessary for a commissioner to give such notices as were required by that general act, where roads were stopped up under the provisions of a private or local inclosure act. (R. v. Townshend, 5 B. & Ald. 420.)

Allotments were set out under an inclosure act to a party claiming them, and possession given in or about 1817. There was no road to them, nor any access but through allotments made, or land sold, under the act, to other persons. On motion in 1829, for a mandamus to the commissioners (who had not yet published their award) to set out an occupation road to the first mentioned allotments, the Court held that the application came too late. (R. v. Commissioners under Cockermouth Inclosure Act, 1 B. & Adol. 378.)

The way over inclosures must be formed, as a man would make it over his own land. Where a private act reserved to the lord all mines, &c., and the liberty of laying waggon ways, &c., as might be necessary for the full and complete enjoyment thereof; trespass for laying a waggon way over one of the allotments in an improper manner:—Held, that the real question for the jury was, whether such waggon way had been laid in such a manner as a person of reasonable or ordinary skill would have laid it, and such as a prudent person would have adopted if he had been making the road over his own land, and not over that of another. (Absen v. Fenton, 1 B. & C. 195.)

Where an inclosure act declared, that the roads set out shall be repaired by "such person and persons," it means those only interested in the inclosure. (R. v. Collingham, 6 T. R. 20.)

On an indictment for encroaching on a public highway, it appeared, that in 1771, commissioners, under an inclosure act, had been empowered to set out public and private roads, the former to be repaired by the township, the latter by such persons as the commissioners should direct. The public roads were to be sixty feet wide between the fences. The commissioners, in their award, described a road as private; but, in setting it out, a space of sixty feet was left between the fences,

2. Inclosure of.

41 Geo. 3, c. 100.

The carriage roads to be fenced on both sides by such land owners as commissioners shall direct, and no person shall erect a gate across a road, or plant trees on sides, at less than 50 yards distance.

Commissioners to appoint surveyors, and if with salary, such salary and expense of making the road, over and above the statute duty, to be raised as other expenses, and paid on or before execution of award.

Sect. 9. "Such carriage roads, so to be set out as aforesaid, shall be well and sufficiently fenced on both sides, by such of the owners and proprietors of the lands and grounds intended to be divided, allotted, and inclosed, and within such time as such commissioner or commissioners shall, by any writing under his or their hands, direct or appoint, and that it shall not be lawful for any person or persons to set up or erect any gate across any such carriage road, or to plant any trees in or near to the edges on the sides thereof, at a less distance from each other than fifty yards; and such commissioner or commissioners shall, and he or they is and are hereby empowered and required, by writing under his or their hands, to nominate and appoint one or more surveyor or surveyors, with or without a salary, for the first forming and completing such parts of the said carriage roads as shall be newly made, and for putting into complete repair such part of the same as shall have been previously made; which salary (if any), and also the expense of forming, completing, and repairing such roads respectively, over and above a proportion of the statute duty on the roads so to be repaired, shall be raised in like manner as the charges and expenses of obtaining and passing any such act, and of carrying the same into execution, shall be thereby directed to be raised, and shall be paid to such surveyor or surveyors on or before the execution of the award of such commissioner or commissioners; and in case the same shall be thereby provided to be raised by sale of any part of the lands so to be divided and inclosed, that then such commissioner or commissioners shall make a conditional rate upon the owners and proprietors of the same, in case the produce of such sale should prove insufficient for the purposes aforesaid; and they directed both the public and private roads to be repaired by the township. The centre only of the sixty feet was ordinarily used as a carriage road, and the township repaired it. The space said to be encroached upon was at the side of this road, and there was a diversity of evidence as to the use made of this space by the public, and its condition since the time of the award: — Held, that the commissioners had exceeded their authority in awarding that private roads should be repaired by the township; but that, on the whole of this evidence, it was a proper question for the jury, whether or not the road in question, though originally intended to be private, had been dedicated to, and adopted by the public. (R. v. Wright, 3 B. & Adol. 681.)

And semble, per Lord Tenterden, C. J., that when a road runs through a space of fifty or sixty feet between inclosures set out by the act of parliament, it is primâ facie to be presumed, that the whole of that space is public, though it may not all be used or kept in repair as a road. (Id.)

Where a public footway over crown land is extinguished under an inclosure act, but the public continue for twenty years afterwards to use the way, such use is not evidence of a dedication of the way to the public, unless it appears to have had the consent of the crown. (Harper v. Charlesworth, 6 D. & R. 572; 4 B. & C. 574, S. C.)

By a clause in an inclosure act, a commissioner was empowered to stop up any way, provided it was done by the order and with the concurrence of two justices, and such order was to be subject to an appeal to the quarter sessions, in like manner, and under such form and restrictions, as if the same had been originally made by such justices; and, by a subsequent clause, any party aggrieved might appeal at any time within six months next after the cause of complaint had arisen under this act. The commissioner, with the concurrence and order of two justices, stopped up a road, without giving the public notices required by 55 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 2: — Held, that a party aggrieved might, under these circumstances, appeal at any time within six months. (R. v. Townshend, 5 B. & Ald. 420, ante, 814, n. See further as to appeals, ante, "Appeal.")

Plaintiff having pleaded a right of common under an award of commissioners appointed by an inclosure act, which authorised them to award such rights in respect of certain messuages in G., and gave an appeal in three months after the award, by feigned issue, and to the quarter sessions: it was held, that, the limited time having elapsed, it was not necessary for him to show the original right, in respect of which the commissioners had given him the right in the award. and such surveyor or surveyors shall, and he or they is and are hereby directed to be in all respects subject to the jurisdiction and control of the justices of the peace acting in and for the county in which such roads shall respectively lie, and shall account to such justices in like manner for all monies so to be by him or them received and expended, and for the repayment of any surplus which may remain in his or their hands to such persons as shall have been made liable to contribute thereto, according to the proportion so as above ascertained by such commissioner or commissioners; and such justices shall have the like powers of levying any such rate as may by them be thought necessary for the purposes aforesaid, according to the proportions previously ascertained by such commissioner or commissioners, as if such surveyor or surveyors had been appointed under or by virtue of the General Highway Act passed in the thirteenth year of the reign of his present majesty; and in case such surveyor or surveyors shall neglect to complete and repair such roads respectively within the space of two years after such award, unless a further time, not exceeding one year, shall for that purpose be allowed by such justices, and then within such further time, he or they shall forfeit the sum of 20*l.*, and the inhabitants at large of the parish, township or place wherein such roads shall be respectively situate, shall be in no wise charged or chargeable towards forming or repairing the said roads respectively, except such proportion of such statute duty as aforesaid, till such time as the same shall, by such justices in their special sessions, be declared to be fully and sufficiently formed, completed and repaired; from which time, and for ever thereafter, the same shall be supported and kept in repair by such persons, and in like manner as the other public roads within such parish, township or place are by law to be amended and kept in repair." (a)

Surveyors to be subject to control of justices, and to account to them for monies received.

Justices may levy rates.

Surveyors neglecting to complete roads in a limited time, to forfeit 20*l.*, and inhabitants not to be chargeable to them (except statute duty) till declared to be completed at a special sessions.

Commissioners shall appoint private roads, &c.

Sect. 10. "Such commissioner or commissioners shall, and he or they is and are hereby empowered and required to set out and appoint such private roads, bridleways, footways, ditches, drains, water-courses, watering-places, quarries, bridges, gates, stiles, mounds, fences, banks, bounds, and landmarks, in, over, upon, and through or by the sides of the allotments to be made and set out in pursuance of such act, as he or they shall think requisite, giving such notice, and subject to such examination, as to any private roads or paths, as are above required in the case of public roads; and the same shall be made, and at all times for ever thereafter be supported and kept in repair, by and at the expense (b) of the owners and proprietors for Expenses.

(a) A road continued, as well as a road newly made, under the award of commissioners of inclosure, must be declared by justices in special sessions to be fully completed and repaired before the inhabitants of the district can be indicted for not repairing it. (R. v. Inhabitants of Hatfield, 4 A. & E. 156.)

(b) Under this section it has been held, that commissioners who had made private roads under the authority of that and a private inclosure act (which said nothing about private roads), had no power to make a rate for reimbursing themselves the expenses incurred. (Falmouth (Earl) v. Richardson, 5 D. & R. 664; 3 B. & C. 837, S. C.; and see R. v. St. Benedict, 4 B. & Ald. 447.) It will be seen that this 10th section does not give to commissioners any power to make private roads, but only to set them out, and say in what proportions they shall be made by owners of allotments.

An ancient towing-path is not within the jurisdiction of the commissioners, and therefore cannot be allotted under this section. (Simpson v. Scoles, 2 B. & P. 496.)

The commissioners appointed by a local act, which enacts that the private roads set out by them should be repaired by such person or persons as they should award, have no power to impose on the parish at large the burden of repairing. (R. v. Cottingham, 6 T. R. 20.)

In another case, where commissioners, by an inclosure act, were empowered (inter alia) to make roads and to defray the expense by a rate on the several proprietors, and they executed their award as to the allotments before the roads were completed, or sufficient funds were raised for that purpose: Held, that they might afterwards make a rate to defray the expense of completing the roads. (Haggerston v. Dugmore, 1 B. & Ald. 82.)

As to the effect of a clause that commissioners shall lay these accounts before a justice of the peace, and other law points as to these accounts, see post, 827, and notes there.

the time being of the lands and grounds directed to be divided and inclosed, in such shares and proportions as the commissioner or commissioners shall, in and by his or their award, order and direct."

2. Inclosure of.

41 Geo. 3, c. 109.

Sect. 11. "After such public and private roads and ways shall have been set out and made, the grass and herbage arising thereon shall for ever belong to and be the sole right of the proprietors of the lands and grounds which shall next adjoin the said roads and ways on either side thereof, as far as the crown of the road; (a) and all roads, ways, and paths, over, through, and upon such lands and grounds which shall not be set out as aforesaid, shall be for ever stopped up and extinguished, and shall be deemed and taken as part of the lands and grounds to be divided, allotted, and inclosed, and shall be divided, allotted, and inclosed accordingly [see ante, 813, 814, &c.]: provided, that nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to give such commissioner or commissioners any power or authority to divert, change, or alter any turnpike road that shall or may lead over any such lands and grounds, unless the consent of the majority of the trustees of such turnpike road, assembled at some public meeting called for that purpose, on ten days' notice, be first had and obtained."

Grass and herbage on roads shall belong to proprietors of lands adjoining; all roads not set out shall be allotted and inclosed. (a)

No turnpike road shall be altered without consent of trustees.

Sect. 12. "Such commissioner or commissioners, in making the several allotments directed by any such act, shall have due regard, as well to the situation of the respective houses or homesteads of the proprietors, as to the quantity and quality of the lands and grounds to be allotted to them respectively, so far as may be consistent with the general convenience of the said proprietors; and that such commissioner or commissioners, in making the said allotments, shall have particular regard to the convenience of the owners or proprietors of the smallest estates in the lands and grounds directed to be allotted and exchanged."

Commissioners to have regard to situation of houses as well as to quantity and quality of land, as far as consistent with general convenience.

Sect. 13. "And whereas the proprietors and persons interested in open common fields, meadows, pastures, commons, and waste lands, directed to be divided and allotted, whose allotments thereof will be small, and expensive to inclose, may be desirous of stocking and depasturing their allotments in common, and of sharing such produce as may grow thereon, under proper regulations; it is therefore further enacted, that such commissioner or commissioners shall be, and he or they is and are hereby fully authorised and empowered, on application of the parties interested, at their first or second meeting for receiving claims, and on an attentive view and full consideration of the premises, to award, order, and direct any such allotments to be laid together and ring-fenced, and to be stocked and depastured in common, and to make such orders and regulations for the equitable enjoyment thereof, and for the participation of any produce growing or to grow thereon, as such commissioner or commissioners may think beneficial and proper for the said several parties interested therein."

Commissioners may direct small allotments to be laid together and ring-fenced, and stocked and depastured in common by the proprietors.

Sect. 14. "The several shares of and in any lands or grounds which shall, upon any such division, be assigned, set out, allotted, and applied, unto and for the several persons who shall be entitled to the same, shall, when so

Allotments to be in full compensation for all rights in the lands, which

(a) An inclosure act authorising commissioners to make roads through inclosed lands, and declaring that the persons having common rights of such lands should be entitled to the herbage of the roads, in such manner as the commissioners should award, does not authorise them to sell the herbage by auction, or otherwise, to one individual commissioner. (Raimes v. Robinson, 2 Chit. 501.)

If an award under an inclosure act allot herbage to the surveyors of the highway for the time being, the lord of the manor is a trustee for the surveyors for the time being. (Johnson v. Hodgson, 8 East, 38.)

Where the herbage of a road becomes vested by the General Inclosure Act, s. 11, in the proprietors of allotments on each side, no presumption arises that the soil itself belongs to such proprietors. (Per Lord Denman, R. v. Inhabitants of Hatfield, 4 Ad. & E. 156.)

In R. v. Edmonton (2 M. & Malk. 32) Lord Tenterden expressed a doubt whether the ordinary presumption of law, that the soil of roads is the property of the owners of the adjoining lands, prevails, in cases where the road is made under an inclosure act.

allotted, be and be taken to be in full bar of and satisfaction and compensation for their several and respective lands, grounds, rights of common, and all other rights and properties whatsoever, which they respectively had or were entitled to, in and over the said lands and grounds immediately before the passing of any such act [see sect. 40, post, 829]; and that, from and immediately after the making of the said division and allotments, and the execution of the award (a) of such commissioner and commissioners, or at any other time as such commissioner or commissioners shall, by writing under his or their hands, to be affixed on the principal door of the church of the parish in which the lands and grounds shall be situate, direct, or appoint, all rights of common, and all rights whatsoever, by such act intended to be extinguished, (b) belonging to or claimed by any person or persons whomsoever, bodies politic or corporate, in, over, or upon such lands or grounds, shall cease, determine, and be for ever extinguished."

Commissioners may exchange by allotments, messuages, lands, &c., with the consent

Sect. 15. "Such commissioner or commissioners shall, and he or they is and are hereby authorised to set out, allot, and award any messuages, buildings, lands, tenements, hereditaments, new allotments, or old inclosures within such parish or manors, in lieu of or in exchange for any other messuages, (c)

Title to allotment not acquired until execution of award, &c.

(a) By this act the legal title to an allotment is not acquired until the execution and proclamation of the commissioners' award; and where a local act directed that the commissioners, by notice, might cause all rights of common to be extinguished, and might then allot the waste land amongst the proprietors, and that the owners might fence their allotments after they had been marked, staked out, and confirmed, and before the assigning the award, and might also within three months before the execution of the award, sell and convey their interests in the allotments; the commissioners being thereby authorised to allot to the purchasers, and the latter, after the execution of the award, to hold the allotted lands in such manner as the vendor would have done if there had been no sale; provided that where the allotments were copyhold, the deed should be inrolled in the court-rolls of the manor, and that the purchaser should be admitted tenant thereto at the same time as the other allottees of copyhold lands, viz. after the execution of the award: Held, that this authority to inclose, and so to enjoy in severalty, and the power to sell and convey, might well (considering the language in which that power was given) be enjoyed and exercised without the legal seisin of the land; and that therefore these provisions not sufficiently countervailing those of the General Inclosure Act, the legal freehold did not pass to the allottee till after the execution and proclamation of the award. (Farrer v. Billing, 2 B. & Ald. 271. Vide post, 847, 6 & 7 W. IV. c. 115, s. 33, and notes.)

The preparation of plans and maps, for the purpose of carrying an inclosure act into effect, is no evidence of an allotment under an act, which requires an appeal against an allotment to be made within six months after the cause of complaint has arisen; and it suffices to appeal in six months from the making the conclusive allotment. (R. v. Justices of Middlesex, 1 Chit. Rep. 366.)

No technical form is necessary in the award of commissioners of inclosure: but if they substantially pursue their powers in shutting up old roads, those roads effectually cease. (Pick v. Clarke, 2 W. Bla. 1318.)

(b) See Thackrah v. Seymour (1 C. & M. 18; 3 Tyrw. 87; S. C. ante, 814, n.)

(c) An inclosure act authorised the commissioners to award lands in exchange for other lands: Held, that they were authorised in awarding lands given in exchange, partly for other lands and partly for money. (Doe d. Suffield (Lord) v. Preston, 7 B. & C. 392; 1 M. & R. 713, S. C.) But where the commissioners under an inclosure act were required to allot the lands directed to be inclosed unto the several proprietors thereof, in such shares, quantities, &c. as they should adjudge to be a just compensation for their several respective lands, rights of common, &c. therein, and were empowered also to set out, allot, and award any lands, &c. within the parish of A. "in lieu of or in exchange for any other lands, &c. within the said parish, provided that all such exchanges should be ascertained, specified, and declared in and by the award to be made by the consent of the owners of the lands exchanged:" the commissioners awarded a certain allotment to A. B. "as a compensation for his open fields, lands, and rights of common, and an old inclosure given up by A. B. to be allotted by the commissioners in exchange:" Held, that the commissioners had not pursued the powers vested in them by the act, and that A. B. could not make a good title to the allotment. (Wingfield v. Tharp, 10 B. & C. 785.)

buildings, lands, tenements, hereditaments, new allotments, or old inclosures within the said parish or manors, or within any adjoining parish or place; so as that all such exchanges be made with the consent of the respective owners, proprietors, or other persons seised of the lands, hereditaments, and premises which shall respectively be so exchanged as aforesaid, (a) or of the husbands, guardians, trustees, committees, or attorneys acting for or on behalf of such owners, proprietors, or other persons respectively, who are under coverture, minors, lunatics, or beyond the seas, or under any other disability or incapacity of acting for themselves (such consent to be testified by writing under their respective hands); and so that all such exchanges be ascertained, specified, and set forth in the award of such commissioner or commissioners; and so that all such exchanges of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments belonging to, or held in right of any church, chapel, or ecclesiastical benefice, shall also be made with the like consent, in writing, of the bishop of the diocese, and of the patron of any church, chapel, or ecclesiastical benefice for the time being; and all such exchanges so made as aforesaid shall be for ever good, valid, and effectual in the law, to all intents and purposes whatsoever" (b).

Sect. 16. "It shall be lawful for any such commissioner or commissioners, and he or they is and are hereby authorised and empowered (upon the request in writing of such joint-tenants or coparceners, or tenants in common, or any or either of them, or of the husbands, guardians, trustees, committees, or attorneys of such as are under coverture, minors, lunatics, or under any other incapacity as aforesaid, or absent beyond seas) to make partition and division of the messuages, cottages, tenements, lands, and allotment or allot-

Commissioners may make allotments in severalty to joint tenants or tenants in common.

(a) In 1812, S. P. conveyed two closes of land, in the parish of A., by way of mortgage, to W. P. In 1813, an inclosure act was passed for inclosing the waste lands in that parish; by which act the commissioners were empowered to allot any lands within the parish of A., in exchange for any other lands within that parish, provided that all such exchanges were ascertained, specified, and declared in the award of the commissioners, and were made with the consent of the proprietors of the lands exchanged; such consent to be in writing under their hands, &c. By the consent of S. P., the mortgagor, the above two closes of land were exchanged, under the act, for two other closes; and the commissioners stated in their award, that the exchange was made with the consent of S. P., the mortgagor, in writing, under his hand, but it was not stated to have been the consent of the mortgagee. Held, that it was not necessary to say whether the consent of the mortgagee was necessary to give validity to the exchange, and that the Court had no right to presume that it was not given; for that the commissioners were not bound to state in the award all the authorities they had; and that the presumption was, that they had acted according to their jurisdiction, as the contrary did not appear. (Goodtitle d. Baker v. Milburn, 2 Mee. & Wels. 853.)

(b) Commissioners under an inclosure act were empowered to allot common lands among the proprietors of common lands in the parish, and to assign any messuages, &c., new allotments, and old inclosures in exchange for other messuages, &c., new allotments, and old inclosures, so that such exchanges should be ascertained in the commissioners' award, or in some deed executed by them, and be made with the consent in writing of the respective proprietors. Power of appeal was given to the quarter sessions in six months after the cause of complaint. The commissioners, among other things, awarded to Sir H. M. in respect of an estate of his in the parish rented by A. M. and W. C., furze close of five acres, and hill close of four acres, late W. P.'s land, and to W. P., a proprietor of meadow and arable land in the parish, in respect of his freehold estate, two acres arable called "Shortlands," late a common field, and sixteen acres of old inclosure called "Stearts," late Sir H. M.'s, without saying that the several closes had been given in exchange for each other, but concluding the award with an approbation of the exchanges made between Sir H. M. and W. P.; there was no consent in writing by Sir H. M. or W. P.: Held, that in 1813, W. P. could make no title to Stearts or Shortlands, notwithstanding they had been in his possession ever since the execution of the award in 1798. (Cox v. King, 3 Bing. N. C. 795; 4 Scott, 553; 3 Hodges, 119.)

ments, to such of the said owners or proprietors who shall be entitled to the same as joint-tenants, coparceners, or tenant in common, and to allot the same accordingly to such owners and proprietors in severalty; and from and immediately after the said allotments shall be so made and declared, the same shall be holden and enjoyed by the person or persons to whom the same shall be allotted in severalty, in such and the same manner, and subject to such and the same uses, as the undivided parts or shares of such estates would have been held in case such partition and division had not been made."

Persons to accept their allotments in a limited time, or forfeit their right.

Sect. 17. "All and every person or persons to whom any allotment or allotments shall be made by virtue of any such act, shall, and he, she or they is and are hereby required to accept his, her, and their respective allotments within the space of two calendar months next after the execution of the award directed to be made in and by any such act; and in case any person or persons shall neglect or refuse to accept of his, her, or their share or allotment within the time before mentioned, such person or persons so neglecting or refusing shall be totally excluded from having or receiving any estate or interest, or right of common whatsoever, in any part of the lands and grounds to be divided and inclosed by virtue of any such act."

Guardians, &c. may accept for incapacitated persons, and tenants for life shall accept of allotments.

Sect. 18. "It shall and may be lawful for the respective guardians, husbands, trustees, committees, or attorneys, of any person or persons being minors, femes covert, lunatics, beyond the seas, or otherwise incapable by law, to accept any such allotments as shall be made by virtue of any such act, to and for the use of such person or persons so incapacitated as aforesaid; and also, that any person or persons entitled to any allotment or allotments as tenant or tenants for life or lives, shall be, and he, she and they is and are hereby respectively enabled and required to accept of and take such allotment or allotments respectively; and every such acceptance respectively shall be and is hereby declared to be valid and effectual to all intents and purposes whatsoever: provided further, that the non-claim or non-acceptance of any such guardian, husband, trustee, committee, or attorney, shall not exclude or in any way prejudice the right of any infant, feme covert, lunatic, or other person or persons being under any disability or incapacity as aforesaid, or absent beyond the seas, who shall claim or accept such share or allotment within twelve calendar months next after such disability or incapacity shall be removed, or of any person entitled as heir in remainder after the death of any person dying during such incapacity or disability, who shall claim or accept the same within one year next after his, her, or their right, title, or interest shall have accrued, descended, or vested, or be known so to be."

Non-acceptance of guardians, &c., shall not prejudice rights of incapacitated persons, who shall accept in a limited time after enabled so to do.

Before execution of award, allotments may be ditched and inclosed, with consent of commissioners.

Sect. 19. "After the allotments shall be set out by such commissioner or commissioners, and at any time before the execution of his or their award, it shall be lawful for any person or persons to whom any allotment or allotments shall be so made, and staked, or marked out, by and with the consent of such commissioner or commissioners in writing, under his or their hands, to ditch, fence off, and inclose their respective allotments, in such manner as such commissioner or commissioners shall so direct and appoint."

Trees, &c. to be allotted with lands whereon they stand, the parties paying to owners such sums as commissioners shall direct; but in case of neglect, owners may cut them down and take them away.

Sect. 20. "The timber trees and other trees, thorns, and bushes, standing and growing upon any waste lands or other lands to be allotted by such act, shall be allotted and go along with the lands whereon they respectively stand, and shall be deemed the property of the several persons to whom the same lands shall be respectively allotted, such persons paying to the owner or respective owners of the said trees such sums of money for the same, and at such time or times, and place or places, as the said commissioner or commissioners shall by writing under his or their hand or hands direct; but if the said parties who are to make such respective payments shall neglect or refuse to make the same accordingly, then it shall be lawful to and for the respective parties who shall be entitled to have and receive such payments, to enter on the said lands, and cut down, take, and carry away, to their own use, the said trees, thorns or bushes, in respect of which the said payments were respectively to be made to them, at any seasonable time or times within one year next after such neglect or default, they doing as little damage on the said lands as may be."

Where money is to be paid for lands, &c., and which ought to be laid out in other purchases to be settled to the same uses, commissioners may thereout defray a proportion of expenses of passing the act, &c.; and if the surplus amount to 200*l.*, it shall, as soon as may be, be laid out out in other purchases, and in mean time be paid into the bank, and applied under the direction of the Court of Chancery.

Sect. 21. "Whenever any sum of money is, under the provision of this act, or any such bill, to be paid for the purchase or exchange of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or of any timber or wood growing thereon, and which sum of money ought to be laid out in the purchase of other lands, tenements, or hereditaments, to be settled to the same uses, it shall and may be lawful, to and for such commissioner or commissioners, out of such sum to defray such proportion of the expense of passing such act, and of carrying the same into execution, as shall, if any, be charged upon any of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments, of the person or persons, body politic or corporate, trustees or feoffees, in possession of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments so sold or exchanged, or on which such timber or wood actually grew; and also the expense of any permanent improvement, such as building, sub-dividing, draining, or planting, and the like, which shall in the judgment of such commissioner or commissioners be proper to be made, and shall be made under his or their direction, upon any lands to be by virtue of such act allotted to such person or persons, body politic or corporate, trustees or feoffees respectively; and in case the surplus of such money shall amount to the sum of 200*l.*, then the same shall, with all convenient speed, be invested in the purchase of any lands or hereditaments, which shall be conveyed and settled upon, and subject to the like uses, trusts, and limitations, as such land so sold or exchanged, or the lands on which such timber grew, were settled, limited, or assured; and in the mean time, and until such purchase can be made, such money shall be paid into the Bank of England, in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General of the High Court of Chancery, to be placed to his account there ex parte the said commissioner or commissioners, without fee or reward, to the intent that such money shall be applied, under the direction and with the approbation of the said Court, to be signified by an order made upon petition, to be preferred in a summary way by the person or persons who would have been entitled to such lands, tenements, and hereditaments, or timber respectively, either in or towards the redemption or purchase of land-tax, or towards the discharge of any debts or incumbrances affecting the lands or hereditaments so purchased or exchanged, or on which such timber grew, or until the same shall, upon the like application, in a summary way, be laid out by order of the said Court in the purchase of other lands or hereditaments to be settled to the like uses; and in the mean time, and until order can be made, such money may, by order of the said Court, be laid out in some of the public funds, or on government or real securities, and the dividends or interest arising therefrom shall, by order of the said Court, be paid to such person or persons, as would for the time being be entitled to the rents and profits of such lands, tenements and hereditaments so to be purchased, conveyed and settled."

If such money be less than 200l. and exceed 20l., it shall, at option of the person entitled to the rents of the lands, be paid into the bank, or to two trustees to be approved of by commissioners, to be applied as before directed;

Sect. 22. "If any such money shall be less than the sum of 200*l.*, and shall exceed the sum of 20*l.*, then and in such case the same shall, at the option of the person or persons for the time being entitled to the rents and profits of the lands or hereditaments so purchased, or of his, her, or their guardian or guardians, committee or committees, in case of infancy or lunacy, to be signified in writing under their respective hands, be paid into the bank in the name and with the privity of the said Accountant-General of the High Court of Chancery, and be placed to his account as aforesaid, in order to be applied in the manner before directed; or otherwise the same shall be paid at the like option to two trustees to be nominated by the person or persons making such option, and approved of by the commissioner or commissioners (such nomination and approbation to be signified in writing under the hands of the nominating and approving parties), in order that such principal money, and the dividends arising thereon, may be applied in manner hereinbefore directed, so far as the case be applicable, without obtaining or being required to obtain the direction or approbation of the said Court of Chancery."

for the time being have been entitled to the rents and profits of the lands or hereditaments so purchased, in such manner as the said commissioner or commissioners shall think fit; or, in case of infancy or lunacy, then to his, her, or their guardian or guardians, committee or committees, to and for the use and benefit of such person or persons so entitled respectively."

If any person does not accept, inclose, and fence his allotment as commissioners direct, they may inclose, fence, and let it, and receive the rents until the expenses are satisfied, or they may charge them upon the proprietor.

Sect. 24. "If any person to whom any allotment or allotments shall be made, or any guardian, husband, trustees, feoffees, committees, or attorney of any infant, feme covert, charity or charities, lunatic, idiot, person or persons beyond the seas, or otherwise incapable of acting respectively, or any tenant in tail or for life, or trustee or trustees for any settlement, or any mortgagee or mortgagees, or other creditor in possession, shall neglect or refuse to accept, inclose, and fence his, her, or their allotment or allotments, within such time or times as such commissioner or commissioners, by any writing as aforesaid, or by his or their award, shall order or direct, it shall be lawful for such commissioner or commissioners to cause such allotment or allotments to be inclosed and fenced, and to let the same to any person or persons he or they may think proper, and to receive the rents and profits thereof, until the expenses attending the inclosure and fencing thereof are paid and satisfied, or to charge such expenses upon the proprietor or proprietors of the same allotment or allotments; and by any such writing as aforesaid, or by his or their said award, to appoint to whom, and at what time or times the same shall be paid, subject to the same mode, and with the like powers of recovery thereof, as may be provided respecting the other expenses of passing any such act, and carrying the same into execution, or otherwise directed by any such act."

In seven years after fencing of allotments, fences may be erected on outside of ditches, and materials carried away by proprietors.

Sect. 25. "It shall be lawful for the several proprietors of the allotments to be made in pursuance of any such act, their agents or workmen, at any seasonable time or times, within the space of seven years next after the fencing of any allotment or allotments, to set up and erect posts and rails, or other dead fences, on the outside of the ditches bounding their respective allotments, not exceeding three feet from such ditches, for the preservation of their quickset hedges, and at any seasonable time or times before the expiration of the said term, to take and carry away the materials of such outside fences when they shall think proper."

No fences, &c. standing when any act is passed, shall be destroyed till execution of award, without consent of commissioners, and if assigned by them as boundary, &c. fences, they shall be left uncut, the persons to whom the allotments belong making compensation to former owners.

Sect. 26. "No fences (a) or hedges, which at the time of the passing of any such act shall be standing or growing in or upon any of the lands directed to be divided and inclosed, shall be cut down or destroyed by the owners and proprietors thereof, after the passing of such act, until the execution of the award, without the consent of such commissioner or commissioners first had and obtained in writing for that purpose; and if any such fences or hedges shall be assigned or approved by such commissioner or commissioners as and for a boundary fence, or as and for a subdivision fence to and for any of the allotments to be made in pursuance of such act, all such fences and hedges shall be left uncut for the benefit of the person or persons to whom such allotment or allotments shall belong; and he, she, or they shall make such compensation in money to the former owners and proprietors thereof, as such commissioner or commissioners shall, by writing under his or their hand or hands in that behalf order and appoint, subject to the same mode, and with the like powers of recovery thereof, as may in such act be provided respect-

(a) A ditch which, from time immemorial, has been the only boundary between a common and adjoining township, is a defence within the meaning of the General Inclosure Act, 41 Geo. III. c. 109. Therefore, where the issue was whether a certain allotment was bounded by a sufficient fence within the meaning of a local inclosure act, which required "that the allotments in lieu of tithes should be inclosed and fenced on all such parts and sides as should not be directed to be fenced by any other proprietor, or as should not adjoin to any inclosed land, or be bounded by any river or other sufficient fence;" and the proof was, that part of the locus in quo was bounded by an old deep ditch:—Held, that this was a sufficient fence within the meaning of the statute. Where boundary of common fields or inclosed grounds shall be fenced by any mound, &c. proprietors of adjoining allotments shall not be compelled to fence them next such common fields, &c. but such boundaries shall be maintained by the respective proprietors; expenses of which commissioners may apportion.

Sect. 27. "No proprietors whose allotments or shares shall, upon any such inclosure, lie and be situate next and adjoining to any common fields or inclosed grounds, the boundary of which shall be fenced by any mound, fence, (a) brook, or rivulet, shall be compelled to make or erect any hedges, ditches, or fences, next adjoining to any such common fields or inclosed grounds, for inclosing such their allotments or shares; but that the whole mound, fence, brook, or rivulet, or other sufficient fences which divide any such common fields or inclosed grounds from such allotments, shall for ever be and remain a boundary fence for the purpose of such division, and shall from time to time be maintained, kept, cleansed, scoured, and repaired by the respective proprietors thereof in the same manner as before the passing of this act, or in such other manner as such commissioner or commissioners shall order and direct: provided nevertheless, that in case it shall happen that some of the proprietors shall have a greater proportion of fences to make and maintain upon any of the lands directed to be divided and inclosed, than in the judgment of such commissioner or commissioners the allotments of such proprietors ought to be charged with, it shall be lawful for such commissioner or commissioners, where he or they shall judge it proper, to ascertain and appoint such sum of money to be paid to every such proprietor towards making and maintaining such fences, by such other of the proprietors who may have a less proportion of fencing, according to the value and quantity of the lands to be allotted to them, and to grant such other relief in respect thereof, out of the money to be raised for defraying the expenses of carrying such act into execution, as he or they shall think reasonable, and in case any such money shall be so directed to be raised, in order that the said boundary fences may be brought as near as may be to a just and equal proportion."

Persons destroying or damaging fence, &c. shall forfeit 5*l.*, and proprietor of lands, &c. may give evidence. (b)

Sect. 28. "In case any person or persons shall wilfully and unlawfully break down, destroy, carry away, or damage any fence, stile, post, rail, gate, bridge or tunnel, which may be put up or placed under the authority and for the purposes of any such act, every person so offending, and being thereof convicted before any justice of the peace for the county in which the lands or grounds to be inclosed shall be situate, on confession or on proof of the offence, by oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses (which oath the said justice is hereby authorised to administer) shall, for every such offence, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 5*l.*; and every person shall be allowed to give evidence of such offence notwithstanding he may be a proprietor or occupier of lands within or an inhabitant of such parish, and notwithstanding he may be the owner of any such fence, stile, post, rail, gate, bridge or tunnel; to be recovered as hereinafter provided."

If provided by any act, that the expenses of obtaining and carrying it into execution shall be paid by the proprietors, and they neglect so to do, same may be levied by distress.

Sect. 29. "And whereas it may often be provided by such act that the expenses of obtaining the same, and also the expenses of carrying the same into execution, shall be paid in proportion by the proprietors of lands or grounds to whom any allotments shall be made," it is enacted, "That in such case, when and so often as any such person or persons, except the person or persons thereby exempted from payment of any such charges and expenses, shall refuse or neglect to pay his, her, or their proportion of the charges and expenses, or shall refuse or neglect to pay the expenses attending the inclosing and fencing of any such allotments as upon the neglect or refusal of the proprietors shall be inclosed and fenced by such commissioner or commissioners as hereinafter mentioned, at the respective days and times to be appointed for payment of such charges and expenses, it shall be lawful for such commissioner or commissioners, by any warrant or warrants under his or their hands and seals, directed to any person or persons whomsoever, to cause the said costs, charges and expenses, and sum or sums of Husbands, &c. may charge allotments with such sums as commissioners shall adjudge necessary to defray the aforesaid expenses; and if persons in possession, liable to a share thereof, or enabled to charge the lands with the same, advance the money, commissioners may mortgage the lands to them for reimbursement.

Sect. 30. "In such case as last aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the husbands, guardians, trustees, committees or attornies of any of the owners or proprietors of such allotment or exchanged lands, being under coverture, minors, lunatics, beyond the seas, or under any other disability, and for any of the said owners or proprietors, being tenants in tail, or for life or lives, or years determinable on a life or lives, or on any other contingency, or otherwise interested as aforesaid, (except the rector or vicar of such parish), to charge such allotments, or exchanged lands and premises, with such sum or sums of money as such commissioner or commissioners shall, by his or their award, or by writing under his or their hands, either before or after the execution of such award, adjudge necessary, to pay and defray the said respective shares of the charges and expenses incident to and attending the obtaining such act, and carrying the same into execution, and of charging the said lands as aforesaid, so that the same shall not exceed 5*l.* for every acre of such allotments or exchanged lands; and to grant, mortgage, surrender, lease, or demise, or otherwise subject the lands, tenements and hereditaments so to be charged, unto such person or persons who shall advance and lend the same respectively, his, her or their executors, administrators and assigns, for any term or number of years; or in case any person in possession, who shall or may be liable to and charged with a share of the expenses as aforesaid, or enabled by this or any such act to charge such lands and grounds with the same, shall choose to advance, pay and discharge such sum or sums of money, then it shall be lawful for the said commissioner or commissioners, by any deed or writing under his or their hands and seals, to be attested by two or more credible witnesses, in like manner to grant, mort-

Ejectment.

(a) By an inclosure act it was enacted, that, out of the lands to be allotted, the commissioners should allot a part, in their judgment sufficient, when sold, to defray the expenses of carrying the act into effect; and if it should prove insufficient, the deficiency should be made up by the persons interested in the lands to be inclosed, and should be paid in such proportions, and at such times as the commissioners should direct. The commissioners having set apart and sold a portion of the lands to be allotted, in order to defray expenses, found that there was a deficiency, and made a rate upon the parties interested, in order to provide for that deficiency; one of those parties having refused to pay: it was held, that the commissioners might bring an ejectment under the above 29th section, to recover the land allotted to him in respect of which the rate was imposed. Sect. 31. "And whereas in such cases as aforesaid, where provision may be made in any such act for charging the expenses of passing such act, or of executing the powers therein contained, or of fencing the respective allotments, on the several proprietors thereof, it may be more convenient for the feoffees or trustees of any charity lands or school lands, to have lands deducted from the respective allotments to be made for such charity lands or school lands, for paying the proportionable share in respect of such allotments of such expenses respectively, than to raise money on mortgage for those purposes;" it is therefore enacted, "That it shall be lawful for any such commissioner or commissioners, if he or they shall judge it right or expedient, to deduct from the respective allotments to be made to such feoffees or trustees as aforesaid, so much land as shall, in the judgment of such commissioner or commissioners, be equal in value to their respective proportions of the said expenses, and to allot, assign, and award the same to such person or persons as such commissioner or commissioners shall think proper, and who will undertake to pay and defray, and shall pay and defray, all such expenses."

Commissioners may deduct from allotments for charity or school lands, what shall be deemed equal to proportionable share of expenses of passing and executing any act, and allot same to such persons as will undertake to pay it.

Sect. 32. "And in case it shall be provided by any such act, that the expenses attending the same shall be paid by sale of any part of the land so to be enclosed, the said commissioner or commissioners shall mark and set out such part or parts of the said waste or commonable lands, as in his or their opinion will, by sale thereof, raise a sum of money sufficient to pay and discharge all such charges and expenses as may by any such act be directed to be paid and discharged out of the same; and the said commissioner or commissioners shall sell such part or parts of the said lands to any person or persons for the best price or prices that can be gotten for the same, by private contract, or by public auction or auctions to be holden for that purpose, of which six weeks' previous notice shall be given, in such manner as shall by any such act be directed with respect to the other notices thereby required; and the person or persons so purchasing the same, shall immediately pay (by way of deposit) into the hands of the said commissioner or commissioners, or such person or persons as he or they shall direct and appoint, one-tenth part of his, her or their purchase-money, and pay the remainder thereof within three calendar months next after, or at such other time as the said commissioner or commissioners shall appoint, and in default thereof, the money so deposited shall be forfeited, and shall be applied in carrying such act into execution; and the said allotment or allotments for which the whole of such purchase-money shall not have been so paid, or for which there shall be no bidding at such auction, shall be again put up to sale, and sold in manner aforesaid, for the best price or prices that can be gotten for the same, or be sold by the said commissioner or commissioners by private contract, for any sum or sums not less than the remaining nine-tenths of the price or respective prices for which the same was or were respectively before sold, or the amount of one bidding above the sum or respective sums at which the same

If provided by any act that the expenses of obtaining and carrying it into execution shall be paid by sale of part of the lands, commissioners shall set out and sell such part as they think will raise a sufficient sum, and the purchasers shall immediately deposit a part of purchase money, which shall be forfeited if remainder be not duly paid.

Commissioners may summon witnesses, who shall be subject to penalty for neglect.

Sect. 33. "It shall be lawful to and for the said commissioner or commissioners from time or time, as he or they shall see occasion, by any writing or writings under his or their hand or hands, to summon and require any person or persons to appear before them, at any time and place in such writing to be appointed, to testify the truth touching the matter in dispute between any proprietors or interested persons, or otherwise relating to the execution of the powers given by this or any such act, and to cause a copy of such writing to be served on such person or persons required to give evidence, or to be left at his, her or their usual or last place of abode; and every person or persons so summoned who shall not appear before the said commissioner or commissioners pursuant to such summons, (without assigning some reasonable excuse for not appearing), or appearing shall refuse to be sworn or examined on oath or affirmation, which oath or affirmation the said commissioner or commissioners is and are hereby empowered and required to administer, (such person or persons having been paid* or tendered to him, her or them, the reasonable charges of his, her or their attendance), and being thereof convicted before one of his majesty's justices of the peace of the county or district in which such lands are situated, upon information thereof upon oath made before any such justice, shall, for every such neglect or refusal, forfeit and pay such sum of money, not exceeding 10*l.*, nor less than 5*l.*, as such justice or justices shall think fit and order."

No witness obliged to travel beyond eight miles.

Sect. 34. "No witness summoned to attend such commissioner or commissioners, shall be obliged to travel above eight miles from the boundary of the parish, manor, or district, by any such act intended to be inclosed."

Commissioners shall draw up an award containing sundry particulars, which shall be read and executed at a meeting of the proprietors, and proclaimed the next Sunday in the parish church, and then considered as complete.(a)

Sect. 35. Commissioners' accounts.

(a) The 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 87, post, 834, remedies defects in titles in consequence of the award not having been enrolled pursuant to this section.

(b) By an Inclosure Act, it was enacted, That the commissioners should, once a year, lay their accounts before a justice of the peace, and get them allowed by him, and that no charge or item in such account shall be binding on the parties concerned, or valid in law, unless the same shall have been duly allowed by such justice; and an appeal was given against the accounts or rates to be made by the commissioners. The commissioners, instead of laying their accounts before a justice annually, had done so only twice in fourteen years, and had not done so for several years before the rate was made, but there never was any appeal against the accounts or the rate, it was held, that the commissioners had power to make such rate, notwithstanding their neglect in passing their accounts. (Doe d. Harris v. Bodenham, 9 B. & C. 495, ante, 807, 824.) So, where by a local inclosure act, it was directed that the costs of carrying the act into effect, and all the charges of the commissioners, and the persons employed by them, should be borne by the parties interested in the lands to be allotted, &c. as the commissioners should direct, and should be levied according to the general inclosure act: and the commissioners were required, once a year at least, to lay before a justice of the county a statement of all sums by them received and expended, or due to them for their own trouble and expense and it was enacted, that no charge or item in such accounts should be binding or valid, unless the same should have been duly avowed by such justice: commissioners, under the act, levied by distress a sum of money, part of which was due for their own trouble and expense during several preceding years, and had not been accounted for annually, nor until a short time before the issuing of the distress warrant Held, that the accounting was not a condition precedent to the levy, and that the distress was legal. (Smith v. Jones, 1 B. & Adol. 328.)

In another case, where, by an act, the commissioners were required to make a statement or account of all monies received, expended, or due to them in the execution of such act, and to lay the Monies raised under any act shall be deposited as may be approved by a majority in value of proprietors, and not issued without order from commissioners.

Sect. 37. "All monies to be raised under and by virtue of the powers contained in any such act, shall, from time to time, as often as the same shall amount to the sum of 50*l.*, be paid to and deposited in the hands of some banker, or such person or persons as shall be approved by a majority in value of the proprietors who may be present at the first meeting of such commissioner or commissioners; and in the notice of which meeting shall be expressed the intention of then appointing such banker, or such other person or persons; and no such monies deposited or paid into the hands of such banker, or other person or persons to be appointed as aforesaid, shall be issued or paid by him or them, without an order in writing under the hands of such commissioner or commissioners, specifying the person or persons to whom the same are respectively payable, and the service or consideration for which the same are due; and the balance, if any, upon the final settlement of accounts, shall be immediately repaid to the land owners in proportion to the sums respectively paid by them."

The rector or vicar, with consent of bishop of diocise, and of patron of living, may lease allotments for twenty one years, upon certain conditions.

Sect. 38. "It shall be lawful for the rector or vicar for the time being of any parish wherein the lands and grounds intended to be inclosed shall be situate, by indenture or indentures, under his hand and seal, with the consent and approbation of the bishop of the diocese, and of the patron of the said rectory or vicarage, to lease or demise all or any part or parts of the allotment or allotments to be set out and allotted to any such rector or vicar, by virtue of any such act, to any person or persons whomsoever, for any term not exceeding twenty-one years, to commence within twelve calendar months next after the executing the award; so that the rent or rents for the same shall be thereby reserved to the rector or vicar for the time being, by four equal quarterly payments in every year, and so that there be thereby also reserved and made payable to such rector or vicar, the best and most im-

A clause in a private inclosure act, declaring that no item or charge in the accounts of the commissioners shall be binding on the parties concerned, or valid in law, unless the same shall have been duly allowed by a justice of peace in the manner therein pointed out, does not take away an appeal given by a subsequent clause "to the party grieved by any thing done in pursuance of that or the general inclosure act, (other than and except such determinations as were by that or the general inclosure act declared to be binding, final, and conclusive,)" the allowance of the accounts by a justice not falling within this exception. Open and common lands may be inclosed with the consent of two-third parts in number and value of the parties interested therein. (c)

(a) The 3 & 4 Vict. c. 31, post, 858, is to be construed as one act with this; vide sect. 5.

(b) Now extended to lands commonable only during part of the year; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 31, s. 4.

(c) Under the General Inclosure Act, 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 115, authorising exchanges of old inclosures with the written consent of the proprietors, a party, who has given his consent to an exchange of lands, has no equity to restrain the commissioner appointed under the provisions of the act from proceeding to make his award upon the authority of such consent, on the ground that it is not a valid consent within the meaning of the act; and, upon a bill filed by the proprietor, to whom the land has been allotted in exchange for other land, and possession given, with the concurrence of such consenting party, the Court will restrain the latter from taking any proceedings at law to recover the land. 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 115.

Sect. 4. "The said commissioner or commissioners shall and they are hereby authorised and empowered to appoint a clerk to assist him or them in the execution of the said recited act and this act, and shall and may remove such clerk and appoint another in his room as to him or them shall seem meet; and in case of the death, incapacity, neglect or declining to act of any such clerk, then and in any such case the said commissioner or commissioners shall and may appoint any other person to be clerk."

Commissioners to appoint a clerk.

Sect. 5. "In all cases where two commissioners shall have been appointed for any such inclosure they shall, before they proceed upon the business of such inclosure, by writing under their hands appoint a fit and proper person (not interested in the said division and inclosure) to act as umpire between them, and from time to time afterwards renew such appointment in the event of the death, refusal, neglect, or incapacity to act of the person so appointed; and if any difference of opinion shall arise between them touching or concerning any matter or thing to be done by them by virtue or in the execution of the said recited act or of this act, the matter upon which such difference shall arise shall be settled and determined by such person so to be appointed umpire, whose determination therein shall be deemed and taken to be the determination of the said commissioners, and shall be reduced into writing, and shall be binding and conclusive upon all parties whomsoever; (so far as the acts and determinations of the commissioners are by the said recited act or this act declared to be final and conclusive;) and for the purposes aforesaid such umpire shall have and he is hereby invested with the same powers and authorities as by the said recited act and this act are given or vested in the said commissioners."

Umpire to be appointed.

In case of difference of opinion between the commissioners, the matter to be determined by the umpire.

Sect. 6. Provided always, "That no person shall be capable of acting as a commissioner or an umpire or a surveyor in the execution of this act or the said recited act until he shall have taken and subscribed an oath or made an affirmation in the form or to the effect following before one of his majesty's justices of the peace for the county, riding, division, or place in which the lands intended to be inclosed, or some part thereof, are situate; which oath or affirmation the said justice is hereby empowered to administer, (that is to say):—

Commissioners and umpire to take an oath.

"I, A. B. do swear [or, being one of the people called Quakers, do solemnly affirm], that I will faithfully, impartially and honestly, according to the best of my skill and judgment, execute and perform the several powers and authorities vested and reposed in me as a commissioner [or an umpire, or surveyor, as the case may be], by virtue of an Act passed in the year of the reign of King William the Fourth, intituled 'An Act,' &c. [here set forth the title of this act], according to equity and good conscience, without favour or affection, prejudice or partiality, to any person or persons whomsoever. So help me God."

Form of oath.

[Or, being a Quaker, omit the words So help me God.]

Sect. 7. "The said commissioner or commissioners or umpire shall and he or they is or are hereby required to cause notice in writing to be affixed to the respective church or chapel doors of the parish, township or place wherein the lands intended to be inclosed are situate, or if there be no church or chapel, then in some conspicuous public place there, and also a like notice to be published in some newspaper circulating in the county wherein such lands lie, of the time and place of his or their attendance or meeting, and of all other subsequent attendances or meetings for executing the powers hereby or in and by the said recited act vested in him or them, ten days before any such meeting; (meetings by adjournment only excepted); and if there be two commissioners, and not more than one of them shall attend at the time and place appointed for any such meeting, it shall be lawful for the commissioner who shall attend such meeting, or the clerk of the said commissioners, or if notice shall have been given of such meeting by any umpire, and both the commissioners shall not attend the same, it shall be lawful for such umpire, to adjourn such meeting to any future day not exceeding fourteen days from the day of adjournment; and such clerk shall cause notice of such adjournment to be given to the said commissioners: provided always, that all the meetings of the said commissioners, or umpire and commissioners, shall be holden in one of the parishes or townships wherein the lands to be inclosed are situate, or within seven miles of the boundaries of one of them."

Commissioners to give notice of meetings, &c.

Place of meeting.

Mode in which other notices are to be given.

Sect. 8. Provided always, "That all other notices necessary or requisite to be given by the said commissioner or commissioners or umpire shall be so given by affixing the same on the respective church or chapel doors of the several parishes, townships or places wherein the lands to be inclosed are situate, or if there be no church or chapel, in some conspicuous public place in such parishes, townships or places, and by advertisement in a newspaper circulating in the county wherein such lands are situate."

Allowance to commissioners, umpire and surveyors.

Sect. 9. "Out of the money that shall arise for defraying the expenses of executing this act there shall be paid to each of the commissioners (if more than one) and to the umpire who shall act in the execution thereof, as a recompence for his pains and trouble, the sum of three guineas for each and every day they shall respectively be employed in travelling to, returning from, and attending in the execution of this act, and no more; and at all meetings to be held in pursuance of this act the said commissioners and umpire shall, out of such allowance, defray their own expenses; and there shall be paid to the surveyor or surveyors to be appointed for the purposes of this act such allowances in respect of his or their services as the said commissioner or commissioners shall adjudge to be a full recompence and satisfaction for all his or their expenses and charges whatsoever in attending the said commissioners, and in surveying and admeasuring the lands and grounds to be inclosed, and in planning and staking out the several allotments intended to be made, and in making such maps and plans as may be required respectively by virtue of this act."

Major part of proprietors may agree for payment of a gross sum to commissioners, &c.

Sect. 10. Provided always, "That it shall be lawful for the major part in number and value of the proprietors and persons interested as aforesaid to make any agreement with any commissioner or commissioners or surveyor or surveyors to be appointed under this act for the payment to them respectively of one sum for the whole duty or any part thereof to be performed by them or either of them."

Four fifths of proprietors, &c. may agree to adopt any previous plan, &c.

Sect. 11. Provided further, "That it shall be lawful for four-fifths in number and value of such proprietors and persons interested as aforesaid to agree upon the adoption for the purposes of this act of any plan, map, admeasurement or valuation previously made, and such agreement shall be binding upon any commissioner or commissioners or umpire who may be appointed in pursuance of the provisions of this act."

Four fifths in number may agree upon rules for guidance of commissioners or umpire.

Sect. 12. Provided also, "That it shall be lawful for four-fifths in number and value of such proprietors and persons interested as aforesaid to agree upon the rules, conditions and principles according to which any such commissioner or commissioners or umpire shall act in allotting the lands to be inclosed to the several persons interested therein, and such agreement shall be binding upon such commissioner or commissioners or umpire as aforesaid."

Such several agreements may be appealed against to the quarter sessions.

Sect. 13. Provided nevertheless, "That it shall be lawful for any proprietor or person interested as aforesaid, who may deem himself aggrieved by any such agreement as hereinbefore mentioned for the payment of a commissioner or commissioners, surveyor or surveyors, or for the adoption of any plan, map, admeasurement or valuation, or for establishing any rules, conditions and principles for the guidance of the commissioner or commissioners or umpire in making allotments, to appeal against the same to the first general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden in and for the county, riding, or division wherein the lands, or the greater part thereof, in respect of which the matter of complaint may arise, shall be situate, or some adjournment thereof, or if such general quarter sessions shall be holden within one month from the making of such agreement, then to the general quarter sessions next following such first general quarter sessions, or some adjournment thereof; and notice of such appeal shall in each case be given in writing to the commissioner or commissioners seven days at the least before the day on which such sessions respectively shall be holden: provided always, that in the event of the decision upon any such appeal being in favour of the appellant it shall be lawful for any party who shall have consented to such agreement for inclosure as aforesaid to withdraw his consent from such agreement by giving notice in writing to that effect to the commissioner or commissioners at any time within twenty-one days after the day on which the decision upon such appeal as aforesaid shall have been given; and if by reason of such withdrawal of consent the proportion of two-thirds in number and value of consenting parties shall not remain, the said agreement for inclosure shall thenceforth cease and determine."

Notice of appeal. Proviso.

Sect. 14. "If any of the parties interested in the premises shall have any objection or objections to any of the accounts or claims which shall be delivered to the said commissioner or commissioners by virtue of the said recited act or of this act, such objection or objections shall be reduced into writing, and two parts thereof shall be signed by the party or parties making the same, or by some person or persons on his, her or their behalf, and one part thereof shall be delivered to the party or parties whose claim or account shall be objected to, or to his, her or their agent, or left at his, her or their last and most usual place or places of abode, at such time or times as the said commissioner or commissioners shall appoint for that purpose."

A copy of the objection to be left with the party objected to, or given to his agent.

Sect. 15. "If any dispute or difference shall arise between any of the parties interested or claiming to be interested in the said intended division, allotment and inclosure, touching or concerning the respective rights or interests which they or any of them shall claim to have in, to or out of the lands and fields hereby authorised to be divided, allotted and inclosed, or touching or concerning any other matter or thing relating to the said division, allotment and inclosure, it shall be lawful for the said commissioner or commissioners, and they are hereby authorised and required, to examine into, hear and determine the same respectively; provided that nothing in this act contained shall authorise the said commissioner or commissioners to determine the title to any manors, messuages, cottages, lands, tenements or hereditaments whatsoever."

For settling disputes between parties interested.

Sect. 16. "In case the said commissioner or commissioners shall, upon the hearing and determination of any claim or claims, objection or objections, to be delivered to them in pursuance of the said recited act or this act, see cause to award any costs, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, and they are respectively hereby empowered, upon application being made to them for that purpose, to settle, assess and award such costs and charges as they shall think reasonable to be paid, either for the public account for or towards the expenses occasioned in or relating to the investigation, settling and determining of such claim or claims, if finally disallowed, or to the party or parties in whose favour any determination of the said commissioner or commissioners shall be made, by the person or persons whose claim or objection shall be thereby disallowed or overruled, or against whom the said commissioner or commissioners shall have determined as aforesaid; and in case the person or persons who shall be liable to pay such costs shall neglect or refuse to pay the same, upon demand, it shall be lawful for the said commissioner or commissioners, and he and they are hereby authorised and required, by warrant under their hands and seals, directed to any person or persons whomsoever, to cause such costs to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the person or persons so neglecting or refusing to pay the same, rendering the overplus (if any) upon demand, to such person or persons whose goods and chattels shall have been so distrained and sold, after deducting the costs and charges attending such distress and sale."

Commissioners may award costs.

Sect. 17. Provided always, "That in case any person or persons interested or claiming to be interested in the said intended division and inclosure shall be dissatisfied with any determination of the said commissioner or commissioners or umpire touching or concerning any claim or objection which shall be delivered to the said commissioners in pursuance of the said recited act or this act, or touching or concerning any property, right or interest intended to be affected by such determination, and shall cause notice in writing of such dissatisfaction to be delivered to or left at the usual places of abode of the commissioner or commissioners or umpire making such determination, and of the party or parties in whose favour such determination shall have been made, if there be any party or parties specially interested in the same, or his, her or their agent, within thirty days next after such determination shall have been notified in writing to the several parties or persons specially interested, if any such there be, it shall be lawful for such person or persons so dissatisfied, and giving such notice as aforesaid, to bring or cause to be brought an action or actions upon a feigned issue against the person or persons in whose favour such determination shall have been made, and to proceed to a trial at law of the matter so determined by the said commissioners or umpire at the then first or second assizes to be holden for the county wherein the lands relating to which such dispute shall arise are situate; and the defendant or defendants in such action or actions shall, and he, she and they is and are hereby required to name an attorney or attorneys, who shall appeal thereto, and file common bail, and accept one or more issue or issues, whereby such claim or claims, rights in question, and the property, right and interest thereby insisted upon, may be tried and determined; such issue or issues to be settled by the proper officer of the court in which the said action shall be commenced, in case the said parties shall differ about the same; and the verdict or verdicts which shall be given upon the trial of such action shall be binding, final and conclusive, unless the court wherein such action shall be brought shall set aside such verdict or verdicts, and order a new trial to be had thereon, which it shall be lawful for the said court to do in case the said court shall think proper; and after such verdict or verdicts shall be obtained, and not set aside, the said commissioners shall and they are hereby required to act in conformity thereto, and to allow or disallow the claim, property, right or interest thereby determined according to the event of such trial or trials; and the costs and charges payable by the said commissioner or commissioners in or relating to such action or actions shall be paid and discharged out of the monies to be raised by him or them for the purposes of this act: provided always, that if no such notice shall be given, and such action or actions at law shall not be commenced as aforesaid, or if any such action shall be commenced, and the plaintiff or plaintiffs therein shall not proceed to trial within the time hereinbefore limited for that purpose, then the determination of the said commissioner or commissioners or umpire shall be final, binding and conclusive to all intents and purposes whatsoever: provided always, that if any of the parties in any such action to be commenced as aforesaid shall die before the determination thereof, such action shall not abate by reason thereof, but shall be proceeded in as if no such event had happened; and that no difference, suit or proceeding as aforesaid, nor any difference or dispute touching the title to any lands, tenements or hereditaments shall impede or delay the said commissioner or commissioners in the execution of the powers of this act, but the division, allotment and inclosure hereby authorised to be made shall be proceeded in notwithstanding any such difference or proceeding."

Death of parties not to abate actions.

Sect. 18. Provided always, "That if any person or persons in whose favour such determination as aforesaid shall have been made, and against whom any such action or actions might have been brought if living, shall die before any such action or actions shall have been brought, and before the expiration of the time hereinbefore limited for bringing such action or actions, it shall be lawful for the person or persons who might have brought such action or actions against the person or persons so dying to bring the same within the time so limited as aforesaid, against such person or persons as aforesaid as if actually living, and to serve the clerk of the said commissioner or commissioners with process for commencing such action or actions in the same manner as the party or parties so dying might have been served therewith if living; and it shall thereupon be incumbent upon the heir or heirs or other person or persons who shall claim the benefit of such determination as aforesaid to appear and defend such action or actions in the name or names of the person or persons so dead; and proceedings shall be had therein in the same manner as if such person had been actually living, and the rights of all parties shall be equally bound and concluded by the event of such action or actions."

2. Inclosure of.

6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 115.

Sect. 19. Provided also, "That nothing in this act contained shall extend to enable the said commissioner or commissioners to determine any right between any parties contrary to the possession of any such parties, except in cases of encroachments made within the period of twenty years next preceding the passing of this act; but in case the said commissioner or commissioners shall be of opinion against the right of the person or persons so in possession they shall forbear to make any determination thereupon until the possession shall have been given up by or taken from such person or persons by ejectment or other due course of law."

Commissioners not to determine rights between parties except in cases of encroachments within twenty years.

Sect. 20. "All encroachments or intakes which at any time within twenty years next preceding the date of the agreement for any such inclosure have been made upon the said lands and fields hereby authorised to be divided and inclosed shall be deemed and considered part and parcel of the lands and fields to be allotted and inclosed by virtue of this act as if the same were actually lying open and uninclosed, and shall be divided and allotted accordingly; and in case any dispute or difference shall arise touching any such encroachments or intakes, or as to the extent thereof, such dispute or difference shall be determined by the said commissioner or commissioners."

Encroachments made within twenty years to be deemed part of the land to be allotted.

Sect. 21. Provided also, "That in case any such lands shall have been taken or used at any time before the passing of this act for the erection of a school-house or school-houses, or the appurtenances thereto, or for other charitable purposes, such land so taken, or the erections made thereon, shall not be taken or deemed to be of the nature of an encroachment within the meaning of this act."

Lands used for charitable purposes not to be deemed an encroachment.

Sect. 22. Provided always nevertheless, "That all lands which shall have been inclosed from the open fields, or any of them, for more than twenty years next preceding the date of the agreement for such inclosure, shall for the purpose of this act be deemed and taken to be ancient inclosures."

Lands inclosed more than twenty years deemed to be ancient inclosures.

Sect. 23. Provided always, "That it shall not be lawful for the said commissioner or commissioners, or umpire, to allot to any other person than the proprietor thereof any land which may be cultivated as orchard or garden, or on which any building may have been erected, or which may have been inclosed by virtue of any voluntary agreement between the proprietor thereof and the persons having right of common over the same, without the consent in writing of such actual proprietor."

Cultivated ground to be allotted to proprietors only.

Sect. 24. "The said commissioner or commissioners shall, by some writing or writings under their hands, ascertain, order and appoint what recompence and satisfaction in money shall be made to the owner or owners of any crops growing at the time of the said intended division and allotment, for the said crops, by the person or persons to whom the lands on which such crops are growing shall be allotted, and also what recompence and satisfaction in money shall be paid, and by whom, to any tenant or tenants, occupier or occupiers of lands to be inclosed as aforesaid, as well for the ploughing, tilling and manuring of any lands or fields which shall be allotted to some other person or persons, and for the profit or advantage which any such person or persons to whom the said lands and fields shall be allotted will obtain thereby, as for any loss or disadvantage which any such tenant or tenants, occupier or occupiers, shall or may sustain by the loss of any following or way-going crop in any of the open and common lands or fields by this act authorised to be divided, allotted and inclosed, or by means of the said division, allotment and inclosure; and if in any or either of the said cases last mentioned such recompence and satisfaction shall not be made at the time and in the manner to be appointed by the said commissioner or commissioners, then the Compensation to be made for standing crops.

said commissioner or commissioners shall and may, by any warrant or warrants under his or their hands and seals, directed to any person or persons whomsoever, (which warrant or warrants he or they are hereby authorised and empowered to grant accordingly,) cause the same to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the person or persons required to make such recompence and satisfaction as aforesaid, together with the costs and charges of such distress and sale, rendering the overplus, if any, to the owner or owners of such goods and chattels."

Commissioners to direct the course of husbandry to be followed.

Sect. 25. "The said commissioner or commissioners shall, as soon after his or their appointment as conveniently may be, by some writing or writings under his or their hands to be affixed on the principal outer doors of the several and respective churches or chapels of the parishes or townships in which the lands to be inclosed are situate, or if there be no church or chapel, then in some conspicuous place in the parish, township or place where such lands shall be, order and direct the course of husbandry that shall be used in, over and upon the open arable, meadow or pasture lands or fields to be divided, allotted and inclosed by virtue of this act, until the time when he or they shall have made and completed the intended division and allotment thereof, as well with respect to breaking up and laying down, as the ploughing, sowing, fallowing and tilling the same lands and fields; and by the same or any other writing or writings under his or their hands, to be affixed as aforesaid, shall and may make such orders and regulations touching the conduct of the owners and occupiers of the same lands and fields, for the preventing the committing of waste or destruction by any person or persons whomsoever upon any of the lands and fields to be divided and allotted by virtue of this act, in the meantime and until the allotments and divisions thereof shall be effected, as to the said commissioner or commissioners shall seem expedient; all which orders and regulations of the said commissioners shall be binding and conclusive upon all parties interested therein, their farmers and tenants; and that the said commissioners shall set and impose such pecuniary penalties and forfeitures upon every person not conforming to such orders and regulations as they shall think necessary, not exceeding 5*l.* per acre; all which penalties and forfeitures shall be paid to such person or persons and for such uses and purposes as the said commissioner or commissioners shall by any such writing or writings as aforesaid, or any other writing or writings, direct or appoint; and the said commissioner or commissioners are hereby authorised and required to raise and levy the same, for the use of the person or persons he or they may consider entitled thereto, by such ways and means as the costs, charges and expenses of carrying this act and the said recited act of the forty-first year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third into execution may be raised and levied."

Commissioners to allot the lands to be inclosed.

Sect. 26. "The said commissioner or commissioners shall apportion, divide, set out and allot the said open or common arable, meadow and pasture lands or fields authorised by this act to be divided, allotted and inclosed, unto and amongst the several proprietors thereof and persons interested therein, in proportion to their respective shares, rights of common, and all other rights, property and interest, and in proportion to the true and real value of their several shares, rights of common, and all other rights, property and interests, and the same, when so apportioned, divided, set out and allotted, shall be taken to be in lieu and full satisfaction of and for such their said several shares, rights of common, and all other rights, property and interests, to be ascertained and adjusted by such ways and means and in such manner as to the said commissioners shall seem just and expedient, but subject to the rules, orders and regulations herein contained or referred to and authorised to be established concerning the same."

At the desire of the parties several allotments may be set out together, distinguished by metes and bounds, but not fenced from each other.

Sect. 27. "In case any number of the proprietors or persons interested in the lands and fields agreed to be inclosed under the authority of this act shall deem it expedient and desire to have their allotments thrown together and distinguished by metes and bounds, but not fenced from each other, and of such their desire shall give notice in writing to the said commissioner or commissioners, such commissioner or commissioners shall and he and they is and are hereby required to set out the several allotments of the said persons so giving notice as aforesaid in one plot or parcel of land, distinguishing the portion of such plot or parcel of land allotted to each of such proprietors by metes and bounds, but not requiring them to make any subdivision fences or other fences, save such ring or outer fences as may be necessary and may be ordered by the said commissioner or commissioners to be made for dividing the said plot or parcel of land from the residue of the lands so to be inclosed."

6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 115.

Sect. 28. "For the purposes of shortening or rendering straight or otherwise improving any boundary fence or fences between the lands and fields hereby authorised to be divided, allotted and inclosed, and the old or other lands thereunto adjoining, or between such allotments and inclosed or other lands, or any of them, and any adjoining lands and grounds, it shall be lawful for the said commissioner or commissioners (with the consent of the lord of any manor in which the lands are respectively situate, and of the owners of any such adjoining lands, testified by writing under their respective hands, or under the common seal of any of them being a corporation aggregate) to set out, ascertain and determine the boundaries between the lands hereby authorised to be divided, allotted and inclosed, and any adjoining lands or grounds lying in the same or in any adjoining manor, parish or place, as the said commissioner or commissioners shall judge proper for the purposes aforesaid; and after such boundaries shall be so set out, ascertained and determined as aforesaid, the same shall be made, fenced, ditched or mounded by such person, in such manner and at such times as the said commissioner or commissioners shall direct, and shall for ever thereafter be deemed the boundaries between the said allotted and inclosed lands respectively. or (as the case may be) between the said allotments or inclosed or other lands and such adjoining manor, parish or place; any law, usage or custom to the contrary notwithstanding."

For ascertaining boundaries.

Sect. 29. "The said commissioner or commissioners shall in and by his or their award order and appoint the grass and herbage growing and renewing upon all and every the private roads to be set out by him or them within the said lands and fields hereby authorised to be divided, allotted and inclosed, to be and for ever hereafter remain to and for the use and benefit of such persons as the said commissioner or commissioners shall in his or their judgment think best entitled to the same."

Right of herbage in private roads to be set out.

Sect. 30. "And whereas the allotments made to any rector or vicar who may be entitled to any glebe lands in such open and common arable, meadow or pasture lands or fields, or some of such allotments, may probably require some additional buildings, by reason whereof, and in order to render the same of greater value to the said rectors and vicars respectively, and their respective successors, it may be necessary that some buildings should be erected thereon, and some necessary division as well as interior or subdivision fences may be necessary to be made, planted and raised in and upon the said allotments or some of them: And whereas the erecting of such further buildings, and the making, planting and raising such fences, will be attended with considerable expense, and as the same will probably be more beneficial to the successors of such rectors and vicars respectively than to the rector and vicar in whose incumbency such allotment and inclosure may take place; be it therefore further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful to and for the said rectors and vicars respectively, and their respective successors, by and with the consent in writing of the respective patrons of the said rectories and vicarages, and of the ordinary of the diocese for the time being, to erect or cause to be erected for agricultural purposes such further buildings upon the allotment or allotments, (which buildings the said rectors and vicars respectively, and their respective successors, are hereby required to cause to be insured equal to the value thereof annually in some of the offices in London established for insurance against fire), so as aforesaid to be set out unto the said rectors and vicars and their respective successors as aforesaid, and also to make, plant and raise such outer division as well as interior or subdivision fences in and upon the said allotment or allotments as the said commissioner or commissioners shall judge necessary and proper for the occupation of the lands so to be allotted to the said rectors and vicars respectively, and their respective successors, and by any deed or deeds, writing or writings, under the respective hand and seal of such rectors or vicars respectively, and their respective successors, and attested by two or more credible witnesses, by and with the consent in writing of the bishop of the diocese for the time being, to charge such allotment or allotments so as aforesaid to be set out for the said rectors and vicars respectively, and their respective successors as aforesaid, and the buildings so to be erected thereon, with such sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole two years' annual value of the respective allotments so to be set out to the said rectors and vicars respectively, as the said commissioners shall think necessary for the purposes of and in order to be applied to paying and defraying the charges and expenses of erecting the said further buildings, and of making, planting or raising such division or subdivision fences, or for either of the said purposes, and in applying for and obtaining the consent of the said bishop, and in exercise of the powers given to and vested in the said rectors and vicars respectively by virtue of this act and the said recited act; which sum or sums of money shall be paid to such person or persons as the said commissioners shall nominate and appoint, in order to be applied or disposed of accordingly; and for securing the repayment of such sum or sums of money, with interest for the same, to grant, mortgage, lease or demise the allotments so as aforesaid to be set out unto and for the said rectors and vicars respectively, and their respective successors, as aforesaid, and the buildings so to be erected thereon, unto such person or persons who shall advance and lend the same, his, her and their executors, administrators and assigns, for any term or number of years, so that every such grant, mortgage, lease or demise be made with a proviso to cease and be void, or with an express trust to be surrendered, when the sum or sums of money thereby to be secured, with the interest thereof, shall be respectively fully paid and satisfied; and such mortgagee or mortgagees advancing and lending the money so to be borrowed shall not be obliged to see to the application or be in anywise answerable for the misapplication of such monies or any part thereof; and the said rectors and vicars respectively, and their respective successors for the time being, shall be and are hereby required and made liable, at the end of every year after the date of such mortgage, to pay to the person or persons to whom such grant, mortgage, lease or demise shall be made, his, her or their executors, administrators or assigns, one thirtieth part of the respective principal monies so to be borrowed, until the whole thereof shall by such annual payments be paid off and discharged, and also to pay and keep down the interest of the said respective monies so to be borrowed, so that the future rectors and vicars of the said respective parishes or townships becoming possessed of such respective lands and fields shall not be subject or liable (and they are hereby respectively discharged from being subject or liable) to pay any further or larger share of such monies than his or their proportion thereof according to such last-mentioned condition, or any interest for the same save only from the day of the death, resignation or cession of the preceding incumbent of the said rectories or vicarages respectively; and that it shall and may be lawful to and for the person or persons who shall advance and lend such monies, his, her or their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, for the more easily recovering the said one thirtieth part of the said principal and the whole of the interest which is enacted annually to be paid, to have, use, exercise and take such and the same powers and remedies, by entry and distress upon the premises so to be charged, mortgaged and demised, and sale of such distress, as by the laws now in force are provided for and given to landlords, or as they can use and take for the recovery of rack rents in arrear."

Rectors, with consent of bishop, may demise the allotments.

Sect. 31. "It shall and may be lawful for the rectors of the said rectories and the vicars of the said vicarages respectively for the time being, by indentures under their respective hands and seals, with the consent and approbation of the bishop of the diocese for the time being, and of the patron of the said rectories and vicarages, from time to time to lease and demise all or any part of the allotments to be set out and allotted to them respectively by virtue of this act, to any person or persons whomsoever, for any term not exceeding twenty-one years, so that the rent or rents for the same shall be thereby reserved to such rectors and vicars for the time being by four equal quarterly payments in every year, and so that there be thereby reserved to such rectors and vicars the best and most improved rent or rents that can be reasonably gotten for the same, without taking any fine, foregift, premium, sum of money, or other consideration for granting any such lease, and so that no such lessee by any such lease or demise be made dispunishable for waste by any express words to be therein contained, and so that there be inserted in every such lease power of re-entry on non-payment of rent or rents to be thereby reserved within a reasonable time, to be therein limited, after the same shall become due, and so that a counterpart of such lease be duly executed by the lessee or lessees to whom such lease shall be made as aforesaid; and every such lease shall be valid and effectual, any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding."

Sect. 32. Provided always, "That in case, through the necessity of situation or any other accident or circumstance, it shall happen that one or more of the said proprietors shall not have an equal or proportionable quantity of boundary mounds or fences allotted to him, her or them on the said intended inclosure, it shall be lawful for the said commissioner or commissioners, when he or they shall judge it necessary and reasonable, to award, order, ascertain and appoint what sum or sums of money such proprietor or proprietors shall respectively pay and contribute towards making the mounds and fences of the allotments of such other proprietor or proprietors who shall or may have too great a proportion of mounding or fencing allotted to him, her or them by virtue of this act, the same to be settled by the said commissioner or commissioners in such manner as he or they shall order, direct or appoint; and the money so ordered, directed or appointed to be paid shall be raised, levied and recovered in such and the same manner as the other expenses of this act are herein or by the said recited act ordered and directed to be levied and recovered."

Commissioners in certain cases to apportion expenses of erecting boundary fences.

Sect. 33. Provided always, "That nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed or adjudged to extend to revoke, make void, alter or annul any settlement, deed, will or lease, or to prejudice any person having any right or claim of dower, jointure, annuity, rent-charge, debt or incumbrance whatsoever in, out of, upon or affecting any of the lands, tenements or hereditaments hereby authorised to be divided and allotted, or which shall be exchanged or assigned in compensation for any other estate or right in pursuance of this act; but as well the lands allotted as the tenements or other hereditaments which shall be assigned in exchange or as a compensation for any other estate or right shall, immediately after such allotment, exchange or assignment shall be made, (a) be vested, remain and enure, and the several persons to whom the same shall be allotted, assigned or given in exchange as aforesaid, shall thenceforth stand and be seised and possessed thereof respectively, to, for and upon such and the same uses, estates, intents, trusts and purposes respectively, and subject and liable to such and the same deeds, wills, settlements, limitations and remainders, conditions, charges, tenures, rents, services and incumbrances, as the several lands, tenements and hereditaments in respect whereof such allotments, assignments and exchanges shall have been made, should or would have stood severally limited, settled, or subject or liable to, or been held by, in case the same had not been allotted, assigned or exchanged, and this act had not been made or acted upon; save and except such rents and services as shall have been compensated for and extinguished, and such leases and tenancies at rack-rents as shall become Leases at rack-rent may be voided.

Sect. 34. Provided also, "That all leases, agreements and tenancies at rack-rent subsisting of any part or parts of the lands and grounds hereby authorised to be divided, allotted and inclosed at the time of the first appointment of any commissioner or commissioners for the inclosure thereof, or which shall be exchanged in pursuance of this act, shall, so far only as respects the lands hereby authorised to be divided and allotted or exchanged, cease and be void at such time or times as the said commissioner or commissioners shall by writing under his or their hands direct or appoint, so as the respective lessors or landlords of such lands or tenements do, before or at the respective times at which such leases or tenancies shall be directed to cease, make and pay such satisfaction to the respective lessees or tenants for the loss which shall be sustained by the determination of such leases respectively, so far as regards the said lands the tenancy and leases whereof are hereby authorised to be determined, as shall be mutually settled and agreed between them, or as the said commissioner or commissioners, being required by either of the parties, shall ascertain and direct; and the said commissioner or commissioners, being so required, are hereby empowered and directed to apportion a reasonable and proportionable part, according to the season of the year, of the rent reserved on any such lease or agreement, for or in respect of the time which shall have elapsed between the last day on which any payment of the rent shall have become due, and the determination of any such lease or agreement; and such part of the rent shall be recoverable by such ways and means as may by law be used for the recovery of rent in arrear; and the said commissioners are hereby empowered and directed in every case where such lands or other hereditaments shall be held by virtue of such lease or agreement, together with other lands or hereditaments, by one entire rent, to apportion and determine what part of such rent shall be deducted in respect of such of the lands or other hereditaments in such lease or agreement comprised as to which the same shall be determined as aforesaid, and from what time such deduction shall take place; and the rest of the rent reserved on any such lease or agreement shall, during the remainder of the term thereof, be the rent of and for the residue of such lands and hereditaments, and shall be payable and recoverable in like manner as the entire rent reserved by such lease or agreement shall immediately before such apportionment be payable and recoverable."

Exchanges may be made.

Sect. 35. "It shall be lawful for the said commissioner or commissioners to set out, allot, and award any lands, tenements, or hereditaments whatsoever, whether situate within the boundary of such open and common lands or fields as aforesaid, or adjoining thereto, within the parishes, townships, or places in which the lands to be allotted and inclosed are situated, or any of them, in lieu of and in exchange for any other lands, tenements, or hereditaments within the same parishes, townships, or places respectively, or any of them, or within any parish, township, or place adjoining to the said parishes, townships, or places respectively, or any of them; provided that all such exchanges shall be ascertained, specified, and declared in the award of the said commissioner or commissioners, and be made with the consent in writing (a)

(a) Certain landholders, through their agents, met and agreed to inclose their common under the provisions of the General Inclosure Acts. They chose a commissioner to allot and exchange the various parcels; and the parcels which each was willing to exchange were set down, and the consent of each landowner that the commissioner should deal with these lands was obtained. The commissioner made the allotments and exchanges, but did not publish an award: Held, that this was not a final measure; that, to bind the parties, the commissioner must publish an award; and that the several landowners must give a consent under seal, after the allotments and exchanges made, to receive the specific parcels which had been assigned to them, as well as the previous consent to part with certain lands on their behalf. 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 115.

Sect. 36. Provided always, "that the lands, grounds, and hereditaments which shall be allotted or exchanged by virtue of this act shall be held in like manner, under and by virtue of the same terms and rents, and shall be thereafter deemed to be of the same quality and tenure, as the lands, tenements, or hereditaments in respect of which such allotment or allotments or exchanges shall be made were held or deemed to be of immediately before the making of every such allotment or exchange respectively: provided always, that when the tithes of any common lands or fields agreed to be allotted or inclosed under the provisions of this act belong to different persons or do not extend over the whole of such common lands or fields, it shall be lawful for the commissioners or commissioner to allot the tithes as well as the land, in order that all persons may have tithe-free allotments in lieu of lands which were before exempted from tithes."

Allotments to be under the same tenure as the lands in respect of which they are allotted.

Sect. 37. Provided also, "that all costs, charges, and expenses attending the making any exchanges and partitions shall be paid and borne by the several persons making such exchanges and partitions in such manner and in such proportions as the said commissioner or commissioners shall, by any writing under his or their hands, order and direct."

For defraying expense of exchanges.

Sect. 38. "The said commissioner or commissioners shall and may scour out, widen, and alter all such ancient ditches, drains, watercourses, tunnels, gates, and bridges in the respective open common arable, meadow, or pasture lands or fields (or any one of them) hereby authorised to be allotted and inclosed, and also shall and may set out, widen, and made any new ditches, drains, watercourses, tunnels, gates, and bridges in, through, and over the lands and grounds hereby authorised to be divided, allotted, and inclosed, (the expenses thereof to be raised and defrayed as the other expenses of executing the powers of this act are herein directed to be raised and defrayed), and of such breadth, depth, and dimensions, and in such directions, as the said commissioners shall think proper; and the said commissioner or commissioners shall and may and they are hereby directed and required in and by their awards to order and determine by whom, and at whose expense, and at what time and in what manner, the said ditches, drains, watercourses, tunnels, gates, and bridges shall be afterwards cleansed, scoured, and maintained, and also shall and may direct, order, and award all or any of the streams, springs, and watercourses within the said lands and fields hereby authorised to be divided, allotted, and inclosed, to be carried, diverted, and turned into such courses, and through, over, and across such parts of the lands and fields hereby authorised to be divided, allotted, and inclosed, as they the said commissioners shall in their discretion judge proper for the draining or watering the several allotments so to be made as aforesaid."

Power to commissioners to make drains through land not proposed to be inclosed, due compensation being made for damage done.

Sect. 39. Provided always, "that if it shall be necessary, for the purpose of carrying off the water from such drains as may be made under the authority of this act, to make drains through any land not to be inclosed, divided, or allotted under the same, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners and their servants to enter upon such lands, and make such drains accordingly, due compensation being made for any damage done to such lands thereby; and it shall be lawful for such commissioners in their award to direct by which of the persons to whom any allotment shall be made in any field so divided and inclosed such drains shall be maintained, and the persons so directed to maintain such drains shall maintain the same accordingly, and have the same authority to enter upon such lands as hereinbefore described, for the purpose of maintaining the same, as is hereinbefore given to the said commissioners and their servants for the making of the same, making due compensation for any damage which may be done to such lands."

Upon the consent of seven eighths in number and value, an inclosure may take place without the intervention of commissioners.

Sect. 40. "In case seven eighths in number and value of the persons being seised, possessed of, entitled to, or interested in any open and common arable fields, or open and common meadow or pasture lands or fields, in England or Wales, and any rights of common or any other rights therein, being persons having such estates or interests in the said lands, fields, or rights as are hereinbefore required for the purpose of consenting to any such proposed inclosure as aforesaid, shall by themselves or their known agents, or if covert, infants, idiots, or lunatic, then by their husbands, guardians, or committees, at a public meeting to be called for that purpose in the manner and after the notice hereinbefore provided for, or at some adjournment thereof, enter into an agreement for such inclosure under the provisions of this act, but without the intervention of commissioners, and for the discharge of the lands to be inclosed from all rights of common, and for the granting of compensation to such persons as may be possessed of such rights, whether consenting parties to any such agreement or not, and shall sign or seal (as the case may require) the schedule hereinafter mentioned, every such inclosure shall, from and immediately after the expiration of the notices of such schedule having been deposited as hereinafter mentioned, be as valid and effectual to all intents and purposes (subject only to the right of appeal hereinafter given) as if the same had been effected by means of commissioners to be appointed under this act."

Schedule of land proposed to be inclosed to be deposited with the clerk of the parish and the clerk of the peace; and a notice thereof affixed on the church door, and published in some newspaper circulating in the county.

Sect. 41. "Before any land shall be inclosed under the provisions herein contained for inclosure without the assistance of commissioners, a schedule of such land, containing a correct description thereof, and signed by the persons proposing to make such inclosure, and also by the persons whose consent to such inclosure is hereinbefore required to be given, and whenever the inclosure shall be proposed to be made by any person having a less estate than a fee simple or under disability, then accompanied by a copy of the several limitations contained in the deed or will under which such person may be entitled, shall be deposited with the clerk of the parish, township, or chapelry, and also with the clerk of the peace of the county in which the land proposed to be inclosed may be situated; and a notice of such schedule having been so deposited (such notice containing a description of the land intended to be inclosed) shall be published in some newspaper usually circulating in the county wherein such land is situated, at three several times in three successive months after such schedule shall have been so deposited, and a copy thereof shall be affixed on the principal outer door of the church or chapel of the parish or township in which the land may be situated, before the commencement of divine service, or if there be no church or chapel then in some conspicuous place there, for three successive Sundays after such schedule shall have been so deposited: provided always, that whenever such inclosure shall be proposed to be made by a corporation aggregate, or the consent of a corporation aggregate shall be necessary thereto, the affixing of the common seal of such corporation to such schedule shall be deemed a sufficient compliance with the provisions of this act."

Sect. 43. "Whenever any agreement for compensation may or may not have been entered into, and notwithstanding any such agreement, if any person interested in any such inclosure, other than a person who may have signed such agreement or otherwise consented thereto, shall object to such inclosure, or to the nature and amount of any compensation which may be offered, or to the manner in which such compensation may be proposed to be secured, or on account of there not having been any compensation offered, it shall be lawful for him to state such objection in writing, and to deposit the same with the clerk of the peace at any time within six calendar months from the expiration of the aforesaid notices of the deposit of such schedule; and such schedule and copy of limitations, and every statement and document annexed to such schedule, and every statement of objection which may be so deposited, shall be open to the inspection of any person interested, and the deposit of such statement of objections in manner aforesaid shall be deemed and taken to be a sufficient notice to all persons interested in such inclosure."

Persons having objections to such inclosure to deposit them with the clerk of the peace, within six months; to be open to inspection.

Sect. 44. "The clerk of the peace shall cause the schedule and statement of objections, and all other papers relating thereto, and which shall have been so deposited with him, to be laid before the justices at the general quarter sessions of the peace, or at some adjourned meeting thereof, which shall be held not earlier than twenty-eight days next after the deposit of such objections, in and for the county, riding, or division wherein the lands proposed to be inclosed, or the greater part thereof, shall be situate; and all such objections shall be heard and determined by the said justices in manner hereinafter provided."

Clerk of peace to lay schedule, &c. before justices at quarter sessions, who shall hear and determine upon such objections.

Sect 45. "It shall and may be lawful for any person or persons interested in the said allotments at any time to mortgage, sell, demise or dispose of all such estate, right, title, interest and property which he, she, or they shall then have in or to the said open and common arable, meadow, or pasture lands or fields (or any one of them), and of the allotments set out in lieu thereof, before the execution of the award of the said commissioner or commissioners; and it shall be lawful for the said commissioner or commissioners, and he or they are hereby authorised and required, upon the conveyance or other instrument by which such sale or disposition is confirmed being produced to them, and the execution thereof proved to their satisfaction, to allot the same to the purchaser or purchasers thereof respectively; and if not so allotted, such conveyance or other instrument shall be valid and effectual Tenants for life empowered to sell part of allotments to defray expenses.

Sect. 46. "It shall be lawful for the said commissioner or commissioners, in case he or they shall be requested by writing under the hand or hands of any person or persons being tenant for life, or other person being in possession of, but not having the absolute estate or interest in any lands hereby authorised to be allotted and inclosed, to sell and dispose of any part or parts of the allotment or allotments belonging to such person or persons, for the purpose of defraying his, her or their shares of the costs, charges, and expenses of putting into execution this act and the said recited act of the forty-first year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third, and the expenses of fencing, ditching, subdividing and inclosing such allotment or allotments; and the said commissioners shall accordingly sell such part or parts of such allotment or allotments, either by private contract or public auction, as they shall think proper, to such person or persons as shall be willing to purchase the same, and shall convey the same to such purchaser or purchasers by any deed under their hands and seals; and the receipt of the said commissioners for such money shall be a full and complete discharge to such purchaser or purchasers for such purchase-money; and the said commissioners shall apply the purchase money in or towards the payment of such expenses, and in fencing, ditching, subdividing and inclosing the said allotment or allotments respectively, and not otherwise; but such purchaser or purchasers shall not be liable to see to the necessity or expediency of such sale, nor be answerable nor accountable for the misapplication of such purchase money; and upon the payment of such purchase money or purchase monies into the hands of the said commissioner or commissioners, the lands so to be sold as last aforesaid shall immediately thereupon be vested in fee simple in possession (if such allotment or allotments is or are made in right of freehold) in the purchaser or purchasers thereof, and the same shall be thenceforth held in severalty by such purchaser or purchasers thereof respectively, as his, her or their private property, and shall be allotted accordingly by the said commissioner or commissioners."

When allotments to a tenant for life are in different parishes, commissioners may sell the land in one parish to defray expenses attending the other portion of the allotment.

Sect. 47. Provided always, "Where any allotment or allotments so to be made to any person or persons being tenant for life or in tail, or other person being in possession, but not having the absolute estate or interest in any lands hereby authorised to be allotted and inclosed, which stand limited to the same uses, shall be situated partly in one and partly in another parish, or township or place, it shall and may be lawful to and for the said commissioner or commissioners, in case they shall be requested as last hereinbefore mentioned, to sell and dispose of, and to convey and assure to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, any part or parts of the said allotments belonging to such person or persons in any one or more of the said parishes, townships, or places, in manner in that behalf hereinbefore mentioned, as well for the purpose of defraying his, her or their share or shares of the costs, charges and expenses of putting into execution this act and the said recited act, and the expenses of fencing, ditching, subdividing and draining such allotment or allotments in respect of such of the said lands as are situated within the same parish wherein the said allotment or allotments so sold may be situated, as for and in respect of such of the said lands or other hereditaments or allotments as may be situated in any other township or place: provided always, that it shall not be lawful to raise by such sale any further or greater sum of money than the person or persons part of whose allotment or allotments may be sold or disposed of would have been empowered and authorised to borrow or charge upon his, her or their allotment or allotments under or by virtue of the said recited act or this act, reckoning 5*l.* for each and every acre of such allotment or allotments."

Proviso.

Not to charge land with expenses unless the sum to arise by the sale shall be less than 5*l.* per acre.

Sect. 48. Provided always, "That it shall not be lawful for the proprietor or person from whose allotments lands shall be as aforesaid deducted to charge his, her, or their lands or hereditaments, by virtue of the said recited act or this act, with any money towards payment of such expenses, unless the money to arise by such sale shall be less than the sum of 5*l.* per acre;

6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 115.

and then and in such case it shall be lawful for such person or persons to charge his, her or their estate or estates with, or to raise by mortgage thereof, or other means or ways, as mentioned in the said recited act or this act, such further sum of money as may be necessary for the payment of the expenses of executing this act, and subdividing the said allotments, as, together with the value of the lands so deducted, shall not exceed the amount that might be borrowed and charged on the lands to be divided and allotted at the rate of 5*l.* for each and every acre."

For payment of expenses of measuring, dividing, allotting and inclosing open and common lands.

Sect. 49. "The charges and expenses of surveying, valuing, planning, measuring, dividing and allotting the said open and common arable, meadow or pasture lands or fields hereby authorised to be divided, allotted and inclosed, and of fencing the lands of the persons from whom a deduction of land shall be made as hereinbefore directed, and also the expenses of preparing and enrolling the awards of and the allowances and payments to be made to the said commissioner or commissioners, umpire, and surveyors respectively, as hereinbefore directed, and all other charges and expenses incident to or attending the carrying this act into execution, shall be paid, borne, and defrayed by all the proprietors of the lands and hereditaments so authorised to be divided, allotted and inclosed, or exchanged, in such proportions as the said commissioner or commissioners shall settle, adjust, and determine, to be paid at such time or times and to such person or persons as they the said commissioner or commissioners shall order and direct; notice thereof in writing under their hands being given thirty days before the time such payment shall be required: provided always, that in case any number of persons whose allotments shall not exceed two acres respectively shall have required their allotments to be thrown together as aforesaid, such persons shall not be liable to pay, bear, or defray any part of the charges and expenses as aforesaid: provided also, that it shall be lawful for four-fifths in number and value of the proprietors and persons interested as aforesaid, at any meeting to be held as hereinbefore is mentioned, to agree that any persons whose allotments shall not exceed five acres respectively shall not be liable to pay, bear, or defray any part of the charges and expenses aforesaid, and such persons shall, by virtue of such agreement, be exempt from all liability thereto."

Commissioners to account.

Sect. 50. "Once at least in every year, to be computed from the first appointment of such respective commissioner or commissioners, the accounts of the said commissioners, commissioner, or umpire, containing a true statement of all and every sum and sums of money by them received and expended, or due to them for their trouble and expense in the execution of this act and the said recited act of the forty-first year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third, until such account shall be finally settled, shall, together with the vouchers relating to the same, be by them laid before three of his majesty's justices of the peace for the county in which the lands to be inclosed, or the greater part of them, shall be situated, to be by them examined and balanced; and such balance shall be stated in the books of account to be kept in the office of the clerk of the said commissioners; and no charge or item in such account shall be binding on the parties concerned, or valid in law, unless the same shall be so allowed: provided also, that it shall not be lawful for the commissioners to be appointed in pursuance of this act, or any of them, to retain or pay to themselves or clerk, out of any monies to be received by them or over which they may have any control in the execution of any inclosure to be effected under this act, any sum or sums of money on account of any allowance hereinbefore directed to be made to such commissioners and clerk respectively beyond one-third of such allowance as they shall respectively be entitled to as aforesaid, until after the expiration of six calendar months from the day of the delivery of the award hereby directed to be made in the church of the parish in which the lands inclosed may be situate."

Awards.

Sect. 51. "The said commissioner or commissioners shall make and execute awards, with maps or plans thereto annexed, and shall cause the same to be enrolled in manner as directed by the said recited act; and such awards shall be deposited in the respective parish churches of the parishes wherein the lands so to be allotted and inclosed, or the greater part thereof, are situated."

6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 115.

Provisions of recited acts, where not altered or repealed, extended to this act.

Sect. 52. "All and every the clauses, provisions and enactments contained in the said act of the forty-first year of the reign of King George the Third, and of the first year of the reign of King George the Fourth, or such of them as are applicable to and consistent with the purposes and object of this act, shall and may be in full force and effect for carrying into effect the allotments, division, inclosures, and exchanges hereby authorised to be made, as fully and effectually as if such clauses, provisions and enactments had been herein repeated and re-enacted, and had been made part of this act, with such alterations and variations as would adapt them and render them applicable to the object and purposes of this act."

Appeal to quarter sessions where parties think themselves aggrieved. (a)

Sect. 53. "It shall be lawful for all persons who shall think themselves aggrieved by any thing done by virtue of this act or the said recited act (except in cases where the things so done are herein or by the said act of the forty-first year of his late majesty King George the Third declared to be

(a) See 3 & 4 Vict. c. 31, s. 1, post, 857, as to what acts deprive a party of right of appeal. An act for the inclosure of certain lands in Middlesex, contained a clause giving an appeal "within six months from the time when the cause of complaint shall have arisen." The commissioners, at a meeting under the act, on 18th June, 1818, showed the map to the appellant, having marked out upon it what the commissioner had assigned to him the appellant. The latter raised some objections to it, and desired the commissioner to reconsider it. He did so, but did not think fit to make any alteration; and having received no further application, on the 28th August following sent a formal notice to the appellant, that the land remained allotted to him according to the map exhibited to him on the 18th June previous, and on the same day the said allotment was accordingly staked out by command of the said commissioner. To the local act, as well as the general inclosure, no allotment ought to be made till the roads have been set out, and the roads in this case could not be staked out till the end of July, because the crops were on the ground. The appeal was lodged on the 9th January, and respited till the 20th April, when it was opposed on the ground of not having been lodged in time, i. e. within six months of the cause of complaint arising, and the justices dismissed the appeal on this ground, but the Court granted a mandamus to them to hear the appeal, being of opinion that there was no actual setting out of the allotment, according to the true construction of the act, till something was actually done founded on the plan. (R. v. Middlesex (Justices), 1 Chit. R. 367.)

A local inclosure act gave an appeal to parties grieved by anything done in pursuance of the act, to any general quarter sessions holden for the county within four calendar months next after the cause of complaint shall have arisen." An allotment was made and staked out by the commissioners in March, and the appellant cropped it. It was held, that though the mere staking out of the ground might not be a grievance, as it might be done without notice to the party, yet his cropping showed him too late in his appeal at the October sessions. (R. v. Wilts (Justices), 13 East, 353; see R. v. Cumberland (Justices), 1 B. & Cr. 64.)

By an act for inclosing lands in a parish and extinguishing its tithes, the commissioner was directed to value the tithes as being equal to a fixed proportion of the net annual value of the lands, and then to find an equivalent corn-rent; and by his award, or some previous writing under his hand, to be annexed thereto, to set forth the same, and to apportion the corn-rent upon the lands of the respective proprietors, and to fix when the first payment of the corn-rent should be made, and when the tithes should be extinguished; and a right was given to any person aggrieved by anything done in pursuance of that act, to appeal to any general or quarter sessions in the county, held within four months next after the cause of complaint should have arisen. The commissioner having determined the amount of the corn-rent, and fixed the day for the first quarterly payment of it, and also the day from which the tithes should cease and be extinguished, by a previous writing, which afterwards was annexed to the award: held, that an appeal by the rector on the ground of the corn-rent being inadequate, must be within four months of such previous writing, and that an appeal within four months of the date of the award was not in time.

final, binding, and conclusive), to appeal to the general quarter sessions of the peace which shall be held in and for the county, riding or division wherein the lands, or the greater part thereof, in respect of which the matter of complaint may arise, shall be situated, or any adjournment thereof, within six calendar months next after the cause of complaint shall have arisen, (a) first giving or causing to be given twenty eight days' notice thereof in writing to the said commissioner or commissioners, or one of them, or to the parties intended to be appealed against; and the justices at their said quarter sessions, or any adjournment thereof, are hereby authorised and required to hear and determine the matter of every such appeal, and shall also hear and determine any appeal against the sum agreed to be paid to any commissioner or surveyor, or against the adoption of any plan, map, admeasurement or valuation, or against any rules, conditions, and principles which may have been agreed upon in manner aforesaid for the guidance of the commissioner or commissioners or umpire in making allotments, and shall also hear and determine all objections (if any) which may have been made in manner aforesaid to any inclosure without the assistance of commissioners, or to the nature or amount of the compensation which may have been offered, or to the manner in which the same may have been proposed to be secured, or on account of there not having been any compensation offered, and to make such order in every such case respectively, and to award such costs as to them in their discretion shall seem meet, and by their warrant to levy the costs awarded by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the parties respectively adjudged to pay the same, rendering the overplus (if any) to the respective owners of such goods and chattels, after deducting the reasonable charges of such distress and sale; and every determination of the said justices shall be final and conclusive on all parties concerned; and no such complaint, appeal, or proceeding shall be removed or removable by certiorari or any other writ or proceeding whatsoever into any of his majesty's courts of record at Westminster or elsewhere; but in case such appeal shall appear to the said justices to be frivolous, vexatious, or without foundation, then the said justices shall award such costs to be paid by the appellant or appellants as to them in their discretion shall seem reasonable, and to be levied in manner aforesaid."

Act not to affect rights of lords of manors.

Sect. 54. Provided always, "That nothing in this act contained shall in any case authorise the inclosure of any waste whatsoever, whether the soil thereof shall or shall not be vested in the lord of any manor, and whether with or without the assent of the lord of such manor; nor shall any thing in this act contained prejudice, lessen, or defeat the right, title, or interest of the respective lords for the time being of any such manors in or to any of the royalties or seignories, fisheries, manorial and other rights, customs, and services incident or belonging to the said respective manors or any of them; but that such respective lords, and all and every person and persons claiming in trust for him or them as such respective lords for the time being of the said several and respective manors shall and may at all times for ever hereafter have, hold, receive, take, and enjoy all rents, services, courts, perquisites and profits of courts, fines, goods and chattels of felons and fugitives,

Semble, that no notice of the corrents having been fixed, and the tithes extinguished by the previous writing, was requisite, though the act required that all notices necessary to be given by the commissioners should be given in a particular way, eight days before the period for doing the business to which such notice should relate. (Id.)

But it was held, that, supposing that the four months could not be allowed to run until the party injured had notice that his rights had been affected, notice given by the commissioner in the manner required by the act in other cases was sufficient, although the notice, which stated in general terms what had been done, referred for particulars to a schedule deposited at a distant place; and held, also, that private notice was sufficient. Act not to authorise the inclosure of any open or common fields within certain distances of large towns.

Sect. 55. Provided always, "That nothing in this act contained shall authorise the inclosure of any open or common arable fields, or of any open or common meadow or pasture lands or fields, situate and being within ten miles of the city of London, or of any open or common meadow or pasture lands or fields situate and being within one mile of any city or town of five thousand inhabitants, or within one mile and a half of any city or town of fifteen thousand inhabitants, or within two miles of any city or town of thirty thousand inhabitants, or within two miles and a half of any city or town of seventy thousand inhabitants, or within three miles of any city or town of one hundred thousand inhabitants; provided that in all cases the number of such inhabitants shall be ascertained by the then last parliamentary census thereof, and that such distance shall be measured in a direct line from the town hall if there shall be any town hall, or if there shall be no such town hall then from the cathedral or church, if there shall be only one church, or if there shall be more churches than one, then from the principal market place of any such city or town."

Meaning of certain words in this act.

Sect. 56. "The words and expressions hereinafter mentioned, which in their ordinary signification have a more confined or a different meaning, shall in the construction of this act, except when the nature of the provision or the context of the act exclude such construction, be interpreted as follows: (that is to say) the words 'proprietor,' 'owner,' and 'person,' shall respectively extend as well to an individual as to a body politic, corporate, or collegiate, and to a corporation as well aggregate as sole, whether such corporation be eleemosynary or civil, ecclesiastical or lay; the word 'benefice' shall extend to and be taken to comprehend rectories, vicarages, donatives, perpetual curacies, parochial and consolidated chapelries and churches, and chapels having a district assigned thereto; the word 'tithes' shall extend to any rent-charge or payment in lieu of tithe; the word 'land' shall extend to every species of land, whether arable, meadow, or pasture, and whether freehold, copyhold, or customary, or held by any other tenure, and as well to one piece or parcel as to any number of pieces or parcels of land; the word 'parish' shall be construed to include any parish, township, liberty, precinct, vill, village, hamlet, tithing, chapelry, or any other place or division or district of a place, whether parochial or extra-parochial; and every word importing the singular number only shall extend and be applied to several persons or things as well as one person or thing."

Saving the rights of his majesty in respect of the duchy of Cornwall, or of the Duke of Cornwall for the time being.

Sect. 57. Provided further, "That nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to affect, prejudice, or derogate from the estate, right, title, interests, privileges, or authority of the king's most excellent majesty, his heirs and successors, in right or in respect of his duchy of Cornwall, or of the Duke of Cornwall for the time being, or to authorise, sanction, or permit the inclosure of any lands, grounds, tenements, or hereditaments whatsoever, or give any right or title whatsoever to any encroachment or intake heretofore made thereupon, or otherwise affect any lands, grounds, tenements, or hereditaments whatsoever belonging to or held of or being within and forming part and parcel of any manor, messuage, or tenement, open field, pasture, common, or other land or ground whatsoever, or any advowson, rectory, or vicarage, parcel of the possessions of the duchy of Cornwall, or wherein or whereunto, or over, upon, or with reference whereto, his majesty, in respect of his said duchy of Cornwall, or the Duke of Cornwall for the time being, may have or claim to have any estate, right, title, or interest whatsoever, nor at any time or times be admitted in any court of law or equity, or otherwise considered as evidence upon any occasion to affect in any manner his majesty, his heirs and successors, in right or in respect of his said duchy of Cornwall, or the Duke of Cornwall for the time being."

2. Inclosure of.

6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 115.

Sect. 58. Provided always, "That nothing in this act contained shall authorise the inclosure of any open lands in, to, or over which his Majesty, in right of his crown or of his duchy of Lancaster, has or may have or claim to be entitled to any estate, right, title, or interest whatsoever."

Saving as to the duchy of Lancaster.

Sect. 59. "Saving also to the king's most excellent majesty, his heirs and successors, and to all and every other person and persons, bodies politic and corporate, ecclesiastical and civil, his, her, or their respective heirs, successors, executors, and administrators (other than and except the persons to whom any allotment or compensation shall be made by virtue of this act, in respect of the interest or property for which such allotment or compensation shall be made to them in respect of such right, and except such other rights and interests as the intents and purposes hereby authorised shall absolutely require to be barred, destroyed, or extinguished by this act, and all persons respectively claiming under them or in remainder after them), all such estate, right, title, interest, claim, and demand as they, every or any of them, had or enjoyed of, in, to, or out of the said open and common arable, meadow, or pasture lands or fields hereby authorised to be divided, allotted, and inclosed, before the passing of this act, or the carrying the powers thereof into execution, or could or might have held or enjoyed in case this act had not been made, or the powers thereof had not been carried into execution."

General saving.

By 3 & 4 Vict. c. 31, intituled "An Act to extend the Powers and Provisions of the several Acts relating to the Inclosure of open and arable Fields in England and Wales" [23d July, 1840], reciting the passing of the 41 Geo. III. c. 109, and the 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 115, and "it is desirable that awards under the secondly recited act should be rendered final and conclusive, and that the powers of the commissioners acting under or in execution of the said recited acts, or either of them, for the ascertaining and determining boundaries, should be extended in the respects hereinafter mentioned," it is enacted, "that (subject and without prejudice to the right of appeal given by the said secondly-recited act) all awards that shall be made in pursuance of that act and of this act, or either of them, shall immediately after the execution thereof be conclusive evidence that the provisions of the said acts have in all respects been complied with, and that all necessary consents have been given; and no other evidence than such awards shall be requisite to establish the title under the inclosure of the parties concerned or interested in the same: provided always, that if any party concerned or interested in any such inclosure shall, after the making of the award thereunder, take possession of, or proceed to inclose or to cultivate, any allotment, or any lands given in exchange, which shall have been thereby awarded to such party, all right of appeal which might otherwise have been exercised by such party against the said award shall, from the time of such taking possession, or of such proceeding to inclose or to cultivate (as the case may be), be deemed and taken to have been absolutely waived and surrendered."

3 & 4 Vict. c. 31.

The award to be conclusive evidence that the provisions of the act have been complied with, &c.

Parties taking possession of their allotments deemed to waive all right of appeal.

Sect. 2. "And whereas by the said first-recited act power is given to the commissioner or commissioners appointed in or by virtue of any act of inclosure to ascertain and determine the boundaries of parishes, manors, hamlets, or districts to be divided and inclosed, and of parishes, manors, hamlets, or districts adjoining thereto: and whereas it is expedient that the power of such commissioner or commissioners should extend to the straightening of boundaries in cases in which the lands in any parishes, manors, hamlets, or districts so to be divided and inclosed are or are reputed to be intermixed with the lands of any adjoining parish, manor, hamlet, or district; be it enacted, that so much of the powers and provisions in the said first-recited act contained as relates to the ascertaining, setting out, determining, and fixing the boundaries of parishes, manors, hamlets, or districts shall extend and be applicable to the straightening of the boundaries of any parish, manor, hamlet, or district to be divided and inclosed under the said recited acts, or either of them,

Powers of commissioners as to setting out boundaries extended.

2. Inclosure of.

3 & 4 Vict. c. 31. Commissioners to declare by their award the parish to which any land cut off shall be annexed.

whenever the lands of such parish, manor, hamlet, or district shall be or be reputed to be intermixed with the lands of any other parish, manor, hamlet, or district."

Sect. 3. "In every case in which the commissioners shall, in the exercise of the powers given to them by the said recited acts or by this act, for the purpose of ascertaining or straightening boundaries, sever any land from any parish, manor, hamlet, or district to which it may have been reputed to belong, they shall, in and by their award, declare to what parish, manor, hamlet, or district such land shall be annexed; and the same shall thenceforth, for all purposes, belong to the parish, manor, hamlet, or district to which it shall have been so declared to be annexed as aforesaid."

Powers of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 115, extended to lands commonable only during part of the year.

Sect. 4. "And whereas by the said secondly above recited act it was enacted, that it should be lawful for two-third parts in number and value who should be interested in manner therein mentioned in any open and common arable fields, including any untilled ships or balks therein, or any open and common meadow or pasture lands or fields in any parish, township or place (except as therein excepted) in England and Wales, known by metes and bounds, or occupied according to known legal rights, to inclose in manner therein mentioned such said lands and fields; and whereas doubts have arisen whether the said secondly above-recited act applies to and includes such open and common arable fields as have adjacent thereto (but not separated by any fence therefrom) certain tracts of grass land commonable during part of the year, and holden in severalty, or by lot or apportionment, by or among persons interested therein, during other parts of the year; be it therefore enacted, that the said secondly above recited act, and all powers and provisoes therein contained or mentioned, shall be adjudged and construed to apply and extend to all such open and common fields and tracts of grass land as are herein last-before mentioned."

Act to be construed with that of 6 & 7 Will. 4.

Sect. 5. "This act shall be construed as one with the said secondly above recited act."

III. Putting Stoned or Infected Horses, and Sheep, &c. on Commons.

Putting stoned horses on commons, &c. prohibited.

By stat. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 13, ss. 2, 10, No person shall put in any forest, chase, moor, heath, common, or waste, where mares or fillies are used to be kept, any stoned horse above the age of two years, not being fifteen hands high, within the shires and territories of Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridge, Buckingham, Huntingdon, Essex, Kent, South Hampshire, North Wiltshire, Oxford, Berkshire, Worcester, Gloucester, Somerset, North Wales, South Wales, Bedford, Warwick, Northampton, Yorkshire, Cheshire, Staffordshire, Lancashire, Salop, Leicester, Hereford, and Lincoln; nor under fourteen hands in any other county, (except Cornwall, stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 28, s. 12,) on pain of forfeiting the same.

But by stat. 18 Eliz. c. 8, s. 3, this shall not extend to the marshes in the counties of Cambridge, Huntingdon, Suffolk, Northampton, Lincoln, and Norfolk; provided that the horses be of thirteen hands.

Stoned horses breaking out of an inclosure.

Also, by stat. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 13, s. 5, nothing herein shall extend to any stoned horse, that shall happen once in a year to break out of any pasture into such common, so that he do not stay there above four days after notice given at the dwelling-house of the owner, or after publication thereof on a Sunday or other festival in the parish church, where the owner or possessor of such horse dwelleth.

Seizing horses under size.

Sect. 3. Any person may seize any such horse so being under size in manner following; he shall go to the keeper of such forest, or (out of such forest) to the constable of the next town, and require him to go with him, to bring such horse to the next pound, and there to be measured by such officer, in the presence of three other honest men to be appointed by the officer; and if he shall be found contrary to what is above expressed, such person may take him for his own use.

Sect. 4. And if such keeper, or constable, or other of the three persons shall refuse to do as is aforesaid, he shall forfeit 40*s*.

Driving the common.

Sect. 6. All such commons and other places shall, within fifteen days after Michaelmas yearly, be driven by the owners and keepers, or constables, respectively, on pain of 40*s*., and they may also drive the same at any other time when they shall think meet.

Defective mares, &c.

Sect. 7. If, in any of the said drifts, there shall be found any mare, filly, foal, or gelding, that shall then be thought not able nor like to grow to be able to bear foals of reasonable stature, or to do profitable labours, by the discretion of the drivers, or of the more number of them, they may kill or bury them.

Penalties.

All which said forfeitures shall be half to the king, and half to him that shall sue; and the justices in sessions, and stewards of leets, may inquire thereof: and the stewards shall certify their presentments to the next sessions.

Putting scabbed horses on commons.

Sect. 9. No person shall have, or put to pasture, any horse, gelding, or mare, infected with scab or mange, in any common, or common fields, on pain of 10*s*., which offence shall be inquirable in the leet, as other common annoyances be, and the forfeitures shall be to the lord of the leet.

Turning out scabbed sheep on commons, &c.

By the 38 Geo. III. c. 65, s. 1, "If any person or persons whosoever shall turn out, keep, or depasture, in or upon any forest, chase, wood, moor, marsh, heath, common, waste land, open field, or other undivided or uninclosed land, any sheep or lambs infected with such complaint or disorder called scab or mange, or shall wilfully and knowingly turn out, keep, or depasture, in or upon any such forest, chase, wood, moor, marsh, heath, common, waste land, open field, or other undivided or uninclosed land, any sheep or lamb which, at any time within the space of six calendar months immediately previous thereto, shall have been infected as aforesaid, every such person, on being thereof convicted on the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, or on his or her confession, before any one or more justice or justices of the peace for the county, district, or place, wherein such offence shall have been committed, shall forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 10*l*. nor less than 20*s*. for every such offence, together with all reasonable costs and charges attending such conviction, such costs and charges to be ascertained by the justice or justices before whom such conviction shall take place; and so toties quoties, as often as any such sheep or lamb shall be so turned out, kept, or depastured."

Sheep and lambs three months old to be marked.

Sect. 2. "The owner or owners of each and every sheep and lamb of the age of three months, which shall be turned out, kept, or depastured, on any forest, chase, wood, moor, marsh, heath, common, waste land, open field, or other undivided or uninclosed land, shall cause such sheep and lambs to be marked with the initial letters of his, her, or their christian name and surname, or christian name and surnames, or with such marks with which such sheep or lambs have for three preceding years been usually marked, such letters or marks not being less in length than three inches; and in case of neglect thereof, the owner or owners shall, for each and every such sheep and lamb not so marked, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 2s., and so toties quoties, as often as any such sheep or lamb not so marked shall have been so turned out, kept, or depastured."

3. Putting stoned and infected Horses and Sheep on.

38 Geo. 3, c. 65.

Sect. 3. "For the better and more effectually discovering the offenders, and punishing the offences herein mentioned, it shall and may be lawful to and for any person or persons having sheep or lambs actually depasturing, or entitled to be depastured, on such forest, chase, wood, moor, marsh, heath, common, waste land, open field, or other undivided or uninclosed land, who shall perceive, or have reasonable ground or foundation for believing, that there is or are any sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, depasturing or being in or upon the same, contrary to the direction and provisions of this act, to apply to any one or more justice or justices of the peace of the county, district, or place, wherein such lands severally do lie, who, upon complaint on oath made thereof before him or them, is and are hereby authorised and required to issue a warrant or warrants under his hand and seal, or their hands and seals, directed to the keeper or keepers of the said forests or chases, or his or their deputy or deputies, or to the petty constable or constables, bailiff, headborough, or tithingman, of any parish, hamlet, or township within or near which any such forest, chase, wood, moor, marsh, heath, common, waste land, open field, or other undivided or uninclosed land, shall lie and be situate, or unto any other person or persons, who shall consent and be willing to be inserted in such warrant or warrants, and shall command and empower him or them, or any of them, to take or drive all and every such sheep and lambs, sheep and lamb, to the next pound, or to some other convenient place, there to be examined by the person or persons who shall have made such application to such justice or justices as aforesaid, his, her, or their servant or agent, and by the person or persons to whom the said warrant shall be directed, any or either of them, notice being first given six hours at the least before such examination shall take place, by the person or persons making such complaint, or by his, her, or their servant or agent, to the owner or owners of such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, or unto his, her, or their hind, bailiff, or servant, or left at his, her, or their last or usual place of abode, if any or either of them be known, and do reside in the parish or parishes, hamlet or hamlets, township or townships, where such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, shall have been so found, describing the pound or place the same have been taken or driven to, in order that he, she, or they may, should he, she, or they judge proper, be present at such examination; and if, after such examination, it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the justice or justices granting such warrant or warrants, that such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, have or hath not been kept or depastured in or upon such lands and grounds, contrary to the directions and provisions of this act, then and in such case each and every such sheep and lamb shall be taken and driven back to the place or places from whence it was taken or driven previous to such examination, and such justice or justices shall award such costs, charges, and damages to the owner or owners thereof, as to him or them shall seem reasonable; and such costs, charges, and damages, shall be paid by the person or persons making such complaint, and shall be recovered in like manner as any forfeitures or penalties are by this act directed to be recovered."

Persons having a right on commons, &c., may complain to a justice, and have suspected sheep examined.

If not found defective, to be returned to the place from which taken.

Sect. 4. "If, upon any such examination, it shall appear to such justice or justices, that any such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, have or hath been turned out, kept, or depastured in or upon any such lands or grounds, infected as aforesaid, or which at any time within the space of six calendar months immediately previous thereto shall have been infected as aforesaid, then and in such case the said justice or justices shall and may direct the same to be impounded, detained and kept, and to be forthwith marked on both sides with the letter S (the length of such letter not being less than five inches), such marks to be made with pitch or tar, or some other adhesive material, such as sheep have been usually marked with in the neighbourhood, and shall also cause the left ear of each such sheep and lamb to be cut or slit in a horizontal line (such cut or slit not exceeding the length of one inch), and the same, when so marked, shall be delivered, upon demand, to the owner or owners thereof; and the costs, charges and expenses attending the taking, driving, keeping, impounding and marking of the same, having been ascertained by such justice or justices, shall be paid by the owner or owners of such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, together with the penalties and forfeitures imposed by this act, for each and every such sheep and lamb, and such costs, charges and expenses shall be recovered in like manner as any penalties or forfeitures imposed by this act are directed to be recovered; and any such mark or marks, when made, shall be, and be deemed evidence of the fact that such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, have been turned out, kept or depastured, contrary to the directions and provisions of this act, without any other evidence whatsoever."

Persons destroying marks, and owners not renewing them.

Sect. 5. "If any person or persons, at any time within the space of six calendar months after any such sheep or lambs shall have been so marked as directed by such justice or justices, shall cut out, alter, or destroy the mark herein directed to be made in the ear of any such sheep or lambs, or if the owner or owners of any such sheep or lamb shall not immediately renew or cause to be renewed, in like manner, the mark or marks herein directed to be made in the side or sides of every such sheep or lamb, when and as often as such mark or marks on the side or sides shall be defaced, altered, obliterated or destroyed, by any means whatsoever, every such person, for each and every sheep and lamb, the said mark in the ear of which shall have been by him or her so cut out, altered or destroyed, and such owner or owners, for each and every sheep and lamb, not having the said mark or marks on the side or sides thereof, immediately renewed as aforesaid, shall forfeit and pay on conviction any sum not exceeding 20*s.*, nor less than 2*s.; and the justice or justices before whom such conviction be had shall, and he and they is and are hereby required to cause every such mark so cut out, altered, defaced, obliterated or destroyed, to be immediately renewed, and the sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, to be detained and impounded until every such mark shall have been renewed."

Sic.

Sheep not demanded in five days after marking may be sold.

Sect. 6. "If such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, so detained or impounded, shall not be demanded and taken away by the owner or owners thereof within five days after the same shall have been so marked as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful to and for any justice or justices of the peace of the county, district or place, in which such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, shall have been so detained or impounded, by warrant under his or their hand and seal, or hands and seals, to direct the same to be sold, and the money arising by such sale, after deducting the costs, charges and expenses of taking, driving, keeping, detaining, impounding and marking the same, shall be paid to the overseer or overseers of the poor of the parish, hamlet or place where such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, shall have been so detained or impounded; and in case the owner or owners of such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, shall not claim such money within twelve calendar months after such payment, the same shall be applied in aid of the poor-rate of such parish, hamlet, township or place."

Penalties, how to be recovered and applied.

Sect. 7. "All penalties and forfeitures by this act imposed for any offence against the same, shall be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender or offenders, by warrant under the hand and seal of some justice of the peace for the county or place where the offence shall be committed, rendering the overplus of the money arising by such distress and sale (if any), upon demand, to the owner of such goods and chattels, after deducting the costs and charges of making such distress and sale; which warrant such justice is hereby empowered and required to grant, upon conviction of the offender or offenders, by confession or upon the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses; and one moiety of such penalties and forfeitures, when so levied, shall be paid to the informer, and the other moiety to the overseer or overseers of the parish or township where the offence shall be committed, to be applied by him or them in aid of the poor-rate."

38 Geo. 3, c. 65.

Sect. 8. "That in all cases where any conviction shall be had for any offence or offences committed against this act, or against any order of sessions, or any adjudication for the marking of sheep or lambs made, the form of conviction, and the form of adjudication for the marking of any sheep or lambs, shall be in the words or to the effect following; that is to say,

Form of conviction and adjudication.

" } BE it remembered, that on this day of , in the year of the reign

Appeal.

Sect. 9. "If any person or persons shall think himself, herself or themselves aggrieved by any thing done by or in pursuance of this act, such person or persons may appeal to the justices of the general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden for the county or place where such matter of appeal shall arise, next after the expiration of four calendar months from the time such matter of appeal shall have arisen, and the justices in such sessions are hereby authorised and required to hear and determine the matter of such appeal in a summary way, and to make such determination therein, and to award such costs as they shall judge proper; and such determination shall be final, binding and conclusive to all parties, and to all intents and purposes whatsoever."

Distress not deemed unlawful for want of form; nor proceeding to be removed by certiorari.

Sect. 10. "Where any distress shall be made for any sum or sums of money to be levied by virtue of this act, the distress itself shall not be deemed unlawful, nor the party or parties making the same be deemed a trespasser or trespassers on account of any defect or want of form in the summons, conviction, warrant of distress, or other proceedings relating thereto; nor shall the party or parties making the same be deemed a trespasser or trespassers ab initio, on account of any irregularity which shall afterwards be done by the party or parties distraining; and the person or persons aggrieved by such irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action on the case: provided always, that no plaintiff or plaintiffs shall recover in any such action for such irregularity, or for any trespass or other wrongful proceeding, if tender of sufficient amends hath been made to him, her or them, or his, her or their attorney, or by or on the behalf of the defendant or defendants, before such action brought; and in case no such tender shall have been made, it shall be lawful for the defendant or defendants in any such action, by leave of the court, after such action shall have been brought, at any time before issue joined, to pay into court such sum of money as he, she or they shall think fit, whereupon such proceedings, order and judgment shall be made and given in and by such court, as in other actions where the defendant is allowed to pay money into court."

Common Prayer.

See ante, "Church," and "Churchwardens."

Who to provide common prayer book in parish.

BY the 1 Eliz. c. 2, the book of common prayer shall be provided at the charge of the parishioners of every parish, and see 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 4.

Performing of church service.

By the general law, the church service ought to be regularly performed every Sunday morning and evening. Any relaxation is to be supposed to have been permitted by the diocesan, owing to the circumstances of the parish, and the terms prescribed must be strictly observed. (Bennett v. Bonaker, 2 Hagg. R. 27.)

Resident incumbent to read the common prayer once a month, though he keep a curate.

By stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 4, s. 7, where an incumbent resides upon his living, and keeps a curate, the incumbent himself (not having lawful impediment, to be allowed by the bishop) shall at least once a month openly and publicly read the common prayer, and (if there be occasion) administer the sacraments and other rites of the church, on pain of 5*l.* to the poor, on conviction, by confession, or oath of two witnesses, before two justices; and in default of payment in ten days, the same to be levied by the churchwardens or overseers by distress and sale by warrant of such justice.

Public worship in the navy.

All commanders, captains, and officers at sea, shall cause the public worship of Almighty God, according to the liturgy of the church of England, to be performed in their respective ships; and prayers and preachings by the chaplains shall be performed diligently. (Stat. 22 Geo. II. c. 33, art. 1.)

Qualifications of lecturer.

By stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 4, ss. 19, 20, 21, no person shall be received as a lecturer, or allowed to preach or read any lecture or sermon, without licence from the bishop, and assenting to the thirty-nine articles, and reading the common prayer, before his first sermon, and on the first lecture day of every month; on pain of three months' imprisonment for every offence, by two justices of the peace, or certificate from the bishop of the offence committed.

Impugners of book of common prayer.

Impugners of the form of worship in the church of England, established by law, and contained in the book of common prayer; of the thirty-nine articles; of the rites and ceremonies of the church; and the episcopal government; shall be excommunicated ipso facto, and not restored but by the bishop or archbishop on their repentance. (Can. 5, 6, 7.) See now as to excommunication, ante, 661.

Ministers derogating from the book of common prayer.

By stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2, s. 4—8, if any parson, vicar, or other minister, that ought to use the common prayer, or to administer the sacraments, shall refuse to do the same, or (wilfully standing in the same) shall use any other form, or shall speak any thing in derogation of the same book or of any thing therein contained; he shall on conviction for the first offence forfeit to the king one year's profit of all his spiritual promotions, and be imprisoned for six months; for the second offence, shall be deprived of all his spiritual promotions, and be imprisoned for a year; and for the third offence, shall be deprived of all his spiritual promotions, and be imprisoned during life. And if he has no spiritual promotion, he shall for the first offence be imprisoned for a year, and for the second during life.

But this shall not restrain the spiritual court from proceeding against these offenders; and they may be deprived by the said court, according to the course of the spiritual law, for the first offence. (1 Eliz. c. 2, s. 16, 23; 1 Hawk. c. 7, s. 4; 1 East's P. C. 10.)

By the same statute, sect. 13 and 20, if any person whatsoever shall in plays, songs, or by other open words, speak any thing in derogation of the same book or any thing therein contained; or shall by open fact cause or procure any minister in any place to say common prayer openly, or to minister any sacrament, in other form, or shall interrupt or let any minister to say the said common prayer; he shall (being indicted for the same at the next assizes) forfeit to the king for the first offence 100 marks, and for the second 400 marks; which if not paid in six weeks after conviction, he shall suffer six months' imprisonment for the first offence, and twelve months for the second; and for the third offence shall forfeit all his goods and chattels, and be imprisoned during life. (See ante, "Blasphemy.")

Any person depraving the book of common prayer.

By stat. 1 Edw. VI. c. 1, if any person shall speak irreverently of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, he shall suffer imprisonment, and make fine and ransom at the king's will. And three justices, one being of the quorum, may take information by the oaths of two witnesses, and afterwards, at the sessions, may inquire thereof by the oath of twelve men upon indictment. And they shall, at the sessions where the offender shall be indicted, direct a writ to the bishop to appear by himself or deputy at the trial. But no person shall be molested, but within three months after the offence committed.

Speaking irreverently of the sacrament.

By stat. 1 Mar. sess. 2, c. 3, if any person shall disturb a preacher in his sermon by word or deed, he shall be apprehended and carried before a justice of the peace, who shall commit him to safe custody, and within six days he and another justice shall examine the fact, and if they find him guilty by two witnesses, or confession, they shall commit him to gaol for three months, and further to the next sessions; and if at the sessions he repents and is reconciled, he shall be discharged on finding sureties for his good behaviour for a year; if not, he shall be continued in gaol till he does; saving the ecclesiastical jurisdiction; and he shall not be punished both ways.

Disturbers of public worship.

This statute, though made in Queen Mary's reign, extendeth to the divine service now established. (Gibs. 372; 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 61.)

The 1 Vict. c. 45, enacts that no proclamation or other public notice for a vestry meeting, or any other matter, shall be made or given in any church or chapel during or after divine service, or at the door of any church or chapel at the conclusion of divine service. But this act is not to extend to notices purely ecclesiastical, such as the publication of banns, nor to prevent the minister from publishing what is prescribed by the book of common prayer. Before this act, a parish clerk refused to read in church a notice which was presented to him for that purpose, and the person presenting it read it himself at a time when no part of the church service was actually going on, viz. whilst the minister was walking from the communion table to the vestry room. The defendant, a constable, by order of the minister, took him out of the church and detained him an hour after the service was over. He then allowed plaintiff to go, on his promise to attend a magistrate the next day, which he accordingly did, but no complaint being made against him he was discharged. For this the plaintiff brought an action of trespass for an assault and false imprisonment, and obtained a verdict. Adolphus, on a motion for a new trial or a nonsuit, cited the stats. 1 Mar. sess. 2, c. 3, s. 3; 1 W. & M. c. 18, s. 18, in support of it. Sed per Abbott, C. J. "It appears to me, that the 1 Mar. sess. 2, c. 3, merely gave to the common law cognizance of an offence which was before punishable by the ecclesiastical law; in order to be within that statute, the party must maliciously, wilfully, or of purpose, molest the person celebrating divine service. Had the notice been read by the plaintiff whilst any part of the service was actually going on, we might have thought that he had done it on purpose to molest the minister; but the act having been done during an interval when no part of the service was in the course of being performed, and the party apparently supposing that he had a right to give such a notice, I am not prepared to say that the 1 Mar. sess. 2, c. 3, warranted his detention, in order that he might be taken before a justice of the peace. Neither does the case come within the Toleration Act, 1 W. & M.

The disturbance must be malicious and wilful.

c. 18. That only applies where the thing is done wilfully, and of purpose maliciously to disturb the congregation or misuse the preacher. The detention of the plaintiff after the time when the service ended was therefore illegal, and we ought not to disturb the verdict which has been found." (Williams v. Glennister, 2 B. & Cres. 699; 4 D. & R. 217, S.C.)

Disturbers of religious worship, how punished.

By stat. 1 W. & M. sess. 1, c. 18, s. 18, "if any person or persons, at any time or times after the 10th day of June, 1688, do and shall willingly and of purpose, maliciously or contemptuously come into any cathedral or parish church, chapel, or other congregation permitted by this act, and disquiet and disturb the same, or misuse any preacher or teacher, such person or persons, upon proof thereof before any justice of peace, by two or more sufficient witnesses, shall find two sureties to be bound by recognizance in the penal sum of 50*l.*, and in default of such sureties shall be committed to prison, there to remain till the next general or quarter sessions; and upon conviction of the said offence at the said general or quarter sessions, shall suffer the pain and penalty of 20*l.* to the use of the king's and queen's majesties, their heirs and successors."

The Court of Queen's Bench refused to grant a certiorari, to remove an indictment at the sessions for a person not behaving himself modestly and reverently at the church during divine service; which although punishable by ecclesiastical censures, yet the Court conceived it a proper cause within cognizance of the justices of the peace. And this was before the above-mentioned statute of 1 W. & M. c. 18. (Rex v. ——, 1 Keb. 491.) But in Rex v. Hube and others (5 T. R. 542), it was held that an indictment upon stat. 1 W. & M. c. 18, at the quarter sessions, may before verdict be removed by certiorari into the Queen's Bench, and upon conviction of several defendants, each is liable to the penalty of 20*l.* (See 3 Burn's Eccl. Law, tit. Public Worship.)

Confession.

CONFESSIONS made by the party accused may be considered as regards,

I. Confessions made at the Trial of Defendant, 867.

II. Confessions made before Justices on Examination, or before Coroners, 867.

III. Confessions made on other occasions, proof of, 869.

I. Confessions on the Trial of Defendant.

Confessions made by the accused on his trial may be either expressed or implied. On trial of defendant.

An express confession is, where a defendant pleads guilty and thereby directly confesses the crime with which he is charged, which is the highest conviction that can be. (2 Hawk. c. 31, s. 1; 1 Chit. C. L. 428.) Express by pleading guilty.

But it is usual for the Court, especially if the punishment be capital, to advise the party to plead and put himself upon his trial, and not presently to record his confession, but to admit him to plead. (2 Hale, 225.)

In smaller offences, as assaults, or the like, it may be advisable to confess the indictment, as the defendant may afterwards produce affidavits to show that the prosecutor made the first assault, which he cannot do after conviction. (Reg. v. Templeman, 1 Salk. 55.)

And in trifling personal injuries, the prosecutor and defendant frequently settle the charge in private, and the latter comes into Court and pleads guilty to the indictment; and upon proving a general release given by the former, submits to a small fine for the breach of the peace which his conduct has occasioned. (Dick. Sess. 156; Cro. C. C. 21; and see "Sessions," Vol. V. p. 965.)

When a defendant pleads guilty, if he persist in his plea, it is immediately recorded by the proper officer; and the same, where a defendant yields himself to the Queen's mercy, and desires to submit to a small fine. (See 1 Chit. C. L. 428.)

As to the mode in which confession is made, and the subsequent proceedings on charges of felony, see Chit. C. L. 428, 429.

An implied confession is, where a defendant in a case not capital doth not directly own himself guilty, but in a manner admits it by yielding to the Queen's mercy, and desiring to submit to a small fine; which submission the Court may accept of if they think fit, without putting him to a direct confession. (2 Hawk. c. 31, s. 3.) Implied.

II. Confessions at Examinations before Magistrates, or before Coroners.

Confessions, when duly made on examinations before magistrates, in pursuance of the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 2, (Vol. II. p. 467,) are of themselves evidence Confessions at examinations before justices. (a)

(a) A magistrate should not only be upon his guard against extorted, but also against collusive confessions. A remarkable instance of this kind is mentioned by Mr. Dickenson, as singularly illustrative of the propriety of this caution. Two brothers committed a robbery in a dark night to a large amount, and fled. A younger brother, who was innocent, in order to favour their escape, contrived to draw suspicion on himself, and, when examined, tacitly admitted his guilt. He was afterwards committed to prison, and all pursuit of his brothers was discontinued. On the trial, he proved an alibi on the clearest and most satisfactory evidence, and was consequently acquitted. In the mean time, the actual felons had safely arrived in America with their plunder. 1 Dick. Just. 460.

2. Confessions at Examinations before Magistrates or Coroners.

against the confessor. The mode of conducting the examination, and the formalities to be observed in taking it, will be found "Examination," Vol. II. 463. The effect of this statute is, so far as respects the evidence of a confession, that a written examination taken as the statute directs is evidence of itself, and the only admissible of defendant's declaration; whereas at common law, unless defendant signed the paper, or on its being read allowed it to be true, the confession must have been proved by some person who heard it, and the writing could only have been made use of by the person who wrote it to refresh his memory. (2 Russ. 650; Jer. Arch. C. L. 9th edit. 122.)

A confession before a magistrate, if taken down in writing at the time, should be produced, and proved to have been duly taken. And it was formerly supposed that it must be proved by the magistrate who took and signed it, or by his clerk who wrote it; (1 Hale, 585; 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 43; 1 Leach, 240, 348; R. v. Bell, 5 C. & P. 162;) but it is now settled, that it may be given in evidence on the prisoner's hand-writing being proved by any person who was present at his examination. (R. v. Chappel, 1 M. & Rob. 395; R. v. Hopes, id. 396, n.; 7 C. & P. 136; R. v. Foster, 7 C. & P. 148; R. v. Rees, id. 568; R. v. Reading, id. 619.) But in serious cases it is desirable the justice or his clerk should attend. (Reg. v. Pikesley, 9 C. & P. 124.) Where a prosecutor proved that when the prisoner was before the magistrate, she was duly cautioned, and that she made a statement, which was taken down and read over to her, and to which she made her mark, the magistrate also signing it, and the prosecutor identified the paper by his own signature to his own deposition, being on the same sheet of paper: it was held, that the prisoner's statement might be given in evidence without examining either the magistrate or his clerk. (Reg. v. Hearn, 1 Car. & M. 109.)

If it be clearly shown that the examination of the defendant was not reduced to writing, or, perhaps, if the writing be lost or destroyed, then parol evidence of it may be admitted. (R. v. Fearshire, 1 Leach, 202; see R. v. Lamb, 2 Leach, 582) Until the contrary be shown, it shall be intended that the magistrate did his duty, and took down the examination of the defendant in writing. (R. v. Jacob, 1 Leach, 309.) And where the magistrate returned with the depositions that the prisoner said, "I decline to say anything," parol evidence of a confession alleged to have been made by the prisoner in the presence of the magistrate, and while under examination, was rejected. (R. v. Walter, 7 C. & P. 267.) But, upon clear and satisfactory evidence, it will be competent to prove something said by the defendant, beyond what is taken down by the magistrate. (Rowland v. Ashby, Ry. & M. N. P. 231; R. v. Harris, 1 Mood. C. C. 338; Reg. v. Wilkinson, 8 C. & P. 662; R. v. Reed, R. & Moo. 403.) Where the magistrate's clerk, in taking down the statement of several prisoners charged with the same offence, had left a blank where either of the prisoners had mentioned the name of another of them, the judge would not allow those blanks to be supplied by parol evidence. (Reg. v. Morse, 8 C. & P. 605; Jer. Arch. C. L. 9th edit.) So if the examination taken in writing be inadmissible in evidence by reason of irregularity, parol evidence will not, it seems, be received of what the prisoner said. (Rex v. Reosis, 7 C & P. 177; Reg. v. Pikesley, 9 C. & P. 124; sed vide R. v. Reed, R. & Mood. 403.)

Where the prisoner was sworn by mistake, but as soon as the mistake was discovered the deposition was destroyed, his subsequent statement was received in evidence. (Rex v. Webb, 4 C. & P. 564.) And where a statement made by the prisoner upon oath at a time when he was not under suspicion was tendered in evidence, Vaughan, B., received it. (Rex v. Tubby, 5 C. & P. 530.) In a more recent case, however, where the prisoner and others were examined upon oath, no specific charge being at the time made against any person, but in the result the prisoner was committed for the offence, Gurney, B., refused to receive in evidence what the prisoner had stated upon that occasion. (Rex v. Lewis, 6 C. & P. 161; Jer. Arch. C. L. 9th edit. 119.)

Whether statements made by a prisoner upon oath, on a coroner's inquest relating to the same transaction, are admissible. In one case, Alderson, B., refused to receive in evidence, on an indictment for murder, a statement made by the prisoner before the coroner, which was taken down in writing, and purported to be taken on oath, and would not allow evidence to be given to show that in fact it was not taken on oath. (Reg. v. Wheeley, 8 C. & P. 251.) In a subsequent case, on an indictment for rape, statements voluntarily made upon oath at the inquest held on the party alleged to have been ravished, were received in evidence; (Reg. v. Owen, 9 C. & P. 83;) but afterwards, on the trial of the same prisoners for the murder of the same person, the same depositions were rejected. (Id. 238.) On the other hand, in R. v. Howarth, Greenw. Coll. Stat. 137, Parke, B., received in evidence, on an indictment for murder, a deposition made by the prisoner on oath as a witness before the coroner: and in Reg. v. Sandys, 1 C. & Mar. 347, Erskine, J., received similar evidence, and reserved the point, but the prisoner was acquitted; and this would seem to be the better opinion. (Jer. Arch. C. L. 9th edit. 119.)

2. Confessions at Examinations before Magistrates or Coroners.

Confessions before coroners.

III. Confessions on other occasions, &c. Effect and Proof of, in general.

Effect of Confessions in general.]—The general rule as to the effect of a confession against the accused was very fully considered in a judgment delivered by Mr. Justice Grose, in a case reserved for the opinion of the twelve judges, and it seems to be now clearly settled that a free and voluntary confession, made by a prisoner accused of an offence, whether made before he is apprehended or after, whether on a judicial examination or after commitment, whether reduced into writing or not; in short, that any voluntary confession made by a prisoner to any person at any time or place, is strong evidence against him. (Lamb's case, 2 Leach, 552; 2 Hawk, c. 46, s. 31.)

Effect of confessions in general.

The confession of the prisoner is sufficient ground for a conviction, though there be no other proof of his having committed the offence, or of the offence having been committed, if that confession was in consequence of a charge against him and the confession be direct and unequivocally positive. (Rex v. Eldridge, R. & R. 440; Rex v. White, id. 508; Rex v. Tippet, id. 509.) And especially if there is evidence that he had been desirous to keep out of the way of the person upon whom the offence is supposed to have been committed, or if any of his companions under the same charge have attempted to do so. (Rex v. Falkner, id. 481.)

Where a witness answers questions upon examination on trial, tending to criminate himself, and to which he might have demurred, his answers may be used for all purposes. (Stockfleth v. De Tastet, 4 Camp. 10; Rex v. Merceron, 2 Stark. C. N. P. 366.) But the latter case seems incorrectly reported. (See per Lord Tenterden, C. J., in Rex v. Gilham, R. & M. C. C. 203, post, 873.)

It is said by Mr. J. Blackstone, that confessions, even in cases of felony at the common law, are the weakest and most suspicious of all testimony, ever liable to be obtained by artifice, false hopes, promises of favour, or menaces; seldom remembered accurately, or reported with due precision; and incapable in their nature of being disproved by other negative evidence. (4 Black. Com. 357.)

Before any confession can be received in evidence, it must be ascertained with certainty that such confession was neither obtained by threats nor promises, but was perfectly free and voluntary; (2 East's P. C. 657;) for, says Lord Hale, I have often known the prisoner disown his confession upon his examination, and hath sometimes been acquitted against such his confession. (2 Hale, 284, 285.)

The confession must be voluntary.

The confession will be presumed to be freely made until the contrary appear; and the magistrate's clerk cannot, unless the prisoner alleges that the confession was unduly obtained, be asked by the prisoner's counsel whether the confession was voluntarily made. (6 St. Tri. 831.)

3. Confession in general, &c.

Justices should caution the accused as to effect of.

If the promise or menace, &c. take place previously to the prisoner's being brought before the magistrate, and the confession be before the magistrate, the Court will in general refuse to admit the confession to be given in evidence, unless it appear that the prisoner was undeceived by the magistrate, and cautioned by him not to expect the favour, or not to regard the menaces held out to him. (2 East's P. C. 658; and see Rex v. Lingate, 1 Phil. Ev. 165.)

But where a defendant, having been told by a constable that he might do himself some good by confessing, afterwards asked the magistrate if it would benefit him to confess, and the magistrate saying he could not say it would, the defendant then declined to confess, but afterwards, when going to prison, made a confession to the constable; the judges held the confession to be admissible, because the answer of the magistrate was sufficient to remove any expectation which the constable might have caused. (Rex v. Rosier, 1 Phil. Ev. 105. See Rex v. Green, 5 C. & P. 312; Rex v. Richards, 5 C. & P. 318; Rex v. Howes, 6 C. & P. 404.)

A person charged with murder made a confession before the coroner. It appeared that before he made this confession, B, who was both a clergyman and a magistrate, had had an interview with him: held, that the prosecutors were not bound to call B. before they put in the confession, but that it would be fair for them to do so; and that if the prosecutors did not call B., the prisoner might call him before the confession was made, to prove that some inducement was held out. (Rex v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221.)

Confession to whom made.

There was, it seems, a difference of opinion among the judges, whether a confession made to a person who has no authority, after an inducement held out by that person, was receivable in evidence; (Rex v. Spencer, 7 C. & P. 776;) but it is now said to be the opinion of the judges, that evidence of any confession is receivable, unless there has been some inducement held out by some person in authority; and that if a person not in any office or authority hold out to the accused party an inducement to confess, this will not exclude a confession made to that party. (Reg. v. Taylor, 8 C. & P. 733.) But where a person, not having authority, held out an inducement in the presence of the prosecutor's wife, who expressed no dissent, the confession was held not receivable. (Rex v. Spencer, 7 C. & P. 776; Reg. v. Hewett, 1 C. & M. 534.) And in another case, where an innkeeper, to whose house the prisoner was taken, held out an inducement to him to confess in the constable's hearing, whereupon he made a confession, which the constable was called to prove, the evidence was rejected. (Rex v. Pountney, 7 C. & P. 302.)

What not a voluntary confession.

With respect to what shall be deemed a threat or promise; a confession induced by saying, "unless you give me a more satisfactory account, I will take you before a magistrate," cannot be received in evidence. So also saying to the prisoner that it would be worse for him if he did not confess, or that it would be better for him if he did, is sufficient to exclude the confession, according to constant experience. (Rex v. Thompson, 1 Leach, 291; 2 East's P. C. 659.)

Where a prosecutor said to the prisoner, "I should be obliged to you if you would tell us what you know about it; if you will not, we, of course, can do nothing:" this was held such an inducement to confess, as would exclude what the prisoner said. (Rex v. Partridge, 7 C. & P. 551.) A constable who apprehended a prisoner, asked him what he had done with the tap he had stolen from the prosecutor's premises; and said, "You had better not add a lie to the crime of theft:" a confession then made to the constable was held not receivable in evidence. (Rex v. Sheppard, 7 C. & P. 579.)

Even if a confession be procured by a threat to send for a constable; (Rex v. Richards, 5 C. & P. 518;) or by saying, "tell me where the things are and I will be favourable to you;" (Rex v. Cass, Id. 220, n.;) or, "you had better tell all you know;" (Rex v. Kingston, 4 C. & P. 387;") or, "you had better tell where you got the property;" (Rex v. Dunn, 4 C. & P. 543;) or, "you had better split, and not suffer for all of them;" (Rex v. Thomas, 6 C.

& P. 353;) or, "it would have been better if you had told at first;" (Rex v. Walkeley, 6 C. & P. 175;) the confession will not be admissible.

3. Confessions in general, &c.

In the case of Thomas Cass, he was indicted at the Old Bailey in Feb. Sess. 1784, for stealing on the 4th of the same month an iron bar, the property of Edward Meux, Esq. It was the bar of a window belonging to a public-house in High Street, Bloomsbury, and the prisoner, on pretence of drinking a pint of beer, contrived to take it away. On going the ensuing evening to the same house, the publican suspecting that he was the person who had stolen the bar, sent for a constable, by whom, on the charge given, he was taken to the watch-house, where he remained all night. On the next morning the constable, as he was taking him to the magistrates, called with him at the publican's house, and in the conversation which took place, the publican said, "I am in great distress about my irons; if you will tell me where they are, I will be favourable to you." In consequence of which the prisoner confessed that he had taken the property, and told him where it was; but there being no other evidence, Gould, J., told the jury they must acquit the prisoner; for that the slightest hopes of mercy held out to a prisoner to induce him to disclose the fact, was sufficient to invalidate a confession. (1 Leach, 328, notis.)

In the case of Rex v. Jones (R. & R. 152), the prosecutor had asked the prisoner, on finding him, for the money he (the prisoner) had taken out of the prosecutor's pocket; but before the money was produced said, "he only wanted his money, and if the prisoner gave him that, he might go to the devil, if he pleased;" after which, the prisoner took eleven shillings and sixpence halfpenny out of his pocket, and said it was all he had left of it: and a majority of the judges held, that the confession ought not to have been received. And see Rex v. Parratt, 4 C. & P. 570.

Where a girl, being apprehended for the murder of her child, was left by the constable in custody of a woman, who told her she had better tell the truth, otherwise it would lie upon her, and the man would go free, upon which she made a confession: Parke, J., and Taunton, J., held this confession not receivable, as it was made in consequence of an inducement held out to the prisoner by a person who had her in custody. (Rex v. Enoch, 5 C. & P. 535.)

A servant was charged with attempting to set fire to her master's house. It was proved that the furniture in two of the bed-rooms was on fire, and a spoon and other articles were found in the sucker of the pump. The master told the prisoner that if she did not tell the truth about the things found in the pump, he would send for the constable to take her, but he said nothing to her respecting the fire: it was held, that this was such an inducement to confess as would render inadmissible any statement that the prisoner made respecting the fire, as the whole was to be considered as one transaction. (Reg. v. Hearn, 1 C. & M. 109.)

And a confession, with a view, and under a hope of being thereby permitted to turn king's evidence, has been holden inadmissible. (Rex v. Hall, 2 Leach, 559. See Rex v. Bailey, 2 Stark. Ev. 23.) But the mere knowledge by a prisoner of a handbill, by which a government reward and a promise of a pardon are offered in a case of murder, are not sufficient ground for rejecting a confession of such prisoner, unless it appear that the inducements there held out were those which led the prisoner to confess. (Reg. v. Boswell, 1 C. & M. 584.) And where it afterwards appeared that a handbill was shown to him by a constable, by which a reward and free pardon was offered to any but the person who struck the blow, and the prisoner three days afterwards made a statement, and said to another constable, on the night before he made the statement, that he saw no reason why he should suffer for the crime of another, and that as the government had offered a free pardon to any one concerned who had not struck the blow, he would tell all he knew about the matter: the judge held, that the statement so made was not properly receivable. (Id.)

A female servant, being suspected of stealing money, her mistress, on a Monday, told her that she would forgive her if she told the truth. On the

3. Confessions in general, &c.

Tuesday she was taken before a magistrate, and was discharged, no one appearing against her. On the Wednesday the superintendent of police went with her mistress to the Bridewell, and told her in the presence of her mistress that she "was not bound to say any thing unless she liked, and that if she had any thing to say her mistress would hear her;" but the superintendent, not knowing that her mistress had promised to forgive her, did not tell her that if she made a statement it might be given in evidence against her. The prisoner made a statement: it was held that this statement was not receivable in evidence, as the promise of the mistress must be considered as still operating on the prisoner's mind at the time of the statement, but that, if the mistress had not been then present, it might have been otherwise. (Reg. v. Hewett, 1 C. & M. 534.)

A. being in the custody of a constable on a charge of felony, was taken by him to an inn, where the innkeeper, in the hearing of the constable, held out an inducement to A. to confess, and A., in the hearing of the constable, made a confession to the innkeeper, which at the trial the constable was called to prove: held, that this confession was not receivable in evidence. (Rex v. Pountney, 7 Car. & P. 302.)

To exclude a confession made under the influence of a promise or threat, the promise or threat must be of a description which may be presumed to have such an effect on the mind of the defendant, as to induce him to confess: and therefore an exhortation, admonition, promise, or threat, proceeding at a prior time from some one who has no concern in the apprehension, prosecution, or examination of the prisoner, but interferes without any authority, will not be sufficient to render a confession inadmissible. (Rex v. Rowe, R. & R. 153; Rex v. Hardwick, 1 Phil. Ev. 105; Rex v. Gibbons, 1 C. & P. 97; Rex v. Tyler, Id. 129; Rex v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221; Rex v. Thomas, 7 C. & P. 345.)

A confession made in consequence of questions put by the officer who had charge of the prisoner, a boy about fourteen years of age, on a charge of felony, and when he had no food for nearly a day, but obtained without threat or promise, was held admissible. (Rex v. Thornton, R. & M. C. C. 27.)

A prisoner was charged with stealing a guinea and two promissory notes; the prosecutor told him that it would be better for him to confess. It was held, that after this admonition, the prosecutor might be allowed to prove that the prisoner brought him a guinea and a 5*l.* note, which he gave up to the prosecutor as the guinea and one of the notes that had been stolen from him. (Rex v. Griffin, R. & R. 151.)

If a prisoner, who is committed on a charge of felony, ask the turnkey of the gaol to put a letter into the post, addressed to the prisoner's father, and the turnkey promise to do so, and instead of that, on receiving the letter, he conveys it to the visiting magistrates of the gaol, who forward it to the prosecutor. This letter is evidence against the prisoner, notwithstanding the manner in which it was obtained. (Rex v. Derrington, 2 C. & P. 418.)

A. was in custody on a charge of murder. B., a fellow prisoner, said to him, "I wish you would tell me how you murdered the boy—pray split." A. replied, "Will you be upon your oath not to mention what I tell you." B. went upon his oath that he would not tell. A. then made a statement: which was held evidence, as this was not such an inducement to confess as would render the statement inadmissible. (Rex v. Shaw, 6 C. & P. 372.)

Where, on a prisoner being brought before a magistrate on a charge of forgery, the prosecutor said, in the hearing of the prisoner, that he considered the prisoner as a tool of G.; and the magistrate then told the prisoner to be sure to tell the truth; upon this the prisoner made a statement: this statement was held receivable in evidence. (Rex v. Court, 7 C. & P. 486.)

A witness stated, that a prisoner charged with felony asked him if he had better confess; and the witness replied, that he had better not confess, but that the prisoner might say what he had to say to him, for it should go no further. The prisoner made a statement: and it was held receivable in evidence on the trial. (Rex v. Thomas, 7 C. & P. 345.)

Where a person, who made a confession to a constable in consequence of a promise held out, was taken before a magistrate, who, knowing what had taken place, cautioned the prisoner against making any confession before him, but the prisoner, notwithstanding, did make a confession to the magistrate: this second confession was held receivable in evidence on the trial of the prisoner, though it did not appear that the magistrate told the prisoner that his first confession would have no effect, and he therefore might have acted under an impression that, having once acknowledged his guilt, it was too late to retract. (Rex v. Howes, 6 C. & P. 404.)

3. Confessions in general, &c.

A prisoner charged with felony, being in custody, handcuffed, in the house of the prosecutor, after a conversation with the prosecutor and another person, in which he was told that they would do all they could for him, said, "If the handcuffs are taken off, I will tell you where I put the property:" this statement was considered receivable in evidence, and was not objectionable either as a confession made under a promise, or a statement obtained by duress. (Rex v. Green, 6 C. & P. 655.)

In another case, where A. and his wife were separately in custody on a charge of receiving stolen property, a person who was in the room with A. said, "I hope you will tell, because Mrs. G. (the prosecutrix) can ill afford to lose the money;" and the constable then said, "If you will tell where the property is, you shall see your wife:" a statement made by A. afterwards was held admissible in evidence. (Rex v. Lloyd, 6 C. & P. 393.)

The inducement to render the confession inadmissible must refer to a temporal benefit; for hopes which are referable to a future state merely are not within the principle which excludes confessions obtained by improper influence. A prisoner, committed on a charge of murder, sent for the chaplain of the gaol to pray with him. The chaplain told him that, as the minister of God, he ought to warn him not to add sin to sin by attempting to dissemble with God, and that it would be important for him to confess his sins before God, and to repair, as far as he could, any injury he had done. The chaplain stated that he considered he had made a great impression, and that he told the prisoner he did not wish him to confess to him. There were two interviews; and the chaplain said he was almost sure that he always used the terms confessing his sins before God, but was not quite positive that he mentioned the words "before God" every time. After this the prisoner sent for the gaoler, who warned him not to tell him any thing but what he wished to be repeated to the magistrates. The prisoner then made a confession. After this the prisoner sent for the mayor, who said, "Before you say any thing I must apprise you (as I have done several times), that it will be probably given in evidence against you; you are therefore to exercise your own discretion, and say little or nothing, as you think best; and if you have changed your mind and don't choose to say any thing, I will retire, and shall not feel at all angry at your having brought me down." The prisoner made another confession, which was taken down and read over, and he admitted its correctness, but he could not sign it, as his hand shook so much. These confessions were objected to by the prisoner's counsel, but, after argument, the twelve judges held that they were rightly received. (R. v. Gilham, R. & M. C. C. 186; Car. C. L. 61, S. C.)

It is no objection to the admissibility of a confession that it was elicited by questions, if no undue influence be used, (R. v. Ellis, 1 R. & M. 432; R. v. Thornton, R. & M. 27,) or was in answer to questions by the magistrate (Rex v. Bartlett, 7 C. & P. 832); and declarations of a defendant, though made as a witness before a committee of the House of Commons, and under compulsory process, were holden by Abbott, C. J., in R. v. Merceron (2 Stark. 366), to be admissible against the defendant, upon an indictment for corruptly granting licenses to public-houses. (See R. v. Gilham, R. & M. 203.)

A., a prisoner charged with murder, was visited by B., who was both a magistrate and a clergyman; B. told him that if he was not the person who struck the fatal blow, and he would tell all that he know, he (B.) would use his endeavours and influence to prevent any thing from happening to him, and that if he (A.) did not make a disclosure, some one else would probably do so. After this, B. wrote to the secretary of state, who returned an answer that mercy could not be extended to A., which answer was communicated by B. to A. After this, A. sent for the coroner, and wished to make a statement. The coroner told him that if he did so it would be used as evidence against him. The prisoner made a confession: held, that this confession was admissible. (R. v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221.)

3. Confessions in general, &c.

Where it appeared that the prisoner, on being taken into custody, had been told by a person who came to assist the constable that it would be better for him to confess, but that, on his being examined before the committing magistrate on the following day, he was frequently cautioned by the magistrate to say nothing against himself; a confession under these circumstances before the magistrate was held to be clearly admissible. (R. v. Lingate, 1 Phil. Ev. 7th edit. 115; R. v. Hardwick, id.; R. v. Rosier, id.; Stark. on Ev. Part IV. 2350.)

But where a girl was charged with administering poison with intent to murder, the surgeon said to her, "You are under suspicion of this, and you had better tell all you know;" and after this she made a statement to the surgeon; Parke, J., after having conferred with Littledale, J., held that evidence of this statement was not admissible. (R. v. Kingston, 4 C. & P. 387.)

It is no objection to the admissibility of a confession, that it was made under a mistaken supposition that some of the defendant's accomplices were in custody, even though it were created by artifice, with a view to obtain the confession. (Rex v. Bailey, 1 Phil. Ev. 104.)

A statement, made by a prisoner when he is drunk, is receivable in evidence; and semble, that if a constable gave him liquor to make him so, in the hope of his saying something, that will not render his statement inadmissible, but it will be matter of observation for the judge in his summing up. (Rex v. Spilsbury, 7 C. & P. 187.)

What a prisoner is overheard to say to his wife, or even what he is overheard to say to himself, is receivable in evidence against him on a charge of felony: it is, however, a species of evidence to be acted on with caution, as it is very liable to be unintentionally misrepresented by the witnesses. (Rex v. Simons, 6 C. & P. 540.)

If a prisoner, when examined before a magistrate, say that the deposition of F. T. is true, the deposition of F. T. may be read at the trial as a part of the prisoner's statement, although F. T. has been examined at the trial as a witness for the prosecution. (Rex v. John, 7 C. & P. 324.)

But if two prisoners be taken before a magistrate on a charge of felony, what the first prisoner says in his statement before the magistrate cannot be given in evidence against the second prisoner, because, when before the magistrate, the second prisoner is only called upon to answer the statements in the depositions taken on oath, and not what any other prisoner may have said in his examination. (Reg. v. Swinnerton, 1 Car. & M. 593.)

Confession if not in evidence cannot be used in reply.

Where the prisoner made his defence before the committing magistrate, and on his trial he relied on matter of excuse, wholly repugnant to his former statement; that former statement had not been given in evidence in the case for the prosecution, and therefore the court would not allow it to be read afterwards, to contradict the defence set up on the trial. (Reg. v. Powell, 1 Car. & M. 500.)

General result of cases.

The only questions in these cases are—was any promise of favour, or any menace or undue terror made use of, to induce the prisoner to confess?—and if so, was the prisoner induced by such promise or menace, &c. to make the confession attempted to be given in evidence, or was such promise or menace operating on his mind when he made it? If the judge be of opinion in the affirmative upon both these questions, he will reject the evidence. If, on the contrary, it appear to him from circumstances, that although such promises or menaces were holden out, they did not operate upon the mind of the prisoner, but that his confession was voluntary notwithstanding, and he was not biassed by such impressions in making it, the judge will admit the evidence. (Jer. Arch. C. L. 9th edit. 120.)

If a confession be obtained by undue means, nothing the prisoner afterwards says, under the influence of having made that confession, can be received. (R. v. Sarah Nute, 1 Burn's J. 24th edit. 688.)

3. Confessions in general, &c.

Acts subsequent to an extorted confession.

In R v. Jenkins (R. & R. 492), it was held, that if a confession be improperly obtained, it is a ground for excluding evidence, not only of the confession, but of any act done by the prisoner in consequence towards discovering the property.

But although a confession may not be receivable in evidence, yet any discovery that takes place in consequence of such confession will be admitted as a substantive fact: as if a man by promise of favour be induced to confess that he knowingly received certain stolen goods, and that they are in such a room in his house, and the goods be found there accordingly, although the confession itself cannot in that case be given in evidence, yet it may be proved that in consequence of something the witness heard from the defendant, he found the goods in question in the defendant's house. (R. v. Lockhart, 2 East's P. C. 658; 1 Leach, 430; and see 1 Leach, 300, n. and 301, n.)

And it would seem that declarations of the defendant accompanying the acts may be received in evidence, even though the confession itself may be inadmissible. (R. v. Griffin, R. & R. 151.)

The whole confession must be taken altogether.

It is fully settled, that whenever a person's confession is made use of against him, it must all be taken together, and not by parcels. If the confession be not in writing, the whole of what the prisoner said must be fully stated, although it may happen that some part of it concerns other prisoners who are tried on the same indictment; in such case it is not possible to make any selection, for until the evidence has been heard it cannot be known what it is, or to whom it relates, and all that can be done is to direct the jury not to take into their consideration such parts as affect the other prisoners. But a distinction might perhaps be made in this respect, in case the confession has been reduced into writing, if that part which relates to the other prisoners is capable of being separated and detached from the rest, and can be omitted without affecting in any degree the prisoner's narrative against himself. (2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 42, 43, 44; 4 Taunt. 245; and see the Queen's case, 2 B. & B. 294.)

If there be proof of recent possession of stolen property, and the prosecutor give in evidence a declaration in which the prisoner asserted that he bought the goods of A. B, the prosecutor having made the prisoner's declaration evidence, it must be taken as true until it is contradicted; but if there be other evidence to falsify it, the judge will leave both the prisoner's declaration and the evidence contradicting it to the jury for their consideration. (R. v. Jones, 2 C. & P. 129.)

In a case in which a party's declaration had been given in evidence against him, Abbott, C. J., left the whole conversation to the jury, to consider whether the facts asserted by the party in his own favour were not true, as well as those against him. (Cited in R. & M. C. N. P. 258; Smith v. Blandy, id.)

If a prisoner, in a confession made before a coroner, which is taken down in writing, mention the names of two other persons who are also charged with the same offence, the confession when read in evidence must be read with these names in it, just as it is, and the officer of the court must not say "another person" and a "third person" instead of reading the names. (R. v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221; R. v. Jones, id. 217.)

If a prisoner charged with murder, say in his confession, which is read in evidence against him, that he was present at the murder, but took no part in the commission of it, this is evidence for him as well as against him; but the judge will not direct an acquittal, as the jury may believe one part of the confession and disbelieve another; however, if it is meant to be charged that the prisoner did more than is stated in the confession, there ought to be some evidence to show that (R. v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221.)

himself, whether taken on an examination before justices of the peace in pursuance of the statute of 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 2 (Vol. II. p. 467), upon a bailment or commitment for felony or misdemeanor, or in discourse with private persons, is allowed to be given in evidence against the party confessing, but not against others. (2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 3; Hale, 585.)

against accomplices, &c.

It is not evidence against his accomplices, although he charge his accomplice in his hearing, and the accomplice do not deny it. (R. v. Appleby, 3 Stark. 33; 1 Phil. Evid. 7th edit. 116; Reg. v. Swinnerton, 1 Car. & M. 593, ante, 874.) So the confession of a principal is not evidence against an accessary to prove the guilt of the principal, which must be proved aliunde. (R. v. Turner, R. & M. C. C. 347.) The confession of the principal may, however, sometimes be used in evidence against the receiver of stolen property. (R. v. Blick, 4 C. & P. 377.) In Tinkler's case, the dying declarations of an accomplice were holden by the judges to be good evidence against the principal; and the majority of the judges were of opinion that this evidence would of itself be sufficient to convict, although the testimony of the accomplice, if living, would not, unless corroborated by other evidence. (1 East, P. C. 354.) Also, in cases of conspiracy, and of high treason in compassing the Queen's death, &c., any thing said or written by one of the accomplices, not as a confession simply, but for the purpose of furthering the common design, is admissible evidence against the others. (See R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. 140, 141; R. v. Salter, 5 Esp. 125; R. v. Stone, 6 T. R. 527.)

Proof of confession.

Proof of Confession.]—In a criminal case, the judge will not allow the case to be tried upon admissions made by the attornies on both sides, nor unless they be made at the trial by the defendant or his counsel. (Reg. v. Thornhill, 8 C. & P. 575.)

Admissions or confessions to other persons than magistrates, if in writing, are proved as any other written instrument; if by parol, they are proved by parol evidence of some person who heard them. (Jer. Arch. C. L. 9th edit. 122.)

In all cases of high treason, a confession in open court precludes the necessity of proving the treason by witnesses. (1 Edw. VI. c. 12, s. 22; 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 11, s. 12; 7 & 8 Will. III. c. 3, s. 2; Fost. 241.) In treason the confession of an overt act, upon an examination before a magistrate, or other person having authority for that purpose, if proved at the trial by two witnesses, is sufficient to convict the defendant (R. v. Francia, 1 East, P. C. 133, n.; Fost. 243); but evidence of a confession to a person not having such authority, although proved by two or more witnesses, can only be received in corroboration of the other evidence in the case; and the treason must still be proved by two witnesses notwithstanding. (R. v. Willis, 8 St. Tr. 250, 255; and see Fost. 243.)

This, however, must be considered as having reference only to confessions given in evidence as proof of the offence charged in the indictment; but a confession before a magistrate or other person may be given in evidence to prove a collateral fact, as, for instance, that the defendant is a natural-born subject (R. v. Vaughan, 5 St. Tr. 25; R. v. Smith, Fost. 242), or the like, and may be proved by one witness, as in ordinary cases. (Jer. Arch. C. L. 9th edit. 122.)

I. What amounts to. (a)

CONSPIRACY is when two or more combine together to execute some act for the purpose of injuring a third person or the public. What it is.

(a) Mr. Serjt. Talfourd, in his much improved and useful edition of Dickenson's Sessions, makes the following observations as to this offence:—

"The offence of conspiracy is more difficult to be ascertained precisely than any other for which indictment lies, and is indeed rather to be considered as governed by positive decisions than by any consistent and intelligible principles of law. It consists, according to all the authorities, not in the accomplishment of any unlawful or injurious purpose, nor in any one act moving towards that purpose, but in the actual concert and agreement of two or more persons to effect something, which, being so concerted and agreed, the law regards as the object of an indictable conspiracy. There are two classes of cases in which the criminality of such agreement is perfectly intelligible and obvious 1. Where the object proposed would, if accomplished, be a criminal offence in all parties acting in it. 2. Where, though the ultimate object may be lawful, the means by which the parties, conspirators, propose to effect their purpose necessarily involve in them an indictable offence. Of the first kind are conspiring to commit a felony—conspiring to obtain money under false pretences — conspiring to suborn or abstract a witness—where the object, if carried into effect, would be a substantive offence, and where therefore concert is indictable as an act in itself tending to produce it. Of the second kind is a conspiracy to support a cause, in itself just, by false testimony, and the same principle would apply here, for whether the concerted offence be the end or the means, it is equally an offence, which, if consummated, would subject the offenders to the visitation of criminal justice. But it is not easy to understand on what principle conspiracies have been holden indictable, where neither the end nor the means are, in themselves, regarded by the law as criminal, however reprehensible in point of morals. Mere concert is not in itself a crime, for associations to prosecute felons, and even to put laws in force against political offenders, have been holden legal. (R. v. Murray and others, tried before Abbott, C J., at Guildhall, 1823.) If then there be no indictable offence in the object, no indictable offence in the means, and no indictable offence in the concert, in what part of the conduct of the conspirators is the offence to be found? Can several circumstances, each perfectly lawful, make up an unlawful act? And yet such is the general language held on this subject, that at one time the immorality of the object is relied on, at another the evidence of the means, while at all times the concert is stated to be the essence of the charge, and yet that concert, independent of an illegal object or illegal means, is admitted to be blameless." Mr. Serjt Talfourd then proceeds to comment on Macklin's case, 2 Campb. 369; the case of R. v. Farmer, 13 East, 228, and that of R. v. Grey, 3 St. Tr. 519, and considering it a hopeless task to lay down any fixed principles whereby this offence may be governed, he points out the several instances of cases wherein parties have been convicted of conspiracies, and which will be found collected in the above text.

1. What amounts to.

By the common law.

1. By the common law there can be no doubt but that all confederacies whatsoever wrongfully to prejudice a third person or the public are highly criminal; as where divers persons confederate together by indirect means to impoverish a third person, or falsely and maliciously to charge a man with being the reputed father of a bastard child, or to maintain one another in a matter whether it be true or false. (1 Hawk. c. 72, s. 2.)

By statute.

2. And conspiracy by statute is as follows: "Conspirators be they that do confeder or bind themselves by oath, covenant, or other alliance, that every of them shall aid and bear the other falsely and maliciously to indict, or cause to indict, or falsely to move or maintain pleas; and such as retain men in the country with liveries or fees for to maintain their malicious enterprises; and this extendeth as well to the takers as to the givers: and stewards and bailiffs of great lords, which by their office or power undertake to bear or maintain quarrels, pleas, or debates, that concern other parties than such as touch the estate of their lords or themselves." (33 Edw. I. st. 2.) As to conspiracies among workmen, see 6 Geo. IV. c. 129, "Servants," Vol. V.

From this definition of conspirators, it seems clearly to follow, contrary to the opinion of Lord Coke, that not only those who actually cause an innocent man to be indicted, and also to be tried upon the indictment, whereupon he is lawfully acquitted, are properly conspirators, but that those also are guilty of this offence who barely conspire to indict a man falsely and maliciously, whether they do any act in prosecution of such conspiracy or not. (1 Hawk. c. 71, s. 2; Reg. v. Best, 2 Ld. Raym. 1169.)

Action for.

But an action will not lie for the conspiracy unless it be put in execution; for in such case the damage is the ground of the action. (Savile v. Roberts, 1 Ld. Raym. 378.)

Instances of conspiracy against individuals.

Combining together by unlawful means or devices to marry a girl to get her fortune amounts to a conspiracy, and is indictable. (3 Ves. & B. 173.)

Conspiring to seduce a girl is indictable. (R. v. Lord Gray and others, 3 St. Tr. 519.)

If a man and woman marry in the name of another, for the purpose of raising a specious title to the estate of the person whose name is assumed, it is a conspiracy. (R. v. Robinson and Taylor, 1 Leach, 37.)

It is indictable to conspire for the purpose of bringing about the marriage of paupers, in order to burthen a parish with the maintenance of both, if it were accomplished by threats, force, or other unfair or unlawful means, otherwise not. (R. v. Seward, 3 Nev. & M. 557; 1 Ad. & Ellis, 706; and see R. v. Tarrant, and R. v. Fowler, 1 East's P. C. 461, post.)

A conspiracy to procure a marriage between poor persons of different parishes, for the purpose of exonerating the parish of the woman, and charging the other parish, is not an indictable offence, unless the parties were unwilling to marry, or some forcible or fraudulent means of bringing about the marriage were resorted to. A conspiracy to exonerate from the prospective burthen of maintaining a pauper, not at the time actually chargeable, and to throw the burthen upon another parish, by means not in themselves unlawful, is not indictable. In such an indictment, a statement that the woman was a poor unmarried woman with child is not equivalent to a statement of actual chargeability. (R. v. Seward, 3 Nev. & M. 557; 1 Ad. & Ellis, 706, S. C.)

A conspiracy to injure the reputation of an individual by indicting or preferring a complaint before a magistrate, though no indictment or complaint be preferred, is indictable; (R. v. Parsons, 1 Bla. Rep. 392;) and this though the offence intended to be charged was not cognizable in the temporal courts. (1 Salk. 174.)

It seems an indictment lies for conspiring to cheat and defraud a man by selling him an unsound horse. (R. v. Gill, 2 B. & Ald. 204; 1 Stark. C. P. N. 402.)

The third count of an indictment to obtain money under false pretences, charged the offence in general terms as a conspiracy to cheat the prosecutor of his money, without setting out the false pretences. The evidence was, that the prosecutor was told by the defendant that the horses in question had been the property of a lady deceased, and were then the property of her sister, and never had been the property of a horse-dealer, &c., all these statements being false, and the defendants knowing that nothing but a belief of their truth would have induced the prosecutor to make the purchase. The conspiracy was proved: it was held, that this count was sufficient, and that it charged an indictable offence. (Reg. v. Kenrick, 12 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 135.) The fourth and fifth counts of the same indictment charged the obtaining of money by false pretences; the evidence was, that the defendant, in order to induce the prosecutor to make the contract of purchase, made the false pretences aforesaid respecting the horses sold, and thereby induced him to buy: and it was held, that these counts were good, and that the liability to an action did not of itself furnish any answer to the indictment. (Id.)

1. What amounts to.

In another case it was considered, that an agreement by brokers, before a sale by auction, that one only should bid for each article sold, and that all articles thus bought by any of them should be sold amongst themselves at a fair price, and the difference between the auction price and the fair price divided amongst them, is indictable as a conspiracy. (Levy v. Levy, 6 C. & P. 239.)

But it is not the combining to do any wrongful act that constitutes a conspiracy; and it has been held that no indictment lies for conspiring to commit a civil trespass on a preserve to take game, though effected in the night, and with destructive weapons. (R. v. Turner, 13 East, 228.)

An agreement between individuals to support each other in all undertakings, lawful or unlawful, is illegal. (9 Co. 56.)

But associations to prosecute felons, and even to put laws in force against political offenders, are lawful. (R. v. Murray and others, cor. Abbott, C. J. Guildhall, 1823.) And two or more persons may consult and agree to prosecute a person who is guilty, or against whom there are reasonable grounds of suspicion, without being liable to this offence. (R. v. Best, 1 Salk. 174; 2 Ld. Raym. 1167.)

An agreement amongst several to hiss and condemn a play, &c. is indictable. (Clifford v. Brandon, 2 Camp. 358; see a declaration on the case in an action for such a conspiracy, and the law, in Gregory v. Duke of Brunswick, 13 L. J. (N. S.) 34, C. P.)

A conspiracy to deprive a man of an office under an illegal trading company, is not indictable. (R. v. Stratton, 1 Camp. 549, n.)

But an indictment for a conspiracy to fabricate false shares in a joint stock company, and sell them as good shares, may be sustained, although such company may not be well constituted. (R. v. Mott, 2 C. & P. 521.)

Against the public.

A conspiracy to injure public trade, to affect public health, to violate public police, or to insult public justice or the like, is indictable. Thus it is an indictable offence to conspire on a particular day by false rumours to raise the price of the government funds, with intent to injure the subjects who should purchase on that day; (R. v. De Berenger, 3 M. & Sel. 67;) for, as there observed by Lord Ellenborough, C. J., the purpose itself is mischievous; it strikes at the price of a vendible commodity in the market, and if it gives it a fictitious price, by means of false rumours, it is a fraud levelled against all the public, for it is against all such as may possibly have any thing to do with the funds on that day. And it was held in the same case, that an indictment for such an offence need not specify the particular persons who purchased as the persons intended to be injured, for the conspiracy is the thing which constitutes the crime; and it is sufficient if the indictment state the conspiracy as it existed at the time when the crime was complete.

A conspiracy by persons to cause themselves to be reputed men of property, in order to defraud tradesmen, is indictable. (R. v. Roberts & al., 1 Campb 399.)

So is a conspiracy to defraud the public by issuing and negociating bills in the name of a fictitious and pretending banking firm. (R. v. Hevey & al., 2 East's P. C. 858.)

A conspiracy by magistrates to present a false certificate that a road under indictment is in repair is indictable. (R. v. Mawbey, 6 T. R. 619, 638.)

So is a conspiracy to prevent a prosecution for a felony. (14 Ves. 65.)

1. What amounts to.

So is a conspiracy to commit a felony or misdemeanor. (R. v. Pollman, 2 Camp. 229: R. v. Roberts, 1 Camp. 399.)

So, where several persons conspired to procure others to rob one of them, in order, by convicting the robber, to obtain the reward then given by statute in such a case, and the party who accordingly committed the robbery was afterwards convicted and actually executed; these persons were indicted for the conspiracy, and convicted. (R. v. Macdaniel & al., 1 Leach, 45; Fost. 130.)

Journeymen confederating and refusing to work for certain wages, may be indicted for a conspiracy, notwithstanding the statutes which regulate their work and wages do not direct this mode of prosecution; for the offence consists in conspiring, and not in the refusal, and all conspiracies are illegal, although the subject-matter of them may be lawful. (R. v. Journeymen Tailors of Cambridge, 8 Mod. 11; R. v. Edwards, id. 320.)

A conspiring to sell unwholesome provisions is indictable. (R. v. Macarty, 2 Ld. Raym. 1179.)

No act need be done.

To complete the offence of conspiracy to do an unlawful act, no act need be done in consequence thereof. A bare conspiracy to do a lawful act to an unlawful end is a crime. Suppose there is a conspiracy to let lands of 10*l.* a-year value to a poor man, in order to get him a settlement, or to make a certificate man a parish officer, or a conspiracy to send a woman big of a bastard child into another parish to be delivered there, and so to charge that parish with the child; certainly these are crimes indictable. (Per. cur. R. v. Edwards and others, 8 Mod. 321; and see R. v. Parsons, 1 Bla. Rep. 392; R. v. Seward, 3 Nev. & M. 557; 1 Ad. & Ell. 706, S. C.)

How many must be concerned in.

One person alone cannot be guilty of a conspiracy (1 Hawk. c. 72, s. 8); but one person may be prosecuted for having conspired with others, and may be tried and convicted alone, if the others escape or die before the time of trial, or the finding of the bill. (R. v. Kinnersley, 1 Stra. 193; R. v. Niccolls, 2 Stra. 1227) And if all but one be acquitted, and it is not stated as a conspiracy with certain persons unknown, the conviction of a single defendant will be invalid and no judgment can be passed on him. (Poph. 202; R. v. Scott, 3 Burr. 1262; R. v. Sudbury, 12 Mod. 262; 1 Hawk. c. 72, s. 8.) But if an action on the case in nature of a conspiracy be brought against several persons, and all but one be acquitted, yet judgment may be given against that one only. (1 Hawk. c. 72, s. 8.)

And where two conspire and one dies, the survivor may still be indicted for the conspiracy. (R. v. Niccolls, 2 Stra. 1227; 13 East, 412, n. S. C.)

And even where the other defendant has pleaded and is alive, but has not been tried, a verdict of guilty of conspiring with him may be sustained, and judgment given on it, although it is possible he may be afterwards acquitted. R. v. Cooke, 5 B. & Cress. 538; 7 D. & R. 672, S. C.)

If a conspiracy be formed and a person joins it afterwards, he is equally guilty with the original conspirators. (Reg. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 297.)

Husband and wife guilty of.

A husband and wife alone cannot be indicted for a conspiracy, because they are esteemed but as one person in law. (1 Hawk. c. 72, s. 8.)

But in the case of R. v. Cope and others (1 Stra. 144), the husband and wife and servants were indicted for a conspiracy to ruin the trade of the prosecutor, who was the King's card maker. The evidence against them was, that they had at several times given money to the prosecutor's apprentices to put grease into the paste, which had spoiled the cards. But there was no account given that ever more than one at a time was present, though it was proved they had all given money in their turns. It was objected that this could not be a conspiracy; for several persons might do the same thing, without having any previous communication with each other. But it was ruled, that the defendants being all of a family, and concerned in making of cards, it would amount to evidence of a conspiracy. And see further, post, 883.

II. Prosecution and Indictment for, and Trial of.

2. Prosecution for.

Modes of proceeding for.

In the case of a conspiracy to indict a person of a crime, or carry on any other malicious prosecution against him, his remedy is by action on the case, or else by indictment (see 5 East, 582); or sometimes he may move the Court of Queen's Bench for and obtain a criminal information against the offenders, but then he will generally be compelled to abandon any civil remedy. (R. v. Fielding, 2 Burr. 719; R. v. Sparrow, 2 T. R. 198.) To sustain an action on the case some actual damage must be sustained. (Savile v. Roberts, 1 Ld. Raym. 378. See Gregory v. Duke of Brunswick, 1 Cur. & K. 24.) The most usual course, especially where pecuniary compensation is not the object, is to indict the parties. (See 5 East, 582.)

Indictment.

Indictment.]—The venue should be laid in the county where the conspiracy took place (Reg. v. Best, 1 Salk. 174; 2 Ld. Raym. 1167, S. C.) It seems it may be laid in the county in which an act was done by any one of the conspirators in furtherance of their common design. (R. v. Brisac, 4 East, 164.)

It is usual to set out the overt acts, that is to say, those acts which may have been done by any one or more of the conspirators, in pursuance of the conspiracy, and in order to effect the common purpose of it; but this is not absolutely requisite if the indictment charge what is in itself an unlawful conspiracy. (R. v. Seward, 1 Ad. & Ell. 706; 3 Nev. & M. 557, S. C.; and see R. v. Gill, 2 B. & Ald. 204; 1 East, P. C. 461.) "The indictment ought to show that the conspiracy was for an unlawful purpose, or to effect a lawful purpose by unlawful means." (Per Denman, C. J. in R. v. Seward, 3 Nev. & M. 561; 1 Ad. & Ell. 713, S. C.)

If the indictment lay the offence to be an unlawful conspiracy, showing the facts to constitute it such, this, whether it be to charge a man with criminal acts, or such only as may affect his reputation, is fully sufficient. The several charges in the indictment are not to be considered as distinct and separate counts, but as one and the same united and continued offence, pursued through its different stages. (R. v. Rispal, 1 Bla. Rep. 368.)

An indictment against several persons for conspiring together, "by indirect means," to prevent one H. B. from exercising the trade of a tailor, was held good, without stating the mode. The illegal combination is the gist of the offence, and it is enough to state the conspiracy and the object. (R. v. Eccles and others, 1 Leach, 274; 13 East, 230, n. S. C.)

An indictment charging that the defendants conspired "by divers false pretences, and subtle means and devices, to obtain and acquire to themselves of and from P. D. and G. D. divers large sums of money of the respective monies of the said P. D. and G. D., and to cheat and defraud them respectively thereof," was held sufficient; for the gist of the offence being the conspiracy, if that fact and its object be stated, the particular means and devices need not be set out. (R. v. Gill and another, 2 B. & Ald. 204.)

But in a more recent case it was, it seems, considered that an indictment stating merely that the defendants conspired "by false, artful and deceitful stratagems and contrivances, as much as in them lay, to injure, oppress, aggrieve and impoverish" the prosecutor, was too general and indefinite. (R. v. Biers, 3 Nev. & M. 475; 1 Ad. & Ell. 327, S. C.) So a conspiracy "to defraud the creditors of W. E." is too general. (R. v. Fowle, 4 C. & P. 492.) And an indictment for a conspiracy to cheat and defraud a party of the fruits and advantages of a verdict obtained, is also bad for generality. (R. v. Richardson, 1 M. & Rob. 402.)

When the object of the combination is to indict the prosecutor, it is not necessary to show with what particular offence it was intended to charge him, but it will suffice to say that they conspired "to indict him of a crime punishable by the laws of this kingdom," and then it may be alleged that they, according to the conspiracy, did falsely indict him (R. v. Spragg, 2 Burr. 993.) In such a case, there is no occasion to aver the innocence of the party injured, if the conspiracy be laid falsely; for he will be presumed guiltless until the contrary appears. (R. v. Best, 1 Salk. 174; R. v. Kinnersley, 1 Stra. 193.)

2. Prosecution for.

So, in an indictment for conspiring to pervert the course of justice, by producing a false certificate of justices of peace that a road indicted was in repair, in order to influence the judgment of the court, it is not necessary to allege that the defendants knew the certificate to be false; it is sufficient that they agreed to certify the fact as true, without knowing it to be so. (R. v. Mawbey, 6 T. R. 619.)

An indictment for a conspiracy "to defraud J. W. of divers goods, and in pursuance of the conspiracy defrauding him of divers goods, to wit, of the value of 100*l.*" is good, without specifying such goods (1 Chit. Rep. 698); and the court in such case would not, it should seem, call upon the prosecutor to deliver a particular of such goods (Id.); and an indictment for conspiracy to defraud divers persons seems sufficient, without stating their names. (R. v. De Berenger, 3 M. & Sel. 75; sed vide 4 C. & P. 492; R. v. Biers, 1 Ad. & Ell. 337; 3 Nev. & M. 475, supra.)

An indictment for a conspiracy to obtain goods by false pretences is bad if it does not state to whom the goods belonged. And an averment that the defendants conspired by false pretences to obtain goods from A., and in pursuance of such conspiracy fraudulently did obtain the goods from A., and did cheat and defraud A. thereof, to the great damage of A., does not sufficiently state that the goods were A.'s goods. (Reg. v. Parker, 2 Gale & D. 709.)

A count for conspiring to deceive and defraud divers of her majesty's subjects who should bargain with defendants for the sale of goods, of great quantities of such goods, without making payment, remuneration, or satisfaction for the same, with intent to obtain profit and emolument to defendants (not stating with particularity what the defendants conspired to do), is bad, as not showing that the conspiracy was for a purpose necessarily criminal. But it is no objection that the count does not name the parties who were to have been defrauded. (Reg. v. Peck, 9 Ad. & E. 686.)

And a count charging that defendants, being indebted to divers persons, conspired to defraud them of the payment of such debts, and in pursuance of such conspiracy executed a false and fraudulent deed of bargain and sale and assignment of certain goods from two of themselves to a third, with intent thereby to obtain emoluments to themselves, is bad, for omitting to show in what respect the deed was false and fraudulent. (Reg. v. Peck, 9 Ad. & Ell. 686.)

An indictment charged the defendants with conspiring to cause goods, which had been imported, &c., and in respect of which certain duties of customs were payable to the queen, to be carried away from port without payment of duties, with intent to defraud the queen in her revenue of customs; there were also counts charging the defendants generally with conspiring to defraud the queen of duties by false and fraudulent representations of the value and nature of the goods: Held, that the gist of the indictment being the conspiracy, the indictment was sufficiently certain, without showing what the goods were, or what duties were payable on them. (R. v. Blake, 13 Law J. N. S. Mag. Ca. 131.)

Where, in an indictment for a conspiracy, the overt acts were charged to have been done with intent to defraud L. G, who was entitled to receive the sum of money in question, and the jury found that L. G. was not so entitled: it was held, that a verdict of guilty could not be supported. (Reg. v. Dean, 4 Jur. 364.)

An indictment charged that defendants did conspire, &c. to cheat and defraud certain liege subjects, being tradesmen (not naming them), of divers large quantities of their goods and chattels. It then set out several overt acts, namely, the purchase, by one of the defendants, of goods of several tradesmen (naming them) upon credit, and of other tradesmen, whose names were unknown, with direction that the goods should be delivered at the house of that defendant; that no payment was ever made for them; the pretence that certain debts were due from that defendant to the others (setting out the debts); that actions, on account of these fictitious debts, were commenced against such defendant by the others, and judgments signed for want of a plea, and writs of fi. fa. sued out upon the judgments, by virtue of which the goods and chattels so fraudulently obtained were taken in execution; concluding with an averment, that so the defendants did cheat and defraud the tradesmen who supplied the goods, &c. All the overt acts were alleged to have been done in pursuance of the conspiracy:—it was held, in arrest of judgment, that the count would have been good without the allegation of the overt acts; and that it was not material that the names of the tradesmen (in the early part of it) to be defrauded, should be stated; and also, that, if necessary, the overt acts might be looked to, in aid of the charging part of the indictment. (R. v. King and others, 13 Law J. N. S. Mag. C. 118.)

2. Prosecution for.

Where the act only becomes illegal from the means used to effect it, so much must be stated as will show its illegality, and charge the defendant with a substantive offence. Thus, in an indictment for a combination to marry paupers, in order to throw the burthen of maintaining them on another parish, it is necessary to show that some threat, promise, bribe or sinister means was made use of, because the act of marriage being in itself lawful, the procuring it requires this explanation in order to be charged as a crime; (R. v. Fowler, 1 East's P. C. 461, 462; R. v. Seward, 3 Nev. & M. 557; 1 Ad. & Ell. 706, S. C.;) it is also material in this case to show the intent of the combination, by stating that the husband was a pauper, and the wife legally settled in the parish from which she was taken. (R. v. Edwards, 8 Mod. 320; R. v. Tanner, 1 Esp. Rep. 306, 307.)

To allege in the indictment that an unmarried woman in a parish was with child is not equivalent to an allegation that she was chargeable to such parish. (Per Lord Denman, C. J. and Taunton, J. in R. v. Seward, 1 Ad. & Ell. 706.)

It is questionable whether an allegation that the defendants conspired together for the purpose of doing an act, is equivalent to an allegation that they conspired to do it. (See R. v. Seward, 3 Nev. & M. 557; 1 Ad. & Ell. 706, S. C.)

In an indictment for a conspiracy to indict or charge a man with an offence, it is not necessary to aver that the man is innocent of the offence; (R. v. Kinnersley & al. 1 Stra. 193;) for he shall be presumed to be innocent until the contrary appear. (See R. v. Best, 1 Salk. 174; R. v. Spragg, 2 Burr. 993.)

Particulars of charge.

Particulars of Charge.]—If the counts of an indictment for a conspiracy be framed in a general form, a judge will order that the prosecutor shall furnish the defendants with a particular of the charges, and that particular should give the same information to the defendants that would be given by a special count. But the judge will not compel the prosecutor to state in his particular the specific acts with which the defendants are charged, and the times and places at which those acts are alleged to have occurred. (R. v. Hamilton and others, 7 Car. & P. 448; and see title "Particulars," Vol. V.)

Jurisdiction of sessions.

Trial.]—Justices in sessions, or the recorder of a county, have no jurisdiction over the offence of illegal combination or conspiracy, except conspiracies or combinations to commit any offence which they have jurisdiction to try when committed by one person. (5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1. And see Rex v. Rispal, 3 Burr. 1320, 1321; 1 W. Bla. 368, S. C.)

New trial.

New Trial.]—On a motion for a new trial, or in arrest of judgment, all the defendants convicted must be present in court, and this though the motion be made on behalf of one of them only. (R. v. Spragg, 2 Burr. 936; R. v. Teal and others, 11 East, 307; R. v. Askew, 3 M. & Sel. 9; R. v. Lord Cochrane, 3 M. & Sel. 10, n.; R. v. Hollingberry, 4 B. & Crcs. 329; 6 D. & R. 345, S. C.)

2. Prosecution for.

But when the indictment is removed into the Queen's Bench by certiorari, and set down for argument, it is not necessary that the defendant should appear in person, because it is in the nature of a special verdict, and his innocence may still be presumed. (R. v. Niccolls, 2 Stra. 1227.)

III. Evidence of.

Evidence.

The evidence must bring the case within the rules already laid down as to what is a conspiracy. (Ante, 880.)

Conspiracy may be inferred.

The actual fact of conspiring need not be proved; but it may be inferred from circumstances and the concurring conduct of the defendants. (R. v. Parsons, 1 Bla. Rep. 392.) And so if, on a charge of conspiracy, it appear that two persons, by their acts, are pursuing the same object often by the same means, one performing part of an act, and the other completing it, for the attainment of the object, the jury may draw the conclusion that there is a conspiracy. (Reg. v. Murphy, 8 Car. & P. 297.)

How far acts of one defendant evidence against the rest.

In prosecutions for conspiracies it is an established rule, that where several persons are proved to have combined together for the same illegal purpose, any act done by one of the party, in pursuance of the original concerted plan, and with reference to the common object, is in the contemplation of law the act of the whole party; and therefore, the proof of such act, after proof of the combination, would be evidence against any of the others who were engaged in the same conspiracy; and any declarations also made by one of the party at the time of doing such illegal act, seem not only to be evidence against himself, as tending to determine the quality of the act, but also to be evidence against the rest of the party, who are equally responsible as if they had themselves done the act. But what one of the party may have been heard to say at some other time, when no act was committed by him, as to the share which some of the others had in the execution of the common design, or as to the object of the conspiracy, cannot, it seems, be admitted as evidence against the other defendants. (1 Phil. Evid. 94; R. v. Salter, 5 Esp. 125; 2 Stark. 141; R. v. Roberts, 1 Camp. 399.) And in R. v. Henry Hunt and others, for unlawfully meeting together with persons unknown, for the purpose of exciting discontent and disaffection, it was held (H. Hunt having presided at their meeting) that resolutions passed at a former meeting assembled a short time before, in a distant place, and at which H. Hunt also presided, and the avowed object of which meeting was that of the meeting mentioned in the indictment, were admissible in evidence to show the intention of H. Hunt in assembling and attending the meeting in question. (R. v. Hunt, 3 B. & Ald. 566.)

But if, on a charge of conspiracy to annoy a broker who distrained for church-rates, it be proved that one of the defendants (the other being present) excited the persons assembled at a public meeting to go in a body to the broker's house, evidence that they did so go is receivable, although neither of the defendants went with them; but evidence of what a person who was at the meeting said some days after, when he was himself distrained upon for church-rates, is not so. (Reg. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 297.)

For the distinction is well established between the admissibility of declarations of one accompanying the acts of the conspirators and statements subsequently made as evidence against the rest. Thus in Reg. v. Blake and Tye, T. T. 1844, which was an information at the suit of the crown against a custom-house agent and a custom-house officer, for having conspired to defraud her Majesty by causing a certain quantity of goods to be delivered out of the stores of her Majesty without the payment of the duties required by law, the counsel for the crown tendered in evidence at the trial, along with other things, two documents, for the purpose of showing Blake's connection with the transaction. One of these was an entry, called a "sight entry," by Tye in a book which, according to the course of such business, he used in the successive stages of the alleged conspiracy. The other was the counterfoil of Tye's own check-book with his bankers, in which he stated the fact that 82*l.*, part of the produce of the fraudulent operations of the defendants, was to be carried to the credit of Blake as his proportion of the proceeds. The admission of either of these two documents, as evidence against Blake, was objected to at the trial, but admitted. A new trial was granted on the ground that the latter was not admissible. On making the rule absolute Lord Denman said, that with regard to the admissibility of the sight entries made by the defendant Tye, there seemed to be little if any doubt that they had been properly received against Blake. These entries, in fact, could not so properly be considered to be mere declarations by one conspirator made in the absence of another, as acts which constituted the successive stages of the conspiracy itself, or at least as arising so necessarily and contemporaneously out of the transaction as to be a part of it; such evidence was clearly receivable according to all authorities; but the counterfoil of the check-book stood upon a totally different ground, and, in fact, was equivalent to a declaration by Tye that he had paid the money in question to Blake as his part of the fruits of the conspiracy. It was perfectly clear, according to all the principles of the law of evidence upon this point, that such a declaration of Tye could not be received against Blake. In support of this position his lordship referred to the case of The King v. Hardy, after having entered into an examination of which his lordship went on to say that the memorandum upon the counterfoil was a mere declaration by one conspirator of the part which another had in the conspiracy. If the Court were to open the door for the admission of such statements they would frequently find themselves extremely embarrassed by the fact of one conspirator making such a statement about the others or some of them as should completely exonerate himself and throw all the blame upon the others. It was clear for these reasons that a mere statement which one conspirator addresses to a third party, or which he made upon an occasion when he thought proper to do by himself anything which was not necessary for the furtherance of the common object, could not be received in evidence against any other person, and upon these grounds the rule for the new trial would be made absolute. And Mr. Justice Patteson also remarked on it as a singular circumstance, that in all the authorities which had been relied upon by the counsel for the crown, including Watson's case and the recent case of Reg. v. Murphy (supra), the distinction laid down in the text-books between declarations accompanying the acts of the conspirators and subsequent statements made of antecedent events preserved had been particularly insisted on.

In another case where A. was charged with having conspired with W. J. and others unknown, to raise insurrections and obstruct the laws, it was proved that A. and W. J. were members of a chartist lodge, and that A. and W. J. were at the house of the latter on a certain day, on the evening of which A. directed people assembled at the house of W. J. to go to the race-course at P., whither W. J. and other persons had gone: it was held, that, on the trial of A., evidence was receivable that W. J. had, at an earlier part of the same day, directed other persons to go to the race-course; and it being proved that W. J. and an armed party of the persons assembled went from the New Inn, it was held, that evidence might be given of what W. J. said at the New Inn, it being all one transaction. (Reg. v. Shellard, 9 Car. & P. 277.)

In the Queen's case it was considered that on a prosecution for a crime to be proved by conspiracy, general evidence of an existing conspiracy may in the first instance be received, as a preliminary step to that more particular evidence, by which it is to be shown that the individual defendants were guilty participators in such conspiracy; that this is often necessary to render the particular evidence intelligible, and to show the true meaning and character of the acts of individual defendants. But in such cases the general nature of the whole evidence intended to be adduced should be opened to the court; and if upon such opening it should appear manifest that previously no particular proof sufficient to affect the individual defendants is intended to be adduced, it would become the duty of the judge to stop the case in limine, and not to allow the general evidence to be received, which,

3. Evidence of.

even if attended with no other bad effect, such as exciting an unreasonable prejudice, would certainly be a useless waste of time. (The Queen's case, 2 Brod. & Bing. 310.)

Upon an indictment against workmen for a conspiracy against their employers, to prevent them from taking any apprentice, it was held that evidence of their having turned out from their employment with intent to compel their masters to dismiss any one apprentice, was sufficient to support the charge. (R. v. Furguson and another, 2 Stark. N. P. C. 489.)

Where several conspire to procure an employment under government by corrupt means, it seems that a banker, who receives the money in order to pay it over for that purpose, becomes a party to the conspiracy. (R. v. Pollman, 2 Camp. 233.)

In Watson's case (2 Stark. C. N. P. 140, and see Stark. on Evid. part iv. 404), after evidence of a treasonable conspiracy, to which the prisoner, who was upon his trial, was a party, it was held, that papers found in the lodgings of a conspirator, at a subsequent period to the apprehension of the prisoner, might be read in evidence, although no absolute proof had been given of their previous existence, strong presumptive evidence having been adduced to show that the lodgings had not been entered by any one in the interval between the apprehension of the prisoner and the finding of the papers. Upon the same trial, evidence having been given that a paper containing seditious questions and answers had been found in the possession of a conspirator, but had not been published, the court doubted whether the paper was sufficiently connected by evidence with the object of the conspiracy to render it admissible, and it was not read; but they held, that if proof were to be given that the instrument was to be used for the purposes of the conspiracy, it would clearly be admissible.

It makes no difference as to the admissibility of the act or declaration of a conspirator against a defendant, whether the former be indicted or not, or tried or not, with the latter, for the making one a co-defendant does not make his acts or declarations evidence against another, any more than they were before; the principle upon which they are admissible at all is, that the act or declaration of one is the act or declaration of both, united in one common design, a principle which is wholly unaffected by the consideration of their being jointly indicted. Neither does it make it material what the nature of the indictment is, provided the offence involve a conspiracy. Thus upon an indictment for murder, if it appeared that others, together with the prisoner, conspired to perpetrate the crime, the act of one, done in pursuance of that intention, would be evidence against the rest. (R. v. Stone, 6 T. R. 528.)

The letters of one defendant to another are, under certain circumstances, admissible in evidence to rebut the charge of conspiracy, if they show that he was the dupe of the other, and was not himself a participator in any fraud. (R. v. Whitehead, 1 Car. & P. 67.)

Where the indictment charged the defendant with conspiring with other persons unknown "to cheat and defraud J. D. and others," and laid as overt acts that the defendant did falsely pretend to J. D. that he was a merchant named G., and did, under colour of pretended contract with J. D. for the purchase of certain goods of "the said J. D. and others," obtain a large quantity of the goods "of the said J. D. and others," with intent to defraud "the said J. D. and others," it was held by the judges, that the words "and others" throughout this indictment must be taken to mean others the partners of J. D., and not other persons wholly unconnected with J. D.; and that, on the trial of the indictment, evidence was not admissible to show that the defendant attempted to defraud other persons wholly unconnected with J. D. (Reg. v. Steel, 1 Car. & M. 337.)

B. and C. were indicted for conspiring to extort money from the prosecutor, A., by means of a charge of forgery, in which indictment a letter written by B., in execution of the conspiracy, and charging A. with the forgery of a check on C.'s banker, is set out. The letter was given in evidence, as were also conversations referring to the check alleged to have been forged; and it was held that the prosecutor was not bound to produce the check, though it appeared that such check was actually in existence. (Rex v. Aldridge, 1 Nev. & M. 776.) 3. Evidence of.

Where two defendants were indicted for a conspiracy to commit a fraud, and the defence of one was, that he himself had been deceived by the representations of his co-defendant, and part of a written correspondence having been received in evidence for the crown; it was held, that the whole of the correspondence between the defendants, up to the time of the overt act of the conspiracy, was admissible in evidence for the defence. (R. v. Whitehead, D. & R. C. N. P. 61.)

If the manuscript of a hand-bill, published by order of a defendant, be given in evidence, a witness will be allowed to prove that he received a number of the printed copies of it from the defendant, without those copies being produced. (Reg. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 207.)

Where one of several defendants charged with a conspiracy has been acquitted, the record of acquittal is evidence for another defendant subsequently tried. (R. v. Horne Tooke, Old Bailey, 1794.) Where one of defendants acquitted.

Where one defendant in conspiracy dies between indictment and trial, it is no ground of venire de novo for a mis-trial if the trial proceeds against both, no suggestion of the death being entered on the record. (Reg. v. Kenrick, 12 Law Journ. N. S. M. C. 135.) Where one dies between indictment and trial.

Where on an indictment for a conspiracy against A., B., and C., C. called a witness, and examined him as to a conversation between himself (C.) and A., it was held, that the counsel for the prosecution were at liberty to examine as to other conversations between A. and C., although they tended chiefly to criminate A. who had called no witnesses. (R. v. Kroche, 2 Stark. 343.) Competency of witnesses.

The wife of one co-defendant, in a case of conspiracy, is not a competent witness for another defendant, for as a joint offence is charged against all the defendants, an acquittal of the others would be a ground for an acquittal of her husband. (R. v. Lockyer, 5 Esp. C. N. P. 107; R. v. Frederick, 2 Stra. 1094. See "Wife," Vol. VI.) Wife of co-defendant.

IV. Punishment, &c.

It is clear that those who are convicted of conspiracy at the suit of the party shall have judgment of fine and imprisonment, and to render the plaintiff his damages. (1 Hawk. c. 72, s. 9.) Punishment.

Also it is certain that he who is convicted at the suit of the king of a conspiracy to accuse another of a matter which may touch his life, shall have judgment that he shall lose the freedom and franchise of the law (whereby he is disabled as a juror and discredited as a witness.) (Ibid.)

And this is commonly called villanous judgment, which is given by the common law, and not by any statute. But it now is the better opinion, that the villanous judgment is by long disuse become obsolete, there being no instance of its having been pronounced since the reign of Edward the Third; but instead thereof the delinquents are usually sentenced to fine, imprisonment and surety for good behaviour. (4 Bla. Com. 136, 137; 2 Burr. 996; R. v. Spragg, id. 1027; 1 Hawk. c. 72, s. 9)

By the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 25, assaults committed in pursuance of a conspiracy to raise the rate of wages, are punishable with imprisonment with or without hard labour, for not exceeding two years, and the offender may be fined and required to find sureties for keeping the peace. (See ante, title "Assault.") Assaults to raise wages.

An attorney has been struck off the roll after a conviction for a conspiracy. (Anon. 1 Chit. Rep. 557; see Anon. 2 Dowl. 174.) Attorney.

I. Origin of Constables, and Nature of the Office in general.

Antiquity and origin of constables in general.

The sundry names of high constables, or constable of lathes, rapes, wapentakes, hundreds, and franchises, and the divers names also of petty constables, tithingmen, borsholders, borowheads, headborows, chiefpledges, and such other (if there be any) that bear office in towns, parishes, hamlets, tithings, or borowes, are all in effect but two, that is to say, constables and borsholders. (Lamb. Const. 4.)

1. Origin of, and Nature of Office in general.

The word constable is evidently a compound, but it seems to be uncertain from whence it has been originally derived.

Borsholders.

Borsholders (which is the other general name, and doth contain within it the meaning of tithingman, borowheads, headborows, thirdborows, and chief-pledges,) is a word compounded of the Saxon borge, borrow, or borhoe, a pledge, and ealder, the elder, chief, or head; and borshealder, in one word, doth mean the chief or head of the sureties or pledges. For the understanding whereof it is to be remembered, that by the ancient laws of this realm (before the coming of King William the Conqueror) it was ordained for the more sure keeping of the peace, and for the better repressing of thieves and robbers, that all free-born men should cast themselves into several companies, by ten in each company; and that every of those ten men of the company should be surety and pledge for the forthcoming of his fellows; so that if any harm were done by any of these ten against the peace, then the rest of the ten should be amerced, if he of their company that did the harm should fly, and were not forthcoming to answer to that wherewith he should be charged. And for this cause the companies are yet in some places of England called boroes, of the said word borge, borrow, or borhoe, signifying a pledge or surety; and in other places they are called tithings, because they contain (as hath been said) the number of ten men with their families. And even as ten times ten do make an hundred, so because it was then also appointed that ten of these companies should at certain times meet together for their matters of greater weight, therefore that general assembly, or court, was and yet is called a hundred. Furthermore, it was then also ordained, that if any man were of so evil credit that he could not get himself to be received into one of these tithings or borows, then he should be shut up in prison, as a man unworthy to live at liberty amongst men abroad. Now whereas every of these tithings or borows did use to make choice of one man amongst themselves to speak and to do in the name of them all, he was, therefore, in some places, called the tithingman, in other places the boroes elder, (whom we now call borsholder,) in other places the borohead or headborow, and in some other places the chiefpledge, which last name doth plainly expound the other three that are next before it; for head or elder of the boroes and chief of the pledges are all one; and in some shires, where every third borough hath a constable, there the officers of the other two are called thirdborowes. And in these tithings or boroes sundry good orders were observed; and amongst others, first, that every man of the age of twenty-one years should be sworn to the king. Then, that no man should be suffered to dwell in any town or places unless he were also received into some such suretyship and pledge as is aforesaid. Thirdly, that if any of these pledges were imprisoned for his offence, then he ought not to be delivered without the assent of the rest of his pledges. Again, that no man might remove out of one tything or boroe to dwell in another, without lawful warrant in that behalf. Lastly, that every of these pledges should yearly be presented and brought forth by their chief pledge at a general assembly for that purpose, which we yet in remembrance thereof do call the view of frankpledge, or the leet court. (Lamb. Const. 6, 7.)

Origin of hundreds.

In some places at this day there is both a tithingman and constable, where the tithing man is as it were a deputy to execute the office in the constable's absence; but there are some things which a constable hath power to do, that tithingmen cannot intermeddle with; for the constable may do whatever the tithingman may do, but not e converso, the tithingman not having an equal power with the constable. But in places where there is no constable, the office and authority of tithingman seems to be all one under a different name. (1 Bla. Com. 357.)

Office of constable is ministerial or judicial.

The office of constable is either strictly derivative or ministerial, as in obeying warrants and precepts of justices, coroners, and sheriffs, and the charges of private individuals; or is original and judicial, as a conservator of the peace at common law; and in many cases it is exercised by virtue of particular acts of parliament. It has been asserted, however, that the office is wholly ministerial and no way judicial (Bac. Abr. Const. D. 3; Burr. 1263); but this seems too general a position; see per Ashurst, J., R. v. Stubbs, 2 T. R. 406; Com. Dig. Leet, M. 5.)

1. Origin of, &c.

II. High Constables.

Antiquity of high constables.

By the statute of Winchester, 13 Edw. I. st. 2, s. 6, in every hundred and franchise two constables shall be chosen to make the view of armour; and they shall present defaults of armour, and of suits of towns, and of highways, and such as lodge strangers in uplandish towns, for whom they will not answer.

From hence Lord Coke and others will have it that high constables are no more ancient than this statute. But Mr. Hawkins (agreeably with Lambard, Dalton, and other authorities,) says, that it seems to be the better opinion that both constables of hundreds, which are commonly called high constables, and also constables of tithings, which are at this day commonly called petty constables or tithingmen, were by the common law, and not first ordained by the said statute of Winchester; for that statute doth not say that there shall be such officers constituted, but clearly seems to suppose that there were such before the making of it. (2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 33; Medhurst v. Watt, 3. Burr. 1259; Reg. v. Watkinson, 2 Per. & D. 617; 10 Ad. & Ell. 288, S. C.)

Office of high constable.

In short, the truth of the matter seems to be this; the far greatest part of the business of high constables of this day is not at all appropriated to them as high constables, but only as officers to execute the precepts of the justices of the peace, which any other person may do as well as they. The original and proper authority of a high constable, as such, seems to be the very same, and no other, within his hundred, as that of the petty constable within his vill; and therein, most probably, he is coeval with the petty constable. He has the superintendence and direction of all petty constables within his district; and he is in a manner responsible for their conduct, since he is bound to notice and to present their defaults, for his neglect of which duty he is representable himself. The other usual branches of this office, such as the surveying of bridges, the issuing of precepts concerning the appointing of overseers of the poor, surveyors of the highways, assessors and collectors of the land-tax and window duties, and in like manner the viewing of armour by the above-mentioned statute, are in him, not of necessity, but as matter of convenience, and it is discretionary in the justices whom they will appoint to be their officers in these cases; others have been superadded to their office, for the like reason of convenience, by sundry acts of parliament, such as the issuing of precepts for the licensing of alehouses, for the levying of county rates, and for returning lists of jurors; since the one person can do all much easier and cheaper than so many different persons.

In ancient times the practice was that if there was no feudal lord of the hundred, an annual officer was chosen, who was to preside over the whole hundred, who was called the high constable; but if the hundred were feudal, as it often anciently was, then such lord of the hundred administered the office himself. (Bac. Ab. Constable, A. 683.)

Appointment at sessions, and by justices, of high constables.

But the usual manner was, that the high constables of hundreds were chosen either at the quarter sessions of the peace, or if out of the sessions, then by the greater number of the justices of the division where they reside; and likewise that they are sworn either at the sessions or by warrant from the sessions; which course hath been often allowed and commanded by the justices of the assize. (Dalt. c. 28.) The reason thereof may be this, as hath been intimated above, namely, that their office at present doth not so much consist in executing the office of high constable as such, as in executing the justices' precepts, which they may do for the most part, whether they be indeed high constables or not.

The election was in the justices at large, and all must have had an opportunity of voting. (Reg. v. Watkinson, 2 Per. & D. 617; 10 Ad. & Ell. 288, S. C.)

Now by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 33, s. 8, it is enacted, that where high constables have heretofore usually been appointed at quarter sessions, they shall hereafter be appointed by such justices as may be present at the special sessions of their division, held for the purpose of hearing appeals against the rates of the several parishes in such division, or at any adjournment thereof; but if the hundred or other like division of the county for which any high constable is to be appointed be not included within the limits of any one division of the county for which such special sessions are held, then the justices of the peace for the county assembled at general or quarter sessions, or any adjournment thereof, may from time to time determine the divisions of the special sessions at which such high constable is to be appointed, and shall cause notice of such determination to be sent by post or otherwise to the high constable for the time being of such hundred or other like division. (See the act, in the Addenda to title "County Rate," Vol. II.) 2. High Constables.

Where a town or other place formerly under the general jurisdiction of the county had been erected into a separate jurisdiction, as a county of itself, within time of memory, and it had no high constable before, yet such an office was held incident to such a newly created district, and that the justices might appoint a high constable. (James v. Green, 6 T. R. 232; Weatherhead v. Drury, 11 East, 168.)

By stat. 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 13, high constables were to take the oaths of allegiance, supremacy and abjuration, as other persons who qualify for offices; but they are not within the stat. 25 Car. II. c. 2, as to receiving the sacrament, and subscribing the declaration against transubstantiation. But now by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 33, s. 8, every high constable, whether appointed at a special sessions, or at an adjournment thereof, or at a court leet, or any other special court, shall, if present at the time of his being appointed, then and there take his oath for the due execution of his office; and if otherwise, he shall forthwith, on the receipt of his appointment, go before the next or some other justice of the peace for the county in which he resides, and then and there take his said oath of office; and he shall not, in virtue of his office of high constable, be required to take any other oath than the said oath for the due execution of his office. Oath of high constable.

A high constable may appoint a deputy to do a ministerial act. (Post, 895). Deputy.

As to the fees and allowances to high constables in riots, &c. see post, 920, 920. Fees, &c. to, on riots, &c.

As to his accounting at the sessions, see post, 923. Accounting at sessions.

Formerly a high constable employed in collecting county rates might be required by justices to give security. (55 Geo. III. c. 51, s. 19. See Re Lodge, 2 Ad. & Ellis, 123.) But now by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 33, high constables are relieved from the duties of collecting county rates. (See title "County Rate," Vol. II. and the Addenda to that title.) Duties as to collecting rates abolished.

They are also relieved by the same act in certain cases from the duties of attending at quarter sessions. Relieved from attending sessions.

Formerly it was the custom for high constables to issue their warrants to petty constables to make presentments of all crimes cognizable at the assizes. This is now abolished by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 38 (post, 908). Presentments abolished.

The appointment of high constables is not affected by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, or the County Constable Acts, post, 923. The 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 25, expressly excepts the power of appointing them from the provisions of that act. Office of, not affected by Parish or County Constable Acts.

1. Who may be appointed Parish Constables, and of Deputy Constables and Substitutes—Exemptions from Office.

Preliminary observations as to the old and new office of parish constable.

It is proper to observe here that under the recent enactments relating to constables in parishes and counties, new officers called "constables" have been appointed, without entirely abolishing the old, and a good deal of complication has thus been introduced into this branch of the law. It would seem that high constables, chief constables, local constables, petty constables, parish constables, and special constables, may all now be appointed and exist concurrently; and that being the case, difficulties will doubtless frequently arise as to the limits of the duties of these several officers. In construing the recent statutes, however, one principle may be borne in mind, namely, that these acts having been passed chiefly, as it appears, with a view to the better preservation of the peace, relate only to the duties of constables in criminal cases, and the old constables may still be appointed as at common law for the performance of any civil duties hitherto entrusted to them. For this reason it will be necessary to retain here much of the old law on this subject; but as it is probable that the appointment of constables at common law will gradually fall into disuse, so much only of the old law will be stated as is likely to be useful in construing and applying the recent statutes.

Some practical instructions on the criminal duties of constables, and the manner of executing them, carefully drawn up, and applicable to all kinds of constables, will be found at the end of the Section IV. on "County Constables," post, 939.

Must be an inhabitant, &c.

At common law no person was to be a constable who was not an inhabitant of the place for which he was qualified to serve (Feild. Pen. Stat. 331); and actual residence in the parish was essential. (R. v. Adlard, 7 D. & R. 340; 4 B. & C. 722, S. C.) Therefore a person occupying a house and paying all parish rates in respect of it, and carrying on the trade of a printer, frequenting the house daily on all working days, and sometimes remaining there during the night at work, but not sleeping in the house, was held not liable to serve the office of constable in the parish where the house is situate (id.); et per Abbott, C. J., S. C. "The question in this case is, whether the defendant was legally liable to serve the office of constable; and the facts stated in the special case raise the question, whether the occupier of a tenement, situate within a parish, but not used as a dwelling-house, is an inhabitant, and as such liable to serve this office. The question is the same, whether the tenement consist of house or land, and whether its value be more or less. It has been contended on the part of the prosecution, that such an occupier is an inhabitant of the parish within which the tenement is situate; and for many purposes he certainly is. The word 'inhabitant,' however, like many others, varies in its import according to the subject-matter to which it is applied. For all the purposes of pecuniary charge it may be laid down, that such an occupier is an inhabitant, and therefore that he is liable to church rates, to which all inhabitants are by law to contribute, to the repairs of highways by common law, and to the repairs of bridges, if not by common law, at least by the statute 22 Hen. VIII. c. 5. My Lord Coke, in his commentary upon that statute, says that the word 'inhabitant' is the largest word of its kind, and that all occupiers are inhabitants within the meaning of the statute: but he adds, 'that servants are not within the statute.' (2 Inst. 702.) The poor laws I do not mention, because the statute of Elizabeth contains the word 'occupiers' as well as the word 'inhabitants.' But as was justly remarked on the part of the defendant, in all these cases the object is to raise a sum of money by the assessment of the property within the parish; and for the purpose of that assessment, it is perfectly immaterial whether the occupier is a resident within the parish or not: consequently, for such a purpose a non-resident occupier may fairly enough be deemed an inhabitant where that word happens to be the only mode of description applied to the individuals who are to bear the burden. The office of constable is of a very different character. It is a personal, not a pecuniary office, and must be performed by personal attendance within the parish. The personal presence of the constable is indispensable, for he is presumed to be known to all the inhabitants of the parish, and they are all bound to obey his orders, and to aid and assist him, whenever called upon, in the exercise of his lawful authority. In ancient times, constables were appointed at the leet or view of frankpledge, and in some places they are so still; though since the disuse of that court, other modes of appointment have been introduced and adopted pretty generally. Now the view of frankpledge is a view of the resiants within the leet, and is spoken of as such in almost all books. In alleging a prescription for a leet, the regular form is to describe it as a view of frankpledge of all the inhabitants and resiants within the parish; and even where the word 'inhabitant' only is used, as in Gresley's case, (8 Rep. 76,) it is evidently used in the sense of resiant. The statute of Marlbridge, c. 10, speaking of the sheriff's tourns, enacts, that those who have tenements in divers hundreds need not attend the tourns, except in the bailiwicks wherein they are conversant; and my Lord Coke, in his commentary thereon, (2 Inst. 122,) says 'if a man hath a house within two leets, he shall be taken to be conversant where his bed is.' That is a direct authority for saying that an inhabitant, with reference to the view of frankpledge, does not mean an occupier; nor can the word, indeed, have that meaning; for all males above the age of twelve years were bound to attend and do suit and service, many of whom could not possibly be occupiers, and if occupiers, as such, were not members of the leet, nor bound to do suit and service there; it seems to follow, necessarily, that the court could not compel them to serve this office. But it has been said, a non-resident occupier may be appointed to this office because he may serve it by deputy. I do not know that the appointee can make a deputy of his own right without the sanction of some higher authority. But even if he can, it by no means follows that he is compellable to serve an office which in its very nature requires personal services, especially when no necessity for his appointment is shown to exist. We are therefore of opinion that the verdict found at the trial was wrong, and must be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendant." (See further as to the meaning of the term "inhabitant," Donne v. Martyn, 8 B. & C. 62; 2 M. & R. 98, S. C.; R. v. Mashiter, 6 A. & E. 153; 1 N. & P. 314, S. C.; title "Poor," Vol. IV. p. 23.)

I. Who may be—Exemptions from Office.

And where H. occupied a warehouse in Manchester, within the jurisdiction of the court leet, where he carried on his business, but did not reside, and he usually lodged and boarded in Manchester from Monday till Saturday; he had also premises in Haslingden, in which township he slept when not at Manchester, and he did suit and service to the court leet of Haslingden: it was held, by Lord Denman, C. J., and Littledale, J., and semble per Patteson and Williams, Js., that H. was liable to be appointed a constable

1. Who may be—Exemptions from.

of the Manchester leet. (R. v. Mosley, 5 Nev. & M. 261; 3 Adol. & Ell. 488, S. C.)

It was held in R. v. Gener, (Cowp. 13,) that one who was resident within a private leet within the hundred was not therefore exempt from serving the office of constable of the hundred; and that a custom to elect such a one was good.

Tenants in ancient demesne, &c.

Tenants in ancient demesne were liable to serve as constables. Resiants in a manor, owing suit and service to a leet within the same, but not commensurate or extensive with it, the limits of the hundred reaching beyond those of the leet, are obliged to serve as constables out of the leet, but within the hundred. (R. v. George, Lofft. 365, 418.)

Who now qualified to be parish constables.

Now by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 5, "every able-bodied man resident within the parish, between the ages of twenty-five years and fifty-five years, rated to the relief of the poor or to the county rate, on any tenements of the net yearly value of 4*l.* or upwards, except such persons as shall be exempt or disqualified as hereinafter mentioned, shall be qualified and liable to serve as constable of that parish."

Exemptions from serving as constables.

And by s. 6 it is enacted, "That all peers; all members returned to serve in the Commons House of Parliament; all judges of her Majesty's courts of record at Westminster; all justices of the peace; all deputy lieutenants; all clergymen in holy orders; all priests of the Roman Catholic faith who shall have duly taken and subscribed the oaths and declarations required by law; all persons who shall teach or preach in any congregation of Protestant Dissenters, whose place of meeting is duly registered, and who shall follow no secular occupation, except that of a schoolmaster, producing a certificate of some justice of the peace of their having taken the oaths and subscribed the declaration required by law; all schoolmasters; all serjeants and barristers at law actually practising; all members of the society of doctors of law and advocates of the civil law actually practising; all attornies, solicitors and proctors duly admitted in any court of law or equity, or of ecclesiastical or admiralty jurisdiction, in which attornies, solicitors and proctors have usually been admitted, actually practising, and having duly taken out their annual certificates; all conveyancers and special pleaders below the bar; all officers of any such courts actually exercising the duties of their respective offices; all coroners, gaolers and keepers of houses of correction; all members and licentiates of the royal college of physicians in London, actually practising; all surgeons, being members of one of the royal colleges of surgeons in London, Edinburgh or Dublin, and actually practising; all apothecaries, having obtained a certificate to practise as an apothecary from the master, wardens and society of apothecaries of the city of London, and actually practising; all officers in her Majesty's navy or army on full pay; all persons enrolled and serving in any corps of yeomanry under officers having commissions from her Majesty or lieutenants of counties, or others specially authorised by her Majesty for that purpose; all pilots licensed by the Trinity House of Deptford Strond, Kingston-upon-Hull or Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and all masters of vessels in the buoy and light service employed by either of those corporations; and all pilots licensed by the lord warden of the cinque ports, or under any act of parliament or charter for the regulation of pilots in any other port; all the household servants of her Majesty; all officers of customs and excise; all sheriffs and sheriff's officers; all high constables; the clerks of all boards of guardians of the poor, established under the act for the amendment and better administration of the laws relating to the poor in England and Wales; the masters of all union workhouses; all county or district constables; all parish clerks; all registrars and superintendent registrars of birth, deaths and marriages; all churchwardens, overseers and relieving officers, shall be freed and exempt from serving the office of constable under this act."

Licensed victuallers, beer house keepers, gamekeepers, traitors and felons, disqualified.

Sect. 7. "All licensed victuallers and persons licensed to deal in any exciseable liquors or to sell beer by retail, all gamekeepers, and all persons who have been attainted of any treason or felony, or convicted of any infamous crime, shall be disqualified from serving the office of constable under this act."

Before the passing of this act, it was holden in R. v. Clarke, (1 T. R. 682,) that the king may exempt any person, or whole bodies corporate, from serving the office of constable; subject however to this restriction, that the exemption be not extended so far as to prevent the existence of the office in any particular place, and grants of this nature should be construed strictly.

1. Who may be, &c. Deputies. Substitutes.

The Queen may exempt.

It hath been said that a custom in a town that the inhabitants shall serve the office of constable by turns, according to the situation of their several houses, is not good; for that by such a course it may come to a woman's turn to be a constable, as an inhabitant of one of those houses; yet we find such customs allowed to be good in later books; and it seems that the consequence of the reasoning above mentioned may well be denied, since a woman in such case may procure another to serve for her. (2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 37; 1 Bac. Abr. 683; vide R. v. Stubbs, 2 T. R. 406.) But now the above statute imposes the liability to serve on "able-bodied men" only.

Women exempt.

Foreigners, although naturalized, have been considered exempt. (R. v. Ferdinand de Mierre, 5 Burr. 2790.)

Foreigners.

It has been said, that if a gentleman of quality be chosen constable of a town which hath sufficient persons besides to execute this office, and no special custom concerning it exist, perhaps he might be relieved by the Queen's Bench; but it seems that even a custom cannot exempt fitting persons from serving the office of constable, where there are not sufficient besides them to execute it. But these points seem not to be settled. (2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 41.) Such a person would now probably be compellable to find a substitute, under the provisions of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 12, infra.

Gentlemen, where there are others sufficient.

Deputy Constables or Substitutes.]—Inasmuch as the office is wholly ministerial, and no way judicial, it seems that a constable may, at common law, appoint a deputy to execute a warrant directed to him, when by reason of sickness, absence or otherwise, he cannot do it himself; yet it doth not seem to be settled that a constable can make a deputy without some special cause. (2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 36.)

Deputy constables.

In Medhurst v. Wate, (3 Burr. 1259,) the high constable appointed a deputy to billet soldiers under the Mutiny Act; this appointment was by parol only, and the deputy was not sworn. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. and the Court: "The high constable had power by the act to billet soldiers, and he may appoint a deputy to this particular ministerial act. This is a ministerial (not a judicial) act, and a constable may appoint a deputy to do ministerial acts."

In R. v. The Inhab. of Hope Mansell, (Cald. 252,) it was considered that a constable could appoint a deputy. And in R. v. Clarke, (1 T. R. 682,) it seemed to be admitted as a settled point that a constable may appoint a deputy. (Sed vide per Abbott, C. J. in R. v. Adlard, ante, 892.)

The deputy, when appointed, has all the privileges of the constable himself. (Hawk. c. 10, s. 36; Dalt. c. 1.)

Watchmen may be appointed by constables as their assistants, subject to the custom of the place for the appointment of watchmen. (1 Bla. Com. 357, 4th edit. 292.) A watchman thus appointed has for the time being the authority of the constable and his deputy. (1 Ch. C. L. 24.)

The superior must be answerable for his deputy upon any miscarriage, unless the deputy is duly allowed and sworn, for then he is constable. (Wood's Inst. b. i. c. 7.)

At common law, where a person was appointed constable, and he procured a deputy to serve for him, who was approved of by the inhabitants and sworn in at the leet, the liability of the principal was at an end, and he could not afterwards be called upon to serve the office; if therefore the substitute abscond and do not serve, the principal is discharged notwithstanding. (Underhill v. Witts, 3 Esp. 56.) But this is otherwise under the recent act; see infra.

Now by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 12, it is provided, "that if any qualified person chosen as aforesaid shall be unwilling to serve the office of constable in person, and shall find a substitute, to be approved by the justices,

Substitutes may be allowed.

2. How chosen and compellable to act.

and willing to serve for him, the person so chosen and unwilling to serve shall attend with his proposed substitute at the time and place appointed for swearing in constables; and the justices, if they shall approve of such proposed substitute, shall cause the oath to be administered to him, instead of the person so chosen and unwilling to serve; but the service of any person as substitute for another person shall not be reckoned as his own service, so as to exempt him from being sooner chosen to serve in his own person than otherwise he would have been liable to."

2. How Chosen and Sworn, and Compellable to Act.

How and by whom to be chosen at common law.

By leet.

At common law the constable was chosen by the jury in the leet, and if the party was present and refused, the steward might fine him; if absent, the homage must have presented his refusal at the next court, and then he was amerced; also if the party chosen was present, he took the oath in the leet; if absent, before the justices of the peace, who administered the oath to him as conservators of the peace at common law. (Fletcher v. Ingram, 1 Salk. 175; 1 Ld. Raym. 69, 70; S. C. 1 Ken. Rep. 318.)

Sometimes the election was founded on a custom, as it frequently was in some parishes at a vestry meeting, wardmote, or otherwise. (See R. v. Franchard, 2 Stra. 1149.)

Anciently the practice was, that in every hundred where there was a feudal lord, the constables were sworn in and admitted by the lord or his steward in his leet; but where there was no such feudal lord, the sheriff in his torn had the swearing and placing of them in.

And moreover, every petty constable being a principal peace officer, and it being necessary for the preservation of the peace that every vill should be furnished with one, the justices of the peace have ever since the institution of their office taken upon them, as conservators of the peace, not only to swear the petty constables, which have been chosen at a torn or leet, but also to nominate and swear those who have not been chosen at any such court, on the neglect of the sheriffs or lords to hold their courts, or to take care that such officers are appointed in them. Also, it seems, that such justices have always used for good cause to displace such officers which have been so chosen and sworn by them. And this power of justices of the peace having been confirmed by the uninterrupted usage of many ages shall not now be disputed, but shall be presumed to have been grounded on sufficient authority. And some have carried this point so far, as to allow the justices at their sessions to swear one who was chosen at the leet, and unduly rejected by the steward, who had sworn another in his place. (2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 49.)

And in the case of Dr. Franchard, he was chosen constable at Milborne Port at the leet, which immediately adjourned; and he was afterwards sworn in by a single justice of the peace; and upon motion for an information as not being duly sworn, the court held this to be a good swearing. (R. v. Dr. Franchard, 2 Stra. 1149.)

By justices.

The justices of the county of Northampton, at their general sessions, chose a constable for Holmby, and for not coming in to take the oath proceeded against him; which proceedings being removed by certiorari into the King's Bench, it was moved on affidavits that there had not been a constable there for fifty years before, and that he might be discharged; alleging likewise, that Holmby was a privileged place, and that all the inhabitants were the Duke of York's tenants. But the court held that they could not discharge him on motion, and said that they must determine the matter by action of false imprisonment, or some other way; and inclined strongly that he could not any way be discharged. For, per curiam, though originally constables were chosen in leets, yet the constable being an officer whose duty it is to keep the peace, the justices may choose him in cases of necessity. (Case of the Constable of Holmby, 2 Keb. 557; Bac. Ab. Constable, A. 681.)

However, it is certain that justices of the peace had power to nominate and swear constables, on the default of the torn or leet, before stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, and therefore that they have such authority in some cases not mentioned in that statute, which enacts, (s. 15,) that if a constable shall die, or go out of the parish, any two justices may make and swear a new one, until the lord shall hold a leet, or till the next quarter sessions, who shall approve the officer so made and sworn, or appoint another; and if any officer shall continue above a year in his office, the justices in their quarter sessions may discharge him, and put in another till the lord shall hold a court as aforesaid. (2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 50.) But justices, even in sessions, are not empowered by this statute to discharge constables chosen and sworn at the court leet. (Case of the Constables of Limington, 2 Stra. 798.) And the provisions of the act must be strictly complied with by the sessions; therefore an appointment in the disjunctive, "for a year or until others be chosen," was quashed. (R. v. Lisle, 2 Stra. 1090.) The court will grant a quo warranto against a constable elected at a vestry and sworn in at the sessions under this statute, for primâ facie the right of appointing is in the leet, and the sessions have no power if there has been no default. (R. v. Goudge, 2 Stra. 1213; Fitzg. 192; R. v. Routledge, Dougl. 536.)

2. How Chosen and Sworn, &c.

Appointment by justices under local act in case of vacancy.

R. v. Brain, 3 B. & Adol. 614.—By an act of parliament for paving, lighting and watching the streets of a parish, the rector, churchwardens, overseers of the poor and vestrymen were appointed trustees for putting the act in execution. By a subsequent act, the trustees appointed to put the first act in execution were appointed trustees for executing that act, and the said trustees or any thirteen or more of them were authorised to elect four constables for the parish annually. The trustees appointed four constables for the year on the 21st of December, 1829. One of the persons so appointed having, in March, 1830, removed from the parish, and given notice of his removal to the trustees, they elected another. And the Court of King's Bench held, that the trustees, having so appointed the four constables for the year, might also, on the removal from the parish of one of the persons so appointed, elect another person in his stead; for that they were not functi officio, and were the proper persons to supply the vacancy.

Appointment in towns corporate by charter justices.

As to the appointment of constables in corporate towns, see the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 76, &c. Vol. II. title "Corporations," p. 90. Before this act it was held, that the charter justices had the same authority in cases of this nature as justices under a general commission. (Wheatherhead v. Drewry, 11 East, 168; and see R. v. J. Green, 6 T. R. 228.)

Parish constables not now to be appointed in courts leet or torns.

Now by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 21, it is enacted, "that after the passing of that act no petty constable, headborough, borsholder, tithingman, or peace officer of the like description under any name of office, shall be appointed for any parish, township or vill within the limits of this act, except for the performance of duties unconnected with the preservation of the peace or with the execution of this act, at any court leet or torn, or otherwise than under the provisions of this act, or under the provisions of the said act of the third year of the reign of her present Majesty, or of some act passed for the amendment thereof; but nothing herein contained shall be taken to prevent the appointment of special constables, or to apply to the city of London or the metropolitan police district, or to any borough which is within the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76, or of any charter granted in pursuance of that act, or of any act made for the amendment thereof, or to any parish, town, or place in which rates are or shall be levied for the payment of constables, under the provisions of an act passed in the fourth year of his late majesty, making provision for the lighting and watching of parishes in England and Wales, or of any local act specially applying to such parish, town, or place, and that nothing hereinbefore contained shall be taken to apply to the county palatine of Chester."

This act not to apply to London or metropolitan police district, or to boroughs or to parishes where rates are levied under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, for payment of constables, or under any local act, or to the county of Chester.

Exempting such parts of parishes as lie within boroughs exempted by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109.

And by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 52, s. 4, after reciting the above act, and that by the said act it is provided, that nothing therein contained shall apply to certain boroughs and places therein specified: and that doubts had been entertained as to the powers of the justices to appoint constables for any parish of which part shall be within and part without such exempted borough or place; it is declared and enacted, that with respect to any such parish the exemptions provided by the said act shall be deemed only to exempt the men residing within that part of the parish which is within such exempted borough or place from serving as constables under the said act, or being included in any list to be made out under this act, and to disqualify the inhabitants of such part from voting in any division of the vestry under the said act."

By the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 1, reciting "That it will increase the security of persons and property if further provision be made for the appointment of fit persons to act as constables in the several parishes of England, and if power be given to pay them for the performance of their duties; it is enacted, that after the expiration of eighty days and before the expiration of one hundred days next after the passing of this act, and on some day after the twenty-fourth day of March and before the ninth day of April in each following year, the justices of the peace of every county in England shall hold a special petty session of the peace in their several divisions for the appointment of parochial constables, of which session due notice shall be given to every justice usually acting in that division." (See the form, post, 952.)

Justices to hold special sessions for appointing constables.

By the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 52, after reciting the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, and that it was expedient that the like authority should be given to the justices of the peace of liberties within counties, it is enacted, that after the passing of this act all the provisions of the said act shall be extended and apply to every liberty in England having a separate commission of the peace, and not being an incorporated borough, and to the justices of such liberty, as if such liberty were a county of itself, and as if the said act were herein re-enacted."

Recited act to extend to all liberties having a commission.

Sect. 2. "That the constables appointed and sworn to act in any such liberty before the passing of this act, whether by the justices of the liberty acting under colour of the powers of the said act, or at any court leet or torn within such liberty, shall be deemed to have been well and lawfully appointed; and those persons who shall hold the office of constable in any such liberty at the time of the passing of this act shall continue to hold their several offices, and to execute the duties thereof, until constables shall be chosen in their stead under the provisions of this act."

Confirming previous appointments.

By the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 4, it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for the justices at a special petty session of the peace to be holden for that purpose, at any convenient time before the issuing of such precept as aforesaid [sect. 2, infra] (of which last-mentioned session due notice shall be given to every justice usually acting within the division), to make an order for uniting any parish or parishes, whenever they shall think it expedient, to any parish adjoining thereto, or for the annexing of any extra-parochial places to any parish adjoining thereto for the purposes of this act; and a copy of such order shall be served on the overseers of every parish so united, and also on the overseers of such adjoining parish and every such extra-parochial place so annexed, with the precept herein before-mentioned; and every such parish or extra-parochial place so united to any adjoining parish shall thenceforward be deemed, for all the purposes of this act, to be a part of such adjoining parish; and the inhabitants thereof shall be entitled to attend and vote at any meeting in vestry for the purposes of this act of the inhabitants of the parish to which such parish is united, as fully as if they were inhabitants of the parish where such meeting is holden." (See the form, post, 953.)

Small parishes and extra-parochial places may be annexed to any adjoining parish.

Sect. 2. "That the justices shall, within thirty days next after the passing of this act, and within the first seven days of February in each following year, issue a precept, under the hands of two of them, to the overseers of each parish within the division, requiring them to make out and return, within eighty days next after the passing of this act and before the twenty-fourth day of March in each following year, a list in writing of a competent number of men within their respective parishes qualified and liable to serve as constables, and also to perform all other requisitions in the said precepts contained; and with the said precepts shall be given notice to the said overseers of the time and place where such special session of the peace as aforesaid will be holden." (See the form, post, 953.)

Justices to issue precepts to overseers, requiring lists of men qualified to serve as constables.

Sect. 3. "That the overseers of every parish, upon the receipt of such precept, shall summon a meeting of the inhabitants in vestry to be holden

Overseers to make out lists of persons qualified to serve.

within fourteen days after the receipt of the said precept; and the vestry at such meeting shall make out a list in writing of such number as shall be named in the precept of men residing within their parish who shall be qualified and liable to serve as constables, with the Christian name and surname, and with the true place of abode, the title, quality, calling or business of each, written at full length: provided also, that it shall be lawful for the vestry to annex to the said return the names of any number of men willing to serve the office of constable, and whom the vestry will recommend to be appointed, although not having the qualification hereinafter mentioned."

2. How Chosen and Sworn.

5 & 6 Vict. c. 109.

Lists to be fixed on church doors, and also kept by overseers for inspection.

Sect. 8. "That the overseers of each parish shall make out true copies of the list so agreed to in vestry; and where any of the persons named in the said list shall have been chosen to serve, and shall have served, the office of constable in the said parish, in person or by substitute, the overseers shall set against his name in the list the date of the year of such service, and shall on the three Sundays next before the day limited for making their return in this year, and on the first three Sundays in the month of March in each following year, fix a true copy of such list upon the principal door of every church, chapel and other public place of religious worship within their parish, having first subjoined to every such copy a notice, stating that all objections to the list will be heard by the justices of the peace at a time and place to be mentioned in such notice, and having also signed their names at the foot of such copy, and shall likewise keep the original list, or a true copy thereof, to be perused by any of the inhabitants of their parish at any reasonable time during the three weeks next before the day limited for making their return in this year, and during the first three weeks of the month of March in each following year, without any fee or reward, and on or before the day limited for making their return shall sign and return the original list to the justices as required by the precept."

Penalty on overseers for neglecting returns, or making false returns.

Sect. 9. "That every overseer who shall neglect or refuse to sign and return such list, or to make out, sign and publish such true copies as aforesaid, or who shall knowingly leave out the name of any person who ought to be included therein, or who shall knowingly make a false return of any particular which ought to be comprised therein, shall, upon conviction thereof before two justices of the peace, forfeit and pay for every such offence a sum not more than 5*l.*"

Overseers to attend the special session.

Sect. 10. "That the overseers of each parish shall attend the special session of the peace to be holden for the appointment of constables in their parish, and shall then and there verify the list so returned by them, and shall answer on oath such questions touching the same as shall be put to them, or any of them, by the justices then present; and if any man not qualified and liable to serve as constable as aforesaid is inserted in any such list, it shall be lawful for the said justices, upon being satisfied by the oath of the party complaining, or upon other proof, or upon their own knowledge, that he is not qualified and liable to serve as constable, to strike his name out of such list, and also to strike thereout the names of men disabled by lunacy or imbecility of mind, or by deafness, blindness or other infirmity of body, from serving as constable; and when every such list shall be duly corrected at such session, or at such adjournment thereof, it shall be allowed by the justices present, or two of them at such session, or such adjournment, who shall sign the same, with their allowance thereof."

Justices to choose constables.

Sect. 11. "That when any list shall have been allowed the justices shall choose from the allowed list the names of such number of persons as they shall deem necessary (having regard to the extent and population of the parish) to act as constables within the parish during the year then next following, and until other constables shall be chosen and sworn to act in their stead as constables for such parish: provided always, that where any person shall have been chosen to serve, and shall have served, the office of constable, either in person or by substitute, as hereinafter provided, he shall not be liable to be again chosen until every other person in the parish liable and qualified to serve shall have also served the office of constable, either in person or by substitute." (See the form, post, 954.)

2. How Chosen and Sworn.

5 & 6 Vict. c. 100.

List of constables appointed in the division to be published; and parish lists to be affixed to the church doors.

Provision in case of vacancy.

Sect. 14. "That within fourteen days after the appointment and swearing of such constables, the clerk to the justices shall send to every justice usually acting within the division, and also to the clerk of the peace, for the purpose of being laid before the next court of general or quarter sessions, a list containing the names of all constables so appointed in the division, and the parishes for which they have been appointed; and the overseers of the poor shall affix to the door of their respective parish churches a list of the names of the constables appointed in their respective parishes."

Sect. 16. "That in case of the death or disqualification of any constable during his year of office, of which the overseers shall forthwith give notice to a justice of the peace usually acting for the division, or in case any person who shall have been chosen constable shall refuse or neglect as aforesaid to attend and be sworn, or to find a qualified substitute to be sworn in his stead, and shall have been fined for such refusal or neglect, the person who has last served, and shall not then be disqualified or exempt, shall be bound to act in his stead until another constable shall be appointed and sworn to act for the remainder of the year, which shall be done at the next petty session of the peace for the division, of which notice shall be given to all the justices usually acting for the division; and in case the constable making the vacancy was serving as substitute for some other person, the justices shall summon the person originally chosen to attend and be sworn, or to find another substitute duly qualified to serve for the remainder of the year; or if the person originally chosen shall be then disqualified, or shall have refused or neglected as aforesaid to attend and be sworn, or to find a substitute, or if the constable making the vacancy was serving after having been chosen, and not as a substitute, the justices at such session shall choose another qualified person, out of the allowed list then in force, to serve the office of constable during the remainder of the year, and shall proceed in all respects as in the original appointment of constables for that year, and the person so chosen shall be bound in like manner, and subject to the same penalty, to attend and be sworn, or to find a substitute to be sworn in his stead to serve for the remainder of the year; and if less than two hundred days shall have elapsed since the first appointment of constables for that year, but not otherwise, the service of the person appointed to act for the remainder of the year shall be reckoned to him as service for that year; and in the first year after the passing of this act the justices at the time of first choosing constables shall also choose substitutes to serve in case of vacancies during the year of office until another appointment shall be made.

Constables to be sworn.

Oath of Constable.]—By sect. 12 it is enacted, "That the justices shall cause the persons so chosen to be summoned to appear before them on a day to be fixed by such justices (see form, post, 954), and shall cause to be administered to every such person the following oath, (that is to say):—

"I, A. B. of C. do swear, that I will well and truly serve our Sovereign Lady the Queen in the office of constable for the parish of D. [or, parishes of D. E., &c.] for the year now next following, or until another constable shall be sworn in my stead, according to the best of my skill and knowledge. So help me God."

At common law might execute office before sworn.

At common law a month was given for taking the oath, yet the year commenced from the appointment. The party was considered in office directly he was appointed, and he might execute his office before he was sworn, though for the purpose of imposing a greater sanction in the execution of his office, it was more proper that he should be sworn. Thus in R. v. Corfe Mullen, 1 B. & Adolp. 211.—A tithing-man going out of office nominated his shepherd, Miller, to serve as tithing-man the following year. Miller was chosen at a court leet holden October 5th, 1824, and was ordered to be sworn into office within one month, under the penalty of 5*l.* He never was sworn in, but executed the office; while he did so he was not a householder, but lived in part of a house found for him by his employer. His successor was chosen at a court leet October 4th, 1825:—Held, that he gained a settlement in the place for which he served, although not sworn, by executing there, on his own account, a public annual office for one whole year, pursuant to 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6; and that the question, whether or not he was legally placed in the office, according to 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 11, did not arise, he not having been a certificated person. Et per Curiam—"Swearing in may be rendered necessary either to enable the party to serve the office, or to impose a greater sanction on his discharge of it. We think in this case the latter is the object. A month is given for taking the oath; yet the year commences from the appointment. Can it then be said, that the party is not in office till he is sworn? In one of the cases which have been cited (Garsington v. Holy Trinity, Burr. S. C. 30, 210), the swearing in of a tithing-man at the end of half a year was considered as taking effect ab initio. It is laid down in an Anonymous case (1 Ventr. 267), that a churchwarden (and no distinction can be drawn between his case and that of a constable) may execute his office before he is sworn, though it is convenient he should be sworn. And it may be observed, that a mandamus to swear such an officer in is referred to by the Court immediately afterwards in that case; which must, therefore, be issued, not on the ground that the oath is essential to the due execution of the office, but because it is fit and proper, for the interest of the public, that the office should be executed under its sanction."

2. How Chosen and compellable to serve.

Mandamus to swear in.]—The Queen's Bench hath power by mandamus to compel the Court or judge to swear a constable duly chosen. (2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 47; Anon. 1 Ventr. 267; R. v. Corfe Mullen, 1 B. & Adolp. 219.)

Mandamus to compel the swearing a constable.

Quo Warranto.]—The office of constable being a burthensome one, the Court of Queen's Bench will not put a person, de facto elected and sworn in by the court leet, to the expense of showing by what authority he holds the office, at the relation of a different body of persons claiming the right of election, where those persons do not expressly show an immemorial custom in their body to elect, and that the deponents believe there is such custom. (R. v. Lane, 5 B. & Ald. 488; 1 D. & R. 6, S. C.)

Quo warranto.

In the case of R. v. Standard Hill, (4 M. & Sel. 378,) which was an application to have overseers appointed for a vill, it was held to be necessary to swear positively that it was a vill by reputation. (And see R. v. Williamson, 3 B. & Ald. 582.)

Constable refusing to act or be sworn, &c.]—By the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 12, it is enacted, "That every person qualified and liable to serve, and who shall be chosen by the justices to serve, the office of constable, and shall be duly summoned to be sworn, and to take upon him the said office, and who shall refuse, or, without reasonable cause, to be allowed by the said justices, neglect to attend and to be sworn as constable, or to find a qualified substitute to be sworn in his stead, shall, upon conviction thereof before two justices, forfeit and pay any sum not more than ten pounds; and every person who, after being sworn as constable, shall refuse or wilfully neglect to act in the execution of his office, shall, upon conviction thereof before two justices, forfeit and pay for every such offence any sum not more than five pounds." (See form, post, 954.)

Penalty for refusing to act, or to find a substitute.

At common law, if constables when chosen refused to be sworn, a justice of the peace might bind them over to the assizes or sessions, there to be indicted. (Dalt. c. 28; R. v. Lone, 2 Stra. 920.)

How punished at common law.

But it seems there could be no commitment, either by a justice of the peace or by the sheriff or steward of the leet, but only indictment upon the refusal; and if found against him, to assess a good fine upon him, and then commit him for that cause. (R. v. Crawley, Cro. Car. 567; 2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 46.)

It is said, however, that if the party be present in the Court, he may be fined; and that if he be absent, and have a certain time and place appointed him by the sheriff or steward for the taking of the oath before a justice of the peace, and have also express notice of such appointment, and be presented at the next Court, for having refused to take it accordingly, he may be amerced. In either case he may be indicted at the assizes or sessions. (2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 46. See a form of Indictment, post.)

2. How Chosen and compellable to serve.

What an excessive fine.

In 1808 fines of 100*l.* had been imposed (and submitted to) for refusing the office of constable in Manchester, the parties fined not claiming exemption; since that time the duties of the office had greatly increased, and the number of resiants qualified to serve had diminished, and it was sworn that difficulty was expected in procuring persons to serve unless considerable fines were imposed for refusing: Held, that under these circumstances a fine of 300*l.* on a person merely refusing to serve by reason of an alleged exemption was excessive. (R. v. Mosley, 5 Nev. & M. 261; 3 Adol. & Ell. 488.)

Indictments for refusal.

It is advisable in all pleadings in any action concerning such a fine or amerciament, and in all indictments for such refusal, especially and expressly to set forth the manner of every such election, appointment, notice, and refusal, and before whom the Court was holden. And it hath been adjudged that it is insufficient to say in general that the party was duly elected or lawfully elected, or that he had notice, without setting forth the special circumstances thereof. Also it is said to have been adjudged that an indictment for not finding a sufficient person to serve the office of constable, without showing that the party refused to serve it himself, is insufficient. (2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 46; Bac. Abr. Constable (A.)).

R. v. Brain, 3 B. & Adol. 614.—An indictment charged that the defendant, being elected to the office of constable, had neglected and refused to take upon himself the execution of the office. The proof was, that he had refused to take the oath of office; and it was held, that that was primâ facie evidence of a refusal to take upon himself the execution of the office; and it was also held, on motion in arrest of judgment, that the indictment sufficiently charged an offence, by alleging that the defendant had wholly neglected and refused to take on himself the execution of the office, and that it was not necessary to state that he had refused to be sworn.

Custom of London.

By the custom of the city of London, all persons appointed constables on St. Thomas's Day attend at Guildhall on Plough Monday, and are sworn by the registrar; and those who, when vacancies occur, are appointed at any other period of the year, are sworn in before the registrar at the Lord Mayor's Court office. It was held, that that custom applied to all constables in the city of London, in whatever manner appointed, and that a party elected constable by the trustees under a local act was bound, after notice, to attend at the Lord Mayor's Court office to be sworn in. (3 B. & Adol. 614.) See further as to the consequences of refusing to fill an office, "Office," Vol. V.

3. Paid Constables and Superintendents—Lock-up Houses.

A vestry may resolve to have paid constables.

By sect. 18 it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for the vestry assembled for the purpose of making such return as aforesaid to resolve that one or more paid constables shall be appointed for their parish; and if the vestry shall so resolve, a copy of the resolution, and of the amount of salary which the vestry shall resolve on paying to such constable or constables, shall be sent by the overseers to the justices, with the return hereinbefore mentioned."

Justices to appoint paid constables.

Sect. 19. "That the justices at the sessions of the peace holden for the appointment of constables, upon receiving from any parish a copy of any such resolution as aforesaid, if they shall be satisfied with the amount of salary agreed to be paid, shall appoint so many paid constables to act for that parish as shall be agreed to by the resolution, or if the same resolution shall have been agreed to by more parishes than one adjoining each other, may, if they shall think fit, appoint the same paid constables to act conjointly for all such last-mentioned parishes; and in every parish in which a paid constable shall be appointed under this act the justices, if they shall think fit, need not appoint any unpaid constable, or may appoint a smaller number of unpaid constables than they had otherwise resolved on appointing for that parish; and every paid constable shall hold his appointment until he shall resign or be dismissed for misconduct by the justices of the division in petty session assembled, or until the vestry shall rescind the resolution for his appointment at any meeting of vestry holden for making such return as aforesaid." (See forms, post, 955-6.)

In parishes where paid constables are appointed none other need be.

Tenure of appointment.

Sect. 20. "That the amount of the salary to every such paid constable shall be paid by the overseers out of any monies in their hands collected for the relief of the poor."

3. Paid Constables and Superintendents.

Salary to be paid out of the poor rate.

Sect. 22. "That it shall be lawful for the justices of the peace of any county in general or quarter sessions assembled, if they shall think fit, to order that lock-up houses for the temporary confinement of persons taken into custody by any constable, and not yet committed for trial, or in execution of any sentence, shall be provided in such places within their county as the said justices shall think fit; and for that purpose to purchase and hold lands and tenements, or to appropriate to that purpose any lands and tenements belonging to the county which are not needed for the purpose to which they were applied or intended to be applied before such appropriation; or, instead of providing new lock-up houses, to order that the lock-up houses, strong rooms, or cages, belonging to any parish be appropriated for the purpose of this act, and if necessary be enlarged or improved; and the expense of building, hiring, or otherwise providing, repairing, and furnishing such lock-up houses shall be defrayed out of the county rates: provided always, that notice of the day and hour at which any business relating to providing, enlarging, or improving any such lock-up house will begin at such session shall be given by the clerk of the peace, with the notice of holding the session on the requisition of any five justices acting for such county; and that no such lock-up house shall be built or otherwise provided, enlarged or improved, except upon such plan as shall be approved by one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state: provided also, that every such lock-up house shall be within the inspection of the inspectors of prisons."

Lock up houses and strong rooms to be provided.

Superintendents to be appointed and paid out of the county rates.

Sect. 23. "That whenever the justices shall have provided a lock-up house under this act, they shall also appoint a superintending constable to have the charge thereof, who shall have all the powers and immunities of a parish constable under this act, and shall have the superintendence of all the parish constables appointed in such parishes as shall be ordered by the said justices, and under such regulations as they shall make; and every such superintending constable shall be entitled to hold his office until dismissed by the justices in general or quarter session assembled, and shall receive such salary out of the county rates as the justices assembled as aforesaid shall order."

4. Jurisdiction and Powers of, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103—Exemptions from toll.

Power of the constables.

By the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 15, it is enacted, "That the said constables shall have within the whole county, and also within all liberties and franchises, and detached parts of other counties situated therein, and also in every county adjoining to the county in which they are appointed, all the powers, privileges and immunities, and shall be liable to all the duties and responsibilities of a constable within his constablewick, but shall not be bound to act as a constable beyond the parish for which they are severally appointed and sworn, without the special warrant of a justice of the peace: provided always, that in those counties in which any chief constable or superintendent shall have been appointed under the authority of an act passed in the third year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the Establishment of County and District Constables by the Authority of Justices of the Peace," or of any act passed for the amendment thereof, the constables appointed under this act for any parish within the district for which such chief constable or superintendent shall have been appointed shall be subject to the authority of such chief constable or superintendent."

2 & 3 Vict. c. 93.

Horses, &c. in service of superintendent constables exempted from toll.

By the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 52, s. 3, it is enacted, "That no toll shall be demanded or taken on any turnpike road or bridge for any horse, or police van, carriage, or cart, passing along such road or bridge, in the service of a superintendent constable appointed under the provisions of the said act, provided that the superintendent constable in charge of such horse, van, carriage, or cart shall produce a certificate of his appointment, signed by the clerk of the peace of the county for which he shall have been so appointed, or shall have his dress

4. Jurisdiction, Powers, and Exemptions of.

according to the regulations of the said county, at the time of claiming the exemption; and every person who shall fraudulently claim or take the benefit of the exemption from toll herein contained not being lawfully entitled thereunto shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds; and in all such cases the proof of exemption shall be upon the person claiming the same."

5. Fees and Allowances under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109.

Fees and allowances.

By the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, it is enacted, "That the justices of the county in general or quarter session assembled shall from time to time, subject to the approval of one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, settle tables of fees and allowances to the clerks to the justices for the performance of their duties under this act, and to the constables for the service of summons and execution of warrants, and for the performance of such other occasional duties which may be required of the said constables, for which the said justices shall think that fees ought to be allowed; and whenever any duty for which any such fee or allowance shall have been settled, and for which the payment is not by law charged upon the county rates, shall have been performed by any clerk or by any constable appointed under this act, the amount of the fee or allowance shall be paid by the overseers of the parish in respect of which such fee has become payable out of any monies in their hands collected for the relief of the poor, upon the order of the justices in petty session assembled for the division, and under such regulations as shall be made from time to time by the justices in general or quarter session assembled, subject to the approval of the secretary of state." (a) (See the form, post, 955).

How paid.

(a) A Table of Fees and Allowances to the clerks to the justices of the peace and to the constables within the county of Surrey, for the performance of their duties under an act passed in the 5th and 6th years of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, c. 109, intituled "An Act for the Appointment and Payment of Parish Constables," settled by the justices of the peace acting in and for the said county in quarter session assembled by adjournment on Monday the 5th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1842, and approved by the Right Hon. Sir James Graham, Bart. one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state.

7. Every precept for holding a special petty session for uniting a parish or parishes, or annexing extra parochial places to parishes	2	6	The overseers of all the parishes or places united in equal proportions
8. Notice to every justice and service—each notice	1	0
9. Every order for uniting parishes or places	3	6
10. Copy thereof for the overseers of every parish or place united, with the precept—each copy and service	2	0
11 Every order for payment of clerks or constables' fees	1	0	The overseers of every parish

The foregoing table of fees and allowances to be in lieu of those settled by the general table of fees to be taken by the clerks to the justices of the peace within the said county, except fees for informations, summonses, convictions, &c. not herein settled, which are to be payable according to the said general table.

2. Constables' Fees.

	£	s.	d.
1. For the execution of every warrant, or the lawful apprehension of every person without a warrant, not exceeding	0	2	0
2. For the service of every summons, notice, order, or other document within the parish, except summonses for parochial or local rates	0	1	0
3. For the service of every summons for parochial or local rates within the parish	0	0	6
4. For every mile out beyond the limits of the parish, in each case, in addition to the above	0	0	6
5. For attendance before a magistrate, or at petty or special sessions, with a prisoner, or to prove the service of a summons, notice, order, or other document, or to make any return required by law, if on the day of apprehension, service, &c.	0	1	0
6. If on any subsequent day	0	2	6
7. For every mile out	0	0	6

The three last allowances to be made once only in a day although for the bringing up several prisoners, or proving the service of several summonses, if at the same time.

In the apprehension of vagrants or other persons with families, the parents only, and those above the age of sixteen, are to be considered as persons for whose apprehension fees are to be payable.

	£	s.	d.
8. For the apprehension and conveyance of a person to prison, on non-payment of a penalty, in default of distress, or such like cases, (exclusive of the expenses of conveyance and subsistence allowed by the county) after the rate per day of, not exceeding	0	5	0
9. For every night so employed, if allowed by a justice, after the rate per night of, not exceeding	0	3	6
10 For every day or part of a day, and for every night or part of a night, that a constable may be employed in search or pursuit of an offender, the removal of vagrants, the quelling of disturbances, or such like duties not before provided for, and expenses, if ordered or allowed by a magistrate, or in lieu of any of the above fees, if so directed by a magistrate, after the rate per day of, not exceeding	0	5	0
11 For every night or part of a night, in continuation of any day, or part of a day, after the rate per night of, not exceeding	0	3	6
12. If required for such purposes to go beyond the limits of the parish, at per mile out, in addition to the above	0	0	6

The five last mentioned fees, when allowed, to be in lieu of the foregoing allowances for execution of warrants, mileage, and attendance before a magistrate with a prisoner.

	£	s.	d.
13. For the conveyance of a prisoner to the gaol or houses of correction (exclusive of the expenses of conveyance and subsistence allowed by the county), after the rate per day of, not exceeding	0	5	0 of nonpayment thereof, with the costs and charges attending such conviction, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender, by warrant.

6. Recovery, &c. of Penalties.

	£	s.	d.
14. For every night so employed, after the rate per night of, not exceeding	0	3	6
As by this table of fees compensation is made to constables for their trouble and loss of time in the conveyance of prisoners to the gaol and houses of correction, it is desirable that the allowance for the expense of such conveyance, chargeable upon the county rate by the 27 Geo. II. c. 3, should be very strictly limited to the sum actually expended.
15. For an assistant to a constable in any case if directed or allowed by a magistrate, after the rate per day of, not exceeding	0	2	6
16. And for every night so employed, after the rate per night of, not exceeding	0	2	6
17. If required to go more than two miles from his usual place of abode, at per mile beyond that distance	0	0	6
18. For subsistence of a prisoner in any case, when not chargeable upon the county, after the rate per day of, not exceeding	0	0	9
19. For subsistence and lodging of a prisoner in any case, when not chargeable upon the county, after the rate per night of, not exceeding	0	0	9
20. For conveyance of a prisoner in any case, when not chargeable upon the county, at per mile, in addition to the foregoing allowances for mileage	0	0	6
21. And for each additional prisoner	0	0	3
Whenever railways can be made available for conveyance, the allowance to be at second class railway fare, and conveyance to and from the railway, instead of mileage, at the discretion of the magistrate making the allowance.
22. For the performance of all other occasional duties of constables where the population, according to the preceding census, does not exceed 1000, an annual allowance at the discretion of the justices in petty session of, not exceeding	5	0	0
23. And for every additional 500 of population an additional annual allowance at the discretion aforesaid of, not exceeding	2	0	0
The total to be divided in such proportions as the justices in petty session shall determine, between the constables where more than one are appointed for the same parish or place.
The foregoing fees and allowances are not to apply or be allowed to paid constables appointed with salaries (which salaries shall be intended to be in lieu of fees and allowances), unless employed upon any duties which may require their going beyond the limits of their parishes, in which cases they shall be entitled to the mileages (or railway fare) herein specified for those duties, if allowed by the justices of the division assembled in petty sessions.
Nor are any of the above allowances to apply or be made out of the poor rates, when constables attend as witnesses and allowances for their time and expenses are made and comprised in the magistrate's certificate of expenses granted before trial, pursuant to the provisions of 7 Geo. IV. c. 94, s. 22.

It is ordered by this Court, that for the purpose of preventing inaccuracies, every constable shall provide himself with a book in which shall be inserted every charge he is entitled to make under the foregoing table of fees and allowances at the time of its occurrence.

And it is also ordered, that at the same time some one of the justices by whom the case may be heard, or by whom any direction or authority may have been given, shall examine and determine such charges, and, if satisfied therewith, shall affix his initials thereto; and no charges (except such as are authorised to be made periodically) shall be allowed upon the application for an order for payment that have not such initials affixed.

And it is further ordered, that each constable shall keep a register of such occasional duties as he may perform.

Lastly, it is ordered, that the accounts of the clerks to the justices and of the several constables, for the performance of their duties, for which payment is not by law chargeable upon the county rates, shall be produced by them respectively to under the hands and seals of any justice of the peace of the county, riding or place wherein such conviction shall have taken place, with the reasonable costs of such distress and sale; and the overplus, if any, shall be returned to the party whose goods and chattels shall have been distrained."

6. Recovery, &c. of Penalties.

Sect. 25. "That all penalties levied under this act shall be applied in aid of the poor rates of the parish in which the offence shall have been committed for which such penalties shall be levied."

Application of penalties.

7. Interpretation of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109.

Sect. 26. "That in this act the word 'county' shall be taken to extend to every riding or division of a county for which there is a separate court of general or quarter sessions of peace; and the word 'parish' shall be taken to extend to every township or other district maintaining its own poor, and also to every extra-parochial place which shall not be annexed to an adjoining parish, for which places the justices in petty sessions assembled shall be empowered to appoint persons to act as overseers; and the word 'overseers' shall be taken to extend to all persons charged with collecting rates for the relief of the poor in any parish, and, in extra-parochial places not added to any adjoining parish, to the persons appointed by the justices as aforesaid."

Interpretation of act.

8. Power and Duty of Constables as Conservators of the Peace, &c.

Every high and petty constable is by the common law a conservator of the peace. (2 Hawk. c. 8, s. 6; Crom. 6; Dalt. c. 1; ante, 273.)

Constable a conservator of the peace.

And, therefore, if any man shall make an affray or an assault upon another in the presence of a constable, or shall threaten to kill, beat, or hurt another, or shall be in a fury ready to break the peace, the constable may commit him to the stocks, or other safe custody for the present, and after may carry him before a justice or to gaol, until he shall find surety for the peace, which surety the constable himself may also take by obligation, to be sealed and delivered, to the queen's use; and if the party will not find surety to the constable, he may imprison the party until he shall do it. (Dalt. c. 1.)

A collector of land-tax, though he is not entitled by statute, or under his general authority, to take a constable with him into the house of a person from whom he is demanding payment of an arrear of the land-tax, may, if he has reasonable ground from past or present circumstances to apprehend violence from such person, call in constables to assist in keeping the peace, and such constables are justified in staying while the collector remains to be paid, as long as there is reason to expect violence; and if the owner of the house use violence to remove them, he is indictable for assaulting a peace officer in the execution of his duty. (Rex v. Clark, 3 Ad. & Ell. 287.)

But a constable has not, without a warrant, any authority to arrest for a breach of the peace or other misdemeanor not committed in his presence, after it is over, unless from the conduct of the offender in the constable's presence there be reasonable ground for supposing that he will be guilty of some further breach of the peace or misdemeanor.

As regards, however, charges of felony, a constable has authority to arrest and should arrest a party, though the constable has no warrant, upon a positive charge of felony made against him, and there being reasonable ground for suspecting him guilty of it.

For the authorities in support of these positions and for further information on this subject, and as to what the constable should do after the arrest, see ante, title "Arrest," p. 278, 279.

---

the justices in petty sessions once in each quarter of the year, in order that the same may be audited and allowed, and orders made for their payment out of the poor rates of the respective parishes liable to the same."

"By the Court."

The above table is given as an example merely, as it appears that the fees settled by the justices of different counties and approved by the secretary of state are not similar.

8. Power and Duty of.

Constable may require any person to aid and assist him in the execution of his duty in quelling a riot.

A person may be indicted for refusing.

To support an indictment against a person for refusing to aid and assist a constable in the execution of his duty in quelling a riot, it is necessary to prove—1st, that the constable saw a breach of the peace committed; 2nd, that there was a reasonable necessity for calling on the defendant for his assistance; and 3rd, that when duly called upon to assist the constable, the defendant, without any physical impossibility or lawful excuse, refused to do so; and in such a case it is no ground of defence that from the number of rioters the single aid of the defendant would not have been of any use. (Reg. v. Brown, 1 Car. & M. 314.)

A person charged to aid a constable, and who does so, is protected eundo, morando, et redeundo. (Reg. v. Phelps, 1 Car. & M. 180.)

Presentments by constables.

By ancient custom (that is, by the common law of the land,) before the coming of the judges, the high constables issue their warrants to the petty constables, headboroughs, borsholders, &c. to make presentments of all crimes and offences cognizable at the assizes; to the intent (as it seemeth) that the judges thereby may have a general information and knowledge how the peace hath been kept, which presentments being delivered to the high constables, are by them delivered into Court, and make up part of the rolls and other remembrances above mentioned.

Which warrants of the high constables may be best drawn up in the words of the commission of oyer and terminer, which is the largest of all the five commissions mentioned under title "Assizes," ante. See the forms, post, 957.

In certain matters presentments by constables no longer requisite.

By 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 38, after reciting that "in some parts of England the petty constables of the several parishes have, from a very remote period, been required to appear at a petty sessions held previously to every general gaol delivery and quarter session for the county in which such parishes are situate, and to make and sign before the justice or justices of the peace attending such petty session certain presentments of various indictable and other offences: and whereas the said presentments are attended with considerable expense and loss of time, and have, in consequence of modern legislative provisions, become useless and improper:" it is enacted, "that from and after the passing of this act, no petty constable shall be required, at any petty session or elsewhere, to make, nor shall any high constable be required at any general gaol delivery, great session, or general or quarter session of the peace in England, to deliver any presentment respecting popish recusants, persons absenting themselves from their parish church or any other place of religious worship licensed by authority, rogues and vagabonds, inmates, retailers of brandy, ingrossers, forestallers, regraters, profane swearers and cursers, servants out of service, felonies and robberies, unlicensed or disorderly alehouses, false weights and measures, highways and bridges, riots, routs and unlawful assemblies, and whether the poor are well provided for, and the constables are legally chosen and sworn."

Presentments for non-repair of highways.

It was holden in R. v. Bridgewater Canal Comp. (7 B. & Cres. 514; 1 Man. & Ry. 272), that where a high constable presents persons for a nuisance in a highway, he must go before the grand jury and give his evidence on oath. Now, however, by the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 50, s. 99 (Vol. III.) presentments for the non-repair of highways are abolished.

See also various duties of constables collected under titles, "Alehouses," "Affray," "Bawdy Houses," "Blasphemy," "Bridges," "County Rate," "Customs," "Disorderly Houses," "Fires," "Gaming Houses," "Harvest," "Hawkers and Pedlars," "Hue and Cry," "Lunatics," "Military Law," "Plague," "Poor," "Presentments," "Riots," "Servants," "Sessions," "Vagrants," "Warrant," "Weights," "Wrecks," &c.

9. Duty of, as Officers to Justices and in executing Warrants.

Is the officer to justices.

It hath always been holden that the constable is the proper officer to a justice of the peace, and bound to execute his warrants; and therefore it hath been resolved, that where a statute authorises a justice of the peace to convict a man of a crime, and to levy the penalty by warrant of distress, without saying to whom such warrant shall be directed, or by whom it shall be executed, the constable is the proper officer to serve such warrant, and indictable for disobeying it. (2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 35.)

8. Power and Duty of.

Formerly a distinction existed between warrants directed to constables by name and such as were directed to them by the description of their office. It was considered in the former case, that a constable might execute the warrant anywhere within the jurisdiction of the magistrate issuing it; in the latter, only within the precincts of his office. (R. v. Weir, 1 B. & Cres. 288; 2 D. & R. 444, S. C.)

Constables may execute warrants out of their precincts, provided it be within the jurisdiction of the justice granting or backing the same.

Now, however, stat. 5 Geo. IV. c. 18, s. 6, reciting, "that warrants addressed to constables, headboroughs, tithingmen, borseholders or other peace officers of parishes, townships, hamlets or places, in their characters of and as constables, headboroughs, tithingmen, borseholders or other peace officers of such respective parishes, townships, hamlets or places, cannot be lawfully executed by them out of the precincts thereof respectively, whereby means are afforded to criminals and others of escaping from justice;" for remedy thereof enacts, "that it shall and may be lawful to and for each and every constable, and to and for each and every headborough, tithingman, borseholder or other peace officer for every parish, township, hamlet or place, to execute any warrant or warrants of any justice or justices of the peace, or of any magistrate or magistrates within any parish, township, hamlet or place, situate, lying or being within that jurisdiction for which such justice or justices, magistrate or magistrates, shall have acted when granting such warrant or warrants, or when backing or indorsing any such warrant or warrants, in such and the like manner as if such warrant or warrants had been addressed to such constable, headborough, tithingman, borseholder or other peace officer, specially by his name or names, and notwithstanding the parish, township, hamlet or place in which such warrant or warrants shall be executed shall not be the parish, township, hamlet or place for which he shall be constable, headborough, tithingman or borseholder, or other peace officer, provided that the same be within the jurisdiction of the justice or justices, magistrate or magistrates so granting such warrant or warrants, or within the jurisdiction of the justice or justices, magistrate or magistrates by whom any such warrant or warrants shall be backed or indorsed." See "Distress under Justices' Warrant," Vol. II.

Inasmuch as before the passing of this act a constable was in no case bound, but only authorised, to execute a warrant addressed to him by name, out of the precincts of his office, neither is it now incumbent on him to execute such warrant beyond the boundary of his jurisdiction. (Gimbert v. Coyney, 1 M'Clel. & Y. 469.) The act merely puts warrants addressed to peace officers in their official character on the same footing as warrants addressed to them by name previously stood.

But it does not extend the constable's authority beyond what he had power to do by a bench warrant before it passed. The act is also intended to apply to justices of the peace with limited jurisdiction. The statute, therefore, does not apply to warrants issued by the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, but is confined to warrants issued by justices of the peace having a limited jurisdiction only. (Gladwell v. Blake, 1 Crom. M. & R. 636.)

Mode of executing warrant.

The mode of executing warrants, and the law relative to the breaking open of doors under them, will be found under title "Warrant," Vol. VI.

A constable, who is conveying a party to prison under a magistrate's order, under 49 Geo. III. c. 68, for nonpayment of a certain sum under an order of filiation and maintenance, is not bound to discharge his prisoner on tender of that sum. (Atkins v. Kelly, 11 Ad. & Ell. 222.)

As to the mode of executing warrants of commitment under the County Constables' Act, see 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 88, s. 33, post, Sect. III.

10. Punishment for Neglect of Duty.

By the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 12, (ante, 901,) parish constables refusing to act in the execution of their office are liable for every offence to a penalty of 5*l.*

10. Punishment for neglect.

As to the punishment of county constables for neglect of duty, see 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 12, post, 933.

Indictment for neglect.

At common law it was the duty of a constable to execute the legal warrants of justices of the peace, and to perform the functions of his office with reasonable dispatch and care; and his omission so to do, or his misconduct or extortion in his office, is punishable by indictment, upon which fine or imprisonment may be adjudged against him. (2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 35; 2 Hale, 90.)

How far one constable liable for act of the other.

If there be two constables appointed for a certain precinct, they are both officers throughout the whole of it, and each is responsible for any mischief from the neglect of duty throughout the whole, and punishable for not discharging his duty in every part of it, although there may have been a long continued usage for each of them to act only for one particular part of the precinct. (R. v. Taunton, 3 M. & Sel. 470.)

Liable for deputy.

As to the liability of constables for their deputies, see ante, p. 895.)

Justices may impose a fine.

By stat. 33 Geo. III. c. 55, s. 1, "it shall and may be lawful for any two or more of his majesty's justices of the peace, assembled at any special or petty sessions of the peace, upon complaint being made upon oath before them of any neglect of duty, or of any disobedience of any lawful warrant or order of any justice or justices of the peace by any constable, overseer of the poor, or other peace or parish officer, or upon complaint made to such two or more justices upon oath, by or on the behalf of any apprentice to any trade or business whatsoever, whether bound apprentice by any parish or township or otherwise, provided that not more than the sum of 10*l.* be paid upon the binding of such apprentice, against his or her master or mistress, of any ill usage of such apprentice by such master or mistress (such constable, overseer, or other officer, master, or mistress, having been duly summoned to appear and answer such charge or complaint), to impose, upon conviction, any reasonable fine or fines, not exceeding the sum of 40*s.*, upon such constable, overseer, or other officer, master or mistress respectively, as a punishment for such disobedience, neglect of duty, or ill usage, and by warrant under the hands and seals of any two or more of such justices, assembled at any such special or petty sessions as aforesaid, to direct such fine or fines, if not paid, to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the person or persons so offending, rendering the overplus, (if any,) after deducting the amount of such fine or fines, and the charges of such distress and sale, to such offender or offenders; and such fine or fines which may be imposed upon any such constable, overseer, or other officer as aforesaid, shall be applied and disposed of for the relief of the poor of the parish, township, or place, where the offenders shall respectively reside, at the discretion of the justices imposing the same, and such fine or fines, which may be imposed upon any such master or mistress, shall, at the discretion of the justices imposing the same, be either so applied and disposed of as aforesaid, or be otherwise paid and applied to or for the use and benefit of such apprentice, for or towards a recompense or compensation for the injury which may have been by him or her sustained by reason of such ill usage as aforesaid; and if any person shall be aggrieved by the imposition of such fine or fines as aforesaid, or by any order or warrant of distress for raising or levying the same, or by the judgment or determination of the said justices, or by any act to be done in the execution of such warrant of distress, such person or persons so aggrieved shall and may appeal to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace to be held for the county, riding, or division, within which such person shall reside, of which appeal ten days' notice at the least shall be given; and for want of such distress, such person or persons shall be committed to the house of correction for any space of time not exceeding ten days."

Appeal.

Persons not trespassers for irregularities of proceedings.

Sect. 2. "No person acting under any such warrant of distress as aforesaid shall be deemed a trespasser ab initio, by reason of any irregularity or informality in such warrant, or in any proceedings thereon; but any person aggrieved by the issuing or execution of such warrant may recover the special damages thereby by him or her sustained, in an action of trespass, or on the case, in any of his majesty's courts of record."

10. Punishment for neglect.

But by the stat. 27 Geo. II. c. 20, s. 2, the officer executing such warrant, if required, shall show the same to the person whose goods and chattels are distrained, and shall suffer a copy thereof to be taken. (See "Warrant," Vol. VI.)

Officer to show warrant.

By stat. 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 11, "in case any constable or other peace officer shall neglect his duty in any thing required of him by this act, or in case any person shall disturb or hinder any constable or other peace officer in the execution of this act, or shall be aiding, abetting, or assisting therein, and shall be thereof convicted upon the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses before one or more justice or justices of the peace where such offence shall be committed, every such offender shall for every such offence forfeit any sum not exceeding 5*l.*; and in case such offender shall not forthwith pay such sum so forfeited, the same shall be levied by distress and sale of the offender's goods, by warrant from such justice or justices; and if sufficient distress cannot be found, it shall be lawful to and for one or more such justice or justices to commit the person so offending to the house of correction, there to be kept for any time not exceeding three calendar months, or until such fine be paid; and the said justice or justices shall cause the said fine, when paid, to be forthwith delivered to the treasurer of the county, riding, division, or place, where such offence shall have been committed, to be by him added to and used as part of the stock of the said county, riding, division, or place."

Penalty on officers neglecting their duties under Vagrant Act.

Sect. 12. "In case any constable or other peace officer shall be convicted before any one or more justice or justices of the peace, for any neglect of any duty required of him by this act, or of any disobedience of any lawful warrant or order of any justice or justices of the peace issued under the provisions of this act, and in case any two or more justices of the peace shall impose any fine, or direct any penalty to be paid by such officer, under and by virtue of the powers given to justices of the peace by an act passed in the thirty-third year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third, intituled 'An Act to authorise Justices of the Peace to impose Fines upon Constables, Overseers, and other Peace or Parish Officers, for neglect of Duty, and on Masters of Apprentices for Ill Usage of such their Apprentices, and also to make Provision for the Execution of Warrants of Distress granted by Magistrates,' or under any other powers enabling such justices in that behalf, then and in every such case it shall be lawful for every such justice or justices, upon conviction of any such offender, to reimburse and allow to the person or persons on whose complaint or information such offender shall have been convicted, all necessary costs and expenses which such person or persons may thereby have incurred, or by any appeal made in consequence thereof, by making an order under his or their hands and seals upon the treasurer of the county, riding, division, or place, to pay to such person or persons the amount of such costs and expenses, on producing the said order and giving a receipt for the same, and the same shall be allowed the said treasurer in his accounts." (See "Vagrants," Vol. VI.)

On conviction of officers, &c. justices to make order for payment of expenses of prosecution.

11. Indemnity and Protection of.

It is an indictable offence at common law to assault or interfere with a constable or peace officer whilst in the execution of his office. (See post, "Escape," Vol. II.; "Rescue," Vol. V.)

Assaulting or obstructing.

We have seen, ante, 293, title "Assault," that by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 25, where any person shall be convicted of any assault upon any peace officer in the due execution of his duty, or upon any person acting in aid of such officer, Metropolitan police.

By the Metropolitan Police Act, 10 Geo. IV. c. 44, s. 8, persons assaulting or resisting police officers, or assisting therein, are subject to a penalty of not exceeding 5*l.*, to be recovered before two justices. (See "Police," Vol. V.) Sect. 40 of that act entitles a metropolitan police officer to a notice of action for any act done by him as such. (See "Police," Vol. V. p. 575.) The 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 52, 53, also entitles a police officer to a notice of action, limits the time for bringing such action, and enables him to tender amends. (See "Police," Vol. V. p. 605, 606.)

Special constables.

As to the protection of special constables from assaults, &c. see 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 41, s. 11, post, 945.

Justification by constables at common law.

Where a constable justifies his acts at common law under the warrant of a justice of the peace, the justification is insufficient, unless it shows that the justice had jurisdiction over the subject-matter upon which the warrant was granted. And though no want of jurisdiction appears on the face of the warrant, still the officer is not protected by it for what he does under it, unless the justice who issued it had jurisdiction in the case. (Morell v. Martin, 4 Scott, N. R. 306. But see Andrew v. Marris, 1 Q. B. 3; Carratt v. Morley, 1 Q. B. 18.)

By statute.

But the statute 24 Geo. II. c. 44, affords protection to constables acting under warrants in cases where the justice issuing them had no jurisdiction.

Not liable if he deliver a copy of the warrant.

By that statute, s. 6, it is enacted, "that no action shall be brought against any constable, headborough, or other officer, or against any person or persons acting by his order and in his aid, for any thing done in obedience to any warrant under the hand or seal of any justice of the peace, until demand hath been made or left at the usual place of his abode, by the party or parties intending to bring such action, or by his, her, or their attorney or agent, in writing, signed by the party demanding the same, of the perusal and copy of such warrant, and the same hath been refused or neglected for the space of six days after such demand; and in case after such demand and compliance therewith, by showing the said warrant to, and permitting a copy to be taken thereof by the party demanding the same, any action shall be brought against such constable, headborough, or other officer, or against such person or persons acting in his aid for any such cause as aforesaid, without making the justice or justices who signed or sealed the said warrant defendant or defendants, that on producing or proving such warrant at the trial of such action, the jury shall give their verdict for the defendant or defendants, notwithstanding any defect of jurisdiction in such justice or justices; and if such action be brought jointly against such justice or justices, and also against such constable, headborough, or other officer, or person or persons acting in his or their aid as aforesaid, then on proof of such warrant the jury shall find for such constable, headborough, or other officer, and for such person or persons so acting as aforesaid, notwithstanding such defect of jurisdiction as aforesaid; and if the verdict shall be given against the justice or justices, that in such case the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall recover his, her, or their costs against him or them, to be taxed in such manner by the proper officer as to include such costs as such plaintiff or plaintiffs are liable to pay to such defendant or defendants for whom such verdict shall be found as aforesaid."

Demand of warrant must be made.

Action must be brought against him and the justice jointly.

Costs.

No action but within six months.

Sect. 8. "No action shall be brought against any justice of the peace for any thing done in the execution of his office, or against any constable, headborough, or other officer, or persons acting as aforesaid, unless commenced within six calendar months after the act committed."

By stat. 7 Jac. I. c. 5 (made perpetual by 21 Jac. 1. c. 12), if an action is brought against a constable for any thing done by virtue of his office, he, and also all others which in his aid, or by his command, shall do a thing concerning his office, may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence; and if he recover, he shall have double costs. (See the enactment in full, "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1042.) This enactment as to double costs is now repealed by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, s. 3, post.

11. Indemnity and Protection of.

General issue.

Double costs.

Sect. 5. Such action shall be laid in the county where the fact was committed, and not elsewhere.

Venue local.

The object and purport of the 6th and 8th sections of the 24th Geo. II. differ very materially. The legislature intended by the 6th section to prevent the constable or other officer, when acting in obedience to the warrant, from being answerable on account of any defect of jurisdiction in the justice, and to afford him an absolute protection at whatever period of time the action might be brought against him; by the 8th section, to absolve him from responsibility to the law, after the lapse of six calendar months, where he has acted not in strict obedience to his warrant, but bonâ fide and in supposed obedience thereto. (Parton v. Williams, 3 B. & Ald. 330; Smith v. Wiltshire, 2 B. & B. 619; 5 Moore, 320, S. C.) Et per Abbott, C. J. in the case of Parton v. Williams, "The legislature manifestly had very different objects in view in the 6th and 8th sections of the statute upon which the present question arises. By the common law, an officer who merely executed the warrant of a magistrate was answerable for the consequences, if the magistrate acted without authority. One object, therefore, of the legislature was to relieve the officer from that inconvenience, and to provide that if he acted in obedience to the warrant of the magistrate, he should be protected. That was the object of the 6th section, which makes it necessary to demand a copy of the warrant from the officer before he can be sued. If he gives that copy, although the party may be entitled to an action against the magistrate, yet if he joins the officer in it, the production of the warrant will be a protection to the latter, and will entitle him to a verdict. The 6th section is, therefore, obviously intended to protect the officer in those cases only where the justice remains liable. And it is necessary, in order to bring the officer within it, that he should act most strictly in obedience to his warrant. And in that case the statute gives him an absolute protection at whatever time the suit may be brought against him. To give him any further protection, when he has so acted does appear to me to be wholly useless. For I cannot understand why a limitation of time is to be imposed upon any action which the legislature has dsclared not to be maintainable at all. The 8th section must, therefore, have a very different object in view. It enacts 'that no action shall be brought against any justice of the peace for any thing done in the execution of his office, or against any constable, headborough, or other officer or persons acting as aforesaid, unless within six calendar months after the act committed.' The justice, therefore, is protected absolutely, unless the action be brought within that period of time: he has the benefit of that statutable limitation for whatever he may do in the execution of his office, although he may do something not authorised by law. This provision, therefore, is evidently intended for the benefit of persons who intend to act right, but by mistake act wrong. The section then proceeds to state, 'or against any constable, headborough, or other officer or person, acting as aforesaid.' And it has been argued that these latter words imply that the officer must be acting in obedience to the warrant to be entitled to the protection. But I am of opinion that they are to be taken as equivalent to those words of the 6th section, 'acting by his order and in his aid,' in which case they are coupled with the antecedent word 'person' alone. I have already assigned the reasons which induce me to think that this provision cannot be confined to cases within the protection of the 6th section. It may, perhaps, be too much to say that it will apply in all cases where the officer may have acted in what he may have supposed to have been the due execution of his duty. It is, however, unnecessary to decide that point here. Nor is it necessary to pronounce any opinion upon the case of Postlethwaite v. Gibson (to be found in 3 Esp. Rep. 226), where Lord Kenyon thought that unless the officer had a warrant, he was not protected by the 8th section. If it were necessary to determine whether a constable, who without a warrant acts in the execution of his office, and in the discharge of his ordinary duty, be entitled to the protection of this statute, I should wish for further time to consider of it. But in Postlethwaite v. Gibson the constable was not acting in the execution of his ordinary duty; for it is no part of that duty to arrest a man for felony upon the order of a private individual. Any person who is not a constable may equally do it; but both do it at their peril. If it turn out that the party arrested has committed a felony, then they are justified. Here, however, the constable had a warrant, directing him to take the goods of William Parton. He went to the house where he really supposed those goods were to be found; and it occupied a jury a very considerable time to decide whether he was mistaken or not: he meant, therefore, to obey the warrant, and, as far as he was concerned, he was acting bonâ fide in obedience to it. It afterwards, however, turned out that the goods belonged to the plaintiff, and, therefore, he was not obeying the warrant of the justice so as to make the justice responsible. As I consider, however, that the 8th section was intended to give a benefit in addition to that given by the 6th section, it appears to me that this case falls within it. And I think also that the officer, as far as regards himself, and as far as regards the law which protected him, may be considered as having acted bonâ fide in obedience to the warrant which he had received. This action ought, therefore, to have been brought within the period of six months." (And see Kay v. Grover and another, 7 Bingh. 312; 2 M. & R. 634, S. C.; Beechey v. Sides, 9 B. & Cres. 806; 4 M. & Ry. 634, S. C.; Vol. III. p. 1033.)

Object and purport of statute of 24 Geo. 2, c. 44.

11. Indemnity and Protection of.

Demand of warrant.

When constable is protected by the act.

DEMAND OF WARRANT. When necessary, and when the Constable is protected by the 6th section of the 24 Geo. II. c. 44.]—The object of this section of the act was the protection of those officers who are charged with the execution of magistrate's warrants, issued beyond their jurisdiction, the officers being before that time subject to indictment if they did not execute the warrants directed to them, or to vexatious actions if they did. (See per Lawrence, J., 5 East, 448.) In fact the object of the enactment is to make the magistrate alone liable where he has exceeded his jurisdiction. When, therefore, the constable has done an act in obedience to the warrant of a magistrate, he cannot be sued, but only the magistrate who has exceeded his jurisdiction, provided the constable give a copy of his warrant after the demand in pursuance of the 24 Geo. III. c. 44, s. 6. But where a constable has no warrant at all, or has acted beyond his authority, then he is liable, and no demand of the copy of the warrant is necessary.

Thus if the warrant direct the officer to seize "stolen goods," and he seizes goods which fall within the description contained in the warrant in other respects, although they turn out not to be stolen, he is still under the protection of the statute, and it is immaterial whether the warrant be legal or not. (Price v. Messenger, 2 Bos. & Pul. 158; 3 Esp. 96, S. C.)

And a constable who assists a parish officer in levying a distress for poor's rates, under a warrant of magistrates directed to such officers, is not liable to an action of trespass, although a demand was duly made on such constable in pursuance of the 24 Geo. II., because the demand ought to be made of the parish officer. (Clarke v. Devey, 4 Moore, 465.)

Where magistrates acting under the 50 Geo. III. c. 49, examine overseers' accounts, declare a balance, and make an order for the payment of that balance, and then issue a warrant to levy the amount by distress, they cannot, merely on the ground of a doubt whether they have correctly ascertained the balance, withdraw the warrant, and so render the constable liable as a trespasser. And in such a case there must be a demand of a copy of the warrant before any action brought against the constable. (Barrons v. Luscombe, 3 Ad. & Ell. 589.)

So where the defendant, a constable, justified the assault and imprisonment of the plaintiff, under a magistrate's warrant of commitment, it was objected to this warrant, that it erroneously recited, that the plaintiff was then present to hear the complaint in another county; and that on the indorsement of it for execution by a magistrate of the county where the plaintiff was, it did not appear that the handwriting of the committing magistrate had been proved according to 24 Geo. II. c. 55, s. 1. But it was held, that if these objections were tenable, they showed "defect of jurisdiction" in the magistrates, but did not deprive the constable of the protection given him by the warrant, under 24 Geo. II. c. 44, s. 6. (Atkins v. Kilby, 4 Per. & D. 145; 11 Ad. & E. 777, S. C.)

11. Indemnity and Protection of.

A constable appointed under the Municipal Corporation Act, 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 76, when discharging the duty of a constable at common law, is entitled to the protection of 7 Jac. I. c. 5. (Maberley v. Titterton, 7 M. & W. 540.)

In another case, where a local act of parliament for lighting and watching the town of Staleybridge, empowered the commissioners therein named to appoint constables for keeping the peace in the said town, and for executing all such warrants, &c. as the justices of Cheshire or Lancashire should direct to them to be executed within the town, and another section enacted that no plaintiff should recover in any action against any party for anything done in pursuance of the act, without twenty-one days' notice of action having been given; it was held, that a constable appointed under the act, who was sued in trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's house in the town of Staleybridge, in the execution of a warrant granted by a justice of Cheshire, to search for goods alleged to have been clandestinely removed there to avoid a distress under the 11 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 7, was not entitled to notice of action. But such a constable would be entitled to all the general privileges of other constables. (Shatwell v. Hall, 10 M. & W. 523.)

When he is not protected.

On the other hand, the constable is not protected from an illegal act if he had no warrant at all; (Postlethwaite v. Gibson, 3 Esp. 226;) or if he acted beyond the limits of the authority given him by the warrant, although he acted bonâ fide. (Money v. Leach, 3 Burr. 1768; Prestidge v. Woodman, 1 B. & C. 13; 2 D. & R. 43, S. C.)

And, generally speaking, he is not protected from an illegal act, done under a warrant, unless the magistrate is liable, and in such cases a demand of the warrant is not necessary. (Sly v. Stevenson, 2 C. & P. 464; Bell v. Oakley, 2 M. & Sel. 260; Sturch v. Clarke, 1 Nev. & M. 671; 4 B. & Adol. 113; Cotton v. Kadwell, 2 Nev. & M. 299.)

Therefore where a constable, having a warrant to search for certain specific goods, alleged to have been stolen, found and took away those goods and certain others, also supposed to have been stolen, but which were not mentioned in the warrant, and were not likely to be of use in substantiating the charge of stealing the goods mentioned in the warrant; it was held, the constable was liable to an action of trespass, without any demand of the warrant. (Crozier v. Cundy, 6 B. & Cres. 232; 9 D. & R. 224, S. C.)

Where a constable, acting under a warrant to take the goods of A., took the goods of B., believing them to belong to A.; the Court of Queen's Bench were clearly of opinion that he was liable, without any demand of the warrant. (Parton v. Williams, 3 B. & Ald. 330, ante, 912.)

In an action by A. against B., a constable, for false imprisonment, B. cannot defend himself under a magistrate's warrant against C., although A. was charged with felony before the magistrate, and was the person against whom the warrant was intended to issue, and a demand of a perusal and copy of the warrant is in such case unnecessary. (Hoye v. Bush, 2 Scott, N. R. 86; 1 Man. & G. 775, S. C.)

And it was so held, where under a warrant against the goods of A., the defendant, an overseer, took goods already in the hands of the bailiff of A.'s landlord as a distress for rent. (Kay v. Grover and another, 7 Bing. 312; 3 M. & P. 643, S. C.)

Neither is such a demand necessary, if, under a warrant to take up a disorderly person, the constable take up one that is not so; or, under a warrant to take up the author, printer, or publisher of a libel, he take up one who was neither author, printer, or publisher. (Money v. Leach, 3 Burr. 1768.)

11. Indemnity and Protection of.

Nor if, in order to levy a poor's rate under a warrant of distress granted by two magistrates, he break and enter the party's house, and break the windows, &c. (Bell v. Oakley, 2 M. & Sel. 259; fully noticed "Poor," Vol. IV.)

Nor if, under a warrant of distress, he make an excessive distress. (Sturch v. Clarke, 1 Nev. & M. 671; 4 B. & Adol. 113, S. C.)

Nor where he executes the warrant out of the jurisdiction of the magistrate without being expressly authorised by the warrant so to do. (Milton v. Green, 5 East, 233; 1 Smith, 402, S. C.) In that case goods were taken by constables under a warrant of distress, granted by a justice of the peace for the county of Kent, directed, "To the constables of the lower half hundred of C. and G. in the county of Kent;" which warrant recited, that the plaintiff, (whose goods were distrained), of the parish of G. in the said county, was balloted for the militia of the said county, and having refused to serve, &c. was convicted in a certain penalty, for levying which the warrant was granted. The Court of King's Bench held, that if the warrant turned out to have been executed within a certain part of the parish of G. within the jurisdiction of the cinque ports, and not within the county of Kent, the constables were not within the protection of stat. 24 Geo. II. c. 44, s. 6, and might be sued in trespass without the magistrate being made a defendant.

The demand is only necessary where the constable acts within his jurisdiction in obedience to the warrant. Therefore where a bench warrant, issued by a judge of the Q. B., was executed by a constable, to whom it was not directed, out of his own district, it was held, in an action of trespass against the constable, that the plaintiff was not bound to demand a perusal and copy of the warrant. (Gladwell v. Blake, 1 C. M. & Ros. 636, ante.)

What actions the 24 Geo. 2, extends to.

The act extends only to actions of tort, as trespass or trover. (Lyms v. Goldery, 3 C. & P. 586.) It does not extend to actions of replevin; (Fletcher v. Wilkins, 6 East, 283; per Bayley, J., in Waterhouse v. Keen, 4 B. & C. 211; 6 D. & R. 257, S. C.;) nor to actions of assumpsit. (Id.; B. N. P. 246; sed vide Irving v. Wilson, 4 T. R. 487; Greenway v. Hurd, id. 553; Wallace v. Smith, 5 East, 115; and see title "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1035.)

When justices to be joined in the action.

Where the collector of land-tax had distrained under the warrant of the commissioners, and a copy of the warrant had been demanded and given, it was held the plaintiff was not bound to join as defendants the commissioners who issued the warrant, the 24 Geo. II. c. 44, s. 6, not being applicable, though the commissioners were also acting magistrates for the division. (Charlton v. Alway, 11 Ad. & Ell. 993.)

Nature of the demand, &c.

Nature, &c. of the Demand, and Refusal of Warrant, &c.] The 6th section of the 24 Geo. II. (ante, 911,) points out the mode in which the demand should be made. The signature of the attorney to the demand, on behalf of the party demanding, is sufficient. (Jory v. Orchard, 2 B. & P. 42.) On the trial, if there be two copies, the one served and the other kept, the production of the latter is sufficient, without giving notice to produce the former. (Id.)

Where the defendant, a constable, who had taken the plaintiff to gaol under a magistrate's warrant, was called upon, under 24 Geo. II. c. 44, s. 6, for a copy of the warrant and perusal of the original, the defendant gave the plaintiff a copy, but was unable to grant a perusal of the original, because it was retained by the gaoler for his own protection. The plaintiff, on information of this circumstance, made no objection to its non-production: it was held, that he had dispensed with the production of the original, and that this was a sufficient compliance with the demand. (Atkins v. Kilby, 11 Ad. & Ell. 777.)

If the constable deliver a copy before the commencement of the action, although after the expiration of six days from the demand, it is sufficient. (Jones v. Vaughan, 5 East, 445; 2 Smith, 5, S. C.)

Where a demand for the perusal of a copy of a magistrate's warrant, in pursuance of the 24 Geo. II. c. 44, s. 6, required the perusal and copy to be given within three days; it was held, as the demand need not specify any terms, that this was a sufficient demand to entitle the party to sue, although the statute says, that no action should be brought until the perusal and copy shall have been refused for six days after demand. (Collins v. Rose, 5 Mee. & W. 194.)

11. Indemnity and Protection of.

The constable is in no case required to return the warrant to the justice, or to part with the warrant out of his own possession, for that is his justification. (1 East's P. C. 319.) He should either make a copy himself, or allow the party applying to take one, either from such party's reading it, or else from his own reading. He must however certify to the justice what he hath done in execution of the warrant.

Constable not to return warrant, or part with it.

As to the duty of a constable, &c. showing his warrant when executing it, see "Warrant," Vol. VI.

Showing warrant.

Limitation of Actions against.]—The 8th section of the 24 Geo. II. c. 44, (ante, 912,) limits an action against a constable, for any thing done by him as such, to be brought in six calendar months after the act committed.

Limitation of actions against constables.

This section is more extensive in its protection than the 6th section; for by it a constable is protected from liability to be sued, after six months, for any act done by him bonâ fide in his character of officer, and under a belief that he is discharging the duty with which he is invested, though it turn out to be not in obedience to a warrant. (Smith v. Wiltshire, 5 Moore, 322; 2 B. & B. 619, S. C.; Theobald v. Crickmore, 1 B. & Ald. 227; Parton v. Williams, 3 B. & Ald 330, ante, 912; Oakley v. Kensington Canal Company, 5 B. & Adol. 138.) And the circumstance of there having been no warrant is not of itself immaterial. (Id.) There must, however, be some reasonable ground for the belief that he was so acting, and the question whether he did so is mainly for a jury. See title "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1033.

Some constables, under a warrant to search a house for black cloths, which had been stolen, finding no black cloth, took cloth of other colours, and carried it before a magistrate, refusing at the same time to tell the owner of the house searched whether they had any warrant or not; held, that they were within the protection of stat. 24 Geo. II. c. 44, and that an action against them ought to have been commenced within six months after the grievance complained of. (Smith v. Wiltshire, 5 Moore, 322; 2 B. & B. 619, S. C.)

Where a constable, acting under a warrant commanding him to take the goods of A., takes the goods of B., believing them to belong to A., he is entitled to the protection of the 8th section of the act. (Parton v. Williams, 3 B. & Ald. 330.)

Where a constable, having a magistrate's warrant of distress to levy a church rate under the 53 Geo. III. c. 127, broke the door of and entered the plaintiff's dwelling-house, it was held, that although he thereby exceeded his authority, yet no action could be maintained after the expiration of three calendar months, the twelfth section of that act requiring the action "for any thing done in pursuance of that act" to be brought within that period. (Theobald v. Crickmore, 1 B. & Ald. 227.)

The action should be brought within the six calendar months exclusive, it should seem, of the day of committing the act. (Lester v. Garland, 15 Ves. 248; Pellew v. Inhabitants of Wonford, 9 B. & Cres. 134; 4 M. & Ryl. 130, S. C.; Hardy v. Ryle, 9 B. & Cres. 603; 4 M. & Ryl. 295, S. C.; sed vide "Time.") Where the cause of action is a continuing one, as an imprisonment of plaintiff, it is sufficient to show that the action was commenced within six months of the end of such imprisonment. (Massey v. Johnson, 12 East, 67; B. N. P. 24. See further as to the time for the commencement of the action, post "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1039, and title "Time," Vol. VI.)

Venue and Plea.]—We have seen (ante, 912), that the 7 Jac. I. c. 5, provides that the action against a constable shall be brought in the county where the act was committed, and that he might give the special matter of defence under the general issue. In construction of this act, it may be laid down that in an action against a constable or other officer, for an illegal act not done bonâ fide in the execution or under colour of his office, the venue may be laid in any county, but if he reasonably thought it was his duty to act, though he was mistaken, it is otherwise. (Anon. 1 Stra. 446; Alcock v. Andrews, 2 Esp. R. 542; Straight v. Gee, 2 Stark. 445; Beechey v. Sides, 9 B. & Cres. 806; 4 Man. & R. 634; and see Cook v. Leonard, 6 B. & Cres. 351; 9 D. & R. 339; Morgan v. Palmer, 4 D. & R. 283; 2 B. & Cres. 729; Irving v. Wilson, 4 T. R. 435.) Per Pratt, C. J., in Anon. 1 Stra. 446, "The 21 Jac. I. only applies where the action is for a matter relating to the execution of his office; but if after his authority is expired, he abuses the party, or if he meets a man, and knocks him down, he may be sued for it as all other people may." If he be in the execution or supposed execution of his duty, but were guilty of an excess, he might be within the act. (See Butler v. Ford, 1 C. & M. 662; and see Greenway v. Hurd, 4 T. R. 553.) But there must in all cases exist some colour of reason to lead him to a bonâ fide belief that he was acting in the execution of his office, and the question whether he so acted is mainly for a jury. (See "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1033.)

Trespass was brought against three defendants for an assault committed in Bristol, two of them were constables of Oxfordshire, and had come down and taken the plaintiff at Bristol (thus committing the assault), on suspicion of his having stolen a horse, belonging to the other defendant, in Oxfordshire; the declarations set out all the trespasses to have been done without reasonable or probable cause, the two constables pleaded not guilty only. It was held, that they might give the special matter in evidence in mitigation of damages, to show that there was reasonable and probable cause; but, semble, having acted out of their jurisdiction, they were not entitled as constables under 21 Jac. I. c. 12, s. 5, to give the special matter in evidence under the general issue, as a defence of the trespasses. (Rowcliffe v. Murray, 1 Car. & M. 513.)

The same act protects all who act in aid or by the command of such constable. But if a private person be the prime mover, and act as a principal in the transaction, he will not be entitled to its protection. (Straight v. Gee, 2 Stark. 445.) And with respect to the person who may be said to act in aid and by the command of the constable, it has been held, that if a person procures a warrant against another, and points out the latter to the constable, he is entitled to the protection of the act, and may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence. (Nathan v. Cohen, 3 Campb. 257.)

The constable's deputy seems within the act. (Moore, 845; 2 T. R. 395; Bac. Abr. Const. (D.); sed vide 3 B. & C. 762; 5 D. & R. 654, S. C.)

But where a person is not an officer within the meaning of this or a similar act, though he may have supposed he was so, he is not within the protection of the act. (See Copland v. Powell, 8 Moore, 400; 1 Bingh. 369, S. C.; Jones v. Williams, 3 B. & C. 762; 5 D. & R. 654, S. C.)

Costs.

Costs.]—To have entitled a defendant to double costs under the 7 Jac. I. c. 5, (ante, 912,) there must be a certificate from the judge. (Grindley v. Holloway, Dougl. 307.) It might be granted either at the trial or after. (Harper v. Carr, 7 T. R. 448; Johnson v. Stanton, 2 B. & C. 621; 4 D. & R. 156, S. C.) But such certificate was not necessary if the fact appear on a special verdict. (R v. Poland, 1 Stra. 49; Devenish v. Mertins, 2 Stra. 974.)

Now the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, s. 3, enacts, that instead of double costs the parties shall receive such full and reasonable indemnity as to all costs, charges and expenses incurred in and about any action, suit, or other legal proceedings, as shall be taxed by the proper officer in that behalf, subject to be reviewed in like manner and by the same authority as any other taxation of costs by such officer.

As to the costs of a metropolitan police officer in an action against him for an act done by him as such, see the 10 Geo. IV. c. 44, s. 41, "Police," Vol. V. pp. 575, 576.

12. Expenses of.

As to fees and allowances made to parish constables under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, see ante, 903.

Charges of making distress.

By stat. 27 Geo. II. c. 20, s. 2, "the officer making such distress shall and is hereby empowered to deduct the reasonable charges of taking, keeping and selling such distress, out of the money arising by such sale; and the overplus (if any), after such charges and also the said penalty or sum of money shall be fully satisfied and paid, shall be returned on demand to the owner of the goods and chattels so distrained; and the officer executing such warrant, if required, shall show the same to the person whose goods and chattels are distrained, and shall suffer a copy thereof to be taken."

Charges of conveying an offender to gaol to be paid by offender if able.

By stat. 3 Jac. I. c. 10, s 1, "all and every person and persons whatsoever, that from and after the end of this present session of parliament shall be committed to the common or usual gaol within any county or liberty within this realm, by any justice or justices of the peace, for any offence or misdemeanor, to any such gaol, that the said person or persons so to be committed as aforesaid, having means or ability thereunto, shall bear their own reasonable charges for so conveying or sending them to the said gaol, and the charges also of such as shall be appointed to guard them to such gaol, and shall so guard them thither: and if any such person or persons so to be committed as aforesaid shall refuse, at the time of their commitment and sending to the said gaol, to defray the said charges, or shall not then pay or bear the same, that then such justice or justices of the peace shall and may, by writing under his or their hand and seal, or hands and seals, give warrant to the constable or constables of the hundred, or constable or tithingman of the tithing or township, where such person or persons shall be dwelling and inhabit, or from whence he or they shall be committed as aforesaid, or where he or they shall have any goods within the county or liberty, to sell such and so much of the goods and chattels of the said persons so to be committed, as by the discretion of the said justice or justices of the peace shall satisfy and pay the charges of such his or their conveying and sending to the said gaol, the appraisement to be made by four of the honest inhabitants of the parish or tithing where such goods or chattels shall remain and be, and the overplus of the money which shall be made thereof to be delivered to the party to whom the said goods shall belong."

If not payable, to be paid out of county rate.

Except in Middlesex.

And by stat. 27 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 1—4, if he have not money nor goods within the county sufficient to bear the charges of himself and of those who convey him to the gaol or house of correction, the constable may make application to a justice, who may upon oath examine into and ascertain the reasonable expenses, and shall by his warrant (without fee) order the treasurer of the county to pay the same, (except in Middlesex,) where the same shall be paid by the overseers of the parish where the person was apprehended.

See these statutes of 3 Jac. I. and 27 Geo. II. in full, and the law, ante, "Commitment," p. 782.

Charges of conveying vagrants.

By the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 8, the expenses of carrying to gaol and maintaining an idle and disorderly person, rogue, vagabond, or incorrigible rogue, are to be paid out of the money found upon him, or arising from the sale of any property in his possession and use. (See "Vagrant," Vol. VI.; and Rex v. The Inhabitants of Chelmsford, post, 922.)

When special constables shall be appointed in England to execute warrants in cases of felony, two justices may order proper allowances to be made for their expenses and loss of time, which order shall be submitted to quarter sessions;

And by stat. 41 Geo. III. U. K. c. 78, s. 1, "it shall and may be lawful to and for any two justices of the peace for any county, city, division, riding or place, within that part of the United Kingdom called England, when any person or persons shall have been nominated or appointed a special constable or special constables, for the purpose of executing any warrant or warrants in any case or cases of felony, to order, by any writing or writings under their hands, such proper allowances to be made to such special constable or special constables, for his or their expenses, trouble and loss of time in executing or endeavouring to execute such warrant or warrants, as to him or them shall seem reasonable and necessary; which orders shall be afterwards laid before and submitted, on the oath of such special constable or constables, to the consideration of the justices assembled at the next general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden for such county, city, division, riding or place, as the case may be; and the justices so assembled at such general quarter sessions may allow or disallow the whole or any part or parts of such allowances so ordered by such justices issuing such warrant or warrants, and shall and may thereupon then order and direct the treasurer for such county, city, division, riding or place, to pay such sum or sums of money to such special constable or special constables, as to the said justices so assembled shall seem reasonable and necessary; and such treasurer shall, and he is hereby authorised and required forthwith to pay the sum and sums of money so ordered and directed to be paid to the person or persons empowered to receive the same; and such treasurer shall be allowed the same in his accounts." and to high constables in case of riot, &c.

Sect. 2. "It shall and may be lawful to and for any two justices of the peace, within their respective jurisdictions, to order and direct by any writing or writings under their hands, such reasonable and necessary allowances to be made to any high constable or high constables for any county, city, division, riding, hundred or place, within that part of the United Kingdom called England, for any extraordinary expenses incurred by him or them in the execution of their respective duties, in any case or cases of tumult, riot or felony; and such orders shall be laid before and submitted, on the oath of such high constable or constables, to the consideration of the justices assembled at the next general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden for such county, city, division, riding or place, as the same may be; and the justices so assembled at such general quarter sessions may allow or disallow the whole or any part or parts of such allowance so ordered, and shall and may then order and direct the treasurer for such county, city, division, riding or place, to pay such sum or sums of money to such high constable or high constables as to the said justices so assembled shall seem reasonable; and such treasurer shall and he is hereby authorised and required forthwith to pay the sum or sums of money, so ordered and directed to be paid, to the person or persons empowered to receive the same, and such treasurer shall be allowed the same in his accounts."

In the case of R. v. Justices of Leicester, (9 D. & R. 772; 7 B. & C. 8), where the high constable of a borough, by the direction of the justices, employed and paid a number of special constables to suppress riots at an election, and the ordinary constables were also constantly employed by him during the same period in endeavouring to keep the peace, for which service he made them a compensation; it was held that the justices were warranted in considering the monies so expended as "extraordinary expenses," incurred by the high constable in case of riot, within the meaning of the 41 Geo. III. c. 78, s. 2, and in making an order upon the treasurer to reimburse him those expenses.

In actions against the hundred, &c.

By the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 7, if the high constable sued on this act shall produce and prove before two justices of the jurisdiction, residing in or acting for his hundred or district, an account of the just and necessary expenses which he shall have incurred in the prosecution of such action, they shall make an order for payment thereof to the treasurer of that jurisdiction; and if in such action judgment shall be given against the plaintiff, the high constable shall in like manner be reimbursed the just and necessary expenses incurred by him in consequence of such action, over and above the taxed costs to be paid by the plaintiff; and if it shall be proved to two such justices that the plaintiff is insolvent, so that the high constable can have no relief as to such taxed costs, they shall make a similar order for payment of the amount of such taxed costs. (See "Hundred," Vol. III.)

County rate.

By 55 Geo. III. c. 55, s. 16, the justices in general of quarter sessions, or at any adjournment thereof, may make allowances and compensations to the constables, &c. for collecting the county rate under this act.

Deserters. Militia.

As to the rewards for taking deserters, see "Military Law," Vol. V.; and for collecting the fines for not furnishing the complement of militia, see id.

12. Expenses of.

By stat. 18 Geo. III. c. 19, s. 4, after reciting that "constables, headboroughs and tithingmen, are or may be at great charge in doing the business of their parish, township or place, and in many cases are not sufficiently indemnified by the laws," enacts "that every constable, headborough or tithingman, shall every three months, and within fourteen days after he shall go out of such office, deliver to the overseers of the poor of the said parish, township or place, for the time being, a just account in writing, fairly entered in a book to be kept for that purpose, and signed by him, of all sums so by him expended on account of the said parish, township or place, in all cases not hitherto provided for by the laws heretofore made, or by this act, and also of all sums received by him on the account of the said parish, township or place; and the said overseers of the poor, or their successors, shall, within the next fourteen days after the said account or accounts shall be so delivered, lay the same before the inhabitants of the said parish, township or place; and in case the said account or accounts be approved of by the majority of such inhabitants, the overseers of the poor of the said parish, township or place, for the time being, are hereby authorised and required to pay out of the poor rates, made or to be made for such parish, township or place, such sum or sums of money as shall appear to be due on the said account or accounts; but in case the said account or accounts, or any part thereof, shall be disallowed, then the said overseers of the poor for the time being shall then deliver back to the said constable, headborough or tithingman, such book of acounts; and it shall and may be lawful to and for the said constable, headborough or tithingman, then to produce the said book before any one or more of his majesty's justices of the peace in and for the county, riding, division, city, town corporate, franchise or liberty, wherein such parish or township shall be situate, giving reasonable notice thereof to the overseers of the poor of the said parish, township or place, for the time being; which said justice or justices is and are hereby authorised to examine the same, and to hear and determine any objection or objections that shall be made to the said accounts, and to settle the sum which to him or them shall appear due on the said account, and to enter the same in the said account, and to sign his or their name or names thereto; and the overseers of the poor of the said parish, township or place, for the time being, are hereby authorised and required to pay the said sum out of the money which shall come to their hands by virtue of any rate or assessment made or to be made for the relief of the poor."

Charges in the business of the parish.

To deliver accounts to overseers every three months, and also within fourteen days after he shall go out of office.

Such accounts to be laid before a vestry within the next fourteen days.

If approved of, to pay the same out of the poor rates.

If any such account shall be disallowed, a justice may settle the same.

And the overseers to pay the balance.

Sect. 5. "In case the overseer or overseers of the poor of the said parish, township or place, for the time being, shall find that the said parish, township or place is aggrieved by any neglect, act or thing done or omitted by the said constable, headborough or tithingman, or by any of his majesty's justices of the peace, or shall have any material objection to such account, or any part thereof, or to such determination as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for such overseer or overseers, in any of the cases aforesaid, giving reasonable notice to the said justice, constable, headborough or tithingman, to appeal to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace for the county, riding, division, city, town corporate, franchise or liberty, where such parish, township or place lies; and the justices of the peace there assembled are hereby authorised and required to receive such appeal, and to hear and finally determine the same; but if it shall appear to the said justices that reasonable notice was not given, then they shall adjourn the said appeal to the next quarter sessions, and then and there finally hear and determine the same; and the said justices may award and order to the party, for whom such appeal shall be determined, reasonable costs, in the same manner that they are empowered to do in case of appeals concerning the settlement of poor persons, by an act made in the eighth and ninth years of King William the Third, intituled 'An Act for supplying some Defects in the Laws for the Relief of the Poor of this Kingdom.'"

Appeal to quarter sessions.

Sect. 6. "In all corporations or liberties which have not four justices of the peace, it shall and may be lawful for the overseer or overseers of the poor of the parish, township or place, for the time being, where an appeal is given by this act, to appeal, if he or they shall think fit, to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace for the county, riding or division wherein such corporation or liberty is situate."

Sessions may make regulations.

Sect 9. "It shall and may be lawful for his majesty's justices of the peace in and for any county, riding, division, city, town corporate, franchise or liberty, in quarter sessions assembled, to lay down or alter, from time to time, such rules and regulations as to any costs or charges thereafter to be allowed to any person whatsoever, by virtue of any part of this act, for the better carrying the intent of any part of this act into execution, and for the preventing any unnecessary expense, as to them shall seem most just and reasonable; which rules and regulations, having received the approbation and signature of one or more of his majesty's judges of oyer and terminer, or general gaol delivery, at the assizes for the county wherein such rules and regulations shall have been made, shall be binding, and not otherwise, on all persons whatsoever; and no person whatsoever shall be allowed any greater sum of money, by virtue of this act, than according to the said rules and regulations so approved of as aforesaid, any thing herein contained to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding."

What are charges for parish business, &c.

Fees paid by a constable to a justice's clerk for warrants to apprehend vagrants in a parish, are money expended by him on account of the parish, within sect. 4 of the above act, and payable out of the poor rate, although the constable was not appointed by the parish, but one of the rural police force established by virtue of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88. (Rex v. The Inhabitants of Chelmsford, 12 Law Journal, N. S. M. C. 139.)

Though a constable be not entitled to the allowance of the expenses he has incurred in a prosecution arising within his precinct, yet if he have charged them in his accounts, and the item has been allowed under this statute of 18 Geo. III. by two justices, though after disallowance by the vestry, the sessions cannot give redress unless a majority of the churchwardens and overseers concur in the appeal. (R. v. Justices of Lancashire, 5 B. & Ald. 757; 1 D. & Ry. 454, S. C. nom. R. v. Justices of Manchester.)

But if the appeal be made by proper persons, although the justices in sessions should confirm the allowance of the two justices, made after the disallowance by the vestry, the Court of Queen's Bench will quash their order, unless in cases where it is the duty of a parish or township to prosecute such offenders, or the constable has previously to the prosecution received from the inhabitants some authority to proceed. (R. v. Saville, 5 B. & Ald. 182.)

Nor is the constable entitled to be allowed in his accounts the costs of a prosecution, although for an assault made on one of the overseers, and although the proceeding were directed by a justice, and approved by the Court which tried it; and if an overseer take upon him to pay such costs to the constable, he is not entitled to have it allowed by the parish in his account; and even if allowed by the vestry, afterwards by two justices, and that allowance by the sessions on appeal, the Court of Queen's Bench will quash the order. (R. v. Bird, 2 B. & Ald. 526.)

By 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 23, (title "Costs," Vol. II.) the Court before whom an indictment for an assault, &c. is tried, may allow the expenses of the prosecution, if the prosecutor appears on a recognizance.

13. Accounts of and Removal from Office.

Removal from office.

As to dismissing paid constables in parishes, see 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 19, ante, 902.

At common law, in such manner as constables were chosen, in the same manner, and by the like authority, were they to be removed; so as if there was cause to remove and put a high constable from his place, it hath not been thought fit that any one or two justices should do it upon their discretion, but that it should be done by the greater part of the justices of that division, and that for some just cause; or else that it be done at the sessions. (Dalt. c. 28.)

And it seems clear that the sheriff or steward of the leet, having power to place a constable in his office, has by consequence a power of removing him. (2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 38.) 13. Accounts and Removal of.

And also the justices of the peace have used, for good cause, to displace all such constables as have been chosen and sworn by them. (2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 38.)

By stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 15, if a constable shall continue above a year in his office, the sessions may discharge him, and put another in his place till the lord shall hold a leet. Constable continuing above a year.

And if the Court or other judge shall refuse to discharge a constable, the Queen's Bench may compel them by mandamus. (2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 47.)

The high constables shall at the general or quarter sessions, if thereunto required, account for the general county rate by them received, on pain of being committed to gaol until they shall account, and shall pay over the money in their hands, according to the order of the said Court, on the like pain. And all their accounts and vouchers shall, af[illegible] been passed at the sessions, be deposited with the clerk of the peac[illegible]pt amongst the records, and inspected by any justice without fee. (2 [illegible]eo. II. c. 29, s. 8; and see 55 Geo. III. c. 51, s. 12.) High constables to account at the sessions.

1. Interpretation of Acts.

By the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 28, it is enacted, "That in construing this act the word 'county' shall be construed to mean county, riding, or division having a separate court of quarter sessions of the peace, or in which separate county rates are made; and that all things hereinbefore authorised to be done at quarter sessions may be done by the justices in general sessions assembled in those counties in which county rates are made in general sessions; and that nothing herein contained shall extend to any part of the metropolitan police district." Meaning of "county." General sessions. Not to extend to metropolitan police.

By the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 34, after reciting the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, it is enacted, "That in construing this act the words 'county' and 'quarter sessions' shall be taken to be used in the same sense in which they are used in the first-recited act: provided always, that neither in the first-recited act nor in this act shall the word 'county' be taken to mean any liberty or franchise County.

1. Interpretation of Acts.

Not to extend to the Isle of Ely.

having a distinct commission of the peace separate from the commission of the peace of the county or riding in which it is situated: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall extend to affect the Isle of Ely, or the powers of the justices named in the commission of the peace thereof, or to give any power or authority within the Isle of Ely to the justices named in the commission of the peace of the county of Cambridge."

Act to be construed with act of last session. Local constables may vote and hold any office for gain.

Sect. 35. "That this act, and so much of the said act of the last session of parliament as is not inconsistent with this act, shall be construed together as one act: provided always, that no local constable appointed under this act shall thereby become incapable of giving his vote for the election of any member to serve in parliament, or be restrained from employing himself in any office or employment for hire or gain."

2. How and for what Districts appointed—Incorporated Boroughs exempted.

By the 2 [illegible] c. 93, intituled "An Act for the Establishment of County and Distr[illegible] Constables by the Authority of Justices of the Peace," (27th August, 1839,) after reciting that by an act passed in the second year of the reign of his late majesty, intituled "An Act for amending the Laws relative to the Appointment of Special Constables, and for the better Preservation of the Peace," it was amongst other things enacted, that in all cases where it should be made to appear to any two or more justices of the peace of any county, riding, or division having a separate commission of the peace, or to any two or more justices of the peace of any liberty, franchise, city, or town in England or Wales, upon the oath of any credible witness, that any tumult, riot, or felony had taken place or might be reasonably apprehended in any parish, township, or place situate within the division or limits for which the said respective justices usually act, and such justices should be of opinion that the ordinary officers appointed for preserving the peace are not sufficient for the protection of the inhabitants and the security of the property in any such parish, township, or place as aforesaid, then and in every such case such justices, or any two or more justices acting for the same division or limits, were thereby authorised to nominate and appoint, by precept in writing under their hands, so many as they should think fit of the householders or other persons (not legally exempt from serving the office of constable) residing in such parish, township, or place as aforesaid, or in the neighbourhood thereof, to act as special constables for such time and in such manner as to the said justices respectively should seem fit and necessary, for the preservation of the public peace, and for the protection of the inhabitants, and the security of the property in such parish, township, or place: and reciting that the powers of justices of the peace for making such appointments as aforesaid were enlarged by an act passed in the sixth year of the same reign, intituled "An Act for enlarging the Powers of Magistrates in the Appointment of Special Constables:" and that it was expedient that the powers of the said justices for appointing constables be further enlarged, and that powers be given for charging the expenses of paying such constables upon the several divisions in which they shall be appointed: it was therefore enacted, "That in all cases where it shall be made to appear to the justices of the peace of any county in England or Wales in general or quarter sessions assembled, or at any adjournment thereof, that the ordinary officers appointed for preserving the peace are not sufficient for the preservation of the peace, and for the protection of the inhabitants, and for the security of property within the county, it shall be lawful for them to set forth the same, by a report in writing under the hands of the majority of the justices there present, and to declare how many constables are needed in their opinion to be appointed within their county for the purposes aforesaid, and the rates of payment which it would be expedient to pay to the chief and other constables; and every such report shall be sent to one of her majesty's principal secretaries of state: provided always, that the number of constables shall not be more than one man for every thousand of the inhabitants according to the last parliamentary enumeration of the population for the time being, the population of the boroughs and towns hereinafter excepted from the operation of this act being deducted therefrom."

2. How chosen and for what Districts, &c.

Sect. 2. "That it shall be lawful for the justices assembled in general or quarter session, from time to time, with the consent of one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, to increase or diminish the number of constables first appointed under this act for their county."

Alteration of number of constables.

Sect. 5. "That with the notice of the time of holding any such general or quarter session, or adjournment thereof, as now required by law, notice shall be given of the day and hour at which any business relating to the adoption of this act, or the appointment or dismissal of any chief constable under this act, or the increase or diminution of the number of constables, will begin at such session; and the clerk of the peace of each county shall give such notice as last mentioned on the requisition of any five justices acting for such county."

Notice of proceedings under this act to be inserted in notices now required by law.

By the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 30, it is enacted, "That with the notice of the time of holding any such general or quarter session, or adjournment thereof, as now required by law, notice shall be given of the day and hour at which any business relating to the adoption of the provisions of this act will be considered at such session."

Defining nature of notice.

By the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 19, it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for the justices of any county in general or quarter session assembled, in case they shall not resolve on appointing constables under this act for the whole of their county, to resolve, with the approval of the secretary of state, on appointing constables under this act for any division of the county for which special or petty sessions of the peace are holden, or for any number of such divisions of the county; and for that purpose they, or the greater number of them there assembled, not being less than two, shall have all the powers with regard to such division or divisions which they have with respect to the whole county under the provisions herein-before contained; and all the provisions herein-before contained with respect to the whole county shall be deemed to apply to such division or divisions as if it or they were the whole county; and the provisions relating to the chief constable shall be deemed to apply to the superintendent of each division: provided always, that if constables shall be appointed under this act in any number of adjoining divisions, a separate police establishment shall not be formed for each division, but the whole shall be consolidated into one police establishment for the whole of such adjoining divisions, and that if this act shall be afterwards adopted for the whole county the several divisional establishments of police shall be consolidated and form part of the general county police establishment."

Constables may be appointed for separate divisions.

By the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 29, it is enacted, "That in case the justices of any county shall not resolve on appointing constables, under the said act of the last session, for the whole of their county, it shall be lawful for them, if they shall think fit, in general or quarter sessions assembled, to form any number of contiguous parishes, townships, or places into a division, so that such division contain not less than twenty-five thousand persons, according to the last census for the time being, and to appoint constables under the said act for every such division; and all provisions of the said act as amended by this act, and of this act, relating to the appointment of constables for any division or divisions for which special or petty sessions of the peace are holden, or relating to police districts, shall be deemed to apply to the police divisions so formed."

Justices may form any number of parishes, containing not less than 25,000 inhabitants, into a division for the purposes of this act.

Sect. 27. "And whereas the number of constables needed may be different in different parts of the same county, be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the justices of the peace for any county in general or quarter sessions assembled, if they shall be of opinion that a distinction ought to be made in the number of constables appointed to keep the peace in different parts of the county, to divide the county or any part thereof into police districts, consisting of such parishes and places, or parts of parishes and places, as shall appear to them most convenient, and to declare the number of constables which ought to be appointed for each police district, and from time to time to alter the extent of such police districts, and the number of constables to be appointed for each; and a report of every such proposed division or alteration, and of the number of constables proposed for each police district, with an estimate of its extent and population, and of any other circumstances upon which the determination of the justices shall have been grounded, shall be sent to one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, and if approved by the secretary of state such division or alteration shall be deemed to be completed."

Each police district to pay for its own constables.

Sect. 28. "That if the secretary of state shall approve of such division of the county or any part thereof into police districts for the purposes aforesaid, the expense of putting the said act into execution in such county or part of such county shall be classed under two heads, of general expenditure and local expenditure; and the general expenditure shall be defrayed in common by all the districts, and the local expenditure, consisting of the expense of the salaries and clothing of the constables appointed for each district, and such other expenses as the justices, subject to the approval of the secretary of state, shall direct to be included under this head, shall be defrayed by each police district separately; and the police rates shall be assessed and levied in each police district accordingly: provided always, that notwithstanding the division of any county or part of any county into police districts, the constables of all such districts shall continue as part of the same force, and be subject to the same authority, and be liable, if required, to perform the same duty, in any part of the county or elsewhere, as if no such division into police districts had been made."

Constables subject to duty in any part of the county, as if no districts had been made.

Certain liberties, &c. considered as forming parts of counties for purposes of this act.

By the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 27, it is enacted, "That for the purposes of this act all detached parts of counties, and also all liberties and franchises, (other than such incorporated boroughs as aforesaid,) shall be considered as forming part of that county by which they are surrounded, or if partly surrounded by two or more counties, then as forming part of that county with which they have the longest common boundary; and so much of every such detached part of any county, or of any liberty and franchise, which is not of itself an entire hundred, wapentake, ward, rape, lathe, or such other division of a county, shall be considered as forming part of that hundred, ward, wapentake, rape, lathe, or such other division whereby it shall be surrounded in the county of which it shall be considered a part for the purposes of this act, or if partly surrounded by two or more hundreds, wapentakes, wards, rapes, lathes, or such other divisions, then as forming part of that one with which it shall have the longest common boundary."

Outlying districts may be transferred from one county to another.

By the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 2, reciting that "by the said act (2 & 3 Vict. c. 93,) it is provided that for the purposes of the said act all detached parts of counties shall be considered as part of that county by which they are wholly or partly surrounded; and that many populous towns are situated in more than one county, and also the boundary of many counties is so irregular that parts thereof, although not wholly separated from the main body of the county, may yet be more conveniently united, for the purposes of the said act, with some neighbouring county: it is enacted, that it shall be lawful for the justices of any two or more neighbouring counties, in their several general or quarter sessions assembled, from time to time to agree that such parts of their several counties as to them shall seem fit shall, for the purposes of the said act, be considered as forming part of any other of the said counties; and whenever any such district shall be so transferred, for the purposes of the said act, from one county to another, with the consent of the justices of both the last-mentioned counties, such district shall be considered, for the purposes of the said act, as if it were detached from the county to which it belongs, and wholly surrounded by the county to which it is so transferred; and all the provisions contained herein or in the said act, or in an act passed in the last session of parliament, intituled 'An Act for the better Administration of Justice in detached Parts of Counties,' respecting detached parts of counties, shall be taken to apply to such transferred districts."

2 & 3 Vict. c. 82.

Exemption of borough towns.

By the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 24, it is enacted, "That nothing in this act contained shall extend to authorise the justices of the peace of any county to appoint any constable within any borough incorporated under the provisions of an act passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late majesty, intituled 'An Act to provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales,' or under the provisions of any charter granted in pursuance of the said act; nor shall any such borough, for which a separate court of quarter sessions of the peace shall be holden, be liable to contribute to the expenses of this act, or to be charged with any part thereof in their account with the treasurer of such county."

2. How chosen and for what Districts, &c.

5 & 6 W. 4, c. 76.

Boroughs may agree to consolidate their police with county police.

But by the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 14, it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for the justices of any county in which constables shall have been appointed under the said act, and for the council of any incorporated borough situated in or adjoining to such county, to agree together for the consolidation of the county and borough police establishments; and in every such case all the constables appointed either for the county or the borough shall have all the powers, privileges, and duties throughout the county and the borough which constables appointed for any county have within that county under the said act, and all the provisions of the said act shall be taken to apply to the borough constables as well as to the county constables, except as is herein otherwise provided; and every such agreement which shall have been agreed to by the justices of the county in general or quarter session assembled, on the one hand, and by the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough, by their council, on the other hand, shall be binding on both parties, as soon as a memorandum of such agreement under the hands of two or more justices of the county, and countersigned by the clerk of the peace, shall be delivered to the council of the borough, and a counterpart thereof under the common seal of the borough shall be delivered to the justices; and when any such agreement shall have been made between any county and any borough, either party shall be empowered to put an end thereunto, without the consent of the other party, after six months notice in writing shall have been given to the other party; such notice, if given by the county, to be under the hands of two or more justices, and countersigned by the clerk of the peace, or if given by the borough, to be under the common seal of the borough: provided always, that no such notices shall be given by the justices, or by the borough, unless in either case such notice shall be agreed upon by a majority of three-fourths of the justices attending at any general or quarter session, or three-fourths of the council of the borough."

Government of consolidated police.

Sect. 15. "That in all cases where the establishment of county and borough constables shall be consolidated into one police establishment, the chief constable of the county shall have the general disposition and government of all such constables, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, and at his pleasure may dismiss all or any of them; and whenever the chief constable shall dismiss one of the borough constables he shall report the fact, with his reasons for the dismissal, to the mayor of the borough, and the watch committee of the borough shall forthwith appoint another constable properly qualified, unless provision shall be made in such agreement that all constables shall be appointed by the chief constable; and no borough constable who shall have been dismissed by the chief constable shall be capable of being re-appointed for the same borough without the consent of the chief constable, and so much of the said act for regulating corporations as empowers the said committee or any two justices of the peace having jurisdiction within the borough to dismiss any constable, shall be suspended as to those boroughs whose establishment of constables is consolidated with the establishment of county constables, during the time that any agreement for such consolidation shall be in force."

3. Police Rate, how levied and collected.

By the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 20, it was enacted, "That all [illegible] expenses incurred in putting that act into execution should be paid by the [illegible] treasurer of the county out of the county rate." And sect. 21 enacted, "[illegible] where this act shall be adopted for any division or divisions, and not for the [illegible] whole county, it shall be lawful for the justices of the peace for the said [illegible] assembled at any quarter sessions of the peace, or any adjournment thereof, from time to time to order the county rates made upon the said division or divisions to be increased, and for that purpose to rate every parish, township, and other place, whether parochial or extra-parochial, within such division or divisions, in the same manner as now authorised and practised by law for county rates, at such additional sum over and above the sum needed for the other purposes of the county rates as shall be needed for raising from such division or divisions respectively the sums needed for the purposes of this act within such division or divisions respectively, and the total amount of county rate, increased as aforesaid, to be levied upon every parish, township and place within any such division, shall be specified in the warrants issued for the purposes of the county rates by the justices to the high constables of every hundred or other such district within the county comprising any part of the said division, and the high constables shall issue their warrants accordingly to the overseers of the poor and others authorised in that behalf, in every parish, township and place within the said division or divisions."

Regulations as to county rate to apply to the increased rates levied hereby.

55 G. 3, c. 51.

Sect. 22. "That all the provisions of an act passed in the fifty-fifth year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third, intituled 'An Act to amend an Act of his late Majesty King George the Second, for the more easy assessing, collecting, and levying of County Rates,' or any other act in force touching the making, collecting, or recovering county rates, shall extend and apply to the making, collecting, and recovering the several increased rates hereby authorised to be made, as fully as if the same increased rates were made equally throughout the whole county."

Treasurer to keep separate accounts of the rates levied under this act.

Sect. 23. "That the treasurer of the said county shall keep a separate account of the several sums by him received and paid under this act, and if the act is not adopted for the whole county, separate accounts for every division, or set of adjoining divisions, having a separate establishment of constables under this act, and shall produce the same to the justices assembled at every quarter sessions of the peace for the said county, and the same shall be examined and audited by the said justices, and, being allowed and passed by them, shall be deposited with the clerk of the peace for the said county, to be kept among the records thereof, and that such allowance of the said justices shall be a sufficient release and discharge to such treasurer; and the said justices so assembled as aforesaid may from time to time order such allowance as they shall think reasonable to be paid out the general stock of the said county to the said treasurer for his trouble in the execution of this act.

So much of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, as directs the expenses to be paid out of the county rate, repealed; and justices in general or quarter sessions to make a police rate.

But now by the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 3, it is enacted, "That so much of the first-recited act (2 & 3 Vict. c. 93) as provides that the expenses of putting the said act in execution shall be paid out of the county rate shall be repealed; and that, for the purposes of defraying the expenses of the said act in any county in which, or in any part of which, the said act shall be put in force, the justices of such county in general or quarter session assembled shall make a fair and equal police rate, and for that purpose shall assess and tax the whole district for which the constables are appointed rateably and equally, according to a certain pound rate of the full and fair annual value of all messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments liable to the county rate, or which, if the whole of the said district were to all intents and purposes within their county, would be liable to the county rate therein, including all detached parts of other counties, and also all liberties and franchises (except as hereinafter excepted) which are locally situated in such county, or wholly or partly surrounded by such county, and declared by the said act to be considered as forming part of such county for the purposes of the said act, but excluding all detached parts of the said county, all parts of the county contributing to the police rates of any other county or to the metropolitan police rate, and all incorporated boroughs which are or shall be within the provisions of an act passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late majesty for regulating corporations, or of any charter granted in pursuance of the last-recited act, or of any act made for the amendment thereof, and all those towns and places for which constables or watchmen shall have been appointed under the act passed in the fourth year of his late majesty making provisions for the lighting and watching of parishes in England or Wales, or under any local act authorising the appointment of constables or watchmen in any town or place, and authorising rates to be made for defraying the expenses of such constables or watchmen, and shall not be discontinued before the passing of this act until they shall be discontinued, or until the chief constable of the county within which, for the purposes of this and the said first-recited act, such parish, town or place, is situated, shall have notified, as he is hereinafter empowered to do, that he is ready to undertake the charge of such parish, town or place: Provided always, that all expenses of putting the said act in execution before the passing of this act shall be paid out of the county rate as if this act had not been made.

How property rateable is to be valued.

Sect. 4. "That the value of all property rateable for the purposes of the said act shall be computed by the said justices according to the last valuation for the time being acted upon in assessing the county rate or liberty rate, or rate in the nature of a county rate (if any), to which such property is rateable, unless, in the case of any liberty or franchise or detached part of any county, the justices of the county in which such liberty or franchise or detached part is situated shall be dissatisfied with such valuation.

Police rate to be levied with the county rate.

Sect. 5. "That every police rate which the justices shall have made as aforesaid shall be collected in their county from the persons who are liable to contribute thereunto with and as part of the county rate; and the warrants issued by the justices to the high constables, and by the high constables to the overseers and others required to collect the county rates, shall distinguish between the rates to be levied from those places which are liable to the police rate in that county and those which are not liable thereunto, and shall state how much is levied for the county rate, and how much for the police rate, and the said rates shall be levied accordingly."

Contributions on account of liberties and detached parts of counties.

Sect. 6. "That it shall be lawful for the justices of any county in general or quarter session assembled for the purpose of obtaining the sum which ought to be contributed from any detached part of any other county, or any liberty or franchise not contributing to the county rate of such first-mentioned county, towards any such police rate, from time to time to issue a warrant under the hands of two or more of them, by which warrant they shall require the treasurer of the county to which such detached part belongs, or the treasurer or other person (if any) having the receipt of any liberty rate, or rate in the nature of a county rate levied within such liberty, to pay to the treasurer of such first-mentioned county, out of the monies collected by way of county rate, liberty rate, or rate in the nature of a county rate, the amount mentioned in the warrant; and that the person to whom any such warrant shall be directed shall, within forty days from the delivery of such warrant to him, pay the amount to the treasurer of the county from which such warrant shall have issued, and shall be allowed for the same in his accounts with his county or liberty; and every such warrant shall specify the rate in the pound at which the sum mentioned therein shall be computed."

How treasurer of such other county or liberty shall be reimbursed.

Sect. 7. "That for the purpose of reimbursing the treasurer or other person by whom any such sum shall have been paid, the justices of the county to which such detached part belongs, or of the liberty or franchise, as the case may be, shall order a police rate to be made, at the rate mentioned in the warrant, upon such detached part of their county, or upon such liberty or franchise respectively, which shall be levied and collected thereon with and as part of the county rate, liberty rate, or rate in the nature of a liberty rate, to which such detached part of a county or such liberty or franchise is liable, in like manner as the police rate is levied and collected by order of the justices of any county for the expenses of the police of their own county."

In case of default, or other good cause, the amount may be levied on the inhabitants.

Sect. 8. "That if payment shall not be made within the said forty days, according to the exigency of the warrant, or if there shall be no person to whom such warrant can be directed, or no county rate, liberty rate, or rate in the nature of a county rate, to which the inhabitants of such liberty or detached part of another county contribute, or if the justices of the first-named county shall be dissatisfied with the valuation upon which such rate was assessed, or if, for any other reason, it shall seem more convenient to the justices of the first-mentioned county, it shall be lawful for them to levy

3. Rates for.

the full amount of the police rate upon any such detached part of another county or liberty or franchise in respect of which such amount is demandable; and for the purpose of levying and collecting such rates, the justices of such first-mentioned county shall have, within every such detached part of another county, and within every such liberty and franchise respectively, the same powers which they have for levying and collecting county rates within the limits of their own commission; and such rates may be levied and collected by the like methods, and subject to the same right of appeal, as if such detached parts of another county or such liberty or franchise respectively were part of such first-mentioned county, and within the hundred, wapentake, ward, rape, lathe or such other division of the county in which they are locally situated, or, if not wholly lying in one hundred, wapentake, ward, rape, lathe or such other division, in that one with which they have the longest common boundary respectively; and the high constable of every such hundred, wapentake, ward, rape, lathe or such other division, on the receipt of a warrant to that effect under the hands of two or more of the said justices, shall collect the said rates; and the overseer of the poor, or in default of overseers, or in case there shall be no separate rate for the relief of the poor in any portion of such detached part or liberty or franchise, such person or persons as the justices of the first-mentioned county in quarter session assembled shall appoint for that purpose in every parish and place to which such detached parts or liberty or franchise, or any part thereof, belong, upon receipt of a warrant to that effect from such high constable, shall pay the amount assessed upon their parish or place respectively, or upon that part of it which is liable thereunto, in like manner, and subject to the like penalties in case of default, as if such detached parts or liberty or franchise were part of such first-mentioned county, and within such hundred, wapentake, ward, rape, lathe, or other division as aforesaid respectively."

Right of inspecting county and liberty rates.

Sect. 9. "That the treasurer of any county, or any person having an order for that purpose under the hand of such treasurer, may inspect any county rate made or to be made for any other county or liberty or franchise, the inhabitants of any part of which shall be liable to be rated to the police rate in the first-named county, and may also inspect any returns concerning all or any of the parishes, townships, precincts and places, whether parochial or extra-parochial, the inhabitants of which are liable to be rated as aforesaid, which have been or are to be delivered in pursuance of any of the acts relating to county rates, and may take copies or extracts from any such rates or returns, without payment of any fee or reward; and if any person having the custody of any such rate or return shall wilfully neglect or refuse to permit any such treasurer or other person authorised as aforesaid to inspect the same, or to take copies or extracts from the same, within two days after such order shall have been produced and shown to him, or a copy thereof left at his usual place of abode, he shall, on conviction thereof before any two justices of the peace, forfeit and pay for every such offence such sum not exceeding 10*l.* as they shall think meet."

Penalty for refusing inspection.

Where two chief constables, rates may be levied separately.

Sect. 25. "That in any county in which two chief constables shall have been appointed under the authority of the said act, it shall be lawful for the justices of the said county, if they shall think fit, in general or quarter session assembled, to order that separate accounts shall be kept of the expenses of the force placed under the authority of each chief constable, and that the police rates shall be assessed and levied separately upon the districts of each chief constable, and applied separately to the expenses of the police force maintained therein."

---

4. Chief Constables, Superintendents and other Officers.

One or more chief constables of the county to be appointed, who may serve for more than one county.

By the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 4, it is enacted, "That as soon as any such rules, (see sect. 3, post, 932,) as finally settled, shall have been received from the secretary of state, the justices of the county in general or quarter session assembled, or at any adjournment thereof, shall, subject to the approval of the secretary of state, appoint a person duly qualified according to the rules to be chief constable of the county, and in every case of vacancy of the office shall, subject to the like approval, appoint another fit person in his room; and every chief constable so to be appointed may hold his office until dismissed by the justices in general or quarter session assembled, or at any adjournment thereof: Provided always, that when any county shall have been divided for the purpose of returning members to serve in parliament for each division, it shall be lawful to appoint two chief constables for such county, if the justices of such county shall think fit: Provided also, that it shall be lawful to appoint the same chief constable for two or more adjoining counties or parts of counties, if the justices of such counties in general or quarter session assembled shall mutually agree to join in such appointment."

4. Chief Constable, &c.

Chief constable empowered to appoint a deputy, under certain restrictions.

Sect. 7. "That the chief constable shall, subject to the approval of the justices in general or quarter sessions assembled, or at any adjournment thereof, appoint one of the superintendents to act as his deputy in case of his being incapable, from illness or necessary absence from the county, to perform the duties of chief constable of the county; and the deputy so appointed shall in such case as aforesaid, and also in case of any vacancy of the office of chief constable by death or otherwise, have all the powers, privileges and duties of the chief constable: Provided always, that no deputy chief constable shall be capable of continuing to act with the powers of chief constable during any vacancy of the office for more than three calendar months after the vacancy has been occasioned."

Chief constable to attend at quarter sessions.

Sect. 17. "That every chief constable, unless prevented by sufficient cause, shall attend every general and quarter session of the justices of the county, and at every adjournment thereof, and shall make quarterly reports to the justices of all matters which they shall require of him concerning the police of the county, and shall obey all lawful orders and warrants of the said justices in the execution of his duty; and that the superintendents of divisions shall in like manner attend every session of the justices holden for their respective divisions, and shall make the like reports to the justices of such divisions."

By sect. 6, (infra,) the chief constable is empowered to appoint a superintendent to be at the head of the constables in each petty sessional division of the county.

Number of superintendents may be altered by the justices.

By the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 26, reciting that it hath been found unnecessary that a superintendent be appointed for every petty sessional division of a county in which the first-recited act has been adopted, it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for the justices in general or quarter session assembled, with the approval of one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, to direct how many of the constables shall be appointed superintendents, and to direct the appointment of inspectors and serjeants and other subordinate officers, with such gradations of rank and pay, and such variety of duties, as shall be found expedient; and it shall be lawful for the justices to make such orders as to them shall appear expedient touching the attendance of the superintendents, inspectors, serjeants or other subordinate officers among the said constables upon the justices at their several sessions."

---

5. Petty Constables, Local Constables and additional Constables at the Cost of Individuals.

Chief constable to appoint the petty constables and superintendents.

By the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 6, it is enacted, "That, subject to the approval of two or more of the justices of the county in petty sessions assembled, the chief constable shall appoint the other constables to be appointed for the county, and a superintendent to be at the head of the constables in each division of the county, and at his pleasure may dismiss all or any of them, and shall have the general disposition and government of all the constables so to be appointed, subject to such lawful orders as he may receive from the justices in general or quarter sessions assembled, or at any adjournment thereof, and to the rules established for the government of the force."

5. Petty Constables, &c.

Appointment of local constables.

By the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 16, it is enacted, "That the chief constable shall make out, and cause to be laid before the justices acting in and for every petty sessional division of the county, at one of their special sessions holden for hearing appeals against the poor rates, a list, signed by him, of fit persons residing within every parish, township and place within the division, willing, in case of need, to serve as local constables during the year then next ensuing, for doing all things which belong to the office of constable within such parish, township or place; and the justices of each of such divisions, at any time, in petty sessions assembled, shall select from the persons named in such list so many local constables as they shall think fit to appoint for every such parish, township or place, and shall cause to be administered to them the following oath; (that is to say,)

Oath of local constable.

"I, A. B. do swear, that I will well and truly serve our sovereign lady the Queen in the office of local constable for the parish [or township, &c.] of [ ] for the year ensuing, or until another shall be sworn in my stead, according to the best of my skill and knowledge.

"So help me God."

"All such local constables shall be subject to the authority of the chief constable, and to such regulations as shall be made for their government by one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, and shall have within the whole county, and also within all liberties and franchises and detached parts of other counties situated therein, and also in every county adjoining to the county in which they are appointed, all the powers, privileges and immunities, and shall be liable to all the duties and responsibilities, of a constable within his constablewick, but shall not be bound to act as a constable beyond the parish, township or place for which they are severally appointed and sworn; and the chief constable, from time to time, shall cause a list to be printed and published of the persons so appointed and sworn as local constables within each division, with the names of the places for which they are severally appointed."

Additional constables may be appointed at the cost of individuals.

Sect. 19. "That it shall be lawful for the chief constable of any county, with the approval of the justices of the county in general or quarter session assembled (if he shall think fit), on the application of any person or persons showing the necessity thereof, to appoint and cause to be sworn in any additional number of constables, at any place within the limits of his authority, at the charge of the person or persons by whom the application shall be made, but subject to the orders of the chief constable, and for such time as he shall think fit; and every such constable shall have all the powers, privileges and duties of other county constables: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the person or persons on whose application such appointment shall have been made, upon giving one calendar month's notice in writing to the chief constable, to require that the constable so appointed shall be discontinued, and thereupon the chief constable shall discontinue such additional constables."

Discontinuance thereof.

6. Rules for the Government of—Neglect of Duty—Resignation—Dismissal—Accoutrements—Station Houses—Returns.

Rules for their government, pay, &c. to be made by the secretary of state.

By the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 3 reciting that it is expedient that the rules for the government, pay, clothing, and accoutrements and necessaries of such constables as may be appointed under this act be uniform, as nearly as may be: it is enacted, "That such rules shall be from time to time made by one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, but not so as to increase the number of men proposed to be appointed; and the rules so made shall be sent to the clerk of the peace for each county in which or in any division of which this act shall be in operation; and it shall be lawful for the secretary of state, upon the representation of the justices of the county, setting forth any special reasons, to amend or add to such rules so as to make them applicable to the special circumstances of such county; and all such rules shall be binding on all persons whom they may concern; and copies of all such rules shall be laid before both houses of parliament within six weeks after the making thereof, if parliament is then sitting, and if parliament is not then sitting then within six weeks after the next meeting of parliament."

6. Rules for Government of, &c.

Sect. 12. "That every constable appointed under this act who shall be guilty of any neglect or violation of duty in his office of constable, and shall be convicted thereof before any two justices of the peace for the county, shall be liable to a penalty not more than 10*l.*, the amount of which penalty may be deducted from any salary then due to such offender, or in the discretion of the justices by whom he shall be convicted may be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any time not more than one calendar month."

Penalty on constables for neglect of duty.

Sect. 13. "That no constable appointed under this act shall be at liberty to resign his office, or to withdraw himself from the duties thereof, unless expressly allowed so to do in writing by the chief constable or superintendent under whom he may be placed, or unless he shall give to such chief constable or superintendent one calendar month's notice of his intention; and every constable who shall so resign or withdraw himself without such leave or notice shall be liable, on being convicted thereof before any two justices of the peace for the county, to forfeit all arrears of pay then due to him, or to a penalty not more than 5*l.*"

Constables not to resign without leave or notice.

Sect. 14. "That every constable appointed under this act who shall be dismissed from or shall cease to hold and exercise his office, and who shall not forthwith deliver over all the clothing, accoutrements, appointments and other necessaries which may have been supplied to him for the execution of his duty to the chief constable or superintendent, or to such person and at such time and place as shall be directed by the said chief constable or superintendent, shall be liable, on being convicted thereof before any two justices of the peace for the county, to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any time not exceeding one calendar month; and it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace to issue his warrant to search for and seize to the use of the county police all the clothing, accoutrements, appointments and other necessaries which shall not be so delivered over, wherever the same may be found."

Constables dismissed to deliver up accoutrements, &c.

Sect. 15. "That every person, not being a constable appointed under this act, who shall have in his possession any article being part of the clothing, accoutrements or appointments supplied to any such constable, and who shall not be able satisfactorily to account for his possession thereof, or who shall put on the dress or take the name, designation or character of any person appointed as such constable, for the purpose of thereby obtaining admission into any house or other place, or of doing or procuring to be done any act which such person would not be entitled to do or procure to be done of his own authority, or for any other unlawful purpose, shall, in addition to any other punishment to which he may be liable for such offence, be liable, on being convicted thereof before any two justices of the peace for the county, to a penalty not more than 10*l.*"

Penalty on unlawful possession of accoutrements, and assuming dress of constables.

Sect. 16. "That if any victualler, or keeper of any house, shop, room or other place for the sale of any liquors, whether spirituous or otherwise, shall knowingly harbour or entertain any constable belonging to the said force, or permit such constable to abide or remain in his house, shop, room or other place, during any part of the time appointed for his being on duty, every such victualler or keeper as aforesaid, being convicted thereof before any two justices of the peace for the county, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay such sum, not exceeding 5*l.*, as they shall think meet."

Penalty on publicans harbouring constables during the hours of duty.

By the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 12, it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for the justices in general or quarter session assembled of any county in which or in any part of which constables shall be appointed under the first-recited act, if they think fit, to order that station houses and strong rooms, or either of them, for the temporary confinement of persons taken into custody by the constables, be provided in such places as the said justices shall think fit, and upon such plan as shall be approved by one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, and for that purpose to purchase and hold lands and tenements, or to appropriate to that purpose any lands or tenements belonging to the county which are not needed for the purpose to which they were applied or intended to be applied before such appropriation; and the expense of building, hiring, or otherwise providing, repairing and furnishing such station houses and strong rooms shall be defrayed out of the police rates."

Money may be borrowed on credit of the police rates.

Sect. 13. "That it shall be lawful for the justices in general or quarter session assembled to borrow money for the purpose of purchasing any such lands and tenements, or of building any such station houses and strong rooms, and to charge the future police rates with the amount of the loan, and with interest thereon: provided always, that any money borrowed for such purpose shall be repaid by yearly instalments, not less than one-twentieth part of the sum borrowed, with interest on the same in any one year."

Chief constable to furnish to the clerk of the peace a monthly return of the disposition and number of the constabulary force.

Sect. 31. "That every chief constable shall on the first day of every month transmit to the clerk of the peace for the county for which or for some district whereof such constable shall act a return showing the actual disposition and number of the constabulary force of the county or district for which such constable shall act during the preceding month, which return shall specify the changes made from time to time in such force as well in number as by name, and shall distinguish by number and name the members of the police force of any other district serving within his district; and the clerk of the peace shall cause the said return to be laid before the justices at the next ensuing quarter sessions for examination."

Monthly returns of the force to be made.

Sect. 32. "That every superintendent appointed under this act shall on the first day of every month send to the chief constable a return showing the actual disposition and number of the constables of the county under his superintendence during the preceding month, which return shall specify the changes made from time to time therein, as well in number as by name; and the chief constable shall send a copy of all such returns to the clerk of the peace for the county, to be laid before the justices of the peace at their next general or quarter sessions of the peace."

Accounts of allowances to be kept.

Sect. 18. "That the justices usually acting in and for every division shall take care that full, true and particular accounts be kept of all such fees and allowances within their division, and shall once in every quarter of a year cause an account, with all proper vouchers for verifyng the same, to be delivered to the treasurer of the county or other person appointed to receive the same."

Superannuation fund to be provided for constables.

Sect. 10. "That there shall be deducted from the pay of every constable belonging to the police force established in any county under the first-recited act a sum after such yearly rate as the justices of the county in general or quarter session assembled shall direct, not being a greater sum than two pounds ten shillings in a hundred pounds, which sum so deducted, and also the monies accruing from stoppages from any of the said constables during sickness, and fines imposed on any of the said constables for misconduct, and from any portion of the fines imposed by any justice of the peace upon drunken persons, or for assaults upon police constables, and from moieties of fines and penalties awarded to informers (being police constables) on summary convictions, as shall be directed by such justice to be paid for the benefit of this fund, and all monies arising from the sale of worn or cast clothing supplied for the use of the constables in any county, shall from time to time be invested in such manner as the justices in general or quarter session assembled shall direct; and the interest and dividends thereof, or so much of the same as shall not be required for the purposes hereinafter mentioned, shall be likewise invested in the like manner, and accumulate so as to form a superannuation fund, and shall be applied from time to time for payment of such superannuation or retiring allowances or gratuities as may be ordered by the justices in general or quarter session assembled, upon the recommendation of the chief constable, at any time, to any of the said constables, as hereinafter provided; and the justices shall gaurantee the security of the superannuation fund of their county, and make good out of the county stock any deficiency which may arise in such fund from the default of any treasurer or other person intrusted with the custody or management thereof."

Rates of allowance from the said fund.

Sect. 11. "That it shall be lawful for the justices, upon such recommendation, if they shall think fit, to order that any of the said constables may be superannuated, and receive thereupon out of the superannuation fund a yearly allowance, subject to the following conditions, and not exceeding the following proportions; (that is to say,) that if he shall have served with diligence and fidelity for fifteen years and less than twenty years, an annual sum not more than half his pay; if for twenty years or upwards, an annual sum not more than two-thirds of his pay; provided that if he shall be under sixty years of age it shall not be lawful to grant any such allowance unless upon the certificate of the chief constable that he is incapable, from infirmity of mind or body, to discharge the duties of his office; provided also, that if any constable shall be disabled from any wound or injury received in the actual execution of the duty of his office it shall be lawful to grant him any allowance not more than the whole of his pay; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to entitle any constable absolutely to any superannuation allowance, or to prevent him being dismissed without superannuation allowance."

9. Warrants of Commitment, how executed.

How warrants of commitment may be executed.

By the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 38, it is enacted, "That whenever a warrant of commitment of any person to any gaol or house of correction shall be directed and delivered to any constable in any county in which constables shall have been appointed under the said act of the last session of parliament, (2 & 3 Vict. c. 93,) it shall be lawful for the justice or justices by whom such warrant shall be signed, if he or they shall think fit, in and by such warrant, to command the constable to whom the warrant is directed, and all other constables to whom the warrant shall be successively delivered as hereinafter provided, to convey and deliver the body of the person so committed, with the warrant, into the custody of the constable who shall be in attendance at the nearest or most convenient station house or strong room belonging to the said police force lying in the way towards the said gaol or house of correction, or to such other constable as shall be appointed by the regulations of the police force to take charge of persons so committed; and every constable into whose custody any such person shall be so successively delivered shall endorse upon the warrant a certificate in writing under his hand of the delivery of such person into his custody, and the time and place of such delivery, and such certificate shall discharge the constable so delivering over the body of such person from further execution of the warrant; and it shall be lawful for any constable into whose custody such persons shall have been so delivered to complete the execution of the warrant, by conveying and delivering the body of such person either to the said gaol or house of correction or into the custody of the constable in attendance at the next station house or strong room as aforesaid, or to such other constable as shall be appointed by the regulations of the police force to assist in taking charge of persons so committed; and every constable into whose custody any person shall be so delivered, and who shall have endorsed such certificate upon the warrant, shall have the same powers, privileges, and protections for and in the execution of such warrant as if the same had been originally directed to him by name."

9. Warrants, how executed.

applied, after defraying all charges to which the same are then liable, in and towards payment of the county rates levied upon such hundred, parish, township, or place: provided always, that all arrears of rates made for the purposes aforesaid shall be levied and collected as if this act had not been made: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall prevent or invalidate the appointment of parochial constables: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall prevent the appointment of any constable to act as returning officer in any election, whenever such appointment may be necessary."

Sect. 26. "Provided always, that, notwithstanding any thing herein contained, the power to appoint and pay, and to make and levy rates for paying constables, under any act of parliament made for watching any town, parish, or place, which by the last parliamentary enumeration of the population contained more than ten thousand inhabitants, and the powers and duties of all constables appointed by the commissioners for the execution of any such act, shall continue, as if this act had not been made, for two years after the passing of this act, and thence until the end of the then next session of parliament."

Power of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, and of local acts for levying rates to cease, except as hereby reserved for paying additional constables.

By the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 20, after reciting that an act was passed in the fourth year of the reign of his late majesty, making provisions for the lighting and watching of parishes in England and Wales, and divers acts have been made authorising the appointment of constables and watchmen, by day or night, in sundry towns or places within the counties in which the first-named act may be put in force, and authorising rates to be made and levied for the purpose of defraying the expenses of such constables or watchmen; it is enacted, "That, notwithstanding any thing contained in the said act of the last session of parliament, the constables or watchmen appointed in and for any parish under the said act of the fourth year of the reign of his late majesty, or in and for any town or place under any such local act as last aforesaid, and not discontinued before the passing of this act, shall continue to act in their respective appointments, and shall be subject to the same authorities as heretofore; and all such acts shall continue in force until it shall be notified by the chief constable of the county in which such parish, town, or place is situated, to the inspectors, commissioners, or other persons having authority over such constables or watchmen as aforesaid, by writing under his hand, that he is ready to undertake the charge of such parish, town, or place on some day to be specified in the notice, which notice shall be published within such parish, town, or place, in such manner as shall seem fit to the chief constable, for the purpose of making the same to be generally known; and upon the day so named the watchmen or constables appointed within such parish, town, or place, under the said act of the fourth year of the reign of his late majesty, or under such local act, shall be discontinued as a separate force; and all powers for assessing and levying any rate in such parish, town, or place, the whole or any part of which shall be applicable to the payment of such watchmen or constables, or any expenses incident thereunto, shall cease, so far as such powers relate to any whole rate so applicable, or to that part of any rate which shall be so applicable, except for such purposes as are hereinafter mentioned: provided always, that, notwithstanding any thing in the first-named act contained, the powers of all such acts shall enure for the purpose of enabling the inspectors, commissioners, or other persons charged with the execution of any such act, to make such application as aforesaid to the chief constable of the county for the appointment in any such town or place of an additional number of constables, and to assess and levy such rates as are authorised by the said acts in each case for defraying the expenses of constables or watchmen, and to apply them in defraying the expense of so many additional constables in such town or place respectively as the chief constable, on their application, and with the approval of the justices as aforesaid, shall appoint there: provided also, that where any parish, town, or place in which constables have been appointed under any such local act shall be situated in more than one county, such notice shall not be given by the chief constables of either county to the commissioners or other persons having authority over the constables in such parish, town, or place, until after constables shall have been appointed under the first-recited act in each of such counties."

Proviso as to places situate in more than one county.

Sect. 21. "That upon the day mentioned in such notice as last aforesaid, all watchhouses and watchboxes in any such parish or place, and all arms, accoutrements and other necessaries provided at the public expense for the watchmen or constables therein, shall be given up to such persons as shall be named by the said chief constable, for the use and accommodation of the constables to be appointed under the first recited act; and in case any person having the charge, control or possession of any watchhouse, watchbox, arms, accoutrements or necessaries as aforesaid, shall neglect or refuse to give up the same as hereinbefore required, every such offender, being convicted thereof before any two justices of the peace, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay, over and above the value of the property not given up, such sum, not exceeding 5*l.*, as the said justices shall think meet; and where there shall be any building in any such parish or place as aforesaid, a part only of which building shall have been heretofore used as a watchhouse, such part shall be given up every day, from the hour of four in the afternoon until the hour of nine in the forenoon, for the use and accommodation of the constables to be appointed under the first recited act; and if any person, having the charge, control or possession of any such building, shall neglect or refuse to give up such part thereof for the purposes aforesaid, or to permit free access thereto or egress therefrom during any portion of the time above prescribed, every such offender, being convicted thereof before any two justices of the peace, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay such sum, not exceeding 5*l.*, as the said justices shall think meet."

11. Operation of Acts.

Watchboxes and accoutrements provided under local acts to be given up for use of the county police.

Sect. 22. "That any rate authorised by the said act of the fourth year of the reign of his late majesty, or by any such local act, for defraying the expenses of the constables or watchmen in any parish or place, made previous to the day on which the said chief constable shall undertake the charge thereof, shall be levied and collected in the same manner as if the first recited act or this act had not been passed; and that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect or alter any powers or authorities for assessing and levying any rate in any such parish or place, so far as such rate may relate to paving, lighting, cleansing or any other object, except the constables or watchmen, or any expenses incident thereto."

Rates already imposed to be collected.

Sect. 23. "And whereas there are certain parishes and places in which monies have been borrowed or advanced, and debts contracted, under some one or more of such acts as last aforesaid, for the building of watchhouses, and for various expenses connected with the constables or watchmen therein, and such monies and debts remain unpaid, and it is expedient that the same be discharged; be it enacted, that all such monies and debts in any parish or place of which the said chief constables shall undertake the charge shall, notwithstanding any thing hereinbefore contained, be chargeable upon the rates out of which such monies or debts have been heretofore in part paid, or would have been payable if the first recited act or this act had not been passed, and such rates shall be from time to time assessed and levied for the payment of such monies and debts until the same shall be entirely discharged and satisfied."

Provision for outstanding debts.

12. Practical Directions.—The Criminal Duties of Constables generally, and the Manner of executing them.

The following instructions have been promulgated for the guidance of constables, whether appointed under the above act, or under the act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, for the appointing of parish constables:—

"The constable may arrest one whom he has just cause to suspect to be about to commit a felony. Thus, when a drunken person, or a man in a violent passion, threatens the life of another, the constable should interfere and arrest.

"He should arrest any person having in his possession any picklock-key, crow, jack, bit or other implement, with intent feloniously to break into any dwellinghouse, warehouse, coachhouse, stable or outbuilding, or any person armed with any gun, pistol, hanger, cutlass, bludgeon or offensive weapon, or having upon him any instrument, with intent to commit any felonious act.

"Every person found in any dwellinghouse, warehouse, coachhouse, outhouse or stable, or in any enclosed yard, garden or area, and being there for any unlawful purpose, may be arrested.

"In each of these cases the constable must judge from the situation and behaviour of the party what his intention is. In some cases no doubt can exist; as when the party is a notorious thief, or acting with those who are thieves, or when the party is seen to try people's pockets in a crowd, or to attempt to break into a house, or to endeavour to take any property secretly from another. The constable will not act hastily, in case the intention is not clear, but content himself with watching closely the suspected party, that he may discover his design.

"The constable must arrest any one whom he sees in the act of committing a felony, (a) or any one whom another positively charges with having committed a felony, or whom another suspects of having committed a felony, if the suspicion appear to the constable to be well founded, and provided the person so suspecting go with the constable.

"Though no charge be made, yet if the constable suspect a person to have committed a felony, he should arrest him; and if he have reasonable grounds for his suspicion, he will be justified, even though it should afterwards appear that no felony was in fact committed; but the constable must be cautious in thus acting upon his own suspicions.

"Generally, if the arrest was made discreetly and fairly in pursuit of an offender, and not from any private malice or ill-will, the constable need not doubt that the law will protect him.

"If, after sunset and before sunrising, the constable shall see any one carrying a bundle or goods which he suspects were stolen, he should stop and examine the person, and detain him; but here also he should judge from circumstances, (such as appearance and manner of the party, his account of himself, and the like,) whether he has really got stolen goods, before he actually takes him into custody.

"The constable must make every exertion to effect the arrest; and the law gives him abundant power for the purpose. If the felon, or party accused of felony, fly, he may be immediately followed wherever he goes; and if he takes refuge in a house, the constable may break open the doors, if necessary, to get in, first stating who he is, and his business; but the breaking open outer doors is so dangerous a proceeding, that the constable should never resort to it except in extreme cases, and when an immediate arrest is necessary.

"There are some cases in which a constable may and ought to break into a house, although no felony has been committed, when the necessity of the case will not admit of delay, as when persons are fighting furiously in a house, or when a house has been entered by others with a felonious intent, and a felony will probably be committed unless the constable interfere, and there are no other means of entering; except in such cases it is better in general that the constable should wait till he has a warrant from a magistrate for the purpose.

"If a prisoner should escape, he may be retaken, and in immediate pursuit the constable may follow him into any place or any house.

"If a constable finds his exertions insufficient to effect the arrest, he ought to require all persons present to assist him, and they are bound to do so.

(a) The principal felonies are, murder and attempts to murder or maim, manslaughter; rape, robbery and attempts to rob; burglary, housebreaking; cattle, horse and sheep stealing, stealing from the dwellinghouse, the person, and theft generally; receiving stolen goods, embezzlement, &c.; also setting fire to any house, outbuilding, stacks or crops; and all cases of forging and coining. The minor offences are called misdemeanors, such as frauds, uttering counterfeit coin, riots, assaults, affrays, &c.

12. Practical Directions.

"In cases of actual breaches of the peace, as riots, affrays, assaults and the like, committed within the view of the constable, he should immediately interfere (first giving public notice of his office, if he be not already known), separate the combatants, and prevent others from joining in the affray. If the riot, &c. be of a serious nature, or if the offenders do not immediately desist, he should take them into custody, securing also the principal instigators of the tumult, and doing every thing in his power to restore quiet.

"A constable, in cases of assault which have not been committed in his presence, or within his view, is not authorised to arrest or assist in arresting the party charged, nor is he to receive a person so charged into his custody, unless the party has been arrested by some other constable who saw the assault committed.

"He may arrest any one assaulting or opposing him in the execution of his duty.

"If a person forcibly enter the house of another, the constable may, at the request of the owner, turn him out directly; if he have entered peaceably, but having no right to enter, and the owner request the constable to turn him out, the constable should first request him to go out, and unless he do so, he should turn him out, in either case using no more force than is necessary for the purpose

"When the offence has not yet been committed, but when a breach of the peace is likely to take place, as when persons are openly preparing to fight, the constable should take the parties concerned into custody; if they fly into a house, or are making preparations to fight within the house, the constable should enter the house to prevent them, and likewise take the parties into custody; and should the doors be closed, he may break them open, if admission be refused, after giving notice of his office and his object in entering.

"If a party threaten another with immediate personal violence, or offer to strike, the constable should interfere and prevent a breach of the peace; if one draw a weapon upon another attempting to strike, the constable should take him into custody If persons be merely quarrelling or insulting each other by words, the constable has no right to take them into custody, but should be ready to prevent a breach of the peace.

"The constable ought to arrest and take before a justice any person walking about the streets, and exposing to view in the street any obscene print or exhibition.

"If a party charged with a misdemeanor escape out of custody, he may be pursued immediately anywhere; and if he take refuge in a house, the doors may be broken open after demand of admission, and after notification by the constable of his office and object in coming.

"After arrest, the constable is in all cases to treat a prisoner properly, and impose only such constraint upon him as may be necessary for his safe custody.

"The constable is bound to follow the directions contained in a warrant, and to execute it with secrecy and despatch; the power given to him for the purpose of arresting has been already shown. If the warrant cannot be executed immediately, it should be executed as soon as possible afterwards.

"The constable must execute the warrant himself, or, when he calls in assistance, must be actually present. Upon all occasions he ought to state his authority if it be not generally known, and should show his warrant when required to do so; but he should never part with the possession of the warrant, as it may be wanted afterwards for his own justification.

"Upon the arrest being made, the prisoner is to be taken before the magistrate as soon as convenient. When the prisoner is brought to the justice, he still remains in custody of the constable until his discharge or committal, or until the officer receives the orders of the justice.

"The constable may enter a house to search for stolen goods, having first got a search warrant from a magistrate for that purpose. He should, when it is possible so to do, execute it in the day-time. If he find the goods mentioned, he is to take them to a magistrate, and, when the warrant so directs, he must take the person also in whose possession they are found. To avoid mistakes, the person who applies for the warrant ought to attend at the search to identify the goods.

"The constable has power to apprehend and carry before a justice of the peace every common prostitute wandering in the public streets, public highways, or in any place of public resort, behaving in a riotous or indecent manner; every person wandering abroad, or placing himself or herself in any public street or highway, court or passage, to beg or gather alms, or causing or procuring or encouraging any child so to do, all such being declared by the law to be idle and disorderly persons; every person wandering abroad and lodging in any barn or outhouse, or in any deserted or unoccupied building, or in the open air, or under a tent, or in any cart or waggon, not having any visible means of subsistence, and not giving a good account of himself or herself; every person wandering abroad and endeavouring, by the exposure of wounds or deformities, to obtain or gather alms; every person going about as a gatherer or collector of alms, or endeavouring to procure charitable contributions of any nature or kind under any false or fraudulent pretence; every person playing or betting in any street, road, highway or other open or public place, at or with any table or instrument of gaming at any game or pretended game of chance.

"In the cases above mentioned the constable has by law power to arrest."

V. Special Constables.

1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 41.

The stat. 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 41, intituled "An Act for amending the Laws relative to the appointment of Special Constables, and for the better Preservation of the Peace," [15th October, 1831,] by section 20 repeals the 1 Geo. IV. c. 37, and by sect. 1, reciting that "it is expedient to amend the laws relative to the appointment of special constables, and to make other provisions for the better preservation of the public peace;" enacts, "That in all cases where it shall be made to appear to any two or more justices of the peace of any county, riding, or division having a separate commission of the peace, or to any two or more justices of the peace of any liberty, franchise, city or town in England or Wales, upon the oath of any credible witness, that any tumult, riot, or felony has taken place, or may reasonably be apprehended in any parish, township or place situate within the division or limits for which the said respective justices usually act, and such justices shall be of opinion that the ordinary officers appointed for preserving the peace was not sufficient for the preservation of the peace, and for the protection of the inhabitants and the security of the property in any such parish, township or place as aforesaid, then and in every such case such justices, or any two or more justices acting for the same division or limits, are hereby authorised to nominate and appoint, by precept in writing under their hands, so many as they shall think fit of the householders or other persons (not legally exempt from serving the office of constable) residing in such parish, township or place as aforesaid, or in the neighbourhood thereof, to act as special constables, for such time and in such manner as to the said justices respectively shall seem fit and necessary, for the preservation of the public peace, and for the protection of the inhabitants, and the security of the property in such parish, township or place; and the justices of the peace who shall appoint any special constables by virtue of this act, or any one of them, or any other justice of the peace acting for the same division or limits, are and is hereby authorised to administer to every person so appointed the following oath; that is to say, Justices, on information on oath that disturbances exist or are apprehended, may appoint special constables.

Oath to be taken by special constables.

'I A. B. do swear, that I will well and truly serve our sovereign lord the king in the office of special constable for the parish [or township,] of , without favour or affection, malice or ill-will; and that I will to the best of my power cause the peace to be kept and preserved, and prevent all offences against the persons and properties of his majesty's subjects; and that while I continue to hold the said office I will to the best of my skill and knowledge discharge all the duties thereof faithfully according to law. So help me God.'

5. Special Constables.

1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 41.

Notice to be sent to secretary of state and to lieutenant of county.

Provided always, that whenever it shall be deemed necessary to nominate and appoint such special constables as aforesaid, notice of such nomination and appointment, and of the circumstances which have rendered such nomination and appointment expedient, shall be forthwith transmitted by the justices making such nomination and appointment to one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, and to the lieutenant of the county."

Secretary of state, on representation of justices, may order persons to be sworn in, though exempt by law,

Sect. 2. "In any case in which any number of the householders, or other persons not legally exempt from serving the office of constable, shall have been appointed by the justices in manner aforesaid to act as special constables for any such parish, township or place as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for any one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, on the representation of any two justices of the peace, to order that the persons exempt by law from serving as special constables in such parish, township or place, or the neighbourhood thereof, shall, notwithstanding such exemption, be appointed and sworn in to act as special constables as if they were not by law exempt, and such persons shall accordingly be appointed and sworn in manner aforesaid, and shall be liable to act for two calendar months only."

and may direct lord lieutenant to cause special constables to be sworn in, and no exemption allowed.

Sect 3. "It shall be lawful for any one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state to give direction to the lieutenant of any county to cause special constables to be appointed and sworn in manner aforesaid throughout the whole of such county or any portion thereof, whether a hundred or hundreds, parish or parishes, or any other known division or divisions, of whatever size or denomination, and to signify, if such secretary of state shall see fit, that no person shall be excused from being so appointed and sworn in by reason of any exemption: provided always, that the persons so appointed and sworn in, whether having cause of exemption or not, shall be only called upon to act for three calendar months."

Justices may make regulations respecting special constables, and may remove them for misconduct.

Sect. 4. "The justices of the peace who shall have appointed any special constables under this act, or any two of them, or the justices acting for the division or limits within which such special constables shall have been called out, at a special session of such last-mentioned justices, or the major part of such last-mentioned justices at such special sessions, shall have power to make such orders and regulations as may from time to time be necessary and expedient for rendering such special constables more efficient for the preservation of the public peace, and shall also have power to remove any such special constable from his office for any misconduct or neglect of duty therein."

Powers of special constables.

Sect. 5. "Every special constable appointed under this act shall, not only within the parish, township or place for which he shall have been appointed, but also throughout the entire jurisdiction of the justices so appointing him, have, exercise and enjoy all such powers, authorities, advantages and immunities, and be liable to all such duties and responsibilities, as any constable duly appointed now has within his constablewick by virtue of the common law of this realm, or of any statute or statutes."

Special constables may act in adjoining county in certain cases.

Sect. 6. "Where any special constables appointed under this act shall be serving within any county, and two or more justices of the peace of any adjoining county shall make it appear to the satisfaction of any two or more justices of the peace acting for the division or limits wherein such special constables are serving, that any extraordinary circumstances exist which would render it expedient that the said special constables should act in such adjoining county, then and in every such case the said last-mentioned justices are hereby authorised (if they shall think fit) to order all or any of the said special constables to act in such adjoining county in such manner as to the said last-mentioned justices shall seem meet; and every such special constable, during the time that he shall so act in such adjoining county, shall have, exercise and enjoy all such powers, authorities, advantages and immunities, and be liable to all such duties and responsibilities, as if he were acting within the parish, township or place for which he was originally appointed."

Refusing to take oath of office, &c.

Sect 7. "If any person, being appointed a special constable as aforesaid, shall refuse to take the oath herein-before mentioned, when thereunto required by the justices of the peace so appointing him, or by any two of them, or by any other two justices of the peace acting for the same division or limits, he shall be liable to be convicted thereof forthwith before the said justices so requiring him, and to forfeit and pay such sum of money, not exceeding five pounds, as to the said justices so requiring him shall seem meet; and if any person, being appointed a special constable as aforsesaid, shall neglect or refuse to appear at the time and place for which he shall be summoned, for the purpose of taking the said oath, he shall be liable to be convicted thereof forthwith before the justices so appointing him, or any two of them, or before any other two justices of the peace acting for the same division or limits, and to forfeit and pay such sum of money, not exceeding five pounds, as to the convicting justices shall seem meet, unless such person shall prove to the satisfaction of the said justices that he was prevented by sickness or such other unavoidable accident as shall in the judgment of the said justices be a sufficient excuse."

Refusing to serve, or disobeying orders.

Penalty for.

Sect. 8. "If any person, being appointed a special constable as aforesaid, and being called upon to serve, shall neglect or refuse to serve as such special constable, or to obey such lawful orders and directions as may be given to him for the performance of the duties of his office, every person so offending shall, on conviction thereof before any two justices of the peace, forfeit and pay for every such neglect or refusal such sum of money, not exceeding five pounds, as to the said justices shall seem meet, unless such person shall prove to the satisfaction of the said justices that he was prevented by sickness or such other unavoidable accident as shall in the judgment of the said justices be a sufficient excuse."

Or it seems, if persons, duly called upon by the magistrates to serve as special constables, refuse to do so, the magistrates may cause them to be indicted. (Reg. v. Vincent, 9 Car. & P. 91.)

Power to discontinue services of constables called out; notifying same to secretary of state, &c.

Sect. 9. "The justices who shall have appointed any special constables under this act are hereby empowered, or the justices acting for the division or limits within which such special constables shall have been called out at a special session to be held for that purpose, or the major part of such last-mentioned justices at such special session, are hereby empowered to suspend or determine the services of any or all the special constables so called out, as to the said justices respectively shall seem meet; and notice of such suspension or determination of the services of any or all of the said special constables shall be forthwith transmitted by such respective justices to one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, and also to the lieutenant of the county."

A special constable, duly appointed under this act, is appointed for an indefinite time, and remains a constable till his services are either determined or suspended, under this section of that statute; and, being so appointed under that statute, he has all the authority of an ordinary constable, until his services are either suspended or determined. (Reg. v. Porter, 9 Car. & P. 778.)

Special constables to deliver staves.

Penalty for omission.

Sect. 10. "Every such special constable shall, within one week after the expiration of his office, or after he shall cease to hold and exercise the same pursuant to this act, deliver over to his successor (if any such shall have been appointed), or otherwise to such person and at such time and place as may be directed by any justice of the peace acting for the division or limits within which such special constable may have been called out, every staff, weapon and other article which shall have been provided for such special constable under this act; and if any such special constable shall omit or refuse so to do, he shall, on conviction thereof before two justices of the peace, forfeit and pay for such offence such sum of money not exceeding two pounds as to the convicting justices shall seem meet."

Assaulting or resisting constables.

Sect. 11. "If any person shall assault or resist any constable appointed by virtue of this act, whilst in the execution of his office, or shall promote or encourage any other person so to do, every such person shall, on conviction thereof before two justices of the peace, forfeit and pay for such offence any sum not exceeding twenty pounds, or shall be liable to such other punishment, upon conviction on any indictment or information for such offence, as any persons are by law liable to for assaulting any constable in the execution of the duties of his office."

1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 41.

Penalty and punishment for.

Sect. 12. "No person who shall be appointed a special constable, or who shall act as such under the provisions of this act, shall by reason thereof acquire a legal settlement in any parish, township or place, any law or statute to the contrary notwithstanding; and that no such person shall by reason thereof be exempt from the ballot for or from serving in the militia."

Special constables not to gain settlement, nor be exempt from militia.

Special sessions may order allowances to special constables.

Sect. 13. "The justices of the peace acting for the division or limits within which any such special constables shall have been called out to serve at a special session to be held for that purpose, or the major part of the justices at such special session, are hereby empowered to order from time to time such reasonable allowances for their trouble, loss of time and expenses, to be paid to such special constables who shall have so served or be then serving, as to the said justices or such major part of them shall seem proper; and the said justices or such major part of them may also order the payment of such expenses as may have been incurred in providing staves or other necessary articles for such special constables; and the said justices so ordering, if justices for any county, riding or division having a separate commission of the peace, or if justices for any liberty, franchise, city or town which shall be contributory to the public rate for any county, riding or division, shall make every order for the payment of such allowances and expenses upon the treasurer of such county, riding or division, who is hereby required to pay the same out of any public money which shall then be in his hands, and the said treasurer shall be allowed all such payments in his accounts; and where the justices of the peace assembled at such special sessions are justices for any liberty, franchise, city or town which is not contributory to the public rate for any county, riding or division, but which raises a rate or other similar fund in the nature of a county rate, in every such case the said last-mentioned justices shall make every order for the payment of such allowances and expenses as aforesaid upon the treasurer or other officer having the collection or disbursement of such last-mentioned rate or fund, who shall forthwith pay every such order out of such rate or fund, and shall be allowed all such payments in his accounts." (See as to the expenses of special constables acting under warrants, stat. 41 Geo. III. c. 78, s. 1, ante, 919.)

Such allowances to be paid out of county rate.

Mode of payment in places not contributing to county rate.

Power to adjourn special session, &c.

Sect. 14. "The justices of the peace assembled at any special session for any of the purposes mentioned in this act shall have power to adjourn the same from time to time, as they shall think proper; and that every special session which shall have been actually holden for any of the purposes mentioned in this act shall be deemed and taken to have been legally holden, until the contrary shall be proved."

Time for prosecutions under act.

Application of penalties.

Sect. 15. "The prosecution for every offence punishable upon summary conviction by virtue of this act shall be commenced within two calendar months after the commission of the offence; and that every penalty and forfeiture for any offence against this act shall be paid to some one of the overseers of the poor, or to some other officer, (as the convicting justices may direct,) of the parish, township or place in which the offence shall have been committed, to be by such overseer or officer paid over to the use of the public rate for the county, riding or division to which such parish, township or place is contributory; or if such parish, township or place is situate within any liberty, franchise, city or town which is not contributory to the public rate for any county, riding or division, but which raises a rate or other similar fund in the nature of a county rate, then every such penalty or forfeiture shall be paid over in the manner aforesaid to the use of the said last-mentioned fund or rate; and no inhabitant of any county, riding, division, liberty, franchise, city or town shall by reason thereof, or by reason of the application of any such penalty or forfeiture as aforesaid, be deemed an incompetent witness in proof of any offence against this act."

Inhabitants competent witnesses.

Payment of penalties, and mode of levying same, &c.

Sect. 16. "The justices of the peace by whom any person shall be summarily convicted and adjudged to pay any sum of money for any offence against this act may adjudge that such person shall pay the same either immediately or within such period as the said justices shall think fit; and in case such sum of money shall not be paid at the time so appointed, the same shall be levied by distress (a) and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender, together with the reasonable charges of such distress; and for want of sufficient distress such offender shall be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction, as to the convicting justices shall seem meet, for any term not exceeding one calendar month where the sum to be paid shall not exceed five pounds, and for any term not exceeding two calendar months in any other case; the imprisonment to cease in each of the cases aforesaid upon payment of the sum due."

Form of conviction.

Sect. 17. "The justices of the peace before whom any person shall be summarily convicted of any offence against this act may cause the conviction to be drawn up in the following form of words, or to the like effect; that is to say,

"—— } Be it remembered, that on the day of , in the year of our

No certiorari, &c.

Sect. 18. "No conviction for any offence against this act shall be quashed for want of form, or be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any of his majesty's superior courts of record; and that no warrant of commitment shall be held void by reason of any defect therein, provided it be therein alleged that it is founded on a conviction, and there be a good and valid conviction to sustain the same; and that where any distress shall be made for levying any money by virtue of this act, the distress itself shall not be deemed unlawful, nor the party making the same be deemed a trespasser, on account of any defect or want of form in the summons, conviction, warrant of distress, or other proceedings relating thereto, nor shall the party distraining be deemed a trespasser ab initio on account of any irregularity afterwards committed by him, but the person aggrieved by such irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage, if any, in an action upon the case."

Sect. 22. "Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to abridge any powers for preserving the public peace, whether by appointing constables or otherwise, which any justice or justices of the peace had, by law, or by virtue of any statute or statutes, before the passing of the said act of the first year of the reign of King George the Fourth."

Not to abridge powers of Justices.

By stat. 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 43, intituled "An Act for enlarging the Powers of Magistrates in the Appointment of Special Constables," [31st August, 1835,] after reciting sect. 1 of 1 & 2 Will IV. c. 41 (ante, 942), and that "it is expedient that the power of appointing special constables given by the said act should be extended in manner hereinafter mentioned" it is enacted, "that all persons willing to act as special constables under the provisions of the said act shall be capable of being appointed and acting, and may be appointed and act, as such special constables, notwithstanding they may not be resident in such parish, township or place as aforesaid, or in the neighbourhood thereof; and every person appointed and acting as special constable under the provisions of this act shall have all the same powers, and be entitled to and enjoy all the same privileges and benefits, and be subject to all the same duties and liabilities, as the special constables appointed or to be appointed under the provisions of the said act."

5 & 6 W. 4, c. 43.

Persons may act as special constables in other parishes than those in which they reside.

By the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 80, intituled "An Act for the Payment of Constables for keeping the Peace near Public Works," [10th August, 1838,] and reciting that great mischiefs have arisen by the outrageous and unlawful behaviour of labourers and others employed on railroads, canals, and other public works, by reason whereof the appointment of special constables is often necessary for keeping the peace, and for the protection of the inhabitants and security of the property in the neighbourhood of such public works, whereby great expenses have been cast upon the public rates of counties and other districts chargeable with such expenses: it is enacted, "that after the passing of this act, whenever any special constables shall be appointed under the authority of an act passed in the second year of the reign of his late majesty, intituled 'An Act for amending the Laws relative to the Appointment of Special Constables, and for the better Preservation of the Peace,' or under the authority of an act passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late majesty, intituled 'An Act for enlarging the Powers of Magistrates in the Appointment of Special Constables,' and it shall be made to appear to any two or more justices of the peace of any county, riding or division having a separate commission of the peace, or of any liberty, franchise, city, town or borough, in England or Wales, on the oath of three or more credible witnesses, that the appointment of such special constables has been occasioned by the behaviour, or by reasonable apprehension of the behaviour, of the persons employed upon any railway, canal or other public work made or carried on under the authority of parliament within the district or division for which such justices usually act, it shall be lawful for such justices as aforesaid, at any time not exceeding one calendar month next after such appointment, to make orders from time to time upon the treasurer or other officer who shall have the control or custody of the funds of any company making or carrying on such railroad, canal or other public work, for the payment of such reasonable allowances for their trouble, loss of time and expenses to such special constables who shall have so served or be then serving as to the said justices shall seem proper; and a copy of every such order shall be sent by the justices to one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, and such order, if allowed by the secretary of state, shall be binding on such company, and on every such treasurer and officer thereof: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall empower any such justices to order any allowance for any such special constables at the Secretary of state may reduce excessive orders.

Sect. 2. "That if it shall appear to the secretary of state that there was no need for the appointment of such special constables, or that a greater number of special constables was appointed than was needed by reason of the behaviour, or reasonable apprehension of the behaviour, of the persons employed on such railroad, canal, or other public work as aforesaid, the secretary of state shall have power to disallow any such order, or to reduce the amount ordered to be paid by any such order, in such manner as to him shall seem just according to the circumstances of each case; and in such case the order shall be of no force, or shall be of force for such reduced amount only, as the case may be; and the whole of such expenses in case the whole shall be disallowed, or so much thereof as shall exceed such reduced amount if a part shall be allowed, shall be defrayed out of the public rates of such county, riding or division, liberty, franchise, city, town or borough, as if this act had not been made."

Amount ordered and allowed may be recovered by distress.

Sect. 3. "That in all cases where such treasurer or other officer as aforesaid shall refuse or neglect, during three weeks next after demand thereof, to pay such sum of money as shall have been ordered by such justices, and allowed by the secretary of state as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for such justices to cause the same to be levied by distress upon the goods and chattels belonging to such company."

VII. Constables on Canals and Navigable Rivers.

3 & 4 Vict. c. 50.

By the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 50, intituled "An Act to provide for keeping the Peace on Canals and Navigable Rivers," [4th August, 1840,] and reciting that robberies and other outrages are frequently committed on canals and navigable rivers throughout England and Wales, and it is expedient that power be given to appoint constables for better keeping the peace, and for the prevention and detection of crime, along the line of such canals and rivers, and in the neighbourhood thereof; it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for any two justices of the peace, and for the watch committee of any incorporated borough, within their several jurisdictions, on the application of the committee or board of directors acting in the management of the affairs of the company of proprietors of any canal or navigable river, or of any clerk or agent of any such company, duly authorised by such committee or board of directors, to appoint so many persons as they shall think fit from among those who shall be recommended to them for that purpose by such company of proprietors, clerk or agent, to act as constables on and along such canal or river; and every person so appointed shall take an oath or make a solemn declaration in the form or to the effect following; (that is to say,)

Appointment of constables for canals and rivers; who shall take the following oath.

Oath of constables.

'I A. B. having been appointed a constable to act upon and along the [name the canal or navigable river], under the provisions of [here insert the title of this act], do swear that I will well and truly serve our sovereign lady the Queen in the said office of constable, without favour or affection, malice or ill will; and that I will, to the best of my power, cause the peace to be kept, and prevent all offences against the peace; and that while I continue to hold the said office, I will, to the best of my skill and knowledge, discharge the duties thereof faithfully according to law.

So help me God.'

Powers of constables.

Such oath or declaration to be administered by any one such justice; and every person so appointed, and having taken such oath or made such declaration as aforesaid, shall have full power to act as constable for the preservation of the peace, and for the security of persons and property against felonies and other unlawful acts, on such canal or river, and the towing paths and works belonging thereto, and on and within any railways, tramroads, wharfs, quays, locks, docks, landing places, warehouses, lands, and premises belonging to any such company, and in all places not more than one quarter of a mile distant from either bank of such canal or river, or from such railways, and shall have all such powers, protections, and privileges for the apprehending of offenders, as well by night as by day, and for doing all things for the prevention, discovery, and prosecution of felonies and other offences, and for keeping the peace, which any constable duly appointed has within his constablewick: provided always, that such power shall not extend to authorise any such person to act as such constable within the metropolitan police district, or the city of London and the liberties thereof, or in any places beyond the banks, towing-paths, and other the premises belonging to such company, as may be situate within any other city or any incorporated borough, any thing in this act contained to the contrary notwithstanding."

7. On Canals and Rivers.

3 & 4 Vict. c. 50.

Sect. 2. "That it shall be lawful for any two justices, or the watch committee of any incorporated borough, to dismiss any such constable who shall act within their several jurisdictions, or for the company of proprietors of any such canal or river for which any such constable shall be appointed, or for any clerk or agent of such company duly authorised by the committee or board of directors of such companies, to dismiss any such constable from his office of constable; and upon every such dismissal all powers, protections, and privileges belonging to any such person by reason of such appointment shall wholly cease; and no person so dismissed shall be capable of being again appointed or acting as a constable for the same canal or river without the consent of the authority by which he was dismissed."

Dismissal of constables.

Sect. 3. "That it shall be lawful for every such company of proprietors to pay to every such constable, out of the monies and effects of the company, such salary or allowances, and at such times and in such manner, as the company shall think fit."

Constables how paid.

Sect. 4. "That every constable who shall be guilty of any neglect or breach of duty in his office of constable shall be liable to a penalty not more than 10*l.*, the amount of which penalty may be deducted from any salary due to such offender, or, in the discretion of the magistrate before whom such offender shall have been convicted, such offender may be imprisoned in the gaol or house of correction for the county or place in which such offence shall have been committed, with or without hard labour, for any time not more than one calendar month."

Penalty on constables for neglect of duty.

Sect. 5. "That every constable who shall be dismissed from or shall cease to hold his office, and who shall not forthwith deliver over all the clothing, accoutrements, appointments, and all other necessaries which have been supplied to him for the execution of his duty, to such person and at such time and place as shall be directed by the company on whose recommendation he shall have been appointed, or by any clerk or agent of such company duly authorised by the company to recieve the same, shall be liable to be imprisoned in any gaol or house of correction as aforesaid, with or without hard labour, for any time not exceeding one calendar month; and it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace to issue his warrant to search for and seize, to the use of such company, all the clothing, accoutrements, appointments, and other necessaries which shall not be so delivered over, wherever the same may be found."

Constables dismissed to deliver up accoutrements.

Sect. 6. "That every person who shall assault or resist any constable appointed as aforesaid in the execution of his duty, or who shall aid or incite any person so to assault or resist, shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not more than 10*l.* or, in the discretion of the magistrate before whom he shall be convicted, may be imprisoned in any gaol or house of correction as aforesaid, with or without hard labour, for any time not more than two calendar months."

Penalty for assaults on constables.

Sect. 7. "That every person who shall be found upon any such canal or river, or in or upon any lock, dock, warehouse, wharf, quay, or bank thereof, or on board of any boat or vessel lying or being in any such canal or river, or in any lock or dock thereunto belonging, having in his possession or under his control any tube or other instrument for the purpose of unlawfully obtain-

Unlawfully injuring the contents of packages.

Sect. 8. "That every person who shall bore, pierce, break, cut open, or otherwise injure any cask, box, or package containing wine, spirits, or other liquors, or any case, box, sack, wrapper, package, or roll of goods, on board of any boat, vessel, or waggon, or in or upon any warehouse, wharf, quay, or bank of or belonging to any such canal or river, with intent feloniously to steal or otherwise unlawfully obtain or to injure the contents or any part thereof, or who shall unlawfully drink or wilfully spill or allow to run to waste any such liquors or any part thereof, shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not more than 5*l.* over and above the value of the goods or liquors so taken or destroyed, or, in the discretion of the magistrate before whom he shall be convicted, may be imprisoned as aforesaid, with or without hard labour, for any time not more than one calendar month."

Constable, &c. having just cause to suspect felony, may enter on board vessels and take up suspected persons.

Sect. 9. "That it shall be lawful for every constable appointed as aforesaid, having just cause to suspect that any felony, or any other offence contrary to the provisions of this act, has been or is about to be committed in or on board of any boat or other vessel lying in any such canal or river, or any lock or dock thereunto belonging, to enter at all times, as well by night as by day, into and upon every such boat or other vessel, and therein to take all necessary measures for the prevention or detection of all felonies or other offences which he has just cause to suspect to have been or to be about to be committed, and to take into custody all persons suspected of being concerned in such felonies or other offences, and also to take charge of all property so suspected to be stolen or embezzled."

Constable may apprehend without warrant in certain cases.

Sect. 10. "That it shall be lawful for any such constable to take into custody, without a warrant, any loose, idle, and disorderly person whom he shall find disturbing the public peace, or whom he shall have good cause to suspect of having committed or being about to commit any felony, misdemeanor, or breach of the peace, or other offence contrary to the provisions of this act, and every person whom he shall find, between sunset and the hour of eight in the morning, lying or loitering in or upon any towing path, or in or upon any wharf, bridge, railway, quay, landing place, lock, dock, or upon the bank of any such canal or river, and not giving a satisfactory account of himself."

Power to constables and persons aggrieved to apprehend certain offenders.

Sect. 11. "That any person found committing any offence punishable upon summary conviction by virtue of this act may be taken into custody, without a warrant, by any constable, or may be apprehended by the owner of the property with respect to which the offence shall be committed, or by his servant, or any person authorised by him, and may be detained until he can be delivered into the custody of a constable, to be dealt with according to law; and every such constable may also stop, search, and detain any vessel, boat, cart, or carriage in or upon which there shall be reason to suspect that any thing stolen or unlawfully obtained may be found, and also any person who may be reasonably suspected of having or conveying in any manner any thing stolen or unlawfully obtained."

Stolen property offered in pawn may be detained.

Sect. 12. "That any person to whom any property shall be offered to be sold, pawned, or delivered, if he shall have reasonable cause to suspect that any such offence has been committed with respect to such property, or that the same or any part thereof has been stolen or unlawfully obtained, is hereby authorised, and if in his power is required, to apprehend and detain, and as soon as may be to deliver such offender into the custody of a constable, together with such property, to be dealt with according to law."

Not to repeal local acts containing penalties.

Sect. 13. "That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any person from being indicted for any indictable offence made punishable on summary conviction by this act, or to prevent any person from being liable under any other act or acts to any other higher penalty or punishment than is provided for such offence by this act, so nevertheless that no person be punished twice for the same offence."

7. On Canals and Rivers.

3 & 4 Vict. c. 50.

Sect. 14. "That any two justices of the peace within their several jurisdictions shall be empowered summarily to convict any person charged with any offence against this act, on the oath of one or more witnesses, or by confession of such person, and to award the penalty or punishment herein provided for such offence."

Offences how to be tried and penalties how enforced.

Sect. 15. "That in every case of the adjudication of a pecuniary penalty under this act, and nonpayment thereof, it shall be lawful for the justices before whom any offender shall have been convicted to commit such offender to any gaol or house of correction within his jurisdiction for a term not more than one calendar month, where the sum to be paid shall not exceed 5*l.*, and in any case not more than two calendar months, the imprisonment to cease on payment of the penalty and the costs for the recovery thereof; or instead of imprisonment it shall be lawful for the justices, by warrant under their hands and seals, to order such penalty, with the reasonable costs and charges of the conviction, to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender; and all such convictions and warrants shall be taken to be within the provisions of the 5 Geo. IV. c. 18." (a)

If penalty is not paid the offender may be committed, or the penalty levied by distress.

Sect. 16. "That any justice of the peace before whom any person shall be summarily convicted for any offence against this act may cause the conviction to be drawn up on paper or parchment in the following form of words, or to the like effect; that is to say,

Form of conviction.

"County, City, or Borough of } to wit. } BE it remembered, that on the day of in the year of our Lord in the county of A. E. is convicted before us J. P., and J. J. P., two of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county, for that he the said A. E. did [here specify the offence, and the time and place when and where the same was committed, as the case may be], and we do adjudge that the said A. E. shall for the said offence forfeit the sum of and shall pay the same immediately [or shall pay the same on or before the day of] to C. D., to be by him applied according to the directions of the statute in that case made and provided. Given under our hands the day and year first above mentioned. J. P. and J. J. P."

Sect. 17. "That no conviction for any offence against this act shall be quashed for want of form, or be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any of her Majesty's superior courts of record; and that no warrant of commitment shall be held void by reason of any defect therein, provided it be therein alleged that it is founded on a conviction, and there be a good and valid conviction to sustain the same; and that where any distress shall be made for levying any money by virtue of this act the distress itself shall not be deemed unlawful, nor the party making the same be deemed a trespasser, on account of any defect or want of form in the summons, conviction, warrant of distress or other proceedings relating thereto, nor shall the party distraining be deemed a trespasser from the beginning on account of any irregularity afterwards committed by him, but the person aggrieved by such irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage (if any) in an action upon the case."

Convictions not to be quashed for want of form.

Sect. 18. "And for the protection of persons acting in the execution of this act, be it enacted, that all actions and prosecutions to be commenced against any person for any thing done in pursuance of this act shall be laid and tried in the county where the fact was committed, and shall be commenced within six calendar months after the fact committed, and not otherwise; and notice in writing of such cause of action shall be given to the defendant one calendar month at the least before the commencement of the action; and in any such action the defendant may plead the general issue, and give this act and the special matter in evidence, at any trial to be had thereupon; and no plaintiff shall recover in any such action if tender of sufficient amends shall have been made before such action brought, or if a sufficient sum of money shall have been paid into court after such action brought Conviction.

UNDER this title will be considered only those convictions which take place before magistrates in a summary way, and without the intervention of a jury.

Observations on Justice's power to convict.

The power of a justice of the peace to convict an offender in a summary way without a trial by jury is in restraint of the common law, and in abundance of instances a tacit repeal of that famous clause in the Great Charter, that a man shall be tried by his equals, which also was the common law of the land long before the great charter, even from time immemorial, beyond the date of histories and record. Therefore generally nothing shall be presumed in favour of this branch of the office of a justice of the peace; but the intendment will be against it. For which reason, where this special power is given to a justice of the peace by act of parliament, it must appear that he hath strictly pursued it; otherwise the common law will break in upon him, and level all his proceedings. So that where a trial by jury is dispensed withal, yet he must proceed, nevertheless, according to the course of the common law in trials by juries, and consider himself only as constituted in the place both of judge and jury.

Summary of the course of proceeding.

Therefore there must be an information or charge against a person; then he must be summoned or have notice of such charge, and have an opportunity to make his defence; and the evidence against him must be such as the common law approves of, unless the statute specially directeth otherwise; then if the person be found guilty, there must be a conviction, judgment, and execution, all according to the course of the common law, directed and influenced by the special authority given by statute; and in the conclusion, there must be a record of the whole proceedings, wherein the justice must set forth the particular manner and circumstances, so as if he shall be called to account for the same by a superior court, it may appear that he hath conformed to the law, and not exceeded the bounds prescribed to his jurisdiction.

I. The Information before Conviction.

The information before conviction.

We have already stated, ante, 958, that there must be an information or charge against an offender before he be convicted, and such information or charge is the first step to be taken. Upon this the magistrate grants a summons or warrant requiring the defendant to appear before him, which is in general requisite, unless the defendant appear without it. In this way the charge is brought on for hearing.

1. The Information before Conviction.

Division of subject.

We will consider the law and practice as regards the information:—1st, As to where an Information is necessary;—2d, The Time when it is to be made;—3d, Who is to be the Informer;—4th, Before whom Information to be laid;—5th, Against whom to be laid;—6th, The joinder of several Offences;—and 7th, Its form.

1. When necessary.

1. When necessary.]—It is absolutely essential in all proceedings to convict a party of an offence created or prohibited under a penal statute, that there should be some information or complaint previously laid before the convicting or some other justices. (Brookshaw v. Hopkins, Lofft, 240; R. v. Fuller, 1 Ld. Raym. 510; R. v. Birnie, 5 Car. & P. 206; 1 Moo. & R. 160, S. C.; Stevens v. Clark, 1 Car. & Marsh, 509.) If a magistrate issued a warrant of apprehension against a party without a proper information, and the party were apprehended under it, the magistrate would be liable to an action for false imprisonment. (Stevens v. Clark, supra; 1 Saund. 262, n.)

Such information is indeed dispensed with where a justice is authorised to convict on view of the offence; as by the 8 Hen. VI. c. 9, for forcible detainers; the 19 Geo. III. c. 21, s. 2, for profane swearing; by the Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. IV. c. 83; or by the General Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, s. 132; or by the General Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 50, s. 78. (See Jones v. Owen, 2 D. & R. 600; 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 290, S. C.)

2. When to be laid.

2. When to be laid.]—In general the penal statute on which the information is founded limits the time as to when the conviction must take place, and the information must be laid accordingly within that time.

Some statutes appoint an interval which must elapse before any prosecution; as the 19 Geo. III. c. 50, s. 2, &c.

By stat. 31 Eliz. c. 5, s. 5, 6, all actions, suits, bills, indictments, or informations on any penal statute, whereby the forfeiture is limited to the Queen only, shall be brought within two years after the offence committed; if limited to the Queen and to any other who shall prosecute, then within one year; and in default of such prosecution, then to be brought for the Queen in two years after that year ended. Provided, that if they are or shall be limited by statute to be brought within shorter time, then they shall be brought within such time limited (a). (See "Information," Vol. III.) The party grieved is not a common informer within the restraint of this statute, but he may sue in the same manner as before. (2 Hawk. c. 26, s. 47.) It will be observed that it applies to all actions and informations for penalties.

Where a landlord, during the existence of a tenancy, charged his tenant under the 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 38, (the Police Court Act, post, title "Police," Vol. V.) with having three months before wilfully damaged his premises, it was held that the magistrates had no jurisdiction, and that the charge should have been laid within one month. (Dowell v. Beningfield, 1 Car. & Marsh. 9.)

If a statute says that the offender shall be convicted in a limited time, the conviction must take place within that time, and the laying the information will not suffice. (See R. v. Bellamy, 1 B. & Cres. 500; 2 D. & R. 727, S. C.) And it makes no difference that the conviction was prevented from being made by an adjournment even at the defendant's own request; for after the time limited for making the conviction, there is no jurisdiction in the magistrate to make it. (R. v. Tolley, 3 East, 467.) But if the statute says "that the offence shall be prosecuted," or "that the party be prosecuted for the offence within a limited time;" it suffices to lay the information

(a) The statutes of 18 Eliz. c. 5, s. 1, requiring the time of the information to be entered, &c. and the 21 Jac. I. c. 4, s. 3, requiring an oath to be made at the time of exhibiting the information, do not apply to informations before justices out of sessions.

1. The Information before Conviction.

in that time, though the conviction be not made within it. (R. v. Barrett, 1 Salk. 383.)

As regards the computation of the time limited by penal statutes, see as to the construction of time in general, title "Time," Vol. VI. If the time be expressed by the year, or any aliquot part thereof, as a half or quarter, &c. of a year, the computation is by calendar months of twelve months to the year. But if months are mentioned, and not the year, they are always computed by lunar months of four weeks to the month. (See title "Time," Vol. VI. pp. 257, 258.) Where the time is dated from the offence, or from the day of committing it, the day on which it was committed is not to be reckoned as one. (See Pellew v. Inhabitants of Wonford, 9 B. & Cres. 135; 4 Man. & R. 130, S. C.; title "Time," Vol. VI. p. 259 (a).) If goods are found, subjecting the party having them in his possession to a forfeiture for receiving them illegally, the day on which they are found will be presumed to be the day whereon such forfeiture was incurred. (R. v. Bass, 5 T. R. 251.)

3. Who to be informer.

3. Who to be the Informer.]—Generally speaking, any person may be the informer; (see Esp. Penal Statutes, 11;) but sometimes the statute giving the penalty allows only particular persons to be informers.

Where the informer is entitled to any part of the penalty, he is not in general a competent witness to support the conviction. (See R. v. Stone, 2 Ld. Raym. 1545; 1 Sess. Cas. 378, S. C.; "Evidence," Vol. II. p. 435.) Sometimes the statute makes him competent.

Where the information is for the recovery of a penalty or compensation given to the party grieved, and his dissent is essential to the offence, he must be the informer; or else it must appear that the information is laid at his instance. (See R. v. Daman, 2 B. & Ald. 378; 1 Chit. Rep. 147, S. C.; R. v. Harpur, 1 D. & R. 222; 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 67, S. C.; R. v. Corden, 4 Burr. 2279.)

4. Before whom to be laid.

4. Before whom Information to be laid.]—The information must be laid before a justice having jurisdiction to hear it and determine as to the offence. The penal statute frequently points out before whom the conviction is to take place. (See further as to this, post, "Justices," Vol. III. pp. 1000, 1006; and Sharpe v. Aspinall, 10 B. & Cres. 47, title "Friendly Societies," Vol. III. p. 179.)

One justice may receive the information, &c. where two or more justices, &c. are empowered to convict.

One justice may receive the information and grant a summons or warrant upon it in all cases: even in those in which the conviction must be by two or more justices. This is enacted by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, s. 2, in the following words: "That in all cases where two or more justices, deputy lieutenants, or others, are authorised and required to hear and determine any complaint, one justice, deputy lieutenant, or such other person shall be competent to receive the original information or complaint, and to issue the summons or warrant requiring the parties to appear before two or more justices of the peace, deputy lieutenants, or others, as the case may require; and after examination upon oath into the merits of the said complaint, and the adjudication thereupon, by any such two justices, deputy lieutenants, or other persons, being made, all and every the subsequent proceedings to enforce obedience thereto or otherwise, whether respecting the penalty, fine, imprisonment, costs, or other matter or thing now enacted, or to be hereafter enacted, may be enforced by either of the said justices, deputy lieutenants, or other persons, or any other justice of the peace or deputy lieutenant for the same county, riding or place, in such and the like manner as if done by the same two justices, deputy lieutenants, or other persons who so heard and adjudged the said complaint; and where the original complaint or information shall be made to any justice or justices of the peace, deputy lieutenant or deputy lieutenants, or other person or persons different from him or them before whom the same shall be heard and determined, the form of conviction shall be made conformable and according to the fact."

Adjudication may be enforced by either of the county justices or any other justice for the same county.

(a) It would appear from the case of R. v. Adderley, Douglas, 465, and R. v. Green, 10 Mod. 212, that where the time is limited from an act done, the day is inclusive; but where it is from the day of doing the act, it is exclusive. But it will be seen from the more recent cases to be found under title "Time," Vol. VI. p. 259, that there is no ground for this distinction.

1. The Information before Conviction.

Magistrate refusing to receive information.

A justice cannot properly refuse to receive an information regularly laid before him within his jurisdiction, and upon refusal in some cases a mandamus, and in others a criminal information, might be awarded against him. (See Stra. 413; R. v. Newton, id. 530; R. v. Benn, 6 T. R. 198; Paley, 17, 18; "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1025.) Some statutes inflict a penalty on his refusal. (See Smith v. Langham, 2 Stra. 234.) Where, however, a justice has a reasonable ground for doubting his jurisdiction, the Court of Queen's Bench will not enforce him to hear the information. (R. v. Bucks, Justices, 2 D. & R. 689; 1 B. & Cres. 485, S. C.; see "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1025.)

5. Against whom it may be laid.

5. Against whom it may be laid.]—The party against whom the information may be laid must depend on the words of the penal statute, and the facts constituting the offence within it. See the various titles of offences under penal statutes throughout this work.

A feme covert may be convicted on a penal statute. (See R. v. Crofts, 2 Stra. 1120; Foster's case, 11 Rep. 61; "Wife," Vol. VI.) So may an infant. (4 Blu. Com. 308; Marshall v. Rutton, 8 T. R. 545; see ante, title "Children.")

In some cases a man may be responsible for the act of his servants and of those he employs, even where the act is done without his privity or knowledge. (See Mitchell v. Torup, Parker's Rep. 227; 1 Vent. 190, 238; "Servants," Vol. V. p. 854.)

As to who may be joined as defendants in the same conviction, see "Indictment," Vol. III. p. 860; post, 984. Where the act is such that several may join in it, all the offenders may be included in the same information and conviction (see post, 984.)

6. Several offences.

6. What Offences may be joined.]—There does not seem any objection to the joining and stating of several offences, in a distinct manner, in the same information and conviction. (See R. v. Swallow, 8 T. R. 286; and R. v. Matthews, 10 Mod. 26; R. v. Lovett, 7 T. R. 1030; Newman v. Bendyshe, 10 Ad. & Ell. 11; see also "Indictment," Vol. III. p. 862; and see post, 984.)

7. Oath to support information.

7. Oath to support Information.]—The information need not be upon oath, if not expressly required by the statute authorising the conviction. (R. v. Willis, Bosc. 16; Basten v. Carew, 5 D. & R. 558; 2 D. & R. M. C. 563; 3 B. & Cres. 649, S. C.; see R. v. Rawlins, 8 C. & P. 441.) If the statute requires such oath, it must be administered and taken before the magistrate receives the material part of the information. (See R. v. Kiddy, 4 D. & R. 734; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 364.)

Sometimes the statute, though it does not require the information to be on the oath of the informer, requires that the charge contained in it shall be deposed to on the oath of some other person, being a credible witness, as the 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 65, s. 9, relating to game; and in such case there should be a deposition accordingly. (See R. v. Scotton, 13 Law J. N. S. Mag. Ca. 58, infra.)

8. Form of information. When must be in writing.

8. Form of the Information.]—When the information is required by statute to be in writing, that form must be observed, and this is usually directed where power is given to apprehend the offender in the first instance; but unless expressly so directed, it does not seem necessary that it should be in writing. (R. v. Willis, Bosc. 16; Paley, 32; see R. v. Rawlins, 8 C. & P. 441.)

In practice the magistrate always requires an information in writing, drawn up in regular form, to be lodged with him before he will grant a summons against an offender on a penal statute. In other cases the magistrate usually requires no more than a mere verbal statement of the case by the prosecutor before the summons is granted, or a statement of it upon oath before he grants a warrant.

1. The Information before Conviction.

Sometimes the statute expressly dispenses with a written information; as for instance, the General Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 50, s. 101; also the General Turnpike Act, 4 Geo. IV. c. 95, s. 83.

When the statute requires the information to be in writing, the conviction should state it was so. (R. v. Willis, Bosc. 16; see also Basten v. Carew, infra.) In the general form of conviction given by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, it is not stated that the information was in writing.

Statement of oath.

Statement of the Oath.]—The information, when required to be on oath, should state that it was so. (See Exp. Aldridge, 4 D. & R. 83; 2 B. & Cres. 600, S. C.; Wilkins v. Wright, 2 C. & M. 191; see 1 Saund. 262, n.) In the general form of conviction given by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, it is not stated that the information was laid on oath.

Where the statute requires the charge contained in the information to be deposed to on the oath of another party than the informer, this deposition should appear on the face of the proceedings. By sect. 9 of 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 65 (relating to trespasses by entering upon land in pursuit of game), it is enacted, "That upon any information made or exhibited before a justice of the peace of any such offence as aforesaid, it shall not be necessary that the charge contained in such information should be made on the oath of the informer or prosecutor in such case; provided, that before any proceeding shall be had or taken upon such information, either for summoning the party accused or compelling his appearance to answer the same, the charge contained in such information shall be deposed to on the oath of some other person or persons, being a credible witness or credible witnesses." An information under this section was as follows:—"Staffordshire, to wit. Be it remembered, that on &c., at &c., Sir O M., of &c., a credible witness, in his proper person, cometh before me, W. F. C., one of the justices &c., and giveth me, the said justice, to understand and be informed, that R. R., of &c, did, on &c., at &c., unlawfully commit a certain trespass, by entering, in the daytime of the same day, upon a certain close of land, in the possession and occupation of J. W. there situate, in pursuit of game, contrary to the statute, &c., whereby, and by force of the statute, R. R. has forfeited a sum of money not exceeding 2*l.* &c.; and the said information having been also verified upon the oath of W. A., of &c., another credible witness, before me the said justice; whereupon the said Sir O. M. prays that the said R. R. may be forthwith summoned to appear before one of the said justices, to answer the said information, and make his defence thereto. O. M., W. A. Exhibited by Sir O. M., and sworn before me, the day and year first above written, W. F. C." There was no other document deposing to the charge contained in the information—held, that this information alone was not a sufficient compliance with the above section to give two magistrates jurisdiction to entertain the charge. (R. v. Scotton, 13 Law J. N. S. Mag. Ca. 58.)

Statement of time of laying information.

Statement of Time of laying it.]—The day and year on which it is exhibited must be stated therein, as well that it may appear to be subsequent to the offence and prior to all the other proceedings, as in order to ascertain that the prosecution is within the time limited by the particular statute on which it is founded. (R. v. Kent, 2 Ld. Raym. 1546; R. v. Fuller, 1 Id. 510; Paley, 81.) In R. v. Kent (2 Ld. Raym. 1546), the conviction was quashed because the information was set out to be exhibited on 2d Nov. 1 Geo. II. and the conviction was laid to be on 2d Oct. 1 Geo. II. (See R. v. Picton, 2 East, 196.)

Statement of place where laid.

Statement of Place where laid.]—The place also where the information is stated to be received must be stated in it, in order to show that the magistrate at the time was acting within his jurisdiction. (Bosc. 24; and see Kite and Lane's case, 1 B. & C. 101; 2 D. & R. 212, S. C.; and title "Justices," Vol. III. 1000, 1006.)

1. The Information before Conviction.

Name of informer.

Name of Informer, &c.]—The name of the informer should, it seems, be set forth in all cases, that the person convicted may know who is his accuser. (Sed vide Paley on Conv. 82, n.) It is absolutely necessary that it should be set forth where any part of the penalty is given by the statute to the informer, in order that the conviction may appear to be founded upon other evidence than that of the informer himself, who is in such cases an incompetent witness. (R. v. Stone, 2 Ld. Raym. 1545.) And where a statute directs that certain things shall be forfeited to the person seizing the same, the information must show that the person to whom the thing is adjudged is the person who seized it, and it is not enough that this is stated in the adjudication. (R. v. Smith, 5 M. & Sel. 133.)

But it is not necessary (as in penal actions) to allege that the informer sues as well for himself as for the other parties. (R. v. Lovet, 7 T. R. 152.)

It does not seem necessary, though perhaps advisable and proper, to state the informer's abode and addition.

Where information laid by or at instance of third party.

Where the penalty is given as a compensation to a party aggrieved by the offence, it must appear either that he is the informer, or that the information is laid at his instance. (R. v. Corden, 2 Burr. 2279; R. v. Daman, 2 B. & Ald. 278; 1 Chit. Rep. 117, S. C.)

But in a conviction under the Pilot Act, (6 Geo. IV. c. 125,) for continuing in charge of a ship after a licensed pilot had offered to take charge, it is not necessary to state the consent of the corporation of the Trinity House, or of the lord warden of the cinque ports, to the prosecution; such consent, though required by the statute, not being alluded to in the form of conviction thereby provided. (Chaney v. Payne, 1 Ad. & Ell. N. S. 712.)

Name and authority of the magistrate.

Name, &c. of Magistrate.]—Summary convictions before magistrates being by virtue of a circumscribed and extraordinary power, the name and style of the justice or justices, before whom the information is lodged, must be set forth in the statement of the information, from which it must appear that he or they had authority to take such information. (See 2 Salk. 473; R. v. Johnson, 1 Stra. 261; Ex parte Kite, 2 D. & R. 212; S. C. nom. Kite and Lane's case, 1 B. & C. 101; Paley, 81.)

It is not sufficient, therefore, to describe him as a justice in the county, without saying of or for the county. (See R. v. Dobbyn, 2 Salk. 473.) It is, however, no objection that he is described as being a justice, &c., without the word "there being a justice, &c." for that is implied. (R. v. Chipps, 1 Stra. 711.)

If the statute give cognizance of the offence to the next justice of the county, the convicting magistrate should be so described, for no other but the next has any jurisdiction. (Sanders's case, 1 Saund. 263; Dalt. c. 6.) But if the act only mentions justices in or near the place, it is but directory, and they need not be so described; (2 Keb. 559;) nor if the statute speaks of justices acting for the division need they be so alleged, for any justice of the county comes within that condition. (R. v. Price, Cald. 305; 3 Bac. Ab. 793; and see title "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1006.)

The omission of the word assigned in the description of the style of a magistrate has been once held to be fatal. (Sanders's case, 1 Saund. 263.) Such an omission, however, does not now seem material. (2 Barnard. 383; 1 Saund. 263, n. 5; Paley, 79. And see the form given by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, post, 989.)

By 26 Geo. II. c. 27, no order or adjudication of justices is invalid, because it does not express that either justice is of the quorum. (And see 4 Geo. IV. c. 27, title "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1006.)

Name and description of offender.

Name, &c. of Offender.]—The name of the offender should be correctly stated, otherwise the proceedings would be unavailable if he did not appear. If there be several offenders, each must be named. A conviction against "Messrs. Harrison and Company," was considered bad, and this although none of the parties even objected to the conviction on that ground. (R. v. Harrison, 8 T. R. 508.)

1. The Information before Conviction.

The addition of the offender is not material, and need not be stated, though it is usual. (See R. v. Burnaby, 2 Ld. Raym. 900; 1 Salk. 181, S. C.)

The General Turnpike Act allows proceedings against a driver misbehaving himself to be carried on against him without describing his name, if he refuse to disclose it. (See 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, s. 132.) There is also a similar clause in the General Highway Act, 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 50, s. 78.

Statement of time of committing offence.

Statement of Time of Offence.]—The time of committing the offence should be stated, it would seem, in the information, and at all events it must be so in the conviction, in order that the magistrate may appear to have proceeded in the first instance upon a legal charge, and also that it may appear the information has been commenced within the limited time; (R. v. Pullen, 1 Salk. 369;) and also, as has been said, that the party may be enabled to defend himself against a second charge. (R. v. Catheral, 2 Stra. 900; 14 East, 272; Paley, 84.)

The precise day, however, it seems, need not be named, if the offence be alleged to have been committed between such a day and such a day, provided the first of the days be between the time limited by the statute. (2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 82; R. v. Chandler, 1 Salk. 378; 1 Ld. Raym. 581; Carth. 502; 5 Mod. 446, S. C.; R. v. Simpson, 10 Mod. 248.) It is more regular, however, to fix the charge to a certain day, where it can be done. (Paley, 87.)

Where an information appeared to be exhibited on the 29th May, 1805, and the offence was charged to have been committed "within three months, to wit, on the 12th May now last past:" it was held, that the words last past might refer to the day of the month and not to the month itself, so as to obviate the objection of the information being out of time, by supposing it to refer to May, 1804. (R. v. Crisp, 7 East, 389.) Stating the offence to have been on the "20th day June," omitting the word "of," would not, it seems, be bad. (R. v. Huggins, 3 C. & P. 602.)

As to the mode of stating time in an indictment, see "Indictment," Vol. III. p. 889.

Variance not material.

In all cases, notwithstanding the necessity to state a time, it is not essential that it should be stated truly. If there afterwards appear to be a variance in this respect between the information and the evidence, it will be immaterial, if it appear from the evidence that the prosecution was actually commenced in due time.

Statement of place where offence committed.

Statement of Venue.]—The place, viz. the parish, &c. and the county wherein the offence was committed, should be stated in the information, in order that the offence may appear to have been committed in the place over which the magistrate's jurisdiction extends. (Paley, 87.) And this, though the conviction pursues the form given by the statute, which does not expressly require that the place where it was committed should be shown. (R. v. Hazell, 13 East, 139; Kite and Lane's case, 1 B. & C. 101; S. C. nom. Ex parte Kite, 2 D. & R. 212.)

The mention of the county in the margin does not supply the want of an allegation of the fact being committed in the county; for the insertion of it in the margin is only to show in what county the conviction was made. (R. v. Austin, 8 Mod. 309.) But where a place has been once named, as "at B. in the county of H.," it is enough afterwards to say, "at B. aforesaid," without saying, "in the county aforesaid," for it will not be presumed to lie in two counties. (R. v. Burnaby, 2 Ld. Raym. 901.)

Where a conviction omitted to state in the previous part of it the precise place where the offence was committed, but in awarding the distribution of the penalty awarded it "to the overseers of D., in the said county, where the said offence was committed," this was held to be sufficient. (R. v. Weale, 5 C. & P. 135. See further, title "Indictment," Vol. III. p. 875.)

If a particular locality be an ingredient in the offence charged, the information must define the requisite locality by express allegations. (See Deybel's case, 4 B. & Ald. 246, 248; Souden's case, id. 294; R. v. Fletcher, 13 Law J. N. S. Mag. Ca. 16; and see title "Game," Vol. III.)

Courts and magistrates are, indeed, bound ex officio to take notice of the known divisions of the kingdom, as, whether such a place is within or without the bills of mortality; (R. v. Vasey, Bosc. 138;) but not so of the local situations and distances of different places in the counties from each other. (Deybel's case, 4 B. & Ald. 243.)

1. The Information before Conviction.

Notwithstanding a place must be stated, it is not in general essential, unless perhaps in averments of local situation, to prove the offence was committed at the place stated; and it suffices to show that it was committed within the jurisdiction of the magistrate. (See "Indictment," Vol. III. p. 878.) If indeed it be an information for an offence where the statute creating it gives a part of the penalty to the poor of the parish in which it is committed, a material variance between the parish laid and that proved would be fatal.

Statement of the offence.

Statement of the Offence itself.]—All acts which subject men to new and other trials than those by which they ought to be tried by the common law, ought to be taken strictly. The information must therefore contain an exact description of the offence; which, in order to give the justice a jurisdiction, must appear to be within both the letter and spirit of the statute that creates it, and which must be exactly described, that the defendant may know what charge he is to answer, and that he may be enabled to defend himself against a second charge for the same offence. (Bosc. 25.) The statement of the offence should be with as much certainty as the nature of the case will admit of. It ought to be certain to every intent. It must have as much certainty in it as in an indictment. (See R. v. Pain, 7 D. & R. 678; 5 B. & Cres. 251; 3 D. & R. M. C. 517, S. C.)

Requisite certainty.

Statement must be direct and positive.

A direct and positive charge must be stated against the defendant; it does not suffice to state merely facts amounting to a presumption of guilt, however sufficient such facts may be as primâ facie evidence against him. Thus where the charge in an information (under the 8 Ann. c. 18, s. 3, for selling bread under the assize) was that the bread wanted so much weight, &c. was bought in the shop of the defendant: it was held, that the charge ought to have been more direct, viz. of the sale of so much bread by the defendant, for though the fact of a servant selling in his master's shop is good evidence against the master, still it is but evidence, and what is evidence merely is not enough to be laid in the information. (R. v. Bradley, 10 Mod. 155.)

Mere statement of evidence bad.

Facts must not be gathered therefrom by inference.

All the facts necessary to support the proceeding must be expressly alleged, and not left to be gathered by inference or intendment. Thus in a conviction for having concealed brewing utensils, the deposition, which appeared to be taken on a day subsequent to the information, only made the witness state that the defendant now has two concealed vessels, &c., and the conviction was quashed, because it should have appeared that the defendant had them at the time of the information, for though the words might be made to imply as much, yet Lord C. J. Holt said, "a conviction must be certain and not taken by collection." (R. v. Fuller, 1 Ld. Raym. 509.)

The precise offence must not be left in doubt.

Nor must the precise offence be in any way left in doubt. A conviction upon an information, on 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 53, against a foreigner, for being on board a vessel liable to forfeiture, charged the offence as being committed within a part of the united kingdom, and within one league of the coast; but it appearing that, as to the latter, the penalty was done away with: it was held that the conviction could not be supported, as it did not distinctly show to the defendant which offence was insisted on against him. (R. v. Pereira, 2 Adol. & E. 375.)

So if a statute specifies the grounds of forfeiture, the conviction must show specifically the particular fact which forms the ground of forfeiture; in order that the Court may see that the penalty has been properly imposed, and be quite sure that the convicting justice has not mistaken the law. This is exemplified in the following case.—A conviction on the 45 Geo. III. c. 121, s. 7, (now repealed by 6 Geo. IV. c. 105; but 6 Geo. IV. c. 108, s. 3, makes provision for the offence,) for carrying and conveying foreign spirits, stated, "That on, &c. at, &c. J. S. had been duly convicted before, &c. of having, on, &c. at, &c. (he, the said J. S., then and now being a subject of his present majesty, and being a seaman or seafaring man,) been found carrying and conveying, and assisting in the carrying away and conveying, contrary to the form of the statute in that case made and provided, divers, to wit, seven gallons of foreign brandy, in two casks, called half-ankers, then and there liable to forfeiture, the said offence being by him, the said J. S., committed against the provisions of the acts of parliament made and passed for the prevention of smuggling; which offence had been duly proved before the justices, on the oath of one credible witness;" concluding with judgment, that the said J. S. had, for such offence, forfeited the sum of 100*l.*, pursuant to the 3 Geo. IV. c. 110, &c. It was moved to quash this conviction for insufficiency, in not describing any offence for which the defendant was liable to punishment, and the conviction was quashed accordingly. Abbott, C. J. said, "I am of opinion that this conviction is bad in form, and must be quashed. The general rule as to convictions is, that the specific fact which forms the ground of forfeiture should be stated, in order that the Court may see that the penalty has been properly imposed, and be quite sure that the convicting justice has not mistaken the law. If the conviction had stated the circumstances under which the brandy was imported,—that it was imported, in a certain manner, in casks of a certain size, which was contrary to law,— we should then know that the carriage of it on land, in such casks, would render it liable to forfeiture; but carrying and conveying brandy on land may render it liable to forfeiture for various reasons; and, therefore, it was necessary to show, on the face of this conviction, why the brandy in question was forfeitable. It is stated, certainly, as a fact, that the brandy was contained in two casks, called 'half-ankers,' but it is not said how it was imported,—that it was imported in those casks. It might have been imported in casks of an hundred gallons, and, having paid the duty, found its way into half-ankers. No fact is given which plainly imports that the brandy was liable to forfeiture. The general rule I have mentioned is a sound one, and ought not to be departed from." (Ex parte Smith, 3 Dowl. & Ry. 460; Paley, 89.)

1. The Information before Conviction.

Statement must not be by way of recital;

A statement of the offence by way of recital will not do. (R. v. Catherall, 2 Stra. 900; Sess. Ca. 159; R. v. Crowhurst, 2 Ld. Raym. 1363.)

or in disjunctive,

It must not be stated in the alternative or the disjunctive. (See 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 58; R. v. Middlehurst, 1 Burr. 399; R. v. North, 6 D. & R. 143; 3 D. & R. M. C. 38, S. C.; R. v. Sadler, 2 Chit. Rep. 519.) A conviction on the 6 Geo. IV. c. 108, s. 49, for being on board a boat liable to forfeiture by sect. 3, and having casks attached thereto "of the description used or intended to be used for the smuggling of spirits," was held bad. R. v. Pain, 7 D. & R. 768; 5 B. & Cres. 251, S. C.) or argumentatively.

Or in an argumentative way. (1 Salk. 373.)

Duplicity.

The information must not charge more than one offence on the same count, otherwise it will be bad for duplicity. Thus a conviction under 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 64, and 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 85, for keeping a house open for the sale of beer, and selling beer, and suffering it to be drunk on the premises, (see now the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, s. 15,) at a time of day prohibited by an order of justices, and fining the party charged in a single penalty for "the offence," was held bad, as charging more than one distinct offence. (Newman v. Bendyshe, 10 Ad. & Ell. 11; ante, "Alehouse," p. 72; and see further as to duplicity, "Indictment," Vol. III. p. 866.)

Must not state a mere conclusion of law.

The information must state the facts which constitute the offence, and not the mere legal result of them. Where the act of 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 27, required a license to be taken out by every hawker, pedlar, &c. going from town to town to sell goods; and a conviction under that act only described the defendant as a hawker and pedlar and offering to sell goods, but said nothing about his going from town to town; the conviction was quashed. For though it was stated that the defendant was found trading as a hawker and pedlar, yet this (being a conclusion of law) was held too general a description to bring the defendant within the terms of the act; and it was also agreed, that the defect was not helped by the defendant's confession, which went only to the offence as charged in the information. (R. v. Little, 1 Burr. 613; Paley, 90.)

1. The Information before Conviction.

A conviction for profane cursing and swearing set forth the charge, that the defendant did profanely swear fifty-four oaths, and profanely curse one hundred curses against the form of the statute, and it was held bad by reason of the oaths and curses not being set forth. (See R. v. Sparling, 1 Stra. 497; R. v. Popplewell, 1 Stra. 686; R. v. Cheveney, 2 Ld. Raym. 1368; and R. v. Daman, 1 Chit. Rep. 147. See further as to the statement of mere conclusions of law, title "Indictment," Vol. III. 867.)

Every ingredient, to constitute the offence, must be stated.

The description of the charge must include in express terms every ingredient required by the statute to constitute the offence; for nothing must be left to intendment, or inference, or argument, for helping out the description. (See R. v. Denman, 1 Chit. Rep. 152; R. v. Jukes, 8 T. R. 536; R. v. Fuller, 1 Ld. Raym. 509; R. v. Trelawney, 1 T. R. 22.)

The evidence subsequently stated in the conviction can only support the original charge, but can by no means extend or supply what is wanting in the information. (Paley, 86; Reg. v. Barnes, 2 Salk. 680; 2 Rd. Raym. 1268; S. C.; R. v. Wheatman, Dougl. 232; R. v. Denman, 1 Chit. Rep. 155.)

A conviction on 3 W. & M. c. 10, s. 2, (now repealed by 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 32,) for killing deer, was quashed for not describing the place where they were killed as being inclosed, according to the terms of that statute. (R. v. Moore, 2 Ld. Raym. 791; R. v. Sadler, 2 Chit. Rep. 519.) And the like where the defendant was convicted under the 33 Hen. VIII. c. 6, (now repealed by the 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 32,) merely for "having" a hand gun in his house, the words of that statute being "use to keep in his house." (R. v. Llewellyn, 1 Show. 48)

Convictions on the game laws, prior to the 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 32, for keeping and using a dog to destroy game or for using a hound, have been set aside, neither of these denominations being contained in those statutes. (Reason v. Lisle, Com. 567; Hooke v. Wilks, 2 Stra. 1126) But "a dog called a greyhound" was held sufficient. (R. v. Hartley, Cald. 175.)

So a conviction on stat. 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 25, s. 7, (now repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27,) against unlawfully killing and taking fish in any river, &c. without the license or consent of the lord or owner of the water, was quashed, because it did not describe the offence in the words of the statute, or say that the defendant stole the fish, or took and killed the fish of another person, or in another person's pond. (R. v. Mallinson, 2 Burr. 682.)

So in R. v. Trelawny (1 T. R. 222), the conviction (which was on stat. 22 Geo. III. c. 47, s. 13, against insuring tickets in any state lottery to be authorised by act of parliament,) was quashed, because the information did not express that the ticket insured was a ticket in the state lottery, though the lottery was described as being authorised by stat. 25 Geo. III. c. 59.

So in R. v. Walsh (1 Ad. & Ell. 481; 3 Nev. & M. 632), a conviction under stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 55, s. 27, stated that the defendant refused to deliver up a certificate of registry to his majesty's officers of customs, and it was held that this was bad, as not bringing the offence within the words of the section, "shall deliver up to the proper officers of his majesty's customs." The conviction did not state for what purpose the certificate was required, and it was held by Lord Denman, C. J., and Williams, J., that this omission also made the conviction bad, as not satisfying the words of the same section, "to deliver up for the purpose of such ship or vessel as occasion shall require." It was also held that these were defects in substance, and not cured by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, s. 3, post, 1000.

So where the 45 Geo. III. c. 121, s. 7, (repealed by 6 Geo. IV. c. 105), made all British subjects liable to arrest on being found on board any ship liable to forfeiture under the smuggling acts, and a conviction under that act did not allege that the party was a British subject, the conviction was quashed, though it pursued the general form given by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 110 (repealed by 6 Geo. IV. c. 105). Exp. Hawkins, 2 B. & C. 31; 3 D. & R. 209, S. C.)

So it was held in Wilkins v. Wright (3 Tyrw. 824; 2 C. & M. 191), that a warrant of commitment for neglecting to pay a sum awarded by an order of maintenance under the 49 Geo. III. c. 63, s. 8, was not merely a warrant of commitment but a conviction; and therefore that it was requisite that it should appear on the face of it that the magistrate had jurisdiction, and that he had good grounds for convicting. And therefore that such commitment was bad where it omitted to state that there was complaint on oath by one of the overseers of the parish liable to maintain the child; an adjudication by the magistrate that a sum was due and unpaid; that the party charged was called upon for his defence, and that he did not show any reasonable or sufficient cause for not paying.

1. The Information before Conviction.

Precise words of the act need not be used.

The statement of the charge in the information need not be always expressed in the precise and technical words of the act, but it is sufficient if the words used in the one are synonymous with and equivalent to the words contained in the other. Thus the statute 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 106, s. 4, enacts, that all persons who shall attend any meeting had or held "for the purpose" of making or entering into any contract, &c. by that act declared to be illegal, or of entering into, &c. any combination for any purpose declared by that act to be illegal, &c.: it was held, that a conviction for attending a meeting "for the purpose" of carrying on a combination "for the purpose" of obtaining an advance of wages, correctly described the offence by the words "for the purpose," though the description of the offence referred to in the fourth section was described in the third section to "any combination to obtain," the words "for the purpose" and "to obtain" being synonymous. (Rex v. Ridgway, 1 D. & R. 132; 5 B. & A. 527, S. C.; and see 1 Chit. C. L. 283, and cases there cited; sed vide R. v. Seward, 1 Ad. & E. 706; 3 N. & M. 557.)

But best to follow them.

It is, however, always safest to follow the words of the act as nearly as possible, and we have already seen instances in which a departure from this may render the proceedings fatal.

Sometimes a more particular description necessary.

It generally suffices to state the offence in the words of the statute, per Holt, C. J. (R. v. Speed, 1 Ld. Raym. 583; and see Davis v. Nest, 6 C. & P. 167); but sometimes a circumstance plainly implied, though not expressly contained in the act, forms a necessary ingredient in the offence, and must be stated. (Paley, 104, 95.)

Thus where the 24 Geo. III. c. 47, s. 1, prohibited vessels from hovering on the coasts of the kingdom with certain goods on board, and a conviction under this act merely stated that a vessel was found hovering, &c., but omitted to add, without any lawful excuse, or words to that effect; the conviction was held bad, though it pursued the general form given by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 110 (repealed by 6 Geo. IV. c. 105), for a vessel may be hovering for an innocent purpose, as for a pilot or by distress of weather, and the hovering contemplated by the act is hovering with power to proceed on the voyage and without any sufficient cause for not doing so. (Ex parte Hawkins, 2 B. & C. 31; 3 D. & R. 209, S. C.; and see 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 11.)

In R. v. Jarvis (1 Burr. 154; 1 East, 647, n.) Mr. J. Denison said, "that it is not always sufficient to pursue the words of the statute; it may be necessary to go farther." It was so determined in R. v. Chapman, (Say. 203,) upon a conviction of a person for robbing an orchard; which the Court held not sufficient, but it ought to have appeared of what, and how the orchard was robbed, that they might judge whether it were a robbery within the meaning of stat. 43 Eliz. c. 7.

And when a statute, in describing an offence, makes use of general terms which will include a variety of circumstances, it is not enough that the information should follow the very words of the statute, but it is necessary to state what particular fact prohibited has been committed, or what particular fact enjoined has been omitted. (Paley, 102; R. v. James, Cald. 458, there cited; R. v. Perrott, 3 M. & Sel. 379.)

It would seem that a conviction under the 9 Geo. IV. c. 69, s. 1, ought to state that the defendant entered or was in the close for the purpose of taking game there, and it is not sufficient to follow the words of the statute. (Re Fletcher, 13 Law J. N. S. Mag. Ca. 16.)

When sufficient to follow the words of statute alone.

But in cases where the quality of the offence is not of a complicated nature, but consists of a simple fact, it is sufficient to use the words of the statute. Thus one objection to the manner of stating the offence in R. v. Speed, cited

Carth. 502, for killing deer, in 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 10 (repealed by 16 Geo. III. c. 30), was, that it was too generally laid in the circumstance of killing; for it was only said unam damam, Anglicè, one fallow deer, without saying buck, doe or fawn; quod illicitè occidit, without showing how, whether by gun, bow or net, &c. The objection, however, was overruled. The manner of killing, it was held, need not be specially shown, because according to Holt, C. J., the killing or not is the material part. (Paley, 78.)

1. The Information before Conviction.

So where the statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 103, s. 3 (now repealed by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 50), enacted that vessels of a certain description found in certain situations, having "in any manner attached thereto" casks of a certain description, should be forfeited, and the persons found on board should be subject to be convicted in certain penalties, a conviction stated that A. B. was convicted of having been found on board a vessel liable to forfeiture; "for that it was found, &c., having in a certain manner attached thereto divers, to wit, twenty casks, &c." And it was held that this averment was good, for the statute spoke of casks in any manner attached to the vessel; so that the manner of attaching them formed no part of the offence. (Ex parte Pain, 5 B. & Cres. 251; 7 D. & R. 678, S. C.)

Again, where a conviction following the very words of the 17 Geo. II. c. 5 (repealed by stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 40), stated that a party having been brought before a magistrate on an information charging him with having unlawfully returned without a certificate to a parish from which he had been removed, and that upon that occasion he confessed himself guilty; it was held that this conviction was good on the face of it, and that it was not necessary to state in it expressly being an act of vagrancy, it being for the party convicted to show in his defence that he did not return in a state of pauperism. (Mann v. Davers, 3 B. & Ald. 103.)

So a conviction on the statute of 17 Geo. III. c. 56, stated that A. B. was convicted before the magistrates, upon the oath of T. J., a credible witness, of having in his possession in his dwelling-house certain materials used in the woollen manufacture, suspected to be embezzled and purloined, to wit, &c., he not producing the party from whom he bought the same, or giving a satisfactory account, and then going on to adjudicate, was good. (Davis v. Nest, 6 Carr. & P. 167.)

Scienter.

If the knowledge of the party is mentioned by the statute as an ingredient of the offence, nothing short of a direct averment to that effect is sufficient, unless indeed equivalent words are used. The words "unlawfully, fraudulently, and against the form of the statute," are not equivalent to "knowingly." (R. v. Jukes, 8 T. R. 536; Paley, 88.) In a case, however, upon a conviction against a carrier for having game in his possession contrary to the 5 Anne, c. 14, s. 2, (now repealed by the 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 32,) it was considered the scienter need not be alleged, the word "knowingly" not being used in the statute. (R. v. Marsh, 4 D. & R. 260; 2 D. & R. M. C. 182; 2 B. & Cres. 720, S. C.)

It was there said, that if the word "knowingly" had been in the statute, undoubtedly "knowledge" must have been averred in the information, and some evidence must have been given on the part of the informer to show that the act complained of was committed with the defendant's privity. But in the case before the court no averment or evidence to that effect was necessary. It was quite enough for the informer to prove that the defendant, being a carrier, had, in the language of the act, "in his custody or possession" the things prohibited. After such proof, it was for the defendant to show such a degree of ignorance as would excuse him, but that was to come by way of defence.

A conviction under the Pilot Act (6 Geo. IV. c. 125,) for continuing in charge of a ship after a licensed pilot had offered to take charge, must show on the face of it that the offer was made to, or in the presence of, or came to the knowledge of, the party convicted; and that he was the person in charge of the vessel when the offer was made. (Chaney v. Payne, 1 A. & E. N. S. 712.)

A conviction under the 11 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 4, for aiding and assisting a tenant in fraudulently conveying away goods to avoid a distress for rent,

1. The Information before Conviction.

must expressly allege the offence to have been committed "wilfully and knowingly." (Reg. v. Radnorshire JJ. 9 Dowl. 90.)

By 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 97, "if any overseer, &c. shall purloin, embezzle, or wilfully waste or misapply any of the monies, &c. belonging to any parish, &c., every such offender shall, upon conviction before any two justices, forfeit for every such offence any sum not exceeding 20*l.*" &c.: it was held, that an information against a parish officer under this statute for "misapplying," without the word "wilfully," was bad. (Carpenter v. Mason, 4 Per. & D. 439; 12 Ad. & Ell. 629, S. C.)

Negativing exceptions in statute.

Negativing Exceptions in Statute.]—It has been said, "that a conviction on a penal statute ought expressly to show that the defendant is not within any of its provisoes; for," continues the author, "since no plea can be admitted to such a conviction, and the defendant can have no remedy against it, but from an exception to some defect appearing in the face of it, and all the proceedings are in a summary manner, it is but reasonable that such a conviction should have the highest certainty, and satisfy the Court that the defendant had no such matter in his favour as the statute itself allows him to plead." (2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 113.) But this is to be understood with the following limitation, that where the enacting clause of a statute constitutes an act to be an offence under certain circumstances, and not under others, there, as the act is an offence only sub modo, the particular exceptions must be expressly specified and negatived; but where a statute constitutes an act to be an offence generally, and in a subsequent clause makes a proviso or exception in favour of particular cases, or in the same clause, but not in the enacting part of it, by words of reference or otherwise, makes such proviso or exception, there the proviso is a matter of defence or excuse, which need not be noticed in the information. (See R. v. Ford, 1 Stra. 555; R. v. Bryan, 2 Id. 1101; R. v. Jukes, 8 T. R. 542; Speires v. Parker, 1 T. R. 144, 145; Steel v. Smith, 1 B. & Ald. 94; R. v. Smith, 5 M. & Sel. 103; Cathcart v. Hardy, 2 M. & Sel. 539.)

So where negatives are descriptive of the offence, they must be set forth: for what comes by way of proviso in a statute must be insisted on by way of defence by the party accused; but where exceptions are in the enacting part of a law, it must appear in the charge that the defendant does not fall within any of them. (R. v. Jarvis, 1 East, 646, 647, n.)

Thus the case of R. v. Clarke (1 Cowp. 35), was a conviction on stat. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 9, s. 16, against playing at bowls; and the Court quashed the conviction, because it was not alleged in the information that the playing at bowls was out of the defendant's own orchard, and it is only unlawful sub modo.

So in the case of informations on the now repealed stat. 5 Ann. c. 14, s. 4, for killing game, in which it was necessary to state and negative all the qualifications enumerated in stat. 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 25. (See R. v. Marriott, 1 Stra. 66; R. v. Hill, 2 Ld. Raym. 1415; R. v. James, 1 Burr. 148; Hebden v. Bluff, 1 Chit. Rep. 607, n.) And this was so necessary, that if the qualifications mentioned in stat. 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 25, were not set out and negatived in these informations, their being negatived by the evidence would not supply the defect. (R. v. Wheatman, Dougl. 346.)

On the other hand the exception in 12 Geo. III. c. 61, s. 11, of mills then used for making gunpowder, &c. does not apply to the limits first mentioned in that clause, but only "to the other parts of Great Britain" not within those limits; and therefore an information charging the keeping more than the allowed quantity of gunpowder within the specified limits, need not negative this exception; and to negative the exception would be impertinent; and where it relates only to another part of Great Britain within which the gunpowder was not kept, would be repugnant and contradictory. (R. v. Matters, 1 B. & Ald. 362; and see R. v. Arnold, 5 T. R. 358; Nolan, 282.)

If a subsequent statute make any exception to a former one, it is incumbent on the defendant to show by way of defence that he comes within such exception; and when the prosecutor is not obliged to negative the exceptions in a statute, and he negatives some of them only, that part of the information will be rejected as surplusage. (R. v. Hall, 1 T. R. 320.)

1. The Information before Conviction.

The omitting to negative the exception when necessary is not aided by a proviso in the statute, that "no conviction for any offence in the act shall be set aside for want of form, or through the mistake of any fact, circumstance, or other matter, provided the material facts alleged were proved;" for this in effect requires all material facts to be alleged; and it is a material fact that the defendant did not come within the exception in the enacting clause. The defect is not of form but of substance. (See R. v. Jukes, 8 T. R. 542.)

Statement of statute itself.

Statement of Statute itself.]—There is no necessity to state any public statute, the justices being bound ex officio to notice it. But a private statute must be set out in its parts relating to the offence. If the statute be described, a substantial variance in the statement of it would be fatal. (See 2 Hawk. c. 26, s. 10, 104.)

A statute passed in a session of parliament begun in the second and continued in the third year of a king's reign, must not be stated as passed in the 2d & 3rd years of the reign. (R. v. Biers, 1 Ad. & Ell. 327.)

The description of an act in a conviction as having passed in the 25th year of the king's reign, when in fact the parliament in which the act was passed was continued by protogation from the 24th to the 25th year of the reign, is not a misdescription, or ground of objection. (R. v. Windsor, 2 Chit. Rep. 513.) A conviction is not vitiated by the omission of the word "part" before the words "of Great Britain" in the title of a statute, as directed in the form given by the act. (Nixon v. Nanney, 1 Gale & D. 370)

See further as to the statement of statutes, title "Indictment," Vol III. p. 891.

Presumptions of law.

Facts ex officio noticed.

Matters of defence.

Matters which need not be stated.]—Presumptions of law need not in general be stated; nor need facts ex officio taken notice of by all courts and justices. (See "Indictment," Vol. III. p. 866.)

Matters of defence, or facts more peculiarly in the defendant's own knowledge, need not in general be stated. (Id. 411; Fawcett v. Fowlis, 7 B. & Cres. 394; 1 Man. & R. 102.)

Conclusions of law.

Conclusions of law, resulting from the facts, need not be stated, and are best omitted. Indeed, if stated alone without the facts, the information would be bad. (See "Indictment," Vol. III p. 867.)

Matters of evidence.

Mere matters of evidence need not be stated. (Id. 867.)

Technical words.

Technical Words, &c.]—Words and matters of form must be as strictly observed in informations and convictions as in indictments. (See per Cur. Ex parte Pain, 5 B. & Cres. 251, 7 D. & R. 678, S. C.) But there is no rule that other words shall be employed in the conviction than such as are in ordinary use. And many of the technical phrases which may be requisite in indictments are not so in convictions, although it has been said that more particularity is required in convictions than in indictments. (See R. v. Chandler, 1 Ld. Raym. 581; R. v. Green, 1 Cald. 391.) The fact need not be charged "against the peace of the queen." (R. v. Chandler, 1 Ld. Raym. 581.) Neither is the omission of the word "unlawfully" (R. v. Chipp, 11 Stra. 711), or "knowingly" (R. v. Marsh, 4 D. & R. 260; 2 B. & C. 717; 3 D. & R. M. C. 182, S. C.), any objection, unless used in the act as part of the description of the offence, in which case they must be used. (Id.; Carpenter v. Mason, ante, 969; R. v. Speed, 1 Ld. Raym. 538. See "Indictment," Vol. III. p 896.)

General epithets, as "duly," &c.

General Epithets.]—If the charge falls short of the necessary legal description of the offence, the omission is not cured by any allegations of its being done "unlawfully," or "fraudulently," or the like, or by stating that it was against the form of the statute (R. v. Jukes, 8 T. R. 536; R. v. Jarvis, 1 Burr. 148); for the last allegation is no more than a legal inference, which must be supported by the previous allegation. (Anon. Dyer, 363; Colborne

1. The Information before Conviction.

v. Stockdale, 1 Stra. 493; and see Exparte Aldridge, 4 D. & R. 84; 2 B. & C. 600, S. C.) So the word "duly" is of no avail. (See somes case collected 1 Chit. Pl. 4th edit. 216, 233; and post, "Indictment," Vol. III. p. 896.)

Written instruments.

Written Instruments.]—The mode of stating written instruments will be found pointed out under title "Indictment," Vol. III. p. 893.) See the case of R. v. Meld, 6 East, 417, where the conviction was quashed for not setting out a written agreement.)

Chattels, monies, &c.

Chattels, Monies, &c.]—Personal chattels should be described specifically by the names usually appropriated to them. As to the mode of such description, see "Indictment," Vol. III. p. 894. If an article has obtained, in common parlance, a particular name of its own, it would be wrong to describe it by the name of the material of which it is composed; thus, it would be a misdescription to describe cloth as so many pounds weight of wool, or sovereigns as so many ounces of gold. (Reg. v. Mansfield, 1 Car. & M. 140.) A conviction for hawking goods without a license must specify the goods that were sold. (R. v. Selway, 2 Chit. Rep. 522; and see Chance v. Adams, 1 Ld. Raym. 77; R. v. Gibbs, 1 Stra. 497; R. v. Gilbert, 1 East, 583.) But where the description of goods is not in any way material to the offence, they need not be specified. Thus in R. v. Rabbits (6 D. & R. 341; 3 D. & R. M. C. 269), it was held, that an order and adjudication on the 11 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 4, for fraudulently and clandestinely removing goods to avoid a distress need not specify the goods.

Quantity and value.

Quantity, Value, &c.]—The information should specify a particular value or quantity where any thing turns upon.

The value or quantity of the chattels, &c. is more especially necessary to be shown in cases where it is the measure of the penalty or damages to be given by the justice. Thus a conviction upon stat. 43 Eliz. c. 7, s. 1, (now repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27), against cutting of trees, &c., was questioned for not mentioning the number of trees cut, being the measure of the damages to be given in that case. (Q. v. Burnaby, 2 Ld. Raym. 900; 1 Salk. 181, S. C.)

In an information on the 5 Geo. III. c. 14 (repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27, s.1), for taking and destroying fish, it should have stated the number or quantity of fish taken, killed, or destroyed. (R. v. Marshall, 2 Keb. 594. See the 34th section of the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27; and post, "Fish," Vol. III. p. 51.)

But it is sufficient if the conviction be for swearing 150 oaths in these words, viz. (specifying the words once) without repeating each 150 times. (R. v. Roberts, 1 Stra. 608.) Thus in the case of swearing, before the legislature, by stat. 19 Geo. II. c. 21, had directed a summary form of words for the conviction, it was required not only to set forth that the person had cursed or sworn in general, but the particular oaths and curses were to be set forth, that the court might judge thereupon whether they were indeed oaths and curses or not. (R. v. Sparling, 1 Stra. 497; R. v. Popplewell, 1 Stra. 686; R. v. Chaveney, 2 Ld. Raym. 1368.)

A conviction for buying a certain quantity of wheat, to wit, 15 bushels of wheat (contrary to 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 12) has been held sufficiently certain. (R. v. Arnold, 5 T. R. 353.)

Although it may be essential to specify the number, quality, and value of chattels, &c. it does not appear absolutely requisite to prove the precise number and quantity stated.

See further, "Indictment," Vol. III. p. 894.

Statement of offence being against the statute.

Conclusion against Statute.]—In analogy to indictments for offences created by statute, it is, it should seem, absolutely requisite that the information and conviction should state that the offence was against the form of the statute, which is usually done after stating the offence by the following words, "against the form of the statute in such case made and provided." (See the cases and law fully collected, "Indictment," Vol. III. p. 838; sed vide R. v. Swallow, 8 T. R. 284; Chit. C. L. 2d. edit. 196.) 1. The Information before Conviction.

Where one statute is relative to another, as where one creates the offence and the other the penalty, the information and conviction should conclude against the form of the statutes. (See id.)

Construction of, in general.]—As to the general rules for construing the information, see post, 986, 987. Construction of information.

Defects in.]—If the information be incorrect in any of the above particulars, the magistrate may dismiss the complaint, and should do so. Defects in information.

The misstatement or omission of any material averment in the information is not cured by any statement in the evidence specified in the conviction, for the defendant can be convicted only of the charge in the information; and that must be sufficient to support the conviction, the evidence being held to prove only, and not supply the defects in the information. (R. v. Wheatmain, Dougl. 232.) In R. v. Denman (1 Chit. Rep. 155), Holroyd, J. said, "it is a rule with respect to summary proceedings before justices in penal statutes, that after a conviction nothing can be intended so as to get rid of any defect in point of form. Every thing necessary to support the conviction must appear on the face of the proceedings, and must be established by regular proof, or by the admission of the party of that which is proved."

See further as to what defects in information and conviction are cured, post, 1000.

The 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 20 (see title "Indictment," Vol. III. p. 900), does not, it seems, apply to informations before justices out of sessions. (See Davies v. Bint, 5 D. & R. 353; 3 B. & Cres. 586, S. C.)

II. The Summons or Warrant of Apprehension.

Summons.]—When the information is laid, if the justice or justices think it sufficient, and that they have jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the complaint, and see cause for calling upon the party complained of for an answer to it, it is their duty to issue a summons. Summons.

It is absolutely requisite in all cases, unless where the legislature has in express terms dispensed therewith, that the defendant should be summoned, in order that he may have an opportunity of being heard and making his defence. (R. v. Allington, 2 Stra. 678; R. v. Benn, 6 T. R. 198; R. v. Columins, 8 D. & R. 344; per Bayley, J. in Child v. Capel, 2 C. & J. 579; R. v. Hall, 6 D. & R. 84; R. v. Justices of Stafford, 5 Nev. & M. 94; 1 H. & W. 328, S. C.; Painter v. Liverpool Gas Company, 3 Ad. & Ell. 433; 11 Coke's Rep. 99.) This is but natural justice, and if a magistrate should proceed againt a person without summoning or hearing him, he would be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable either by information or indictment. (R. v. Allington, 2 Stra. 678; R. v. Venables, 2 Ld. Raym. 1406; 2 Stra. 630; R. v. Constable, 7 D. & R. 663.) And an action might be supported against him. (See Mason v. Barker, 1 Car. & Kir. 100.) Where necessary.

If, indeed, the defendant appear and be present during the hearing of the information against him, and have a full opportunity of being heard, and do not ask for further time for the hearing of it, he may be convicted without a summons. (See R. v. Stone, 1 East, 649; R. v. Johnson, 1 Stra. 261; Reg. v. Barrett, 1 Salk. 383; R. v. Aiken, 3 Burr. 1785.)

In the case of orders, also, a summons is in general requisite, though it need not in general be stated on the face of the order to have been issued. (Paley, 125; R. v. Wilson, 5 N. & M. 164; see "Order," Vol. V.) But in some cases the order may be made ex parte, as in the case of binding out a poor child as a parish apprentice. (See ante, 214.)

By the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, s. 2 (ante, 962), one justice may receive the information and issue a summons in cases where the hearing and conviction must be by two or more justices. One justice may issue it.

2. The Summons or Warrant.

They might be compelled by mandamus to issue it, and to hear the case, if there be no reasonable doubt of the sufficiency of the information and of their having jurisdiction. (See R. v. Benn, 6 T. R. 195; R. v. Buckinghamshire (Justices), 5 B. & Cres. 485; 2 D. & Ry. 689; S. C. ante, 963; and title "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1025.)

Mandamus to issue.

Form of.

Where a particular form of summons is required by the statute, the same must be adopted. (R. v. Croke, Cowp. 30.) In general it may be directed either to the offender, requiring him to appear, or to a constable or some third person, requiring him to summon the offender.

It is usually directed to the constable of the district in which the party accused is to be found, and he might be punished for not executing it.

It should state the substance of the charge laid against the defendant.

Time allowed and day for appearance.

It should name a day and time for the defendant's appearance. Natural justice requires that the defendant should have a reasonable time allowed him for making his defence. A conviction upon default of appearance, where the summons was to appear immediately upon the receipt of it, was held bad. (R. v. Mallinson, 2 Burr. 679.) In R. v. Johnson, the defendant was convicted for keeping a gun to kill game, not being qualified. It was objected that there was not a reasonable summons; for it was made to appear the same day, which might be impossible upon account of the distance, or the summons being served late; and his witnesses might not be got together on so short a warning; then it was to appear at the parish aforesaid, whereas there were two parishes mentioned before; so that the man might have gone to one, whilst they were convicting him at the other. It was answered that the defendant appeared at the time, and made defence; so that cures all defects in the summons; and by the Court, the answer is right. (1 Strange, 261.)

In some cases the statute expressly requires a particular time to be allowed in the summons for the defendant's appearance; and care must be taken in such case that the summons comply with the act, and that it does not name too early a day. (Mitchell v. Foster, 12 Ad. & Ell. 472; 4 P. & D. 150; 9 Dowl. 527, S. C.)

It must not require the defendant to appear on an impossible day. In Reg. v. Dyer (1 Salk 181), it was stated that the defendant was summoned to appear, and did appear on Tuesday, the 17th of April, 1802, &c. The 17th of April fell on a Friday, not Tuesday; and it being objected that the time of the summons being impossible, it was the same as if there had been no summons; the Court quashed the conviction, saying, "there could be no such day, and, therefore, he could not appear thereupon; and when the day is not set forth, his appearance on another cannot be intended." (See R. v. Picton, 2 East, 196; post, 990.)

Before whom to appear.

Where a statute authorises a justice to summon a party to appear before him, not adding the words "any other justice," the matter must be heard by the justice to whom the information or complaint was made. (Jones v. Gurdon, 11 Law J., N S., M. C. 45; 2 Gale & D. 133, S. C.)

Place of appearance.

The summons should name a certain place for the defendant's appearance. (R. v. Simpson, 1 Stra. 46.)

Date.

It must not bear date on a day earlier than that on which the information was laid. (R. v. Kent, 2 Ld. Raym. 1546.)

Signature of justice, &c.

It should be signed by the justice by whom it is issued. (R. v. Stevenson, 2 East, 365.)

Service of.

In general it is necessary that the service of the summons should be on the person of the defendant, unless where personal service is dispensed with, as is sometimes the case by statute; or by defendant's appearance. (R. v. Hall, 6 D. & R. 84; 3 D. & R. M. C. 19; R. v. Colmins, 8 D. & R. 344; Paley, 36.) Lord C. J. Parker was of opinion (Reg. v. Simpson, 10 Mod. 245), (and the provisions specially introduced into many acts of parliament, to make a service at the dwelling-house sufficient, seem to justify the inference,) that the law in other cases is understood to require a service upon the person. (And see per Bayley, J. in R. v. Hall, 6 D. & Ry. 84.)

Where the summons is directed to the constable or a third person, a copy of it plainly and legibly written on paper should be served personally upon the party accused. If directed to the party himself, the original should be personally served upon him, and a copy of it kept by the party serving it. (1 Burn's J. 27th ed. 689, n.)

2. The Summons or Warrant.

Several statutes expressly direct that a service of the summons at the defendant's dwelling-house shall suffice. In these and the like cases, leaving a copy at the house is sufficient (R. v. Chandler, 14 East, 268); and the delivery may be to a person on the premises apparently residing there as a servant. (Id.; and see R. v. Clement, 4 B. & Ald. 218.)

The Larceny Act, 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 65 (see "Larceny," Vol. III.); the Malicious Injuries to the Person Act, 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 33 (see "Malicious Injuries to the Person," Vol. V.); the Malicious Trespass Act, 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 30 (see "Malicious Injuries to Property," Vol. V.); point out a mode of compelling the appearance of persons charged with offences thereunder.

As to the service of the summons in boroughs, as pointed out by the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 127, see "Corporations," Vol. II. p. 117.

Consequences of defect.

If no summons be issued, or if it be defective in any of these particulars, or be not duly served, the party commits no default by not appearing, and the magistrate cannot proceed in the defendant's absence; and if he did so proceed, knowing of the defect, he would make himself liable to an information or indictment. (R. v. Simpson, 1 Stra. 44; R. v. Venables, 2 Ld. Raym. 1407; R. v. Allington, 1 Stra. 678; Paley, 21.) And if the defect appeared on the face of the conviction, the magistrate would be liable to an action for any act done under that conviction. (See Mitchell v. Forster, 12 Ad. & Ell. 72; 4 P. & D. 150; 9 Dowl. 527, S. C.)

If the defendant appears and pleads, and makes a defence, he cannot afterwards take any advantage of the want of a summons, or of a defective one, or defective service. (Ante, 975.)

Statement of in conviction.

As to the mode of stating the summons in the conviction, see post, 989.

Warrant.

Warrant of Apprehension.]—Wherever a statute gives to a justice a jurisdiction over an offence amounting to a breach of the peace, or a power to require any person to do a certain thing ordained by such statute, it impliedly gives a power to such justice to make out a warrant to bring before him any person accused of such offence or compellable to do any thing ordained by such statute; for it cannot but be intended that a statute giving a person jurisdiction over an offence, doth mean also to give him the powers incident to all courts of compelling the party to come before him. (2 Hawk. c. 13, s. 15; 12 Rep. 131 b; R. v. Simpson, 10 Mod. 248; Bane v. Methuen, 2 Bing. 63; 9 Moore, 161, S. C.

Power to issue when implied.

Not so in penal informations.

But for offences merely arising by penal statutes and not connected with any breach of the peace, a justice has no authority, as necessarily incident to the cognizance of the offence, to apprehend the accused in the first instance, or even after a summons and default, but can only summon him to attend, and in default of his appearance proceed ex parte. (R. v. Simpson, 10 Mod. 341; 1 Stra. 44; Paley, 38.)

Sometime statute authorises a warrant in first instance.

In a variety of cases, where there may be reason to apprehend, from the nature of the offence, or the probable description of the offender, that the object of the prosecution would be defeated by giving him notice, the legislature has thought proper, in express terms, to arm the magistrate with authority to issue a warrant immediately upon the information which, in these cases, is generally directed to be taken upon oath. (Paley, 37.) And it seems to have been considered as a common law doctrine, that as a warrant deprives a man of his liberty, a summons ought only to issue and not a warrant without information on oath. (2 Barnard. 34, 77, 101.)

The warrant should be on information on oath.

Some statutes, indeed, in general terms direct the magistrate to cause the defendant to be brought before him; and this implies, it would seem, an authority in him to issue the compulsory process of a warrant.

Proper in general to issue a summons in first instance.

Even where a statute authorises the issuing a warrant upon complaint, yet if it be for a penalty, or the non-payment of money, the magistrate had better in general issue a summons in the first instance, before he grants a warrant, unless it is probable the party will abscond as soon as he hears of the complaint against him, or the object of the prosecution would otherwise be defeated by a mere summons. It is more reasonable that a summons should in such a case be issued in the first instance. (R. v. Martyr, 13 East, 61; R. v. Justices of Stafford, 3 Adol. & E. 426.)

2. The Summons or Warrant.

Form of warrant. How long in force.

As to the form of the warrant, see "Warrant," Vol. VI. It is not in general made returnable at any particular time, but remains in force until executed. (Dickenson v. Brown, Peake, 234)

III. Of the Hearing of the Charge, and Proceedings at.

Before whom to take place.

Before whom to take place.]—The jurisdiction of justices of the peace in general, as it regards the place where the offence was committed, the time of the offence, and its nature, will be noticed hereafter under title "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1000 to 1007; and see the various titles of offence throughout the work.

Where a statute authorises a justice to summon a party to appear before him, not adding the words "or any other justice," the complaint must be heard by the justice to whom the information or complaint was made. (Jones v. Gurdon, 11 Law J. N. S. Mag. Ca. 45; 2 Gale & D. 133, S. C.)

Whether the conviction should take place before one or more justices, depends entirely on the statute giving cognizance of the offence. If the statute allow one justice to convict, the conviction may be by two or more; but where the statute requires the conviction to be by two justices, a conviction by one would be coram non judice, and void, and the justice making the conviction, and the constable executing it, would be liable to an action of trespass, if the party's goods were distrained upon, or himself committed. (See "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1008.)

Appearance or default.

Appearance or Default.]—The defendant either appears or makes default. Upon the accused party's appearing before the justice, either in obedience to the summons, or upon being apprehended and brought there under a warrant, or where, after personal service of the summons, the party does not attend at the time and place appointed by it, and oath is duly made of the service, the justice then proceeds to the hearing of the case.

In the summons it is usual, and upon many accounts convenient, to fix not only a day, but a particular time of the day, for the appearance of the party; but if he appear at the time, and the justices shall not attend, he is not to go away, but must wait during the remaining part of the day, for many things may happen to hinder the justice's immediate attendance.

Where the defendant neglects to appear upon the summons, the statute creating the offence frequently directs the magistrate to issue a warrant for his apprehension. (12 Rep. 130; 2 Hawk. c. 13, s. 15; Bane v. Methuen, 2 Bing. 63.) The justice may, if he thinks proper, proceed ex parte against the defendant, without issuing any warrant for his apprehension. (Reg. v. Simpson, 10 Mod. 379; 1 Stra. 44, S. C.)

If the defendant appears, the information (if one have been drawn up in form) is first read to the defendant; or if no information have been drawn up, then the charge is read to him from the summons or warrant: and he is asked what he has to say to the charge thus made against him. Such information must be read or stated to defendant, who should be apprized of the charge against him, and put to plead thereto. (Per Grose, J., R. v. Thompson, 2 T. R. 23.) After this the defendant either confesses the charge or denies it, and makes defence immediately, or prays time.

By his appearance, and entering on his defence, he cures any defect or irregularity in the summons, or even the want of a summons altogether; except perhaps in a case where a special form of summons is required by the act which is not complied with. (Ante, 977.)

The non-attendance of the party does not, it seems, authorise a judgment against him without a due examination of the facts, with the same formality as if he were present and made defence. (R. v. Simpson, 10 Mod. 381.)

3. Of the Hearing and Proceedings.

Confession of charge.

Confession of Charge.]—If the defendant confess charge, it is needless to go into the proof of it, the justice then, after taking a formal minute of such confession, passes judgment, and imposes the penalty or punishment. It has been determined, that though the act only empowers the justices to convict upon the oath of one or more witnesses, this implies a power to convict upon the confession of the party alone. (R. v. Gage, 1 Stra. 546; 1 Saund. 262, n. 1.) As the confession supplies the want of evidence, so it cures any objection to the manner of taking the depositions; such, for instance, as that they were not made in the presence of the defendant. (R. v. Hall, 1 T. R. 320; Mann v. Davers, 3 B. & Ald. 103.) But the general rule, that if the defendant confess the offence, it is needless to go into the proof of it, is to be understood of a confession to the full extent of a good and sufficient information; for where either the confession does not come up to the charge in the information, or is made upon an insufficient information, it will not supply the want of evidence in the one case, or of a sufficient charge in the other. Thus, in R. v. Little (1 Burr. 613), confession by the defendant of a single fact of offering to sell silk handkerchiefs without a license, was holden not sufficient to convict him of a trading as a hawker, pedlar or petty chapman, without license; because a single act of selling a parcel of silk handkerchiefs to a particular person is not a proof that he was such hawker, pedlar or petty chapman, as ought to have taken out a license. Conviction quashed. (And see R. v. Smith, 3 Burr. 1475; R. v. Corden, 4 Burr. 2279.)

Denial of the charge.

Denial of Charge, or saying nothing.]—If the defendant denies the charge, the next step is to substantiate the charge by testimony. For this purpose the prosecutor or informer must produce his witnesses to prove the facts alleged, and after that, if the defendant appear, he may produce witnesses for the defence.

Saying nothing.

If the defendant says nothing, or refuses to enter upon any defence, still the charge must be substantiated the same as if he denied it. (See R. v. Crowther, 1 T. R. 127; R. v. Bennell, 6 T. R. 75.)

Adjournment.

Adjournment.]—If the defendant denies the charge, and requires time for his defence, and to produce his evidence, it is reasonable, and the law seems to require that the party should be allowed a proper interval for that purpose; (see R. v. Stone, 1 East, 469; Paley, 40;) and the hearing may, either upon the application of the defendant, or for any other cause, if the justice thinks fit, be adjourned to a subsequent day; taking care not to exceed the time (if any) limited by the act for making the conviction. (R. v. Folley, 3 East, 467; R. v. Bellamy, 1 B. & C. 500; 2 D. & R. 727, S. C.; and see ante, 961.)

Time of making conviction.

Right to have counsel, presence of third persons, &c.

Defence by Counsel, &c.—Presence of Third Persons.]—A magistrate, when hearing a case of summary conviction, is exercising a judicial authority, and therefore must be regarded as holding a court of justice for that purpose. And it is one of the essential qualities of a court of justice that its proceedings should be public, and all parties who may be desirous of hearing what is going on have a right to be present, if there be room in the place for the purpose, provided they do not interrupt the proceedings, and provided there is no specific reason why they should be removed. This appears fully settled by the case of Daubney v. Cooper, (10 B. & Cres. 237,) where it was held, that the proceedings against a party in a summary manner, under the 5 Ann. c. 14, for keeping and using a gun to destroy game, is of a judicial nature, at which all persons have a primâ facie right to be present; and, therefore, in that case, where a magistrate had, without any specific reason, caused a party, who claimed a right to be present, to be removed from a justice-room, where such a proceeding was going on, it was held that he was liable to an action of trespass.

6 & 7 Will 4, c. 114.

But until the recent statute of 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 114, s. 2, no person, whether counsel or attorney, or not, was entitled as of right to attend to take part in the proceedings on a summary conviction as an advocate, by examining the witnesses or expounding the law; and the allowance of such persons to interfere was purely in the discretion of the magistrate, who, like any other judge, must have the power to regulate the proceedings of his own Court. (See "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1012.) By that enactment, however, it is declared and enacted, "That in all cases of summary conviction persons accused shall be admitted to make their full answer and defence, and to have all witnesses examined and cross-examined by counsel or attorney." It will be seen that this enactment only extends the privilege to counsel and attornies.

3. Of the Hearing and Proceedings.

Even before the enactment any one might attend as a friend of either party and take notes, and quietly make suggestions and give advice; but not take part in the proceedings without leave of the magistrate. (Collier v. Hicks, 2 B. & Adol. 663.)

As to the right of parties to have legal advisers present to assist them on other occasions than on the hearing of cases to be decided by summary conviction, see "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1012.

Evidence to support the charge.

Evidence to support the Charge.]—The evidence must fully establish the offence with which the defendant is charged; as it regards the time when it was committed, the place where it was committed, (R. v. Highmore, 2 Ld. Raym. 1220; R. v. Jefferies, 1 T. R. 241; R. v. Hazell, 13 East, 139; R. v. Chandler, id. 267,) and every fact and circumstance necessarily constituting the offence: for if any one of these be not proved, or cannot fairly be presumed from other facts or circumstances which have been proved, the defendant should not be convicted. Where the facts constituting an offence are all of a positive nature, there can be no doubt that they must be established in proof by the prosecutor, before any judgment of conviction can be pronounced; but with regard to such offences as are made penal only by the want of certain qualifications in the offender, or by the absence of several exculpatory circumstances, a difficulty will sometimes occur in determining the degree of negative proof which ought to be required by the magistrate. (Paley, 50, 53; R. v. Turner, 5 M. & Sel. 206.) It may be taken as a general rule, that the affirmative is to be proved, and not the negative, of any fact which is stated, unless under particular circumstances, where the general rule does not apply; for where the fact lies peculiarly within the knowledge of one party, it is easy for him to prove it, but often impossible for the other. Therefore, notwithstanding a negative averment must be made by the prosecutor, the affirmative, if it affords a justification to the party charged, must be proved by him as a defence. And in a case where the defendant was charged with selling ale without a license, it was held that the onus of proving defendant was licensed lay upon him. (R. v. Hanson, Paley, 53; R. v. Neville, 1 B. & Ad. 489.) It would, however, be a prudent, and not unreasonable course, for the magistrate in all cases of this description to require some general primâ facie evidence on the part of the informer in support of the negative allegation. (Id. 51.) The defendant's own representations or admissions afford a legitimate and strong ground for supporting such allegation; and it has been decided that justices, before whom an information was exhibited on the game laws, were justified in founding the want of the defendant's qualification upon the fact of his having sworn before them, acting in another capacity, as commissioners of the income tax, to an estate under 100*l.* a year. (R. v. Clark, 8 T. R. 120.) It is clear that in all cases where the exceptions come by way of proviso in a separate clause or act from that which describes the offence, and without reference in the enacting clause incorporating them therewith, the defendant must bring himself by proof within the proviso by which he seeks to protect himself. (R. v. Jervis, 1 East, 647, 650; R. v. Bryan, 2 Stra. 1101; R. v. Neville, 1 B. & Adol. 489.)

The justice cannot be required to hear evidence which ought not to affect his decision in the matter before him. (R. v. Minshull, 1 N. & M. 277.)

The defence.

The Defence.]—After hearing all the evidence in support of the charge, the defendant should be called upon for his defence; and the magistrate is bound to hear the evidence tendered by him.

That he acted under a claim of right.

Besides protesting against and commenting on the validity or effect of the evidence tendered against him, the accused may defend himself by proving that he is within some provisio or exception which excuses or qualifies the fact charged, or that the act complained of was done under an asserted authority, or pursuant to a boná fide claim of right of property; for where the title to property comes in question, the exercise of a summary jurisdiction by justices of the peace is generally ousted. (R. v. Burnaby, 1 Salk. 181; 3 Salk. 217; 2 Ld. Raym. 900, S. C.) This principle is not in general founded upon any legislative provision, but is a qualification which the law itself raises in the execution of penal statutes, and is always implied in their construction. (See Paley, 48, 49.) Some statutes, for instance the statute 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 24, (relative to malicious injuries to property,) expressly excepts offences done under a boná fide claim of right. (See title "Malicious Injuries to Property," Vol. V. p. 44; and see the Game Act, 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 32, s. 35; title "Game," Vol. III. p. 252.)

3. Of the Hearing and Proceedings.

In these cases it is sufficient to stop the summary interference of the justice, that even a colour of title appears to be in question, and that the act was really done under an assertion of that supposed title, however weak the claim may appear to be. (Paley, 55.) Thus it has been held, that the act of killing fish in a private fishery after notice given to the owner that it was done to try the right to the place in question, did not subject the party to penalties under 5 Geo. III. c. 14, s. 4, (repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27,) although the same title had before been tried and determined by a verdict against the party now claiming it, the act of parliament having expressly excepted persons who have a just right or claim. (Kinnersley v. Orpe, Dougl. 500; see Hunt v. Andrews, 3 B. & Ald. 341; R. v. Hampshire, 3 Dowl. 47.) The rule, however, ought not to be so extended as to enable an offender to arrest the summary jurisdiction of the justice by a mere fictitious pretence of title. An assertion of right, therefore, is not to be regarded, where it evidently appears that no colour or pretext for it exists; as where the party's own showing, or other manifest circumstances, prove the claim to be wholly groundless. (Calcraft v. Gibbs, 5 T. R. 19; R. v. Wrottesley, 1 B. & Adol. 648; Grant v. Hulton, 1 B. & Ald. 134.)

It is said, per Holt, C. J. (R. v. Burnaby, 2 Ld. Raym. 901), that upon a suggestion of title, the Court of Queen's Bench, at any time while the conviction remains below, and has not been removed by certiorari, will grant a prohibition after conviction to stay the justice from proceeding upon it. (See R. v. Harper, 1 D. & R. 222, and Paley, 59.)

In some cases the statute expressly empowers a magistrate to decide on a claim of right. On a complaint against a party, on the 11 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 4, for fraudulently removing goods to avoid a distress, it was holden that the justices had jurisdiction, though it appeared that the title to the premises was disputed, and that the tenant had actually paid his rent to one of the claimants. (Coster v. Wilson, 3 M. & Wels. 411.)

Witnesses.

Compelling attendance of.

The Witnesses, and Examination of.]—It is open to great doubt whether the magistrate has any authority to compel the attendance of witnesses for the purpose of a summary trial, unless where it is specially given by act of parliament. In many acts this authority is given, and the provision is accompanied with a penalty on refusal to attend for the purpose of being examined. (See Paley, by Dowling, 33; Evans v. Rees, 12 Ad. & Ell. 55; title "Examination," Vol. II. p. 465.)

The examination of.

Must be on oath.

The examination of witnesses must be upon oath, and no legal conviction can be founded upon evidence not so taken. (Paley, 24; 1 Hale, 580; Morgan v. Hughes, 2 T. R. 225.) There is a difference in the manner in which the acts are worded in regard to the mode of examination to be pursued. For while some acts expressly mention the testimony of witnesses on oath, others in general terms authorise the magistrate to hear and determine or to convict or give judgment on the examination of witnesses, without noticing the oath. But such general expressions seem, in legal construction, necessarily to refer to the only kind of testimony known to the law, viz. that upon oath: "For," says Dalton, "in all cases wheresoever any man is authorised to examine witnesses, such examination shall be taken and construed to be as the law wills, i. e. upon oath." (Dalt. c. 6, s. 6.) This was the opinion of Lord C. J. Broke and Mr. Lambert, and the rather (adds the latter,) because in these cases of conviction by justices of the peace the trial dependeth wholly upon these examinations. (Id. c. 115, 164; Plow. 12 a; Lamb. 517; and see Exp. Aldridge, 4 D. & R. 83; 2 D. & R. M. C. 120; 2 B. & Cres. 600, S. C.; Wilkins v. Wright, 2 C. & M. 191, S. C.)

3. Of the Hearing and Proceedings.

Which must be taken before hand.

The oath must be administered before the witnesses are examined, and administering it afterwards is irregular; for at the time the witness is giving evidence he ought to be under the sanction and control of an oath. (R. v. Kiddy, 4 D. & R. 734; Dalt. Just. c. 164, s. 3.)

Power to administer.

The power of justices to administer an oath by virtue of that jurisdiction, which is conveyed in the authority to hear, examine and convict, without any express mention of a power to administer an oath, does not seem, from any thing now extant, to have been ever questioned so as to be brought to a judicial decision. (See Paley, 34, 35; "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1013; "Oaths," Vol. V.)

Form of.

The form of the oath will be found under title "Examination," Vol. II. p. 464.

Quakers, &c. affirmation.

As to the taking the affirmation instead of an oath where the witness is a Quaker, Moravian, or Separatist, see "Oath," Vol. V. pp. 252, 255.

Competency of witnesses.

The competency of witnesses will be treated of hereafter under title "Evidence," Vol. II. p. 421 to 440; and especially as to when informers or inhabitants of a parish are competent, see the recent statute of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, in the Addenda to that title.

Credible witness.

Where, in acts of parliament directing justices to convict, &c. parties, the term credible witness is used, it bears no precise or legal signification, but the magistrate is to judge, like the jury on a trial, how far the witness is sufficiently to be believed, to warrant the conviction, &c.; (Windham v. Chetwynd, 1 Burr. 418; Peake, Evid. 124.) But the term must be construed to mean a competent witness, and such witnesses, therefore, only as are competent in a court of justice are competent on hearing the information before a magistrate. See further, as to the credibility of witnesses, title "Evidence," Vol. II. p. 442.

Examination must be in defendant's presence.

With respect to the mode of examination, although no mode be pointed out by the statutes giving jurisdiction over the offence, yet as justice requires that the accused should be confronted with the witnesses against him, and have an opportunity of cross-examination, it is required by law, in the summary mode of trial now under consideration, that the evidence and depositions should be taken in the presence of the defendant, where he appears; for though the legislature by a summary mode of inquiry intended to substitute a more expeditious process for the common law method of trial, it could not design to dispense with the rules of justice as far as they are compatible with the method adopted. Indeed it may be useful upon this occasion to notice the general maxim which has been laid down as a guide to the conduct of magistrates in regulating all their summary proceedings, viz. that "acts of parliament, in what they are silent, are best expounded according to the use and reason of the common law." (Per Parker, C. J., R. v. Simpson, 1 Stra. 45.)

Unless, therefore, the defendant forfeits the advantage by his wilful absence, he ought to be called upon to plead before any evidence is given; (R. v. Hall, 1 T. R. 320;) and the witnesses must be sworn and examined in his presence; (R. v. Vipont, 2 Burr. 1163; R. v. Baker, 1 Stra. 316; Re Tordoff, 13 Law J. N. S. Mag. Cas. 145;) or if the evidence has been taken down in his absence and is read over to him afterwards, the witness must, at the same time, (unless the defendant upon hearing the evidence should confess the fact,) (R. v. Hall, 1 T. R. 320,) be re-sworn in his presence, and not merely called upon to assert the truth of his former testimony; (R. v. Crowther, 1 T. R. 125;) for the intent of the rule is, that the witness should be subjected to the cross-examination of the defendant upon his oath. (R. v. Vipont, 2 Burr. 1163; R. v. Kiddy, 4 D. & R. 734; R. v.

Solway, 2 Chit. Rep. 522: R. v. Cummins, 4 D. & R. M. C. 94; Cox v. Coleridge, 1 B. & Cres. 97.)

3. Of the Hearing and Proceedings.

Examining witnesses apart from the others.

In many cases it may be proper to examine a witness apart from the others, and. for that purpose to require the latter to withdraw during his examination. (See Dalt. Just. 165; Taylor v. Lawson, 3 C. & P. 543.)

Informer's oath.

Where a statute appoints a conviction to be on the oath of one witness, this ought not to be by the single oath of the informer; for if the same person shall be allowed to be both prosecutor and witness, it would induce profligate persons to commit perjury for the sake of the reward. (R. v. Stone, 2 Ld. Raym. 1545. See further, ante, 963; title "Evidence," Vol. II. p. 435.)

Number of witnesses.

A statute allowing a conviction on the oath of one witness shall be understood to denote one witness or more. And two witnesses shall denote two or more witnesses.

Taking down examination in writing.

It is the duty of the justice, as well as for his own protection, that he should take down with great care the examination, or the material part of the examination of the witnesses, and also the cross-examination, formally in writing, in the exact natural language and peculiar expressions used by the witnesses. Mere memorandums, or such minutes as may satisfy the justice at the moment, are not sufficient; for unless in cases where the form of the conviction is given by the statute, and does not so require it, the magistrate is bound, since the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, post, 988, which gives a general form of conviction, to set out the evidence on the record of the conviction, as nearly as possible in the words used by the witnesses; and if he neglects so to do, a mandamus lies to compel him. (See Re Rix, 4 D. & R. 352; 2 D. & R. M. C. 249; R. v. Marsh, id. 260; and see R. v. Warnford, 5 D. & R. 489; post, 993.) Should the justice have omitted to take regular and formal minutes of the evidence, he will have considerable, if not insurmountable difficulty in obeying such a mandamus. See further as to the mode of taking down examinations, title "Examination," Vol. II. p. 468.

The adjudication.

The Adjudication.]—When the case and evidence have been heard and concluded on both sides, it remains for the magistrate to convict or acquit the party, according to his judgment upon the circumstances. The judgment should be confined to the subject-matter of the complaint laid before him. (See R. v. Soper, 3 B. & Cres. 857; 5 D. & R. 669, S.C.)

The degree of credit due to the evidence on either side is entirely for his consideration. In summary proceedings before a justice of peace, he is substituted for a jury, so far as relates to the conviction, that is, to the finding of the party guilty or not guilty. He should judge, therefore, of the guilt or innocence of the defendant from the evidence, in the same manner as if he were upon a jury; if the evidence be such as to leave no reasonable doubt upon his mind of the guilt of the defendant, he should convict him; if otherwise he should acquit him. (R. v. Reason, 6 T. R. 375; R. v. Smith, 8 T. R. 590.)

If any reasonable doubt exist in the mind of the magistrate, the party charged is entitled to the benefit of that doubt. Such cases, it is to be recollected, differ very materially indeed from those where mere civil rights are concerned, and where the mere preponderance of evidence may be sufficient to decide the question. (2 Stark. Ev. 414.)

It is sufficient to authorise a conviction, that there is such evidence before the magistrate as might in an action, or on an indictment, be left to a jury; and the Court of Queen's Bench, when the conviction is brought before it, will not examine further, to see whether the conclusion drawn by the magistrate be or be not the inevitable conclusion from the evidence. (R. v. Davis, 6 T. R. 178.)

And if the magistrates think fit to dismiss the charge, although there appears primâ facie ground for a conviction, their acquittal cannot be questioned; since no other court can judge of the credit due to witnesses which it did not hear examined. (R. v. Reason, 6 T. R. 376; see R. v. Ridgway, 1 D. & R. 132; 5 B. & Ald. 527, S. C.; post, 994.)

3. Of the Hearing and Proceedings.

Fixed punishments.

Fixed Punishments.]—In some cases the statute is peremptory as to the penalty or punishment, giving no discretion to the justice to lessen or vary it; and in such case the justice of course can only pursue the directions of the statute. In other cases the penalty or punishment is left in some measure in the discretion of the justice, as to the amount and nature of the penalty or punishment: in such cases he should guide his discretion according to the circumstances of the case and the condition in life of the defendant, and the circumstances of aggravation or extenuation, under which the offence is proved to have been committed. (See post, 995, 996.)

Fixing the penalty.

Fixing Penalty.]—The magistrate is not obliged to fix the penalty or punishment at the instant of conviction, but may take time, either for the purpose of informing himself of the legal penalty, or of considering the amount proper to be imposed. Therefore, though the forfeiture must necessarily appear as a part of the judgment in the conviction when formally drawn up (post, 996,) (which will otherwise be irregular,) yet if it be ascertained and imposed at any time before the conviction is so drawn up, and appears in the record returned to the Court of Queen's Bench on a writ of certiorari, that Court will not hear any objection on the ground that it was not in fact imposed by the magistrate at the time when he convicted the offender; (R. v. Elwell, Ld. Raym. 1514; 2 Stra. 794, S.C.; Reg. v. Layton, 1 Salk. 352;) for the Court will not take notice of any defect which does not appear on the face of the conviction itself. (R. v. Liston, 5 T. R. 338; R. v. Cashiobury, 3 D. & R. 35; 1 D. & R. M. C. 485; Paley, 60.)

In affixing the punishment of an offence which may be proceeded against upon one or other of two different statutes, care must be taken not to blend the penalties under both. (Paley, 206; R. v. Clarke, Cowp. 35.)

Where several penalties.

Where several Penalties.] The defendant may be convicted in the same conviction in several penalties for several offences. (R. v. Swallow, 8 T. R. 284; Paley, 195, 196.)

Where several acts.

It must depend upon the wording of the statute creating the offence whether a party is liable to several penalties for several acts committed by him, or only one penalty. In some cases it will appear that the several acts constitute but one aggregate offence, and then but one penalty can be inflicted. Under particular acts of parliament only one offence can be committed on the same day. As under stat. 29 Car. II. c. 7, for exercising a trade on the Lord's Day. (Crepps v. Durden, 2 Cowp. 640.) So under stat. 5 Anne, c. 14, s. 4, (repealed by 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 32,) for keeping or using a dog or gun. (R. v. Matthews, 10 Mod. 26; see "Game," Vol. III. pp. 229, 263; and Marriott v. Shaw, Com. 274; R. v. Lovett, 7 T. R. 152.) But under stat. 12 Geo. II. c. 36, (expired,) for selling books originally printed here, and afterwards reprinted abroad and imported into this country, the party may incur several penalties on the same day for several distinct acts of sale of such books here. (Brooke q. t. v. Milliken, 3 T. R. 509.)

Where several offenders.

Where a statute imposes a penalty "if any person or persons" shall do an act prohibited, if two persons do such act together, and are jointly convicted, it is deemed but one offence, and the magistrate can inflict only one penalty. Thus in R. v. Bleasdale (4 T. R. 809,) where the defendants were convicted in 5*l. each*, under 5 Anne, c. 14, s. 4, (repealed by 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 32,) for using a greyhound to destroy game without being qualified, the Court, without hearing any argument, said the conviction could not be supported, for that it was only one offence, and that the magistrate should only have convicted them in one penalty. But this might be otherwise under the 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 32. (See "Game," Vol. III. p. 229.) But if either the penalty imposed by the statute be upon each person convicted, or if the particular nature or quality of the offence be such that the guilt of each of the parties be essentially distinct from that of the others, in either of these cases the parties ought to be convicted in several and distinct penalties. (R. v. Clarke, Cowp. 610; Crepps v. Durden, Cowp. 640; Paley, 199.) Thus the 44th section of the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 53, enacts, that "every person" who shall be concerned in the unshipping of goods, the duties for which have not been paid, &c., shall forfeit either the treble value thereof, or be liable to the penalty of 100*l.* The defendant and his partner having been separately convicted of the same offences, it was held that each was liable to the penalties imposed by the act. (Reg. v. Dean, 12 M. & Wels. 39.) In the construction of the Toleration Act, 1 W. & M. c. 18, s. 18, which inflicts a penalty of 20*l.* on any person or persons who may disquiet or disturb any congregation permitted by that act, it has been decided that several persons for a joint disturbance are liable to separate penalties of 20*l.* each. (R. v. Hube and others, 5 T. R. 542. Vide post, "Dissenters," Vol. II. See the cases of R. v. Smith and others, R. & R. 368; R. v. Southern, id. 444; decided on the act against night poaching; "Game," Vol. III. p. 266.)

3. Of the Hearing and Proceedings.

As to the form of the conviction where several penalties are adjudged, see post, 996.

Mitigating the Penalty.]—The mitigation of penalties is not of course, but depends upon the power given to justices by particular acts of parliament to exercise their discretion in this case, within certain bounds, in the instances mentioned in those acts. It is a general rule that where a statute gives a discretionary power of mitigating a penalty, there the legislature must have intended to place the matter under the jurisdiction of justices of the peace. (See per Abbott, C. J. Reeve v. Poole, 4 B. & Cres. 156; 1 C. & P. 622, S. C.; and see R. v. Rawlinson, 6 D. & R. 26; Thompson v. Poole, id. 29.) As to the statement of the mitigation, see post, 997.

Mitigating the penalty.

Damages.]—Statutes frequently empower justices of the peace to give damages to the injured party, as in the case of common assaults, (see "Assault," ante, p. 286;) or malicious and trifling injuries to property, (see "Malicious Injuries to Property," Vol. V. p. 44.) In each particular case the extent of the injury is to be ascertained by the justices, and compensation awarded only in proportion to the injury proved. (R. v. Harpur, 1 D. & R. 222.)

Damages.

Costs.]—In many cases the statute creating the offence gives the justices power to award costs.

Costs.

If it does not do so, then the justices have jurisdiction over them by the 18 Geo. III. c. 19, which enacts that "where any complaint shall be made before a justice, and a warrant or summons shall issue in consequence thereon, the justice, upon hearing and determining the matter, may award costs to either party; but if the conviction be upon a penal statute, and the penalty amounts to 5*l.* or upwards, the costs shall be deducted out of the penalty." Sect. 1 of that act, after reciting that "by the laws now in being, his majesty's justices of the peace are not sufficiently authorised, on complaints that come before them out of sessions, to award costs against either the person or persons complaining, or the person or persons against whom any complaint is made, as to justice may appertain," it is enacted, that "where any complaint shall be made before any of his majesty's justices of the peace for any county, riding, division, city, town corporate, franchise, or liberty, and any warrant or summons shall issue in consequence of such complaint, that then it shall and may be lawful to and for any justice or justices of the peace, who shall have heard and determined the matter of the said complaint, to award such costs to be paid by either of the parties, and in manner and form as to him or them shall seem fit, to the party injured: and in case any person, so ordered by the said justice or justices of the peace to pay such sums of money as aforesaid, shall not forthwith pay down or give security for the same to the satisfaction of the justice or justices, it shall and may be lawful for the said justice or justices, by warrant under his hand and seal or their hands and seals, to levy the said sum or sums by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such person so refusing or neglecting; and where goods and chattels of such person cannot be found, to commit such person to the house of correction for the county, riding, division, city, town corporate, franchise, or liberty, wherein such person shall reside, there to be kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, nor less than ten days, or until such sum or sums of

18 Geo. 3, c. 19.

Justices, out of session, empowered to award costs on determination of complaints brought before them.

On refusal of party to pay, &c. the same may be levied by distress.

3. Of the Hearing and Proceedings.

money, together with the expenses attending the commitment of such person to such house of correction, be first paid."

If the penalty on any conviction shall amount to 5*l.*, the costs shall be deducted thereout, &c.

Sect. 2. "Provided, nevertheless, that upon the conviction of any person or persons upon any penal statute or statutes, where the penalty or penalties shall amount to or exceed the sum of 5*l.*, the said costs shall be deducted by the said justice or justices, according to his or their discretion, out of the said penalty or penalties, so that the said deduction shall not exceed one-fifth part of the said penalty or penalties; and the remainder of the said penalty or penalties shall be paid to, or divided among, the person or persons who would have been entitled to the whole of the penalty or penalties in case this act had not been made."

Before this act, a justice had no power to award costs unless expressly authorised by statute.

There must be a complaint and adjudication on it.

To enable justices to award costs under this enactment, there must be a complaint against some party, and an adjudication upon it. In a recent case, where one of the defendants who were magistrates having received information on oath that a turnpike road was out of repair, summoned the surveyor, under the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 50, s. 94, to appear at a special sessions; at that sessions the two defendants ordered A. B. to view the road, and report thereon to them at another special sessions. A. B. having reported at the latter sessions, when the plaintiff was present, that the road was out of repair, the defendants ordered the surveyor to repair it within six weeks, and at the same time ordered him, under stat. 18 Geo. III. c. 19, s. 1, to pay 2*l.* 3*s.* as costs. It was held, amongst other points, that the justices could not award costs in such a case under that act. (George v. Chambers, 11 M. & Wels. 149; 2 Dowl. N. S. 783, S. C.)

Amount should be fixed by justices.

The justices should of course themselves ascertain and fix the amount of these costs, and they cannot delegate that act to another, or the conviction would be vitiated. (R. v. St. Mary, Nottingham, 13 East's Rep. 57; see Sellwood v. Mount, 1 Gale & D. 358; Lock v. Sellwood, id. 366.) It was held in R. v. Long, (1 Ad. & Ell. N. S. 740,) that where, on the hearing of an appeal against an order of removal, a Court of quarter sessions ordered a parish to pay costs under the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 82, the Court must fix the amount of such costs by their order before the close of the sessions.

As to the statement of the costs in the conviction, see post, 997.

Drawing up conviction.

Drawing up the Conviction.]—As to this, see post, 1002. It need not be drawn up at the time of the trial. The conviction may be complete in operation of law before the formal instrument setting it out is drawn up.

Giving copy of, and returning it.

Giving a Copy and returning the Conviction.]—As to this see post, 1001, 1002.

As regards the form of conviction, we will treat of it as it affects—1st, Convictions in General; and 2dly, Convictions where the Form is pointed out by a particular Statute.

1st The General Requisites and Construction of, and herein of the General Form given by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23.]—The conviction being a record should in all cases be upon parchment.

4. Form of, in general.

(1.) General requisites and construction of.

Authenticating it.

It must be under the hand and seal of the justice, that being the only regular mode of authenticating it as his record (Dalt. c. 115; R. v. Elwell, 2 Stra. 794; and see Basten v. Carew, 5 D. & R. 558; 2 D. & R. M. C. 563; 3 B. & C. 649, S. C.); showing the time when it was made.

It ought to be in words and figures at length. (2 H. H. 170; Paley, Conv. 59.)

It need not state all the proceedings in the present tense; it may state them in the past tense. (R. v. Hall, 1 T. R. 320; Paley, 59; Wilkins v. Wright, 2 C. & M. 205; sed vide R. v. Roberts, 2 Ld. Raym. 1376; 1 Stra. 608, S. C.) The judgment itself, however, should be in the present tense, for that is an act of the Court itself, and not of the parties. (Hull v. Clarke, 1 Mod. 31; sed vide R. v. Inhabitants of St. Nicholas, Leicester, 4 Nev. & M. 624; 3 Ad. & Ell. 79; post, 995, which, however, was the case of an order and not a conviction.)

The general requisites of a conviction are, that it should be precise and certain, and show that the convicting magistrate has power to convict, that the requisite proceedings preliminary to the conviction have been duly taken, and that the defendant has been guilty of the offence charged upon him. It is not necessary that the conviction should be drawn up in any precise form, but the matters must appear with reasonable certainty. (See per Vaughan, B. 2 C. & M. 203.)

The requisite degree of certainty, a term not easily explained or understood, has been already noticed, ante, 967, &c., and will be found further treated of under title "Indictment," Vol. III. p. 864. As to which certainty it is said, that the charge should be positive and certain, in order that the defendant may both be apprised how to direct his defence and protected from a second accusation of the same fact (R. v. Stoughton, 2 Stra. 900); and in order also that the evidence may be seen to support the charge, and the judgment may appear appropriate to the offence. (2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 57, 8th ed.)

The conviction must at all events have as much certainty in it as an indictment. (See R. v. Pain, 7 D. & R. 678; 5 B. & Cres. 251, S. C., per Abbott, C. J.)

General rules of construction of convictions.

With respect to the construction of convictions, it was formerly more strict, for the Courts were more inclined against this summary mode of proceeding that at present. The slightest innovation upon the boasted right of trial by jury was most narrowly watched. Experience, however, has taught us that the due exercise of the summary powers vested in justices of the peace are of very considerable advantage to the country. Convictions now receive every support from the courts of law which can be given consistently with the immovable principles of certainty, and provided there be a reasonable degree of certainty, the Courts will not be astute in discovering defects. It is certainly reasonable that these convictions should be construed with strictness, because they are against the common law, and must be taken to be true against the defendant; but provided it appears with sufficient certainty on the face of the conviction that the authority given to the justice has been strictly pursued according to the letter of the act by which it was created, that the justice has jurisdiction in the case, and that rules similar to those adopted by the common law in criminal prosecutions have been adopted, it will suffice. (See Paley, 75; 2 T. R. 18; R. v. Corden, 4 Burr. 2218.) If the sense be clear, nice exceptions ought not to be regarded.

But though, in construing a conviction, nothing will be intended against it, on the other hand, nothing will be intended in its favour; all facts necessary to support the charge must be stated expressly, and not left to be gathered from inference or intendment. (See Paley, 69; 1 Ld. Raym. 508; R. v. Davis, 5 B. & Adol. 551; 2 Nev. & M. 349, S. C.; Day v. King, 5 Ad. & Ell. 359.) In R. v. Hazell (13 East, 141), Lord Ellenborough said, "the Court can intend nothing in favour of convictions, and will intend nothing against them;" and in a more recent case, R. v. Daman (1 Chit. Rep. 155),

4. Form of, in general.

it was said, that "no intendment can be made in favour of a conviction so as to get rid of an objection in point of form."

In Wilkins v. Wright (2 C. & M. 201), Vaughan, B. said, "I am alive to the necessity of watching with jealousy the execution of the powers confided to the justices of the peace in those summary convictions, which, it must be conceded, are derogatory to the liberty of the subject, and all powers given in restraint of liberty must be strictly pursued." (And see per Curiam, Bracy's case, 1 Salk. 349.)

The Courts will never presume injustice or impartiality in magistrates (Skin. 123), but give them credit to the truth of the facts stated, subject to the peril attending the wilful abuse of that credit by a false statement. (Reg. v. Simpson, 10 Mod. 382; Basten v. Carew, 5 D. & R. 558; 3 B. & C. 649.)

Surplusage.

Any defect in the manner of stating that which is in itself surplusage, and might be omitted altogether, does not vitiate the rest which is sound. The principal difficulties arise from the impracticability of fixing absolutely and incontrovertibly any definite rule or criterion by which to determine at once what shall be considered words of surplusage. This is a difficulty not to be entirely removed, because every case must stand on its own peculiar circumstances; but besides the determinations on convictions noticed hereafter and throughout this work, some tolerably precise notion on the subject may be deduced from the law of indictments. Thus, if an indictment conclude "contrary to the form of the statute," when in fact there is no statute applicable to the case, and, therefore, no uncertainty can ensue, but it is an offence at common law; this conclusion may be rejected as surplusage, and the proceedings supported. (R. v. Horne, Cowp. 683; R. v. Matthews, 5 T. R. 162; 2 Leach, 585.) So if the word "there" be inserted when locality makes no part of the charge and need not be averred, it may be rejected as immaterial and surplusage, because there probably can be no preceding matter to which it can be referable. (2 Sess. Ca. 7.) And generally all words that are entirely useless or without particular sense or meaning, especially if they contravene the intent or purpose of the indictment, ought to be struck out as surplusage. (2 Leach, 525, 536.) But though perhaps not absolutely necessary to be inserted at all, if any averments be introduced so connected with the main charge that they cannot be separated and still leave the necessary part a charge sufficiently made by itself, all must be proved, and no part can be struck out as surplusage; but if they can be separated, and after such separation the material part remain sensibly true and grammatically correct, and containing a sufficient charge in law, that which has been unnecessarily introduced may be struck out as surplusage. (2 Leach, 594; R. v. Leefe, 2 Campb. 135; R. v. Hunt, id. 584; see Dick. Sess. 3d. edit. 594.)

Conviction bad in part is bad in toto.

A judgment by conviction being an entire act cannot be severed, and be bad in part, and good as to the rest, even though their several parts may be in their nature distinct. (R. v. Patchet, 5 East's Rep. 344; 1 Smith's Rep. 547, S. C.) Thus a conviction for not accounting for tolls, and also for not paying over the receipts, being defective as to the latter offence for not specifying the sums, though correct as to the former, was discharged altogether. (R. v. Catherall, 2 Stra. 900.) This position does not militate against that immediately preceding, because in the case of superfluous insertions they are taken as if they had not been part of the conviction, and, therefore, errors in them do not affect the other parts which are correct, nor the whole taken together. By consent, however, it seems a conviction may be set aside as to part of the judgment. (R. v. Hale, Cowp. 728.)

See as to commitments in execution being bad in toto if bad in part, ante, 794. See also Skingley v. Surridge, 11 M. & Wels. 513.

As to when defects are aided, see post, 1000.

General form given by 3 Geo. 4, c. 23.

Before proceeding to inquire minutely as to how the statements in a conviction should be made, we must notice the important act of 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, intituled "An Act to facilitate Summary Proceedings before Justices of the Peace and Others," which in a great degree, to avoid the perplexity so often felt in drawing up a conviction, has provided an outline of a form to be used and filled up in all cases where the statute creating the offence, or regulating the mode of prosecuting it, has not given a specific form. 4. Form of, in general.

The first section of the act reciting that "great inconveniences often arise in summary proceedings before justices of the peace, deputy lieutenants and others, from the want of a general form of conviction," enacts, "that from and after the passing of this act, in all cases wherein a conviction shall have taken place, and no particular form for the record thereof has been directed, the justice or justices, deputy lieutenant or deputy lieutenants, or other person or persons duly authorised to proceed summarily therein, and before whom the offender or offenders shall have been convicted, shall and may cause the record of such conviction to be drawn up in the manner and form following, or in any words to the same effect, (see post, 999,) mutatis mutandis; (that is to say,)

"County [or as the case may be] of } BE it remembered, that on the day of, in the year of our Lord, at in the county of, A. B. of, in the county of, labourer, [or as the case may be,] personally came before me [or before us, &c.], C. D. one [or more, as the case may be], of his majesty's justices of the peace for the said, and informed me [or, us &c.] that E. F. of, in the county of, on the day of, at in the said, did [here set forth the fact for which the information is laid,] contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, whereupon the said E. F. after being duly summoned to answer the said charge appeared before me, [or us, &c.] on the day of, at in the said, and having heard the charge contained in the said information, declared he was not guilty of the said offence, [or as the case may happen to be,] did not appear before me, [or us, &c.] pursuant to the said summons, [or did neglect or refuse to make any defence against the said charge]: whereupon I [or we, &c. or nevertheless, I, or we, &c.] the said justice [or justices,] did proceed to examine into the truth of the charge contained in the said information, and on the day of aforesaid, at the parish of aforesaid, one credible witness, to wit, A. W. of, in the county of, upon his oath deposeth and saith, [if E. F. be present, say, in the presence of the said E. F.] that, within months [or as the case may be] next before the said information was made before me [or us, &c.] the said justice by the said A. B., to wit, on the day of, in the year, the said E. F. at, in the said county of, [here state the evidence, and as nearly as possible in the words used by the witness, and if more than one witness be examined, state the evidence given by each] [or, if the defendant confess, instead of stating the evidence say, and the said E. F. acknowledged and voluntarily confessed the same to be true,] therefore it manifestly appearing to me* [or us, &c.] that he the said E. F. is guilty of the offence charged upon him in the said information, I [or we, &c.] do hereby convict him of the offence aforesaid, and do declare and adjudge, that he the said E. F. hath forfeited the sum of of lawful money of Great Britain, for the offence aforesaid, to be distributed [or paid, as the case may be,] according to the form of the statute in that case made and provided. Given under my hand [or our hands, &c.] and seal, the day of, in the year of our Lord."

This act is compulsory on the magistrates as to the mode of drawing up the conviction, and not merely directory; and they may be compelled by mandamus to adopt the form prescribed, or one like it in effect. (Re Rix, 4 D. & R. 352; post, 993.) The act is compulsory.

It is to be observed, however, that it is not sufficient to adhere literally to the form given, where, from the nature of the case, the general terms adopted in the form do not show in reality the facts, and this observation, as will be hereafter seen, will in many cases peculiarly apply to that part of the form stating the adjudication of the penalty and its distribution. (See post, 995.) And see as to the construction and mode of drawing up forms of convictions, when the form is expressly pointed out by a statute, post, 999. Form not to be adhered to literally.

2dly. Statement of the Information or Charge.]—The conviction must recite the information. This it usually does in the past tense, until the prayer of process against the defendant. The conviction must set out the information, exactly as it was laid before the justice, or the substance of it. Statement of the information, offence, &c.

We have already seen how the information, when in writing, should be framed, and especially as to the statement therein of the time of making it,

4. Form of, in general.

the place where made, the authority or name and style of the justice before whom made, the informer making it, and the offence and charge made. Such observations will be found here applicable; for all objections that can be taken to an information, and which are not merely for a defect in form, may be taken also to this part of the conviction. (See fully, ante, 963 to 975.)

In describing the offence, therefore, all that the framer of the conviction has in general to do, is to follow the statement of it in the information.

Where there has been no information in writing, drawn up in form, and which is not unfrequently the case where it is not otherwise expressly required, and where the proceedings are not at the suit of a common informer for a penalty, the mode of stating the offence may be collected from the observations, ante, 965 to 975.

Where there has been no information, but the magistrate has convicted on his own view (as in a few instances he is authorised by statute so to do), after stating such view, the offence may also be described in the mode pointed out, ante, 965 to 975.

Statement of the summons.

3dly. Statement of the Summons.]—The necessity for, the form, and the service of the summons upon the offender, have been already considered, ante, 975.

It must be stated in the conviction that the defendant was summoned to answer the information; unless in those cases (which are not many) in which particular statutes have expressly allowed justices to convict persons without a summons, or on view of the offence, in which latter case the view must be stated.

If the date of the summons be stated, it must not appear to have been before the information was laid, if it does the conviction will be bad. (R. v. Kent, 2 Ld. Raym. 1546.)

Where penalties are to be recovered by information before justices of the peace, under a statute which directs that the justices shall summon the person against whom the information is exhibited, to appear and plead to, and to attend the hearing of the information, at a time and place named in the summons, such summons to be served "ten days at the least" before the time appointed: it was held, that there must be ten clear days between the service and the day of hearing; and that where the conviction shows on its face that the party was convicted exparte, on default of appearance to a summons appointing too early a day, such conviction is no defence to an action of trespass for enforcing it. (Mitchell v. Forster, 12 Ad. & El. 72; 9 Dowl. P. C. 527; 4 P. & D. 150, S. C.)

If the conviction state that the defendant was summoned to appear and did appear on an impossible day, as Tuesday, the 17th day of April, A.D. 1802, when in fact the 17th fell on a Friday, it was held bad. (See R. v. Dyer, 1 Salk. 181; R. v. Picton, 2 East. 196; ante, 976.)

If the offender be stated to be present at the time of the proceeding, and to have heard all the witnesses, and not to have asked for any further time to bring forward his defence, if he had any, this at all times has been deemed sufficient. (R. v. Stone, 1 East, 649. See also R. v. Johnson, 1 Stra. 261, ante, 977.)

A statement that the defendant was duly summoned, will now, since the form prescribed by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, s. 1, ante, 989, in all cases suffice, unless where there is another form of conviction pointed out by the statute. (See R. v. Johnson, 1 Stra. 261; R. v. Stone, 1 East, 639; Reg. v. Barret, 1 Salk. 383; R. v. Aiken, 3 Burr. 1785; R. v. Hall, 6 D. & Ry. 84; Mason v. Barker, 1 Car. & K. 107, n.)

Statement of appearance or non-appearance of defendant.

4thly. Statement of Defendant's Appearance.]—The defendant's appearance or non-appearance should be stated according to the fact. (Bos. 62; Paley, 138; Wilkins v. Wright, 2 C. & M. 206.) The form of the statement is prescribed by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, s. 1, ante, 989.

Statement of defendant's confession.

5thly. Statement of Defendant's Confession.] If the defendant appear, and confess that he is guilty of the offence imputed to him, the appearance and confession are recorded in the conviction; and then, if it be a confession of the entire offence, instead of stating any evidence, which is quite unnecessary in such a case, the justice may at once proceed to the conviction and adjudication; but if it be a confession merely of a fact, which forms but a part of the offence charged, the conviction then, after stating the confession in the words of the defendant, proceeds to state the evidence as to the other facts and circumstances constituting the offence charged, and, lastly, states the conviction and adjudication. (See R. v. Gage, 1 Stra. 546; R. v. Hall, 1 T. R. 320; R. v. Little, 1 Burr. 613; R. v. Smith, 3 Burr. 1475; Wilkins v. Wright, 2 C. & M. 206.)

4. Form of, in general.

The confession cures any objection to the manner of taking the evidence; as that it was not taken in the defendant's presence, or that improper evidence was taken, or the like. (R. v. Clarke, Cowp. 35; R. v. Hall, 1 T. R. 320, ante, 979.)

The mode of stating the confession is pointed out by the form given by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23 (ante, 989.)

6thly. Statement of the Witnesses and Evidence.]—It is requisite to name the witness, that he may appear to be a different person from the informer, as the statutes generally give the latter a share of the penalty, and therefore he cannot be a witness, excepting where the act shall specially so direct (R. v. Stone, 2 Ld. Raym. 1545; 1 Sess. Cas. 378, S.C.; R. v. Tilly, 1 Stra. 316; Andr. 18, 240; Bosc. 69.) The form given by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23 (ante, 989), requires the name of the witness to be stated.

Statement of the witnesses and evidence.

The conviction should state that the witness was examined on oath. (R. v. Aldridge, 4 D. & Ry. 83; R. v. Lears, 13 Law J. N. S. 47, Mag. Cas.) It is not necessary to add that the magistrate had authority to administer the oath. (R. v. Picton, 2 East, 195.) In R. v. Glossop (4 B. & Ald. 616), it was held, that from a statement that certain witnesses came before the justices upon their oaths to them severally and respectively administered, it substantially appeared that the oath was administered to the witnesses in the presence of the magistrates. In R. v. Selway (2 Chit. Rep. 522) it was held unnecessary to state how the witnesses were sworn. The 3 Geo. IV. c. 23 (ante, 989), now gives a proper precise form as to these statements.

In the case of R. v. Vipont and others (2 Burr. 1163), the conviction was that the defendants having heard the charge, (of conspiring to advance their wages in the woollen manufacture,) and being called upon by the justices to show cause why they should not be convicted, and having nothing to say whereby to defend themselves, are therefore convicted: this was quashed by the Court; because the evidence ought to be particularly set forth, that the Court may judge thereof; and it must be given in the presence of the defendant, that he may have an opportunity of cross-examination. (R. v. Crowther, 1 T. R. 127, and see Re Tordoff, 13 Law J. N. S. M. C. 145; R. v. Benwell, 6 T. R. 75; Bosc. 71.) The form given by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, s. 1 (ante, 989), requires the justice to state that witness gave his evidence in the defendant's presence, if such was the fact. It was considered before the passing of this act, that though the evidence ought to be given in the presence of the defendant, if the appearance of the defendant and the examination of the witness are both stated on the same day, the Court would presume that the witness was examined in the presence of the defendant, though it be not expressly so stated; (R. v. Aiken, 3 Burr. 1786; R. v. Kempson, Cowp. 241; R. v. Thompson, 2 T. R. 23; and R. v. Lovet, 7 T. R. 152); even though it were stated that the appearance was at A. and the evidence was given at B. (R. v. Swallow, 8 T. R. 284.)

Where, in a conviction, the information was stated to have been laid on the 29th May, 1805, and that the defendant appeared on the 4th June (without mentioning the year), and it concluded by stating the conviction as signed and sealed on this 4th of June, 1805; the Court held that the proceedings appeared to have been all one continuing transaction, from the appearance of the defendant after the summons to the close of the conviction, and that this appeared, both from the antecedent date of May, 1805, and the date of the conviction to have been June, 1805, because the defendant was stated to have appeared on the 4th June, and the conviction was signed and sealed on the 4th June, 1805; and they held that it therefore appeared that the evidence was given in the defendant's presence, as his departure pending the continuance of the transaction could not be presumed. (R. v. Crisp, 7 East, 389; 3 Smith, 377, S. C.)

4. Form of, in general.

The evidence itself must be fully set forth.

The 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, s. 1 (ante, 989), in the form therein prescribed, directs that the evidence should be stated, as nearly as possible, in the words used by the witness, and that if more than one witness be examined, then that the evidence given by each shall be stated. Independently of this, it was previously fully settled, that in all convictions, the evidence must be set out particularly, not merely the result of it; and that sufficient proof must appear upon the face of the record to sustain every material part of the charge, and to warrant the adjudication. (R. v. Lovet, 7 T. R. 152.) It was laid down by Lord Mansfield, in 1 Burr. 1163, as an undoubted maxim, that on a conviction the evidence must be set out, in order that the superior court may judge of it. It has been likewise solemnly recognized as a known distinction between orders and convictions, that in the former it is allowed to state the result only of the evidence, whereas the same mode of stating it would be undoubtedly bad in a conviction. (R. v. Lloyd, 2 Stra. 999; R. v. Justices of Cheshire, 2 Nev. & M. 827; 5 B. & Ad. 439; R. v. Kellett, 4 Burr. 2063; "Orders," Vol. V. p. 288.) In a very early case (Reg. v. Green, 10 Mod. 212,) the conviction was quashed because the evidence was not set forth. It was only laid down that the witness was sworn de veritate præmissorum, and that it did not appear from what was sworn to the justice that the defendant was guilty; but it was said it ought so to have appeared to the court. Again, a conviction for taking pilchards contra formam statuti was quashed; and the reason assigned was, because the witness swore generally that the defendant was guilty of the premises; for that is taking the law upon himself. (R. v. Baker, 1 Stra. 316.) A conviction on the candle act was set aside because the evidence was not set out, it being only alleged that the offence was fully and duly proved. (R. v. Baker, 1 Stra. 316; R. v. Theed, 2 Stra. 919; 2 Barnard. 16, 73.)

In R. v. Marsh (4 D. & R. 260; 2 B. & C. 717, S. C.), it was suggested that the magistrate might have great difficulty in setting out the evidence in the words used by the witnesses, it not being usual to take the depositions in writing; but the Court said it was the duty of the magistrate to take down the evidence, and give the detail of it in the conviction.

It has been held that if a conviction state in the words of the statute the depositions of the witness to the fact, it is sufficient; but if the magistrate endeavour to shelter himself from detection by merely stating the fact of the offence in the terms of the act of parliament, as if it were the legal effect of the evidence, when the evidence itself would not warrant the conclusion, he subjects himself to a criminal information, upon a proper case laid before the court. (R. v. Pearse, 9 East, 358.) And in R. v. Allen, cited Paley on Conv. by Dowling, 165, n., Abbott, C. J., said, "that no witness would swear in the words of the statute, and that the Court could not, on a conviction, stating a witness so swore, assume that the magistrate had done his duty;" and the magistrate was there ordered to draw up a fresh conviction.

Exceptions in evidence.

In those cases where the offence is created in a section in a statute, which section contains particular exceptions, though it is necessary to negative every one of those exceptions in the information (Dougl. 331), it has been doubted whether or not it be necessary also to negative them in the evidence given in support of the charge. In R. v. Jarvis (1 Burr. 154), Mr. J. Denison said it was necessary to negative, by the evidence and adjudication, that the defendant had any of the particular qualifications to kill game, that being a conviction on the game laws before the 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 32. But it was determined and fully settled by the Court of Queen's Bench in R. v. Turner (5 M. & Sel. 206; 2 Phill. Ev. 25, 189,) that a conviction which specifically negatives the several qualifications mentioned in the statute was sufficient, without stating evidence to negative those qualifications. (And see the opinions of Lawrence, J., and Le Blanc, J., in R. v. Stone, 1 East, 653; R. v. Marsh, 4 D. & R. 260; 2 B. & C. 717, S. C.; Paley, 180, 184.)

4. Form of, in general.

The evidence, both in support of the information and for the defence, must be stated where it is relevant to the matter at issue. (Per Abbott, C. J., Re Rix, 4 D. & R. 354.)

Evidence for defence.

Matter of evidence, irrelevant to the charge contained in the information, need not be stated. (Id.)

Irrelevant evidence.

Nor need every word used by the witness. (Per Abbott, C. J., R. v. Warnford, 5 D. & R. 490.)

Justices must use their discretion.

The justices must use their discretion in the statement, but they must attend to the general directions contained in the act 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, s. 1. (Id.)

Mandamus to set forth the evidence.

If the justices omit to state the evidence in the conviction, as we have just seen they are bound to do, the Court of Queen's Bench will compel them to do so by mandamus, on an affidavit that there was some evidence not set out, or not exactly set out in the conviction. In Re Rix (4 D. & R. 352), where justices omitted to set out, on the record of a conviction on the Building Act, the evidence adduced on the hearing of the information as nearly as possible in the words used by each of the witnesses, in pursuance of the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, a mandamus was issued to compel them. And so in the case of a game conviction before the 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 32. (4 D. & R. 354, n.; R. v. Marsh, id. 260; R. v. Warnford, 5 D. & R. 489; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 511; R. v. Allen, 5 D. & R. 490.)

In order to obtain a mandamus to the justices to set out the evidence in a conviction under the stat. 8 Hen. VI. c. 9, for a forcible entry, it is necessary that the affidavits should suggest that evidence was received by the magistrates on the view. (R. v. Wilson, 5 Nev. & M. 164; 1 Ad. & Ell. 627, S. C.; "Justices," Vol. III. pp. 1024, 1025.)

Information for not setting it forth.

Under circumstances, if the evidence be not set forth as it was given, a criminal information or indictment might be supported against a magistrate. (See R. v. Peace, 9 East, 358; "Justices," Vol III. p. 1017.)

The evidence set forth must be sufficient to warrant conviction.

The evidence, when set forth, must contain reasonably sufficient matter to warrant the conviction. Therefore it must be of a fact existing at the time of the information; and so it must appear. In R. v. Fuller (1 Ld Raym. 509), a conviction on stat. 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 19 (now repealed), for keeping two concealed washbacks was quashed, because, though the information, which was given on the 30th March, charged the defendant with then having the washbacks, the evidence, which was not given until the 3d of April, was merely that the defendant habet et custodit eadem duo et concelata vasa; confining it to the time when the evidence was given, and of course subsequent to the day of the information.

In a conviction under the 2 Geo. II. c. 26, s. 4, for working a boat or skiff on the river Thames for hire, without being qualified so to do, it must expressly appear from the evidence in such conviction that the defendant worked such boat for hire. (R. v. Taylor, 2 Chit. 578.)

The evidence must go to establish the identical offence which forms the subject of the information. It is not sufficient that there appears to be evidence of another offence of the same kind and subject to the same penalty. (See R. v. Smith, 8 T. R. 588; R v. Harper, 1 D. & R. 214; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 67, S. C.; Paley, 178.)

If the offence be confined to persons of a particular description, there must be competent evidence of their answering that description. (R. v. Little, 1 Burr. 609; R. v. Smith, 3 Burr. 1475; Paley, 184, by Deacon) By 1 Jac. I. c. 9, s. 2, (now repealed by the 9 Geo IV. c. 61,) an innkeeper permitting an inhabitant of the parish to tipple, was liable to be convicted on the oath of two witnesses; that act having expired, it was provided by 21 Jac. I. c. 7, that the conviction might be made on the oath of one witness; the stat. of 1 Car. I, c. 4, extended the same penalty to the case of strangers, but required proof by two witnesses, as in 1 Jac. I. c. 9: held, that a conviction appearing to have been made on the oath of one witness, against an alehouse-keeper, for suffering tippling in his alehouse, was bad, for not stating whether the persons found tippling were inhabitants of the parish or strangers. (R. v. Dove, 3 B. & Ald. 596.)

1. Form of, in general.

It should appear that the fact was proved to have been committed in some place within the jurisdiction of the magistrate. (R. v. Jeffries, 1 T. R. 241; R. v. Smith, 8 T. R. 588; R. v. Highmore, 2 Ld. Raym. 1220; R. v. Hazell, 13 East, 142; Paley, 164; ante, 966.)

When a certain time is limited by statute for a summary prosecution before justices of peace, it is necessary on that account also to fix the offence to a certain date, and state the time of committing the offence in that part of the conviction in which the evidence is set forth. (Paley, 132.) For if that be not shown either by positive proof of the day, or by express reference in the evidence to a date previously mentioned, the conviction cannot be supported, as is exemplified in this case. A conviction on the Malt Act, 42 Geo. III. c. 38, s. 38 (now repealed), stated an information to have been exhibited on the 29th of May, 1805, charging "that the defendant within three months now last past did wet certain corn," &c. The evidence stated was, that the witness on the 22d of May (without mentioning the year), found a floor of malt then in the operation, &c. (so proceeding to state the fact of the offence.) The conviction was quashed on account of the defective manner in which the date was alleged in the evidence. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The evidence ought to appear to support the information, and the justices should either have stated the evidence of the witness to be that the offence was committed on the 22d May, 1805, if they really so understood the witness to mean; or, if they had any doubt of that, they should have inquired of him more particularly as to the date of the fact. But here the date of the year neither appears expressly by the evidence, nor by any words of reference to any other date which is certain. And if they have done their business slovenly, we cannot supply their omission. As it stands on the conviction, the offence does not appear to have been committed within three months before the prosecution commenced, which is necessary to give them cognizance. (R. v. Woodcock, 7 East, 146.) It is sufficient, however, to refer to a date already mentioned and ascertained. Thus where a conviction was dated the 4th of June, and the information exhibited the 29th of May, charged the offence within three months now last past, viz. on the 12th of May now last past; it was held sufficient that in the evidence the fact was sworn to have happened on the said 12th of May. (R. v. Crisp, 7 East, 389; 3 Smith, 377, S. C.; see further, Paley, 167, 168.)

Suffices if reasonably sufficient to support conviction.

If the evidence set forth be such as might reasonably warrant the conclusion drawn by the justices, the conviction will be good. Thus in a conviction against defendant for causing to be acted at a place called the Coburg Theatre, for gain and reward, a certain entertainment of the stage called Richard the Third, the evidence set forth was, that the defendant was seen once or twice at the rehearsal of the piece, and that the defendant engaged an actor to perform, and gave him a check for the amount of his benefit; it was held that the justices were warranted in drawing the conclusion that the defendant caused the play to be acted. (R. v. Glossop, 4 B. & Ald. 616; and see Anon. 1 B. & Adol. 382.) Et per Lord Kenyon, C. J., R. v. Davis (6 T. R. 178), it is sufficient in convictions, if there were such evidence before the magistrate as in an action would be sufficient to be left to a jury.

And the Court of Queen's Bench will not interfere unless the evidence stated on the face of the conviction be such that no reasonable person could draw the conclusion which the magistrate has drawn. (R. v. Glossop, 4 B. & Ald. 618; Anon. 1 B. & Adol. 382.)

Where the justices acquitted the defendant upon evidence which primâ facie was sufficient to convict, and there being no contradictory or explanatory evidence; the Court said that the evidence given was entirely and exclusively for the consideration of the justices below, who were placed in the situation of a jury; and as they had acquitted the defendant, the Court could not substitute themselves in the place of the justices acting as jurymen, and convict him. That they could not judge of the credit due the witnesses whom they did not hear examined. That they could only look to the form of the conviction, and see that the party, if convicted, had been convicted by legal evidence. (R. v. Reason, 6 T. R. 375, ante, 983; and see Anon. 1 B. & Adol. 382.)

4. Form of, in general.

But if no evidence appear on the conviction to support a material part of the information, the Court will quash the conviction. (R. v. J. Smith, 8 T. R. 588.)

And where the evidence set forth to support a conviction under 11 Geo. I. c. 30, s. 16, (repealed by 6 Geo. IV. c. 105,) for knowingly harbouring and concealing smuggled spirits, consisted merely of proof of finding the smuggled spirits in the house of the party convicted, the Court of King's Bench thought the evidence insufficient, and quashed the conviction. (Ex parte Ransley, 3 D. & R. 572; see R. v. Dean, 12 M. & Wels. 39.)

Statement of the adjournment.

7thly. Statement of the Adjournment.]—If the magistrate adjourns the hearing of the information (and which he may do if either the defendant or the prosecutor requires time for adducing further proofs), the fact of the adjournment should perhaps be stated in the conviction. (Paley, 189.) If a certain time be limited within which the conviction must take place, a conviction after that period cannot be supported, though it appears on the face of it to be upon an information commenced in time, and adjourned with the consent of the defendant to a future day. (See ante, 979.)

Statement of the adjudication.

8thly. Statement of the Adjudication.]—The conviction must contain an adjudication of the fact which forms the offence, and of the defendant's having been convicted of it, and also an adjudication of the forfeiture incurred thereby; and if either of these be wanting, the conviction is bad. (See Paley, 206, 208.) Even in cases where the punishment is fixed by statute there must be an adjudication; for the want of which the conviction in R. v. Harris (7 T. R. 238), was quashed. In that case Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "a conviction is in the nature of a verdict and judgment, and therefore must be precise and certain." And it may be observed as a general rule, that the adjudication on every point to which it refers must be precise and certain, and that a judgment for too little is as bad as one for too much; and this is so whether it respect the fine, the costs, or any other portion of the penalty which lies attached to the commission of the offence. (R. v. Salomans, 1 T. R. 251.)

Must be certain.

Judgment for too little or too much, bad.

Must be warranted by statute.

The adjudication must be warranted by the statute creating the offence, or the conviction will be bad. (See R. v. Hall, Cowp. 60; R. v. Elwall, 2 Ld. Raym. 1514.)

Formal words of.

The form given by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23 (ante, 989), points out the form of the judgment. It was held, before the passing of that act, that no formal style of adjudication was necessary as in other judgments. A judgment in these terms, viz. "that R. T. (the defendant), according to the form of the statute, is convicted," was held a sufficient adjudication that he was convicted of the offence. (R. v. Thompson, 2 T. R. 18; see R. v. Chandler, 14 East, 267; R. v. Jeffries, 4 T. R. 768.) So in R. v. Inhabitants of St. Nicholas (4 Nev. & M. 624; 3 Ad. & E. 79, S. C.), an order of justices upon parish officers, for removing a person of unsound mind (not chargeable) to a house of reception for such persons, under the 9 Geo. IV. c. 40, s. 38 and 44 (see "Lunatics," Vol. III.), was held good, although it stated that the justices "have adjudged" and not "do adjudge" the settlement of such person to be in the parish of, &c. (and see R. v. Maulden, 8 B. & C. 78; 2 M. & R. 146, S. C.) An order of bastardy under the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 72, following the words of the enactment, and stating that the justices were satisfied that A. B. is the father, has been held sufficient. (R. v. Lewis, 1 P. & D. 118; 8 Ad. & Ell. 881, S. C.; ante, 384.)

Of punishment.

In cases where a corporeal punishment is assigned, the adjudication should expressly and particularly state it. (R. v. Vipont, 2 Burr. 1163; and see ante, "Commitment in Execution," p. 792, as to what is a sufficient form of adjudication in this respect.) If imprisonment be awarded, and it be not for any certain period, but generally till the payment of a fine, or the performance of some other act, the condition must be distinctly expressed, and such as is authorised by statute. If it be till payment, the sum must be fixed. Thus

4. Form of, in general.

a conviction and commitment for a forcible entry, "there to remain till they shall have paid a fine to the king," the justices not having assessed any fine, was held to be irregular. (R. v. Elwell, 2 Ld. Raym. 1514; see ante, "Commitment," p. 792, 793.) So under stat. 6 Geo. III. c. 48, s. 1, which empowers the magistrates to commit till the penalty and charges are paid, a commitment for nine months, or until the sum of 15*l.* "together with charges previous to and attending the conviction, shall be paid," was held to be bad, for want of ascertaining the exact sum by the payment of which the defendant might be released. (R. v. Hall, 1 Cowp. 60.)

Of penalty of, and forfeiture.

The form given by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 23 (ante, 989), shows that a judgment of forfeiture should be stated. In R. v. Hawkes (2 Stra. 858), a conviction before this act for killing a deer was quashed, because it was only "he is convicted," without any judgment of forfeiture. And in the case of R. v. Vipont and others (2 Burr. 1163, ante, 991), the conviction not adjudging the forfeiture, was for that reason, as well as the other before mentioned, determined to be ill; especially as the statute upon which the conviction was made leaves the judgment discretionary concerning the duration of the punishment, the offender being subjected to be imprisoned by the justices for any time not exceeding three months, (et vide R. v. Ashton, 8 Mod. 175.)

Amount or nature of penalty or punishment.

The penalty, whether pecuniary or corporeal, must be stated with sufficient certainty as to its amount and nature, and be such as is warranted by the statute; and more strictness is required in this respect where it is discretionary. (Paley, 221, 224. See some cases, post, 998, as to the mode of stating the costs and charges.)

Where several offences or penalties.

The conviction, as we have already seen, ante, 984, may be of several offences and penalties. If the information be for two or more offences, and the justice find him guilty of all, the conviction must state him to be guilty of the "offences" charged upon him in the information; if, on the other hand, the justice find him guilty of one of the offences only, the conviction should state that offence specially, thus: "that he the said E. F. is guilty of the offence firstly above charged upon him in the said information, for that he the said E. F. on at did," &c., stating the offence as in the information; if the conviction in such a case were to state that the defendant was guilty of the "offence" charged, &c. it would be quashed, because it would be uncertain of which of the offences he was guilty. (R. v. Salomans, 1 T. R. 249.) Where, in a conviction on one of the statutes relating to beer shops (3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, s. 15), it was stated that the party had kept his house open for the sale of beer, and had sold beer, and had suffered and permitted beer to be consumed upon his premises, after the hour limited for that purpose, and the party was convicted "for the offence aforesaid;" the Court held the conviction bad, as it stated three offences, and it could not be known of which of them the party was convicted. (Newman v. Bendyshe et al. MS. Q. B.; 8 Law J. 58, M. C.; 10 Ad. & Ell. 11, S. C.)

If several defendants are convicted, whether the offence is in its nature single or joint, a joint award of one penalty against them is bad; for it ought to be several against each defendant, otherwise one who had paid his proportionable part might be continued in prison till all the others had paid theirs, which would be in effect to punish him for the offence of another. (2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 16.) Therefore a conviction of A and B. for an offence by A. and B. several in its nature, (as an assault under stat. 9 Geo. IV. c. 31,) adjudging that they the said A. and B. for their said offence do forfeit the sum of, &c., and in default of payment be imprisoned for the space of, &c. is bad, inasmuch as the penalty ought to be imposed on the parties severally and not jointly. (Morgan v. Brown, 6 N. & M. 57; 4 Ad. & El. 515; 1 H. & W. 717, S. C.) And it was held in that case that the magistrates who committed a party under such a conviction might be sued in an action of trespass.

Distribution of penalty.

In general the application of the penalty constitutes a necessary part of the judgment. The 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, s. 1, directs that the form shall state the penalty "to be distributed (or 'paid,' as the case may be), according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided;" and such an adjudication would, it seems, at all events suffice, where the statute giving the penalty points out the mode of its distribution without leaving it discretionary in the justice. (See Reg. v. Barrett, Salk. 383; Paley, 209.) Where, however, the statute does not positively and directly fix the mode of distribution of the penalty, but leaves it in any degree uncertain or discretionary, then the precise mode of distribution should, it would seem, be stated. (See R. v. Dempsey, 2 T. R. 96.)

4. Form of, in general.

In a case where the distribution directed by the statute was part to the party aggrieved, and the remainder to the overseers of the poor of the parish, a distribution to the poor of the township was held bad, because there may be many townships in the same parish, and therefore there was uncertainty; but it was admitted if it had been general, viz. to be distributed as the law directs, it would have been sufficient, for there would not necessarily have been any uncertainty in such a case. (R. v. Priest, 6 T. R. 538; see R. v. Wyatt, 2 Ld. Raym. 1478.)

The stat. 42 Geo. III. c. 119, against illegal lotteries, directing the penalty to be distributed, one-third to the king, one-third to the informer, and one-third to "the person apprehending or securing the offender,"—a conviction directing the penalty to be distributed "as the law directs," without ascertaining to whom the last third is to be paid, (the person being uncertain,) is bad. (R. v. Seale, 8 East, 568.)

In R. v. Smith (5 M. & Sel. 133), the defendant was convicted on the 12 Geo. III. c. 61, s. 18, for conveying at one time a larger quantity of gunpowder than is allowed by that statute, which authorises the seizure of such gunpowder, and directs that upon conviction of the offender the same shall be forfeited for the use of the person making the seizure. The justices having adjudged the gunpowder to be forfeited "to the use of the aforesaid J. G., the person who seized the same," without showing previously by the evidence that there had been in fact a seizure, and that he was the person seizing, the Court quashed the conviction.

In a conviction of defendant for causing to be acted, at a certain place called the Coburg Theatre, in the parish of St. Mary, Lambeth, for gain and reward, a certain entertainment of the stage called "Richard the Third," the evidence stated that the theatre was in the parish of Lambeth, and the adjudication of the penalty was to the poor of the parish of St. Mary, Lambeth; it was held that this was no variance, it not appearing that there were two distinct parishes so named. (R. v. Glossop, 4 B. & Ald. 616.)

Must award penalty to proper party.

If the conviction state to whom the penalty is to be paid, care must be taken to adjudicate the payment to the proper party; and where there is a material variation in the appropriation of the penalty from the directions of the act of parliament, the conviction will be bad. Thus where a conviction was framed on the new Game Act (1 Will. IV. c 32), which directs the penalty to be paid to the parish officer, and by him to be paid over for the use of the county rate, (but which, by the subsequent act of 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 20, s. 2, is directed, as to one moiety, to be paid to the informer, and the other as before,) and adjudicated the whole penalty to be paid to the overseer, to be applied according to the directions of the statute in such case, &c.; it was held, that the conviction was bad, and that an imprisonment under it was illegal, and the parties liable in trespass. (Griffith v. Harries, 2 M. & Wels. 325.)

Mitigation of penalty.

As to the justices' power to mitigate the penalty, see ante, 985. When the penalty has been mitigated, this ought to be stated in the conviction, for otherwise it cannot appear to the Court upon appeal, how or in what degree the magistrate has exercised the authority with which he was invested. Thus the conviction must first adjudicate the whole penalty inflicted by the statute, and then in a separate sentence state to what inferior sum he has mitigated it; for otherwise it could not appear that he had exercised his authority in both points, according to the terms of the statute. (See Dick. Sess. 3d ed. 595; see form, post, 1005, No. 6.) A judgment for too small a penalty is as bad as a judgment for too much. (R. v. Salomans, 1 T. R. 252)

Costs.

Costs.]—The power of adjudicating costs will be found noticed ante, 985. In adjudicating them in the conviction the amount must be mentioned. (R. v.

4. Form of, in general.

v. Payne, 4 D. & Ry. 72.) And so when an act gives power to a magistrate, on a summary conviction, to award the reasonable charges of taking a distress, he must ascertain the amount in the conviction; and an adjudication that the defendant shall pay the reasonable charges of the levy is bad. (R. v. Symons, 1 East, 189.)

By sect. 90 of the Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 50, the Court of Quarter Sessions is authorised and required to award to the party giving or receiving notice of appeal such costs and expenses as shall be incurred in prosecuting or resisting such appeal: it was held, that the order of the Court for the payment of such costs and expenses must state the amount; and that an order for the payment of the costs incurred, leaving the amount to be subsequently ascertained by the clerk of the peace, is bad. (Sellwood v. Mount, 1 Ad. & El. N. S. 726.)

Where a distress warrant was issued to levy the costs incurred by a party in prosecuting an appeal under sect. 88 of the Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 50), which did not recite any order of quarter sessions for payment of such costs, but was founded on a subsequent conviction by two justices out of sessions for non-payment of such costs: it was held, that the warrant was illegal, and that no property passed to the vendee of goods seized and sold under it. (Lock v. Selwood, 1 Ad. & El. N. S. 736.) The 18 Geo. III. c. 19, prescribes a form of adjudication of costs where they are not awarded in a conviction, and which see, title "Costs," Vol. II.

Levying penalties.

Statement as to levying Penalty on.]—The conviction need not adjudge that if the penalty, &c. be not paid, the offender shall be conmmitted. (See R. v. Helps, 3 M. & Sel. 331; R. v. Chandler, Cath. 501.)

Subscription and date.

9thly. The Subscription and Date.]—The conviction is complete by the convicting justice or justices subscribing and sealing it, by which act it becomes a record, and without which it cannot be produced before any court for any ulterior purpose, as for appeal, &c. (Dalt. c. 115; R. v. Elwell, 2 Stra. 794; see Basten v. Carew, 5 D. & R. 558; 2 D. & R. M. C. 563; 3 B. & C. 649, S.C.) It seems immaterial as to the time when the magistrate puts his subscription and seal. (R. v. Picton, 2 East, 198; and see R. v. Barker, 1 East, 185; post, 1002.)

The conviction must be dated, or else it must otherwise appear when it was made. In R. v. Picton, (2 East, 196,) it was held that an impossible or an incongruous date, if the conviction be complete without it, (id est, if it otherwise appear truly and properly when it was made,) may be rejected as surplusage, and will not vitiate. But the date of the conviction is material when the statute on which it is founded requires that the conviction shall take place within a prescribed period after the offence committed. In such a case the date must be within that period when compared with the date alleged for the offence. (Paley, 174; R. v. Bellamy, 1 B. & Cres. 500; 2 D. & R. 727.)

A warrant of commitment, directing a gaoler to imprison a party for three months, omitting the day of the month on which it was granted, was held bad. (Re Fletcher, 13 Law J. N. S. Mag. Cas. 16.) Such a warrant, if not issued too soon, is not bad because dated too soon. (Newnham v. Hardwicke, 3 N. & P. 368.)

V. Form of Conviction when pointed out by Statute (a).

Form pointed out by statute.

Many of the preceding observations and rules as to the requisites of convictions in general will here apply.

(a) These rules and observations will generally be found in Dickenson's Sessions, 2d and 3d editions. In Wilkins v. Wright, 2 C. & M. 208, Baron Bolland expresses his regret at the legislature having in so many instances frittered away all the requisites of a legal conviction by giving a summary form.

If a statute prescribe any particular form of conviction, it is best to adhere to it strictly, adopting the very words; at all events the conviction must be according to the intent and purport of the act. (See R. v. Priest, 6 T. R. 538; ante, 997.) Indeed some statutes are so worded in this respect, that the form must be literally pursued. Thus if a statute say, "the conviction shall be in the form following," the direction is peremptory and must be obeyed. (R. v. Jefferies, 4 T.R. 769; and see Davison v. Gill, 1 East, 72; Goss v. Jackson, 3 Esp. 198.)

5. Form of, when pointed out by Statute.

When the form should be strictly pursued.

In a conviction under the Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. IV. c. 33, which purports to pursue the form given by that act, it is not necessary to set out the evidence. (Nixon v. Nanny, 1 Gale & D. 370.)

Certain expressions used in the summary forms explained.

In convictions directed by statutes, wherein summary forms are given, (omitting, as is usually the case, the information, summons and evidence,) the material part begins at the word "convicted." It is equally necessary in these, as it is in other convictions, that certain essential ingredients should appear on the face of the instruments, viz. the jurisdiction of the convicting magistrate, the time, the place and the charge, in such terms as to bring the whole within the description given of the offence in the act of parliament; also that the defendant had not any such defence as the act may have afforded him; for, without these being evident upon the inspection of the record, the Court cannot say that he has incurred the penalty, or subjected himself to the forfeiture annexed. By way of example: under the Bread Acts, if the offence be laid where an assize has been set, it will be necessary to set forth what the assize is in that place, in order to show what is the deficiency of weight; to state the time of purchasing and of weighing, in order to show that the article was found deficient within the then limited terms for trial; the species of bread, to show that the object of the complaint does not fall within the exception. (Dick. Sess. 3d edit. 394, 395.)

In many of the summary forms prescribed in statutes, the words "(here state the offence)" are used; when this is the case, the offence must be described as fully as is there insisted on; ex. gr. the statute against combinations among journeymen manufacturers, (39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 106,) gave a summary form, and in which, by way of a parenthesis, these words were inserted. On these it was decided, that agreements among these workmen for certain specified purposes, being the offence to be punished, it is necessary the agreement itself should be set out in the conviction, in order to show on the face of it that it was an agreement for the special purposes denounced by the statute in the very terms used therein, so that it might appear that the magistrate had authority to convict, and that the defendants had incurred the penalty. (R. v. Neild, 6 East's Rep. 417; R. v. Hazell, 13 East's Rep. 139; Dick Sess. 3d edit. 595; and see R. v. Ridgway, 5 B. & Ald. 530; 1 D. & R. 132, S.C.)

Alternative punishments.

Sometimes it is said in the statute that the magistrate before whom the party is convicted, (and in consequence of which conviction the alternative punishments of pecuniary penalty or imprisonment, according to the circumstances in each particular case, are annexed,) "shall cause the said conviction to be made out in manner and form following, or in any other form of words, mutatis mutandis; which conviction shall be good and effectual to all intents and purposes, without stating the case, the fact, or the evidence in any more particular manner." In such instances it must be even more decidedly necessary to set out the adjudication with particular precision, for otherwise, without the statement of the case, the facts, or the evidence, it cannot appear to the Court upon the face of the conviction appealed from, which of the alternative sentences has been pronounced; what is the subject or the object of the appeal; and what is the judgment they have to confirm or to reverse.

Blanks.

Where a blank is left for inserting the offence, the same accuracy is requisite in the description of it as in other cases. (R. v. Hazell, 13 East, 139.)

Titles of acts.

In some of these statutable forms the titles of acts are ordered to be set forth thus, "(here set forth the title of the act)." Wherever these directions occur, they must be strictly complied with; that is to say, no word must be omitted or changed, lest such omission or alteration should make the whole

5. Form of, when pointed out by Statute.

taken together convey a different meaning from what was the design of the act. (Mills v. Walkins, 2 Salk. 609; Dick. Sess. 595; see Nixon v. Nanney, 1 Gale & D. 370; ante, 973.)

Distribution of penalty.

In some cases it is necessary that the conviction should be more particular than even the words inserted in the statute itself. Thus where a statute leaves it discretionary in the justices to distribute the penalty in such proportions as they shall think fit, the distribution forms part of the judgment, and must therefore appear expressly on the conviction itself, although the statute gives a form of conviction stating generally the penalty "to be distributed according to the form of the statute in that case made and provided." (R. v. Dempsey, 2 T. R. 96; and see Dick. Sess. 591; R. v. Barrett, 1 Salk. 383; R. v. Helps, 3 M. & Sel. 331; ante, 996, 997.)

Surplusage.

If a statute direct the conviction of any offence under it to be drawn up according to an annexed form, or to the effect thereof, and the convicting justice, beside all the requisites indicated by the statute itself, unnecessarily insert other particulars beyond what are absolutely necessary, they do not vitiate the instrument or invalidate its effect. (R. v. Jefferies, 4 T. R. 768; Massey v. Johnson, 12 East's Rep. 67; and see further as to surplusage, ante, 988.)

VI. Defects in Form of Conviction, when aided.

Defects in form.

By the statute 3 Geo. IV. c. 23, s. 3, "in all cases where it appears by the conviction that the defendant has appeared and pleaded, and the merits have been tried, and that the defendant has not appealed against the conviction, where an appeal is allowed, or, if appealed against, the conviction has been affirmed, such conviction shall not afterwards be set aside or vacated, in consequence of any defect of form whatever; but the construction shall be a fair and liberal construction, as will be agreeable to the justice of the case."

Enactment as to defects in form being cured.

And independently of the above general enactment, applicable to all cases, it is often the case that the act creating the offence directs "that no conviction under the act shall be set aside for defect in form or through the mistake of any fact, circumstance or other matter, provided the material facts alleged be proved." Notwithstanding these words, however, every material fact must be alleged, and the omission, if any, is not aided by reference to such clause. (R. v. Walsh, 3 Nev. & M. 632; 1 Ad. & El. 481, S. C.)

Lord Kenyon, in allusion to a provision in the terms just mentioned, says, with regard to the section in the act that no conviction shall be quashed for want of form, "I confess I am not able to understand it as applied to proceedings removed into this Court. It enacts that no conviction on this act (36 Geo. III. c. 60, s. 11,) shall be set aside by any Court for want of form or through the mistake of any fact, circumstance or other matter whatsoever, provided the material facts alleged in such conviction, and upon which the same shall be grounded, be proved to the satisfaction of the Court. I can understand it as far as respects the proceedings before the sessions by way of appeal. On an appeal the whole case is gone into, evidence is to be given to support the conviction, and then it may be known whether the material facts alleged in such conviction, and upon which the same shall be grounded, be proved to the satisfaction of the Court. But when the conviction is removed here by certiorari, I do not understand how we can inquire into those facts." (R. v. Jukes, 8 T. R. 536, 540. See ante, title "Certiorari.")

A conviction under the 48 Geo. III. c. 143, (now repealed,) upon an information for selling beer or ale without a licence, was held bad for uncertainty, notwithstanding the evidence applied to selling the ale alone, and the 3d section of that act declared, that in all cases where it appeared by the conviction that the defendant had appeared and pleaded, and the merits had been tried, no advantage should be taken of any defect in form, for the Court considered that this was not a mere formal objection, but a substantial one, going to the merits. (R. v. North, 6 D. & R. 143.)

VII. Proceedings after Conviction and enforcing of, &c.

7. Proceedings after, &c.

Copy of Conviction.]—A justice ought to give the defendant a copy of the conviction if he demands it, for it is a record, and he is entitled to it. (R. v. Midlam, 3 Burr. 1720. (a)) And where a justice refused to grant a copy, which was required by the defendant for the purposes of his defence against an action for the same offence as that of which he had been convicted, the justice was compelled to pay his own costs of returning the conviction into the Queen's Bench on a certiorari, which the defendant was under the necessity of suing out, as the only means of procuring a copy. (Id.)

Defendant's right to have a copy of conviction.

It seems, however, that the defendant is not entitled, as of right, to have a copy of a conviction to enable him to appeal against it at the sessions for any matter of mere form, or to pick holes in it without regard to the merits. (R. v. Justices of Huntingdon, 5 D. & R. 588; 2 D. & R. M. C. 594, S. C.)

If the defendant is acquitted, he is still entitled to have his acquittal recorded and transmitted to the sessions, in order that he may be enabled to give it in evidence as a bar to any other subsequent complaint against him for the same offence.

The copy, however, given is not to be conclusively taken as the true copy, at least so far as regards mere formal defects, for the Court will notice only the record of the conviction returned by the magistrates. (R. v. Allen, 15 East, 332.) The defendant should therefore be cautious not to rely on mere formal defects in the copy given him, since the justices may return to the sessions a conviction in a more formal shape than that in which it has been drawn up, and of which a copy has been delivered to the party. (R. v. Barker, 1 East, 186.) But this may be different with respect to an order of justices, which cannot, like a conviction, be returned to the sessions in an amended form. (R. v. Justices of Cheshire, 2 Nev. & M. 827; 5 B. & Ad. 439, S. C.) A warrant of commitment must be drawn up in writing as soon as possible after the commitment is ordered. (Ante, title "Commitment in Execution," p. 788.)

Copy given not conclusive.

In cases where the sessions, upon proof that the appellant had received from the clerk of the convicting magistrates a copy of his conviction, signed and sealed by such justices, purporting on the face of it to have been made upon the information of B. and C., (though such copy was drawn upon the back of the paper which contained the information of A., (the true informer B. and C. being only the witnesses who had been examined in support of the charge,) and though the same justices had returned to the sessions to be filed of record a regular conviction of the same date, signed and sealed by them, on parchment, stating it to have been made on the information of A., and supported by the evidence of B. and C., according to the truth of the case,) had quashed the latter conviction so returned by the justices, as being at variance with the minutes of the conviction delivered to the appellant, without entering into the merits of the case, upon a preliminary objection taken by the appellant, the Court of King's Bench quashed the order of sessions generally, thereby setting up again the registered conviction, considering that the variance arose from the mere mistake and irregularity of the justice's clerk, and that the appellant was not really surprised by it, but had waived his appeal on the merits. (R. v. Allen, 15 East, 332.)

It may be as well here to notice the decision of Wilkins v. Wright, (2 C. & M. 191.) At the time of making an order of bastardy the magistrate's clerk delivered an order in a correct form to the parish officers, but delivered to the reputed father an order, in which the mother was ordered to pay 1*s.* 6*d.* weekly instead of the father; but at the same time, the magistrate told the reputed father that he must pay 1*s.* 6*d.* per week; and the parish officers afterwards served him with a copy of the order in their possession: it was held, that as the parish officers were the proper parties to have the custody of the order of bastardy, the one delivered to them must be deemed the original, and the defective order to the father only a "notice thereof," under 13 Eliz. c. 3, s. 2, the defect in which might be cured by the statement of the magistrate at the time of making the order, or by a subsequent service of a correct copy of the valid order; and that the father was not justified in refusing to pay the arrears of maintenance. (Wilkins v. Wright, 2 Crom. & Mee. 191.)

(a) As to the defendant's right to a copy of the record of an indictment against him, see title "Indictment," Vol. III. p. 905.

7. Proceedings after, &c.

Drawing up conviction.

Drawing up Conviction.]—The conviction need not be drawn up at the time of the hearing and adjudging on the case. It may be complete in operation of law before the formal instrument setting it out is drawn up. It may be drawn up at any time before a return to a certiorari or the sessions, though after a commitment, (Massey v. Johnson, 12 East, 32; see Re Richards and others, 13 Law J. N. S. 147,) or after the penalty has been levied by distress. (R. v. Barker, 1 East, 182; Still v. Walls, 7 East, 533; ante, 998.) Et per Lord Kenyon, C. J., in R. v. Barker, "If the magistrate has done no more than return the conviction in a more formal shape, instead of sending it up in the formal manner in which it was first drawn, and supposing that the facts as they really happened will warrant him in the return he has now made, I am of opinion, that it was not only legal but laudable in him to do as he has done; and he would have done wrong if he had acted otherwise. It is a matter of constant experience for a magistrate to take minutes of their proceedings without attending to the precise form of them at the time when they pronounce their judgment, to serve as memorandums for them to draw up a more formal statement of them afterwards, to be returned to the sessions, and it is by no means unusual to draw up the conviction in point of form after the penalty has been levied under the judgment, nor is there any legal objection to this method, provided the facts will warrant them in stating what they do. It is no answer to say that a party convicted may be thereby induced to incur an unnecessary expense in suing out a certiorari, to get rid of an informal conviction; for a mere informality in the manner of drawing up a conviction ought not to be the inducement for removing it into this Court, but some substantial defect in the justice and legality of the proceeding itself before the magistrate." (And see R. v. Js. of Huntingdon, 5 D. & R. 588; 2 D. & R. M. C. 594, S. C.; Massey v. Johnson, 12 East, 32.)

But after a conviction has been quashed on appeal or certiorari for defects on the face of it, it is not competent for the convicting justice to protect himself from an action by drawing up another more formal one for the same offence, nor can he do so after the defendant, taken under a warrant founded on and reciting a defective conviction, has been discharged by habeas corpus, though the conviction itself has not been removed or quashed. (Chaney v. Payne, 1 Adol. & El. N. S. 712; 1 Gale & D. 348, S. C.)

It was indeed questioned in that case, but not decided, whether a justice, who has returned and filed among the records of the quarter sessions an informal conviction, can afterwards return an amended one, before any proceeding has been taken to quash the first, or to discharge the defendant by habeas corpus.

Orders.

An order of justices cannot, like a conviction, be returned to sessions in an amended form, though not varying as to the facts or nature of the offence; and where an order under 11 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 4, was defective in form, and the justices returned a new and different order to be filed with the clerk of the peace; the Court held, that the party affected had a right to appeal against the order as originally made. (R. v. Justices of Cheshire, 5 B. & Adol. 439; 2 N. & M. 827, S. C.)

If two orders be made by mistake at the sitting of magistrates, it is competent to them at the time to declare which is the right one. (Wilkins v. Hemsworth, 3 Nev. & Per. 552.)

Return of conviction to sessions.

Return of Conviction to Sessions.]—In all cases a justice of the peace ought to return a conviction by him to the sessions, whether the party appeal or not, or whether an appeal is or is not given, that the crown may not be deprived of its share of forfeitures, as also for other reasons. (R. v. Eaton, 2 T. R. 285.)

7. Proceedings after, &c.

In some cases, by the express words of the act creating the offence, such as for instance the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 74; 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, s. 40; and 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 32, s. 43, the convicting justices must transmit the conviction to the next general or quarter sessions.

In other statutes also the return of the conviction is particularly pointed out and directed, and especially in cases where a second conviction is to be visited by a severer judgment, because in such cases the first conviction, or a true copy thereof as returned and filed by the clerk of the peace, is usually declared to be sufficient evidence of the former conviction.

Action against magistrate for neglect.

It seems that in all cases where a conviction is necessary, if the convicting justice, after receiving due notice of appeal, neglect to return the conviction, whereby the party is prevented from prosecuting his appeal, independently of any other punishment for such misdemeanor in his office, he is liable to an action for damages. (See Prosser v. Hyde, 1 T. R. 414; R. v. Medlam, 3 Burr. 1720.)

Amendment.

Amendment.]—As to the power of justices to amend a conviction, see ante, 146. See supra as to when they may draw up a more formal one before or after it is returned to the sessions.

Erroneous acquittal.

Erroneous Acquittal.]—An acquittal by the justices is conclusive, and cannot be reversed by the Court of Queen's Bench, or otherwise, and that is so even though the justices state in return to a certiorari evidence which primâ facie is sufficient to convict. (R. v. Reason, 6 T. R, 575, ante, 983; and see "Evidence," Vol. II. p. 404.)

After an acquittal on the merits, the defendant cannot be again subject to a proceeding against him for the same charge. But this is otherwise where the acquittal is for a mere defect in form. Quashing a conviction on a penal statute for mere matter of form at sessions, is not an acquittal of the defendant so as to conclude the case against further inquiry in the Court of Queen's Bench. (R. v. Ridgeway, 1 D. & Ry. 132; 5 B. & Ald. 527, S. C.)

Erroneous conviction.

Erroneous Conviction.]—An erroneous conviction may be reversed on appeal or certiorari. (See ante, "Appeal," "Certiorari.") If it be bad on the face of it, and shows that the magistrates have exceeded their jurisdiction in convicting the party, and any proceedings are taken under it, the justices who have ordered such proceedings may be subjected to an action for any act done under them. See "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1026.

Justice cannot be compelled to enforce it.

A justice of the peace cannot be compelled to enforce an erroneous conviction where the error is in matter of substance. Therefore he cannot be compelled to issue a warrant to levy the penalty adjudged; for where a mandamus was directed to a justice of the peace, commanding him to levy, or cause to be levied, a certain penalty, in a certain conviction, against T. L., the justice returned, "that the defendant was convicted of the penalty before him, (setting forth the manner and occasion,) but that the conviction was invalid in law, and was not a conviction of any offence for which the penalty was payable, or could be legally levied." Per Curiam: "The return to the mandamus is good and sufficient; for although when a justice has once fairly convicted a man he ought to proceed to enforce that conviction, yet if it be altogether a nullity, the justice is not bound to proceed further in order to subject himself to damages." It is, however, otherwise, if the error be merely formal. (R. v. Robinson, 2 Smith's Rep. 274; Dick. Sess. 590, 3d ed.) See "Justices," Vol. III. p. 1023.

Resisting conviction by appeal, certiorari, or habeas corpus.

tress under Justices' Warrant;" see also titles "Fines," Vol. II.; "Recognizance," Vol. V.

If on the removal of a conviction by certiorari into the Court of Queen's Bench, that Court find they have not power to award an execution sufficient to enforce the payment of the penalty, the Court will award a procedendo. (R. v. Neville, 2 B. & Adol. 299.)

Literary works, &c.

THE act now in force relating to the copyright in literary works is the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. That relating to international copyright is the 7 Vict.

c. 12. . Neither of them contain any matter falling within the cognizance of magistrates.

Designs. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100.

By the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, intituled "An Act to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to the Copyright of Designs for ornamenting Articles of Manufacture," (10th August, 1842,) reciting that "by the several acts mentioned in the schedule (A.) to this act annexed, there was granted, in respect of the woven fabrics therein mentioned, the sole right to use any new and original pattern for printing the same during the period of three calendar months: and that by the act mentioned in the schedule (B.) to this act annexed, there was granted, in respect of all articles, except lace, and except the articles within the meaning of the acts hereinbefore referred to, the sole right of using any new and original design, for certain purposes, during the respective periods therein mentioned; but forasmuch as the protection afforded by the said acts in respect of the application of designs to certain articles of manufacture is insufficient, it is expedient to extend the same, but upon the conditions hereinafter expressed; now, for that purpose, and for the purpose of consolidating the provisions of the said acts," it is enacted, "that this act shall come into operation on the first day of September one thousand eight hundred and forty-two, and that thereupon all the said acts mentioned in the said Schedules (A.) and (B.) to this act annexed shall be and they are hereby repealed."

Commencement of act, and repeal of former acts.

Proviso as to existing copyrights.

Sect. 2, provides and enacts, "That notwithstanding such repeal of the said acts, every copyright in force under the same shall continue in force till the expiration of such copyright; and with regard to all offences or injuries committed against any such copyright before this act shall come into operation, every penalty imposed and every remedy given by the said acts, in relation to any such offence or injury, shall be applicable as if such acts had not been repealed; but with regard to such offences or injuries committed against any such copyright after this act shall come into operation, every penalty imposed and every remedy given by this act in relation to any such offence or injury shall be applicable as if such copyright had been conferred by this act."

Grant of copyright.

Sect. 3. "And with regard to any new and original design (except for sculpture and other things within the provisions of the several acts mentioned in the schedule (C.) to this act annexed), whether such design be applicable to the ornamenting of any article of manufacture, or of any substance, artificial or natural, or partly artificial and partly natural, and that whether such design be so applicable for the pattern, or for the shape or configuration, or for the ornament thereof, or for any two or more of such purposes, and by whatever means such design may be so applicable, whether by printing, or by painting, or by embroidery, or by weaving, or by sewing, or by modelling, or by casting, or by embossing, or by engraving, or by staining, or by any other means whatsoever, manual, mechanical, or chemical, separate or combined; be it enacted, that the proprietor of every such design, not previously published either within the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or elsewhere, shall have the sole right to apply the same to any articles of manufacture, or to any such substances as aforesaid, provided the same be done within the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the respective terms hereinafter mentioned, such respective terms to be computed from the time of such design being registered according to this act; (that is to say,)

In respect of the application of any such design to ornamenting any article of manufacture contained in the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, eighth, or eleventh of the classes following, for the term of three years:

In respect of the application of any such design to ornamenting any article of manufacture contained in the seventh, ninth, or tenth of the classes following, for the term of nine calendar months:

In respect of the application of any such design to ornamenting any article of manufacture or substance contained in the twelfth or thirteenth of the classes following, for the term of twelve calendar months:

Registration.

Marks denoting a registered design.

Sect. 4. Provides and enacts, "That no person shall be entitled to the benefit of this act, with regard to any design in respect of the application thereof to ornamenting any article of manufacture, or any such substance, unless such design have before publication thereof been registered according to this act, and unless at the time of such registration such design have been registered in respect of the application thereof to some or one of the articles of manufacture or substance comprised in the above-mentioned classes, by specifying the number of the class in respect of which such registration is made, and unless the name of such person shall be registered according to this act as a proprietor of such design, and unless after publication of such design every such article of manufacture, or such substance to which the same shall be so applied, published by him, hath thereon, if the article of manufacture be a woven fabric for printing, at one end thereof, or, if of any other kind or substance as aforesaid, at the end or edge thereof, or other convenient place thereon, the letters 'Rd,' together with such number or letter, or number and letter, and in such form as shall correspond with the date of the registration of such design according to the registry of designs in that behalf; and such marks may be put on such article of manufacture or such substance, either by making the same in or on the material itself of which such article or such substance shall consist, or by attaching thereto a label containing such marks."

The term "Proprietor" explained.

Sect. 5. "That the author of any such new and original design shall be considered the proprietor thereof, unless he have executed the work on behalf of another person for a good or a valuable consideration, in which case such person shall be considered the proprietor, and shall be entitled to be registered in the place of the author; and every person acquiring for a good or a valuable consideration a new and original design, or the right to apply the same to ornamenting any one or more articles of manufacture, or any one or more such substances as aforesaid, either exclusively of any other person or otherwise, and also every other person upon whom the property in such design or such right to the application thereof shall devolve, shall be considered the proprietor of the design in the respect in which the same may have been so acquired, and to that extent, but not otherwise."

3 & 6 Vict. c. 100.

Sect. 6. "That every person purchasing or otherwise acquiring the right to the entire or partial use of any such design may enter his title in the register hereby provided, and any writing purporting to be a transfer of such design and signed by the proprietor thereof shall operate as an effectual transfer; and the registrar shall, on request, and the production of such writing, or in the case of acquiring such right by any other mode than that of purchase on the production of any evidence to the satisfaction of the registrar, insert the name of the new proprietor in the register; and the following may be the form of such transfer, and of such request to the registrar:

Transfer of copyright, and register thereof.

'Form of Transfer, and Authority to register.

'I. A. B. author [or proprietor] of design, No. , having transferred my right thereto, [or, if such transfer be partial,] so far as regards the ornamenting of [describe the articles of manufacture or substances, or the locality with respect to which the right is transferred,] to B. C., of , do hereby authorise you to insert his name on the register of designs accordingly.'

Form of Request to register.

'I. B. C., the person mentioned in the above transfer, do request you to register my name and property in the said design as entitled [if to the entire use] to the entire use of such design, [or, if to the partial use,] to the partial use of such design, so far as regards to application thereof [describe the articles of manufacture, or the locality in relation to which the right is transferred].'

But if such request to register be made by any person to whom any such design shall devolve otherwise than by transfer, such request may be in the following form:

'I. C. D., in whom is vested by [state bankruptcy or otherwise] the design, No. , [or if such devolution be of a partial right, so far as regards the application thereof] to [describe the articles of manufacture or substance, or the locality in relation to which the right has devolved.]'

Sect. 7. And for preventing the piracy of registered designs, be it enacted, "That during the existence of any such right to the entire or partial use of any such design no person shall either do or cause to be done any of the following acts with regard to any articles of manufacture, or substances, in respect of which the copyright of such design shall be in force, without the licence or consent in writing of the registered proprietor thereof; (that is to say,)

Piracy of designs.

No person shall apply any such design, or any fraudulent imitation thereof, for the purpose of sale, to the ornamenting of any article of manufacture, or any substance, artificial or natural, or partly artificial and partly natural:

No person shall publish, sell or expose for sale any article of manufacture, or any substance, to which such design, or any fraudulent imitation thereof, shall have been so applied, after having received, either verbally or in writing, or otherwise from any source other than the proprietor of such design, knowledge that his consent has not been given to such application, or after having been served with or had left at his premises a written notice signed by such proprietor or his agent to the same effect."

Sect. 8. "That if any person commit any such act he shall for every offence forfeit a sum not less than five pounds and not exceeding thirty pounds to the proprietor of the design in respect of whose right such offence has been committed; and such proprietor may recover such penalty as follows:

Recovery of penalties for piracy.

In England, either by an action of debt or on the case against the party offending, or by summary proceeding before two justices having jurisdiction where the party offending resides; and if such proprietor proceed by such summary proceeding, any justice of the peace acting for the

In Ireland, either by action in a superior court of law at Dublin or by civil bill in the civil bill court of the county or place where the offence was committed."

Proviso as to action for damages.

Sect. 9 provides, "That notwithstanding the remedies hereby given for the recovery of any such penalty as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the proprietor in respect of whose right such penalty shall have been incurred (if he shall elect to do so) to bring such action as he may be entitled to for the recovery of any damages which he shall have sustained, either by the application of any such design or of a fraudulent imitation thereof, for the purpose of sale, to any articles of manufacture or substances, or by the publication, sale or exposure to sale, as aforesaid, by any person, of any article or substance to which such design or any fraudulent imitation thereof shall have been so applied, such person knowing that the proprietor of such design had not given his consent to such application."

Registration may in some cases be cancelled or amended.

Sect. 10. "That in any suit in equity which may be instituted by the proprietor of any design or the person lawfully entitled thereto, relative to such design, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the judge having cognizance of such suit that the design has been registered in the name of a person not being the proprietor or lawfully entitled thereto, it shall be competent for such judge, in his discretion, by a decree or order in such suit to direct either that such registration be cancelled (in which case the same shall thenceforth be wholly void), or that the name of the proprietor of such design, or other person lawfully entitled thereto, be substituted in the register for the name of such wrongful proprietor or claimant, in like manner as is hereinbefore directed in case of the transfer of a design, and to make such order respecting the costs of such cancellation or substitution, and of all proceedings to procure and effect the same, as he shall think fit; and the registrar is hereby authorised and required, upon being served with an official copy of such decree or order, and upon payment of the proper fee, to comply with the tenor of such decree or order, and either cancel such registration or substitute such new name, as the case may be."

Penalty for wrongfully using marks denoting a registered design.

Sect. 11. "That unless a design applied to ornamenting any article of manufacture or any such substance as aforesaid be so registered as aforesaid, and unless such design so registered shall have been applied to the ornamenting such article or substance within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and also after the copyright of such design in relation to such article or substance shall have expired, it shall be unlawful to put on any such article or such substance, in the manner hereinbefore required with respect to articles or substances whereto shall be applied a registered design, the marks hereinbefore required to be so applied, or any marks corresponding therewith or similar thereto; and if any person shall so unlawfully apply any such marks, or shall publish, sell, or expose for sale any article of manufacture, or any substance with any such marks so unlawfully applied, knowing that any such marks have been unlawfully applied, he shall forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding 5*l.*, which may be recovered by any person proceeding for the same by any of the ways hereinbefore directed with respect to penalties for pirating any such design."

Limitation of actions.

Sect. 12. "That no action or other proceeding for any offence or injury under this act shall be brought after the expiration of twelve calendar months from the commission of the offence; and in every such action or other proceeding the party who shall prevail shall recover his full costs of suit or of such other proceeding."

5 & 6 Vict. c. 100.

Justices may order payment of costs in cases of summary proceeding.

Sect. 13. "That in the case of any summary proceeding before any two justices in England, such justices are hereby authorised to award payment of costs to the party prevailing, and to grant a warrant for enforcing payment thereof against the summoning party, if unsuccessful, in the like manner as is hereinbefore provided for recovering any penalty with costs against any offender under this act."

Registrar, &c. of designs to be appointed.

Sect. 14. "And for the purpose of registering designs for articles of manufacture, in order to obtain the protection of this act, be it enacted, that the lords of the committee of privy council for the consideration of all matters of trade and plantations may appoint a person to be a registrar of designs for ornamenting articles of manufacture, and, if the lords of the said committee see fit, a deputy registrar, clerks, and other necessary officers and servants; and such registrar, deputy registrar, clerks, officers, and servants, shall hold their offices during the pleasure of the lords of the said committee; and the commissioners of the treasury may from time to time fix the salary or remuneration of such registrar, deputy registrar, clerks, officers, and servants; and, subject to the provisions of this act, the lords of the said committee may make rules for regulating the execution of the duties of the office of the said registrar; and such registrar shall have a seal of office."

Registrar's duties.

Sect. 15. "That the said registrar shall not register any design in respect of any application thereof to ornamenting any articles of manufacture or substances, unless he be furnished, in respect of each such application, with two copies, drawings, or prints of such design, accompanied with the name of every person who shall claim to be proprietor, or of the style or title of the firm under which such proprietor may be trading, with his place of abode or place of carrying on his business, or other place of address, and the number of the class in respect of which such registration is made; and the registrar shall register all such copies, drawings, or prints, from time to time successively, as they are received by him for that purpose; and on every such copy, drawing, or print, he shall affix a number corresponding to such succession; and he shall retain one copy, drawing, or print, which he shall file in his office, and the other he shall return to the person by whom the same has been forwarded to him; and in order to give ready access to the copies of designs so registered, he shall class such copies of designs, and keep a proper index of each class."

Certificate of registration of design.

Sect. 16. "That upon every copy, drawing, or print of an original design so returned to the person registering as aforesaid, or attached thereto, and upon every copy, drawing, or print thereof received for the purpose of such registration, or of the transfer of such design being certified thereon or attached thereto, the registrar shall certify under his hand that the design has been so registered, the date of such registration, and the name of the registered proprietor or the style or title of the firm under which such proprietor may be trading, with his place of abode or place of carrying on his business, or other place of address, and also the number of such design, together with such number or letter, or number and letter, and in such form as shall be employed by him to denote or correspond with the date of such registration; and such certificate made on every such original design, or on such copy thereof, and purporting to be signed by the registrar or deputy registrar, and purporting to have the seal of office of such registrar affixed thereto, shall, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be sufficient proof, as follows,

Of the design, and of the name of the proprietor therein mentioned, having been duly registered; and

Of the commencement of the period of registry; and

Of the person named therein as proprietor being the proprietor;

Of the originality of the design; and

Of the provisions of this act, and of any rule under which the certificate appears to be made, having been complied with:

"And any such writing purporting to be such certificate shall, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be received as evidence, without proof of the handwriting of the signature thereto, or of the seal of office affixed thereto, or of the person signing the same being the registrar or deputy registrar."

5 & 6 Vict. c. 100.

Inspection of registered designs.

Sect. 17. "That every person shall be at liberty to inspect any design whereof the copyright shall have expired, paying only such fee as shall be appointed by virtue of this act in that behalf; but with regard to designs whereof the copyright shall not have expired, no such design shall be open to inspection, except by a proprietor of such design or by any person authorised by him in writing, or by any person specially authorised by the registrar, and then only in the presence of such registrar or in the presence of some person holding an appointment under this act, and not so as to take a copy of any such design or of any part thereof, nor without paying for every such inspection such fee as aforesaid: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the said registrar to give to any person applying to him, and producing a particular design, together with the registration mark thereof, or producing such registration mark only, a certificate stating whether of such design there be any copyright existing, and if there be, in respect to what particular article of manufacture or substance such copyright exists, and the term of such copyright, and the date of registration, and also the name and address of the registered proprietor thereof."

Application of fees of registration.

Sect. 18. "That the commissioners of the treasury shall from time to time fix fees to be paid for the services to be performed by the registrar, as they shall deem requisite, to defray the expenses of the said office, and the salaries or other remuneration of the said registrar, and of any other persons employed under him, with the sanction of the commissioners of the treasury, in the execution of this act; and the balance, if any, shall be carried to the consolidated fund of the united kingdom, and be paid accordingly into the receipt of her majesty's exchequer at Westminster; and the commissioners of the treasury may regulate the manner in which such fees are to be received, and in which they are to be kept, and in which they are to be accounted for, and they may also remit or dispense with the payment of such fees in any cases where they may think it expedient so to do: provided always, that the fee for registering a design to be applied to any woven fabric, mentioned or comprised in classes 7, 9, or 10, shall not exceed the sum of one shilling; that the fee for registering a design to be applied to a paper hanging shall not exceed the sum of ten shillings; and that the fee to be received by the registrar for giving a certificate relative to the existence or expiration of any copyright in any design printed on any woven fabric, yarn, thread, or warp, or printed, embossed, or worked on any paper hanging, to any person exhibiting a piece or of a registered pattern, with the registration mark thereon, shall not exceed the sum of two shillings and sixpence."

Penalty for extortion.

Sect. 19. "That if either the registrar or any person employed under him shall demand or receive any gratuity or reward, whether in money or otherwise, except the salary or remuneration authorised by the commissioners of the treasury, he shall forfeit for every such offence fifty pounds to any person suing for the same by action of debt in the Court of Exchequer at Westminster; and he shall also be liable to be either suspended or dismissed from the office, and rendered incapable of holding any situation in the said office, as the commissioners of the treasury see fit."

Interpretation act.

Sect. 20. And for the interpretation of this act, be it enacted, "That the following terms and expressions, so far as they are not repugnant to the context of this act, shall be construed as follows; (that is to say,) the expression 'commissioners of the treasury' shall mean the lord high treasurer for the time being, or the commissioners of her Majesty's treasury for the time being, or any three or more of them; and the singular number shall include the plural as well as the singular number; and the masculine gender shall include the feminine gender as well as the masculine gender."

6 & 7 Vict. c. 65.

By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65, intituled "An Act to amend the Laws relating to the Copyright of Designs," [22d August, 1843,] reciting that by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, "there was granted to the proprietor of any new and original design, with the exceptions therein mentioned, the sole right to apply the same to the ornamenting of any article of manufacture or any such substance as therein described during the respective periods therein mentioned: and that it is expedient to extend the protection afforded by the said act to such de-

Conditions of copyright.

Sect. 3 provides and enacts, "That no person shall be entitled to the benefit of this act unless such design have before publication thereof been registered according to this act, and unless the name of such person shall be registered according to this act as a proprietor of such design, and unless after publication of such design every article of manufacture made by him according to such design, or on which such design is used, hath thereon the word 'registered,' with the date of registration."

Penalty for wrongfully using marks denoting a registered design.

Sect. 4. "That unless a design applied to any article of manufacture be registered either as aforesaid or according to the provisions of the said first-mentioned act, and also after the copyright of such design shall have expired, it shall be unlawful to put on any such article the word 'Registered,' or to advertise the same for sale as a registered article; and if any person shall so unlawfully publish, sell or expose or advertise for sale any such article of manufacture, he shall forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding five pounds nor less than one pound, which may be recovered by any person proceeding for the same by any of the remedies hereby given for the recovery of penalties for pirating any such design."

Floor or oil cloths included in class six.

Sect. 5. "That all such articles of manufacture as are commonly known by the name of floor cloths or oil cloths shall henceforth be considered as included in class six in the said first-mentioned act in that behalf mentioned, and be registered accordingly."

Certain provisions of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, to apply to this act.

Sect. 6. "That all and every the clauses and provisions contained in the said first-mentioned act, so far as they are not repugnant to the provisions contained in this act, relating respectively to the explanation of the term proprietor, to the transfer of designs, to the piracy of designs, to the mode of recovering penalties, to actions for damages, to cancelling and amending registrations, to the limitation of actions, to the awarding of costs, to the certificate of registration, to the fixing and application of fees of registration, and to the penalty for extortion, shall be applied and extended to this present act as fully and effectually, and to all intents and purposes, as if the said several clauses and provisoes had been particularly repeated and re-enacted in the body of this act."

Appointment of registrar, &c.

Sect. 7. "That so much of the said first-mentioned act as relates to the appointment of a register of designs for ornamenting articles of manufacture, and other officers, as well as to the fixing of the salaries for the payment of the same, shall be and the same is hereby repealed; and for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions as well of this act as of the said first-mentioned act, the lords of the committee of the privy council for the consideration of all matters of trade and plantations may appoint a person to be registrar of designs for articles of manufacture, and, if the lords of the said committee see fit, an assistant registrar and other necessary officers and servants; and such registrar, assistant registrar, officers and servants shall hold their offices during the pleasure of the lords of the said committee; and such registrar shall have a seal of office; and the commissioners of her Majesty's treasury may from time to time fix the salary or other remuneration of such registrar, assistant registrar, and other officers and servants; and all the provisions contained in the said first-mentioned act, and not hereby repealed, relating to the registrar, deputy registrar, clerks, and other officers and servants thereby appointed and therein named, shall be construed and held to apply respectively to the registrar, assistant registrar, and other officers and servants to be appointed under this act." 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65.

Sect. 8. "That the said registrar shall not register any design for the shape or configuration of any article of manufacture as aforesaid unless he be furnished with two exactly similar drawings or prints of such design, with such description in writing as may be necessary to render the same intelligible according to the judgment of the said registrar, together with the title of the said design, and the name of every person who shall claim to be proprietor, or of the style or title of the firm under which such proprietor may be trading, with his place of abode, or place of carrying on business, or other place of address; and every such drawing or print, together with the title and description of such design, and the name and address of the proprietor aforesaid, shall be on one sheet of paper or parchment, and on the same side thereof; and the size of the said sheet shall not exceed twenty-four inches by fifteen inches; and there shall be left on one of the said sheets a blank space on the same side on which are the said drawings, title, description, name, and address of the size of six inches by four inches, for the certificate herein mentioned; and the said drawings or prints shall be made on a proper geometric scale; and the said description shall set forth such part or parts of the said design (if any) as shall not be new or original; and the said registrar shall register all such drawings or prints from time to time as they are received by him for that purpose; and on every such drawing or print he shall affix a number corresponding to the order of succession in the register, and he shall retain one drawing or print which he shall file at his office, and the other he shall return to the person by whom the same has been forwarded to him; and in order to give ready access to the designs so registered he shall keep a proper index of the titles thereof." Registrar's duties. Drawings.

Sect. 9. "That if any design be brought to the said registrar to be registered under the said first-mentioned act, and it shall appear to him that the same ought to be registered under this present act, it shall be lawful for the said registrar to refuse to register such design otherwise than under the present act and in the manner hereby provided; and if it shall appear to the said registrar that the design brought to be registered under the said first-mentioned act or this act is not intended to be applied to any article of manufacture, but only to some label, wrapper or other covering in which such article might be exposed for sale, or that such design is contrary to public morality or order, it shall be lawful for the said registrar, in his discretion, wholly to refuse to register such design: provided always, that the lords of the said committee of privy council may, on representation made to them by the proprietor of any design so wholly refused to be registered as aforesaid, if they shall see fit, direct the said registrar to register such design, whereupon and in such case the said registrar shall be and is hereby required to register the same accordingly." Discretionary power as to registry vested in the registrar. Proviso.

Sect. 10. "That every person shall be at liberty to inspect the index of the titles of the designs, not being ornamental designs, registered under this act, and to take copies from the same, paying only such fees as shall be appointed by virtue of this act in that behalf; and every person shall be at liberty to inspect any such design, and to take copies thereof, paying such fee as aforesaid; but no design whereof the copyright shall not have expired shall be open to inspection, except in the presence of such registrar, or in the presence of some person holding an appointment under this act, and not so as to take a copy of such design, nor without paying such fee as aforesaid." Inspection of index of titles of designs, &c.

Sect. 11. "And, for the interpretation of this act, be it enacted, that the following terms and expressions, so far as they are not repugnant to the context of this act, shall be construed as follows; (that is to say,) the expression Interpretation of act.

6 & 7 Vict. c. 65. 'commissioners of the treasury' shall mean the lord high treasurer for the time being, or the commissioners of her Majesty's treasury of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for the time being, or any three or more of them; and the singular number shall include the plural as well as the singular number, and the masculine gender shall include the feminine gender as well as the masculine gender."
